ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabirs
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ART WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL AND SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE. BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1903, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCAST SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Michelle Abbasciano

Riders prepare for regionals

HORSES from page 1

possible for each show, helping to earn points for our team as well as block other teams."

The point system in the IHSA can be complicated.

According to the team's Web site, there are five levels: Walk-Trot, Beginner/Advanced Walk-Trot-Canter, Novice, Intermediate and Open. The three upper levels, Novice, Intermediate and Open, include flat classes as well as jumping classes. The ribbons riders win for their teams account for certain point values and the more points a team gets, the better.

There was much to do to prepare for the regional competition.

According to Weisman, the team normally practices on Wednesday nights. The riders separate by division and ride for about 45 minutes each. When there is a Saturday horse show, riders competing can practice on Friday mornings for a half an hour to prepare.

"After each ride, we are critiqued by our coach, Jerry Schurink, on what we need to work on and what we did well," said Weisman.

Schurink is not only the coach of the team, but also the director of riding at U Mass, the coordinator of the Equine Industries program offered by the Stockbridge School of Agriculture, and the Head of the Equine Studies Program, according to the team's Web site.

Schurink, due to a recent illness, could not comment extensively, although he noted the productivity of the team

"The five team officers are all seniors that have been on the team for three to four years and their leadership has been key in keeping up the team focus and spirit," he said.

Even though the team has won their region, there is still much work to be done.

"Now that we are regional champions doesn't mean its time to relax, it means now we have to ride even better and completely be on top of things even more than we were before – the game only gets tougher," said Gray.

Getting ready for the regional competition was challenging, and now the team has to prepare for the upcoming obstacles that stand in the way of nationals. The team will compete in the regionals competition, but the riders will be judged on an individual level, not as a team since they won their own region.

"As regionals are approaching they will be Saturday March 29 here at UMass – we will continue to hold both these practices which will become more intense," said team co-Captain, Bailey Sheran. "We will be riding a lot without our stirrups and practicing tests as well as fine tuning our positions and preparing mentally."

In addition to the regionals competition, the team must compete in the zone championship competition.

"We compete against the winners of three other regions within our zone, and the top two teams advance to nationals at the Los Angeles equestrian center in California," said Weisman. "We will prepare for nationals by practicing more and riding as much as possible."

Making it to nationals would be something that the team has worked toward for a long time.

"If the case is that we do qualify for nationals after zones, we have been preparing ourselves for this since the beginning and we are not going to start becoming the kind of riders that compete at nationals – we are going to continue on being those riders who know that this is where we belong, and we want to show everyone – even outside of the IHSA – that this is a team with amazing skill and a passion for competition," said Gray

The riders will train in different ways to be in peak condition for these upcoming competitions.

"We also are involved in mandatory workouts that we do on our time away from the barn, so alternative training really helps keep us in overall competitive body condition," said Gray.

Much of the success of the team can be attributed to great teamwork, according to Weisman.

"I think our team is so strong because we have a real energy between us," said Weisman. "We all really want to help each other out and do whatever it takes to ride well. Our riders come from so many different backgrounds that everyone has something different to offer, and we all get along really well and want the team to succeed as a whole."

Sheran has a similar opinion on why the team was finally able to beat Mount Holyoke.

"We as a team have really clicked; we all get along really well," said Sheran. "We realize that to be the best we have to be ready to sacrifice and dedicate ourselves to each other and hard work."

Being close as a team has helped to break the team's second place streak, according to Gray.

"Every year we have come closer and closer to that goal [of being first] but along the way we also focus a lot on the fact that we are a team and we help each other grow stronger as competitors by setting the tone of sportsmanship and friendship at practices and shows," Gray said.

As far as what the future holds, the team will work as hard as possible to advance in their competitions.

"We are one of the most competitive regions and we're going to bust our butts between now and zones so hopefully we will have success and be off to California for Nationals," said Sheran.

Eden Univer can be reached at euniver@student.umass.edu

COURTESY MARY SCHNEIDER

The UMass equestrian team defeated Mount Holyoke last weekend for the first time in 11 years. The riders hope to qualify for nationals with a strong showing at regionals on March 29.

Two additional notes found

MESSAGE from page 1

Wednesday, March 5 in the same Bartlett Hall bathroom where the first was located.

Archbald said there were indications that it had been written considerably earlier, adding that it was "not easy to see with the naked eye and without really looking."

Police did not issue a campus alert about the fourth message.

"At some point, you have to say, how often can you send that out and expect people to read it and to be extra aware?" said Archbald.

The UMPD has also been comparing notes with police at UMass Dartmouth and Bridgewater State College, where similar messages were found recently, although there are no indications yet that the incidents were related.

However, Archbald was troubled by the "short time frame" in which all of the messages were found.

"It's beyond a coincidence, so it is concerning," he said.

Meghan Murphy can be reached at mmurphy@dailycollegian.com.

SGA introduces new leadership

BY MIKE FOX
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Malcolm Chu and Lindsay McCluskey were sworn in officially at last night's Student Government Senate meeting as president and student trustee for 2008-2009.

After the senate voted to approve the election report, which was compiled by election commissioner Emma Pfordresher, chief justice Jennifer Jean-Baptiste proceeded to deliver the oath of office to both Chu and McCluskey.

Several new senators were sworn in as well. Patrick Tully, a recent transfer student from Suffolk University, was appointed to the commuter area senate. When asked about his goals in senate, Tully said, "I want to work to benefit the commuter of campus. I will work to help fix potholes, cooperate with the PVTA to help improve the bus system and make sure that commuters can get to school on time without damage to their vehicles or themselves."

The ALANA caucus also appointed three new senators. Two of them, Vanessa Andrade and Derik Oslan, are new to the senate.

Andrade said that she wants to be a "strong advocate" for all minorities on campus. "A lot of them currently feel unrepresented and I'm now in a position to help them be heard," she said.

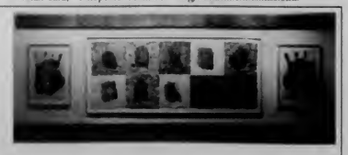
Oslan said, "I hope to be more progressive about advocating the SGA to the campus. I feel that many people voted in the recent elections but they didn't know what they were voting for. I want to help spread information to the campus."

Jelisa Difo – already a member of the senate – realigned herself as an ALANA caucus senator. She told the senate that she was doing this to better serve her constituents.

ALANA caucus senators aren't voted on by the campus, but are appointed by members of the ALANA organization as per SGA bylaws and the ALANA caucus charter.

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu.

Considering a Teaching Career?



Master of Arts in Teaching (MAT)

Earn your master's degree and teacher's license in as little as 12 months

- Full-time (12 months) and part-time (24 months) options
- Leads to licensure in elementary or secondary education
- Most classes meet evenings in Boston or online
- Special tuition rate; scholarships and financial aid available
- Next term begins January 7, 2008

www.education.neu.edu
877.668.7727 (toll free) graded@neu.edu

Northeastern University School of Education

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons Cuban, 1959- Birth Certificate, 1991 Woodcut on ornate (burl) paper, carved wood, and etched glass Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925, Fund in 2007 Photograph by Thomas J. Gustainis

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Rally supports former student

RALLY from page 1

and 'Justice for Jason! Justice for Jason!,' permeated over campus and garnered attention as the group marched all along campus.

Those leading the march yelled the chants through their megaphones and one student made a makeshift drum to go along with the beat.

The march ended at the horseshoe in Southwest, as the flowers were placed in the fence near the basketball courts. Dr. Amilcar Shabazz, a professor in the African American studies program, had a few things to say to those in attendance before the rally ended.

"It is only by this beautiful expression of love, and of justice and of concern, and these flowers, and the march and the rallies and the words and the passion that we bring to this effort, to this struggle that we are safe in no uncertain terms," he said.

"And being categorically clear that [the prosecutor] is not representing the community in this prosecution," he added. "Because this is a travesty of justice."

Although the rally's purpose was directed specifically to Vassell, the message by speakers and students participating in the rally reflected a larger societal concern here at UMass by some students.

"The hate crimes, the violence on campus, the ignorance and the lack of education around the issues of race, homophobia and sexual assault – need to stop," Student Government Association president-elect Malcolm Chu said.

"It's okay to be angry about this," he added. "I think it's normal to ignore these things in our society. We're taught to ignore these differences and this hatred that comes with our differences, or socialized by our differences. It's okay to stand up; it's okay to fight against these things and be angry."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Wednesday's rally took flower-wielding students and faculty members from the student union steps to the horseshoe in Southwest and featured speeches from student leaders and faculty. Each flower represented 30 of the 10,000 reported hate crimes in 2007.

Low turnout for SGA

ELECTIONS from page 1

UMass freshman Ammaar Mirza was also unaware of the $91 fee he pays each year to the SGA.

"Now that I realize I am giving money to the SGA, I would have voted to make sure the right candidate was picked to be president," Mirza said.

"We definitely worked very hard to reach out to every student here at U Mass," said Dominguez.

The newly elected Malcolm Chu and Lindsay McCluskey reportedly knocked on every door in the residence halls and held a meeting with the respective constituencies during their one week of campaigning.

Additionally, flyers promoting the elections along with the candidates were hung all over campus.

Election tables were at all of the dining commons on campus along with the campus center which accommodated for the UMass students who do not use the DC's.

The election tables were open for a total of seven hours each day on both March 6 and 7.

In the 2004 presidential election, out of eligible voters, 60% of United States citizens participated.

"You see the same trend in voting here as you do in federal, state or town elections," said Sarah Morgan, SGA attorney general. "Students find their school work and extracurriculars to be more important than campus politics."

One student who did vote was UMass junior Karina Martinez.

"I always feel it is important to get involved," she said. "Students can make an impact when it comes down to the allocation of resources pertaining to clubs and student organizations."

"I didn't care to vote because most of the decisions made through the SGA will not have a huge impact on my education, there are a lot of little random organizations that we have to give money to that's included in our tuition and it is to much to keep track of," said junior, Jack Mitten. "Maybe if the SGA offered something like a free weekly smoothie I would be more inclined to vote."

Joshua Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu

Last week's Student Government Association elections were characterized by a low turnout among UMass students. Voters casted their ballots at dining commons and campus center locations.

CAREER grant to support research of infectious diseases

GRANT from page 1

Michael Malone, dean of the engineering department says the career award is a great way to get people to think about their career early on.

"There are very few awards where research and education are so tightly integrated," he said. "It [CAREER] is a terrific program for academics to get funded."

Malone added that this award is important in modernizing the curriculum, especially in engineering.

"Science is changing all the time," he said. "You need to make sure you're having updates to your curriculum, to provide different expertise in different programs," he said.

Head of the department of chemical engineering professor Triantafillos Mountziaris says the CAREER award helps the visibility of the department and the UMass campus as a whole.

"Whoever receives this award is bestowed with an honor. It is a very prestigious award," he said.

Mountziaris believes Sun is a very talented young faculty member, as well as a professor. He is very excited to have Sun here at the University to be a part of the community of scholars.

Out of the four assistant professors in the department of chemical engineering, three have won the CAREER grant to further their research, while the fourth recently accepted a $1 million dollar grant from the National Institute of Health.

"This is a record. It's not really a common to have this situation," said Mountziaris. "It's very honorable, and very rare."

Jess Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu

Check out The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Podcasts
www.dailycollegian.com

Hair, Nails, Tanning, Waxing, Facials & Massage
Owner
Ms. Abigael M. Sicard
267 Amherst Road
Suite #2 (Rt.116)
Sunderland, MA
413-397-9988
Tuesday 10-6 • Wednesday 10-6
Thursday 10-7 • Friday 10-6
Saturday 10-3

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BODY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 19 Plus
SATURDAY NIGHT
Dance Party
NOW HIRING!
Bartenders
Cashiers
Security Staff
Barback
Waitstaff
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

Thursday, March 13 · 5–9 pm
CELEBRATE
RESTAURANT NIGHT
AT WORCESTER DC
THE DELANEY HOUSE
you only think you know us

FEATURED MENU:
Baked Stuffed Shrimp
Statler Chicken Alfresco
Roast Sirloin of Beef
Bayou Scallops · Tortellini Carbonara
Eggplant Napoleon (vegetarian)
Asparagus · Risotto
Bananas Foster

SAMPLE FABULOUS FOOD AND A CHANCE TO WIN A $50 GIFT CERTIFICATE!

THE DELANEY HOUSE GUEST CHEF:
MICK CORDUFF, OWNER/CHEF

NACUFS LOYAL E. HORTON Dining Award 2007 Grand Prize
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
FoodManagement's BEST CONCEPTS

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hidden implications

C.A. Chase

Eliot Spitzer, governor errant of New York, has been linked to a classy (expensive) prostitution ring, and solicited a prostitute not much older than his 18 year-old daughter. Spitzer, who according to the New York Post dropped more than $80 K on prostitutes, has resigned.

Spitzer apparently bought one too many packages of Ho Hos. And also according to NY Post (purveyor of Page Six), he likes them unwrapped. So much for his free NYC condom campaign, and so much for public health.

The New York Post, the Big Apple's classiest paper of repute, hands down, has the title part of the equation down pat: "NY's Naked Emperor," "Steamroll This Lousy Bum, Silda," ("Silda" being the unfortunate missus) "How Horndog Set the Mood," "80 G 'Addicted to Love' Gov," "Hooker Booker Had List Full of Bigwigs," "Missus Should Have Disease Test," "Traveling Tarts Put Gov. in Infamous Company," and my personal favorite, "HO NO!" Ah, that it can all be so pithy.

So we've established that the New York Post writes scintillating titles, Spitzer is a creep for: 1) sleeping with a woman barely older than his daughter, 2) being a hypocrite about any sort of public-health-safe-sex-campaign for reasons alluded to above, and 3) Ew. And just to put it out there and gloss over issues of power hierarchies, buying the services of a prostitute is creepy in and of itself.

"Client 9" is the first governor of New York to resign since Nelson Rockefeller's 1973 resignation, and the first to be forced out of office since William Sulzer's 1913 impeachment. Really, I'm not hashing out anything new.

David Vitter, Larry Craig, Californian mayors Gavin Newsom and Antonio Villaraigosa – why so many sex scandals? Can't they pick more creative vices? But really, I wouldn't have it any other way. Oh, the unlimited double-entendre'd possibilities.

Spitzer's resignation on Wednesday afternoon ended with apologies to his family and to his constituents for his activities leading up to and within the Emperor's Club, which involved, according to one FBI-wiretapped conversation, "things that, like, you might not think were safe," although no one apologized to the lady in question. Commodity fetishism indeed, although not quite in the sense that Frederick Engels and Karl Marx meant it.

One criticism of sappy movies is that they cheapen emotions, how our most intimate moments are vulgarized by "the culture industry." I stend that to how vulnerability is vulgarized, and by the former governor of

Just to put it out there and gloss over issues of power hierarchies, buying the services of a prostitute is creepy in and of itself.

New York reified by the political machine.

The governor of New York, who stood under the flag of New York and by extension, under the flag of America, has resigned. A head of the structure that regulates life – government – has resigned. Under this category, life: falls houses where people watch TV; offices where people work.

Life is regulated in its totality by ordering and structuring it. A head of the structure has bought into (no pun intended) something that our society is supposed to be against. One of Spitzer's nicknames, "Mr Clean," came from his clean-up of New York.

Besides Wall Street, he tackled prostitution. But as a representative of the state, he acted as the state; a state that, apparently, supports human commodification. A state under which people in houses watch TV and read news online and snicker about prostitution rings: it's not that it's wrong; it's that it's funny.

If prostitution isn't really an issue, then why are people focusing on that over how Spitzer cheated on his wife? Most jokes are a little too close to home for someone, but it's "too soon" for someone else than the "Guy of Luv" – the implications of human commodification remain unexamined, leading to a washed-out ideological consent without consent.

If the unexamined life is not worth living, then the unexamined life structure – of which the polity is a base – is not worth living in. Because if Spitzergate was so funny, and not so wrong, then why don't you live the red-light lifestyle yourself? I mean, what a great job.

You get to hang out with some pretty important dudes, if you play your cards right, and by following Spitzer's money trail, you can make some sick cash. Who wouldn't want that? In an age of recession, it pays to have someone relate to you as a cultural commodity. So no one apologized to "Kristen," the second half of the "classy" equation.

Why should they, when people like me can make jokes about it?

C.A. Chase is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at cchase a student umass edu

Gov. Slots goes for broke

Nick Milano

This past week, advocates for Deval Patrick's proposal to build three casinos in Massachusetts received a major boost from an independent study.

The Greater Boston Chamber of Commerce report backed many of the projections made by the Patrick administration. While noting that construction jobs would dramatically fail to even venture close to Patrick's estimate, the report did affirm his annual revenue and jobs projections.

Despite this news, gaming opponents must continue to stand tall in preventing "Governor Slots," as Boston Globe columnist Steve Bailey has aptly nicknamed him, from welcoming casinos with open arms.

Even with the chamber's report, there are still many questions to be answered. The chamber did not assess potential lost revenues for regions in the state.

If Boston's Mayor Menino gets his casino in East Boston, will tourists forgo the wonderful collection of family-owned Italian eateries in the North End for the fare offered by casino conglomerates? What about other local businesses? Maybe if there were a casino in Boston, the gamblers will sacrifice some time to travel around the historic city, but would they also do so in Western and Southeastern Massachusetts?

Surely, there will be more people visiting those areas, but are they doing so to experience small town Massachusetts, or to drink, dance and gamble? How can local businesses possibly expect a substantial and consistent boon to their coffers? Will golf excursions to Cape Cod turn into gambling escapades? What about the hotel business if casinos build their own? What kind of bearing will casino lobbyists have on legislators?

There have already been signs of meddling by casino lobbyists. The Boston Globe discovered that Speaker of the House Salvatore DiMasi, who has led the attack on Patrick's casino plan, played two rounds of golf with Joe O'Donnell, co-owner of Suffolk Downs.

Casinos, like the state lottery, thrive on finding new ways to trick people out of their money.

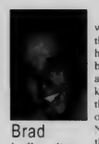
Suffolk Downs, according to The Globe, is "aggressively pursuing a gaming license for their East Boston site," – thus, DiMasi's legislative independence should be called into question. Only after calls to DiMasi on the Globe's part did he offer to pay for the two rounds. At the same time, DiMasi triumphantly announced that he had declined an invitation to play with Donald Trump, another casino entrepreneur. While DiMasi has not changed his standing on casinos, he is one of the most recognizable faces in Massachusetts politics. How are less scrutinized members of the Massachusetts legislature being lobbied?

As previously mentioned in this space, casino lobbyists have dramatic control over the direction of laws that affect them. In California, Nevada and New Jersey, casinos were not forced to comply with indoor smoking bans. These state governments apparently put special interests above the public's ability to work and relax in smoke-free environments. But this shouldn't be a real surprise.

Governor Slots himself and the chamber's report have acknowledged that "gambling addictions, crime, and personal bankruptcy rates would almost certainly increase." But for him and other casino advocates, the millions in state revenue is worth the risk. Ask Governor Slots, and he will say he is doing his part by promising to divert 2.5 percent of state revenue for problem gamblers. In essence he's admitting that his plan will ruin people's lives, but claims he should be praised for dedicating money to create a "best in class" rehabilitation program.

With the national economy sliding into a recession, or already in one, Massachusetts is unlikely to escape the wrath of weak economic growth. Governor Slots responded DiMasi's attacks on his projection of 30,000 one-time construction jobs to build the casinos with a letter to the entire Legislature asking for "sound alternatives" from the Speaker. The way Governor Slots tells it, there is no way to generate economic growth and permanent jobs without the state opening its arms to an industry renowned for destroying lives.

But joining forces with casinos will in no way lead to a boost to the Massachusetts economy. Governor Slots is a brilliant man and his Ivy League education lends one to believe he would approach the slowing economy with more ideas than the simple easy way out, but thanks are in order for the legislators who are steadfast in their beliefs that Massachusetts does not need casinos to lead the 21 century.



While wasting time and goodwill in the legislature by pushing the casino issue, Governor Slots is letting his other legislation falter. He swept into office on a tidal wave of popular support, but his only accomplishment to date has been a defeat of a same-sex marriage ban.

Casinos, like the state lottery, thrive on finding new ways to trick people out of their money. They may be a quick way to raise funds, but they will not create a thriving economy. Employment will jump, revenue will jump, but casinos are not a growth industry – once jobs are filled, new ones will not be created.

Casinos are not and never will be a solution to a state's problems. Here's to hoping the legislature stands tall with DiMasi in bankrupting Governor Slots.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu

Suffering infomercial insomnia

Brad Leibowitz

I have said it before and I will say it again: Chuck Norris is the single greatest current living human being. He has a ridiculous beard which packs a punch and a killer left foot which packs a killer left foot. However, I write this again not because of his beard or his foot. I am reiterating Chuck Norris's greatness because I wrote the better part of this column at 3:47 a.m., transfixed with the thought of buying the Chuck Norris endorsed "Total Gym."

According to Chuck and his attractive infomercial co-host Christie Brinkley, the "Total Gym" has the capabilities of delivering high quality top-notch workouts for your arms, chest, legs, back, abdominals, cardio and pilates. Furthermore, if you're interested in the "Total Gym" Norris recommends you do his favorite exercises being "The Pullover," "The Iron Cross," and "The Seated Row."

I am an insomniac. I haven't slept in the past 10 days (since Sunday, Mar. 2). My mind isn't fully awake yet nor is it fully asleep. The flicker of Chuck Norris's beard looks like a desert mirage promising muscles, red facial hair and "Walker, Texas Ranger." You hear famous people all the time say, "I'll sleep when I die," well I'm not famous, but I am becoming more and more convinced that this saying applies directly to me.

When you have insomnia, according to Jim Uhls, you're never really asleep and you're never really awake. I suppose this is true. At first insomnia is salvation. The first night you wonder what the hell you are still awake for, yet you find intense joy in the quiet of the night. For the first night or two, there is something comforting about the buzzing of street lights and the sound of silence.

After the second night, you tell yourself that by 11 p.m. you will be safely and warmly tucked in between your comforter and duvet cover; but this doesn't happen. By the time 3 a.m. rolls around on the third night, you and Chuck are confused best friends. He knows you're watching him while you're not sure why you're watching him. Chuck relies on this quality. Confusion is the only possible way someone would ever buy the "Total Gym," the "Ding King" or a life time supply of elf lawn ornaments for 6 easy-low installments of $29.99.

The flicker of Chuck Norris's beard looks like a desert mirage promising muscles, red facial hair and "Walker, Texas Ranger."

By the fifth day, you begin to see the world as one constant time lapse which never begins or ends; it just continues guided by the rising and falling of the sun. The light of the day seems duller. The dark of the night hangs over your mind like a shroud. The sounds around you become turned down. Everything loses meaning. Time becomes a series of alarm buzzers. Faces you know all mix into one talking mouth spewing out ideas which all sound the same. All you can think of is sleep, yet you can't complete the action. Pillows feel like rocks. Covers feel like hair shirts. The warmth a cover provides is never right; always too warm or too cold. Nothing fits.

The moment you lay down to sleep you realize your goal isn't going to be accomplished and so you lay in the dark hearing the once soothing silence laugh at you in patterns of snores and heavy breathing. You lay there until you being thinking of things to do. Have you ever answered a spam email?

Dear so and so:

I thank you for your consideration but no, I am fine with the size of my penis and I do not need any male enhancement.

Respectfully,

Puberty Jones

You lay in your bed until it occurs to you that somewhere in town a 7/11 type store is open. Instead of turning off the television, you let Chuck live for a few more hours because he will provide you with some solace when you stumble in the door at 5 a.m.

Talking to a store clerk in an empty Cumberland's Farm store five nights in a row at 4 a.m. is an interesting experience. Not because the conversation is good – it isn't – but because you begin to realize that the clerk behind the counter is someone who has willingly chosen night over day. You think to yourself, wow, this guy is either the craziest person on the face of the Earth or the sanest; problem is, you're not sure which.

You walk back to your house at 5 a.m. Chuck is still there, yet even he is about to go to sleep and give way to the early morning news. You wish you could follow his co-host Christie Brinkley to bed and cozy up next to her warmth. But it won't happen.

I finished this column at 11:45 a.m. on Tuesday, Mar. 11. Someone told me that nothing cures insomnia like the realization that it's time to get up. My alarm hits to tell me its time for class. So, with that, on this 11th day of my journey into the delusional, I am going to bed. Rest well.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu

"The Daily Collegian UMass Yak-Back!"

AIRING DAILY AT 1 P.M. AND 5 P.M. ON UVC-TV 19!

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

SORRY DOESN'T CUT IT

Dear editor:

Re: It's high time to issue an overdue apology, Mar. 6, 2008, Nick Milano, Ed Op.

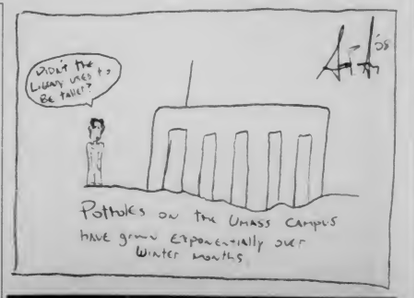
In his editorial on issuing an apology for slavery, Nick Milano hit on a lot of good points in discussing the injustices of the slave trade and how the government should have apologized for it.

I, personally, believe that there is such a thing as "too little, too late." Issuing an apology today for the actions of people more than a hundred years ago does nothing for the millions of descendants of once enslaved ancestors that live in this country today, other than giving them consolation in knowing that there are plenty of white Americans apologizing for something no one alive today had any part in.

True, slavery was a shameful piece of this country's history and a blemish that should never be forgotten. But to say that an apology is the "least that can be done?"

What does an official apology represent, besides years of denial and misunderstanding? Have we not moved beyond the issue of slavery in America today, as we face even more complex issues concerning race, gender and class in an election year when an African American man is running for President?

Why not concert more effort towards addressing those issues effectively, rather than passing symbolic legislation to apologize for something no one alive took part in? Why not concert that effort towards fighting the forms of slavery that still exist in the world today?



What about an apology for the incompetency of the government after Hurricane Katrina? Those people are still alive, and still suffering direct consequences of these actions.

Finally, please do not refer to as or confuse the United States to be a "Christian nation," as it is simply not true. Further, invoking Christianity as the foundation for a moral obligation to apologize for slavery is simply oxymoronic – it was the scriptures of the Bible that for centuries served as the rationale for keeping slaves in the first place.

Thomas Berry
UMass student

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be no more than 350 words and can be sent to edtorial@dailycollegian.com.

Guest columns from students, faculty and community members are welcomed. Columns should be between 750 and 850 word. Submitted columns are subject to editing and may not be published.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

WMUA, IHEG team up for concert series

Independent music hopes to gain publicity

BY BRIAN WOOD
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an effort to bring exciting new sounds to the Pioneer Valley, WMUA and the Iron Horse Entertainment Group have collaborated to bring music fans the Left of the Dial Concert Series.

The series is aimed at providing exposure for musicians and groups who are on independent labels. These acts, despite their unquestionable talent, generally don't receive the radio airtime or publicity that they deserve. WMUA and IHEG are doing their part to change this with a string of exciting events highlighting some of the best in independent music.

The series offers listeners a unique opportunity to indulge in new music on a variety of fronts. In addition to bands playing stops at the Pearl Street Night Club or the Iron Horse Music Hall in Northampton, WMUA will be supplementing this by featuring numerous on-air giveaways and promotions leading up to the performances as well as interviews with the bands that are featured members of the concert series.

This is the first formal collaboration between WMUA and IHEG, and is a partnership that both parties hope to extend past the spring and continue into the upcoming fall semester.

WMUA DJ Gabe Chicone is one of the primary organizers of the concert series, and in association with it will be providing substantial air play for scheduled bands while also providing listeners with live interviews with a number of the acts on-air.

"WMUA is dedicated to helping these bands thrive and continue to make great music," says Chicone. "We view this concert series as an extension of this goal."

So far, according to Chicone, the series has been a rousing success, stating that past performers Born Ruffians and Cadence Weapon were both surprised at the remarkable turnouts for their respective shows. The series has been on-going since the start of this spring semester.

The next scheduled event in the series features The Mountain Goats tonight at the Pearl Street Nigh Club. Tickets for the event are $18 at the door and the show begins at 8:30 p.m. with openers Drew Hickum and The Moaners.

The series continues on March 24 with Why? and Cryptacize (ex-Deerhoof) at the Iron Horse Music Hall, and the following day March 25 featuring Caribou. On April 5 the series shifts back to Pearl Street with Minus The Bear and Portugal the Man.

Other future performances include Canadian indie-rockers The Weakerthans, New York native Kevin Devine, and American Music Club. All shows are currently on sale at the Northampton box office and online at the IHEG Web site.

"The members of WMUA are all very excited about each of the shows," says Chicone, and judging from the current attendance at shows featured in the series, fans from the Pioneer Valley seem to share their collective enthusiasm.

For a complete listing of upcoming events or to purchase tickets Online, visit iheg.com. To tune in for updates on upcoming giveaways and interviews, WMUA can be listened to daily on radio frequency 91.1FM or by free online streaming at wmua.org.

Brian Wood can be reached at bjwood a student umass edu

Caribou, pictured above, is one of the many independent groups who are part of WMUA's, the radio station at UMass, and the Iron Horse Entertainment Group's collaborative concert series.

UMass club works catwalk in Ballroom

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

'Lights, camera, and strut' was the key phrase at the 3rd annual Soul TV fashion show, "Expression of the Soul." The event took place last Saturday in the Student Union Ballroom. University of Massachusetts students made sure they looked twice in the mirror before walking on the red carpet that welcomed them into the show.

Soul TV is a registered student organization on campus that aims to satisfy students that share an interest in the performance arts and other media outlets like print, radio, and TV. With "Expressions of the Soul," the executive members of Soul TV aimed to showcase fashion as art.

Shayna Smallwood, the president of Soul TV spoke about the organization's mission.

"A lot of people steer away from their mission, we are a performance arts RSO. We are bringing it back to how it was back in 1996; it was more like 'Soul Train,'" Smallwood said. They achieved their goal by inviting designers, musicians, models, body paint performers and artists to partake in the show.

Before the models put their heels on, the executive board members worked a whole year in preparation for the event. Tryouts for models and body paint performers were held in the beginning of the fall semester.

"We had like 100 people try out, we only wanted 20 actual models. It was tough," Smallwood said.

Similar to many tryouts, Soul TV had a certain criteria in mind.

"We looked for attitude, body type, walk, confidence and face," Smallwood said. There were diverse models picked for the show. "We were not discriminatory. I know people have a misconception that you have to be skinny to do it. We are not 'America's Next Top Model;' we look for all types of people," Smallwood said.

Due to connections that members of Soul TV had, some of the designers that presented their line were UMass Alumni, according to Smallwood, and were contacted through their Web sites to participate in the show.

Smallwood commented that the week before the show, practices were being held every night. "They got a little nervous, a few tripped during practice. I just said don't stumble during the show," Smallwood said.

Early Saturday morning, models were already practicing and decorations were being hung in the Student

See FASHION on page 7

Local community saves treasured theater

Northampton keeps Pleasant St. running

BY ANDREA MURRAY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Unique and quaint, the Pleasant Street Theater is a gem nestled in downtown Northampton. Three art cinema enthusiasts, Richard Pini, David Spencer and John Morrison founded The Pleasant Street Theater in 1976. In the spring of 1988 Morrison announced that they required a fundraiser to stay open. Over 250 members of the community donated $25,000 to save the theater.

Fast-forward 20 years and the theater was threatened again but was quickly resurrected as a non-profit by Amherst Cinema Arts. Pleasant Street is the last access to regular film screenings for the city of Northampton.

In 1994, Northampton's Calvin Theatre closed its doors and stopped showing regularly scheduled films when it re-opened. In early 2007 the city's Academy of Music did the same as the Calvin Theatre and is now reserved for sporadic concerts and theatrical productions.

"I hope people realize that if they like certain amenities in the area then they have to do two things," says Silas Kopf, a Northampton furniture artist and campaigner of saving Pleasant Street Theater. "First, they might have to just write a check annually or they have to just go out there and support it by buying a ticket. It's like use it or lose it."

Silas and Linda Kopf and their friends Bruce and Rita Bleiman began an e-mail list advocating donations to the theater in the summer 2007 after reading about the theater's potential demise.

The e-mail was sent to Rita Bleiman's extensive city council e-mail list as well as friends and family of the group. Word spread fast. Kopf described it as a "viral campaign." The Kopfs and the Bleimans turned to Carol Johnson, executive director of Amherst Cinema Arts Center, to see if she and her non-profit group would consider running the theater if the donations came in.

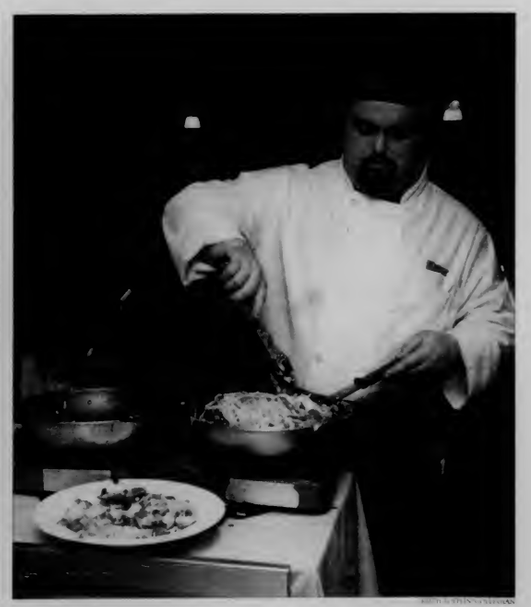
As soon as Amherst Cinema Arts signed on, the Kopfs and Bleimans realized that they were able to get more donations because of the tax deductibility. Hundreds of donations poured in to Amherst Cinema Arts Center in support of the Save Pleasant Street Theater campaign eventually totaling over $100,000. The Northampton Center for the Arts picked up the campaign and donated $20,000 worth of proceeds from First Night in Northampton.

"I like that it's kind of funky," said Kopf. "It looks local. It isn't something that you could easily translate into another community. You go in any shopping mall movie theater and they're the same wherever you go in the United States. But this is unique to that building. I like that they arranged a movie theater in what was a storefront. It works for me. There are obviously things that could be nicer though. The theater downstairs is kind of odd, kind of dungeon like, but I think that all adds to the character of it and going to the movies there."

Brian Foote, an employee of Unite Footwear and The Academy of Music's contingency plan, started the Facebook group "Save Pleasant Street Theater." The group raised awareness and posted the contact information and circulating e-mail campaign of Kopf and others.

"Everyone spends tons of time on computers now," says Foote. "I feel that I can somehow be active politically through different causes by spreading awareness on the Internet."

Too often communities don't come together, and as a result countless historic and local theaters in other cities and states have closed down.



Indie theaters can no longer survive in the profit driven world of big businesses. Of the 570 Massachusetts theaters listed on cinematreasure.com only 108 or roughly 19 percent of these theaters are open or open renovating. Cinematreasres.com is a Web site devoted to the preservation and awareness of movie theaters. As more movie theaters go into extinction the only viable option is to become non-profits.

The Coolidge Corner Theatre in Brookline, Mass and the Jacob Burns Film Center in Pleasantville, NY are examples of how well the non-profit model works. In being non-profit theaters, they have the freedom to show documentaries, local artists' movies, World cinema and first run independent films. They foster educational outreach programs and overall carry a big impact on the culture of their communities.

"It's been around for as long as I can remember and it's always sort of a getaway

See THEATER on page 6

This week, executive chefs from restaurants in the area bring their culinary skills to the University of Massachusetts Dining Commons. Each night, a different dining hall sponsors a different restaurant. This week provides UMass students with a taste of the local restaurant scene, without paying the high-end restaurant price.

History in theaters disappoints with no substance, intrigue

Portman shines, story lackluster in Chadwick's film 'Boleyn Girl'

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

To a history and movie buff, there are two things that are hard to resist in life – Tudor history and Natalie Portman. Mesh the two, and it might as well be heaven, but without a corset.

So naturally, one could imagine the delight upon hearing that Philippa Gregory's 2002 bestseller, "The Other Boleyn Girl", was being adapted for the big screen. Even more so, when word got around that BBC Films had drafted Portman to take on the title role of Anne Boleyn. It was a promise so good, there was swooning before the trailer was even released.

Two hours, stuck in the middle of some potentially silly, potentially arduous epic of a feature where copious amounts of horse-clomping and feigned dialects abound may not be everyone's idea of a good time. Yet for those who are into that sort of thing, "The Other Boleyn Girl" rests at the nexus of some great expectations.

The bad news is it really doesn't deliver.

For fellow fans of the subject matter, "The Other Boleyn Girl" corresponds with resurging interest in Tudor history. With everyone from Cate Blanchett to Showtime jumping on the Tudor bandwagon as of late, it's a safe bet that we haven't seen the last of these sixteenth century bedhoppers outside of textbooks.

Yet for most, it's the pairing of Portman and Scarlett Johansson that's most worth buzzing about.

As the sisters Boleyn, the two share screen time as they vie for the affections of the indelible Henry VIII (Eric Bana). Under any other starlets, such a feat may sound like standard fare. But with Portman and Johansson at the helm, it's a tantalizing cocktail of possibility. And what audience, hot for history or not, could claim immunity to such temptations?

The fun begins in a little manor home just north of obscurity. There, the Boleyn clan – an ambitious family of upstarts – bides time in preparation for more interesting times to come. Fate soon calls with a visit from rich relation, the Duke of Norfolk (David Morrissey).

Norfolk doesn't take to posturing – he's out trolling the countryside for cute girls to suit his hidden agenda. In the spirit of fatherly pimping, papa Boleyn (Mark Rylance) offers up his daughters – first cheeky Anne (Portman), then doe-eyed Mary (Johansson) – for the thankless task of playing bedfellow to the King of England.

Directed by Justin Chadwick, "The Other Boleyn Girl" boasts high production values and a sleek design. There's also no denying the drama of the set up; the rise of Anne Boleyn from shire bumpkin to royal company ranks as one of the great cautionary tales of European history. Spun from the fresh perspective of Gregory's novel and the possibilities seem almost endless. Yet still, the narrative stumbles.

For "Boleyn Girl", the problem is as simple as its source material: Screenwriter Peter Morgan ("The Queen") cuts state policy clean out, anteing up the drama by placing more emphasis on the bedchamber policy of his subjects.

The result: history as a high school soap opera.

Portman makes a great Anne Boleyn, though. Hollywood still gets it's casting of the bad Queen all wrong, preferring pretty faces to powerhouses, but with Portman, it's all relative. Unlike other Boleyns as portrayed by Genevieve Bujold ("Anne of the Thousand Days") and Dorothy Tutin ("The Six Wives of Henry VIII"), she gets the dichotomy of her character. Neither total hussy nor scheming shrew, but never straying far from either stereotype, Portman's performance is rich with complexity.

And Johansson isn't bad either, although she's sub to Portman for most of the picture. She's better here than she's been in her previous forays into period catastrophe – "The Black Dahlia" and "The Prestige" ranking among them. The role of placid Mary Boleyn suits her capabilities; emoting more through mannerism than bravado, the performance ranks reminiscent of some of her earlier gems.

Bana, however, fares less successfully. More stud horse than ogre of infamy, his Henry is a man removed from myth. Gone are the six wives and the Hans Holbein portraiture which would institute him perennially in the modern subconscious, and in its stead grows a fella whose desires often appear to transgress his more stately responsibilities as King.

For Henry, its girls first, politics later. The business of this kingdom is all about getting laid. Both the Break from Rome and the Declaration of Royal Supremacy come across as nothing more than afterthoughts in Henry's pursuit of another piece of action. And sadly, that's really all the plot amounts to.

Despite its best efforts, despite its sumptuous aesthetic and strong cast, the film isn't strong enough to avoid the pitfalls that historical fictions are sometimes heir to. Under better circumstances, a story of this ilk would really shine. Instead, it bustles under its own weight, and what we're left with barely measures up to the film's total potential.

One day, the rise and fall of Anne Boleyn will receive the due storytelling it deserves. Until that time comes, repeated listenings of the Kingston Trio song "With Her Head Tucked Underneath Her Arm" would be more suitable than this lackluster endeavor.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy a student. umass.edu.

Scarlett Johansson and Natalie Portman play the Boleyn sisters in Justin Chadwick's fictitious take on the Tudor history.

Far–fetched '10,000 BC' inaccurate, predictable

COURTESY WARNER BROS. PICTURES

"10,000 BC," starring Steven Strait and Carmilla Belle, is a pre–historic love story that doesn't live up to expectations. The sub–par film pales in comparison to recent releases like "Apocalypto" and "300."

By Frank Godinho
Collegian Staff

Whether people flocked to see "10,000 BC" merely because of the lack of good movies out there, the uncanny similarities of its advertising campaign with "300," or because of its alluring and expensive-looking special effects, is something that remains to be seen. It should be said, however, that "10,000 BC" isn't worth two hours of your time, never mind your hard-earned six bucks.

In the politically correct world we live today, the term "BC" may cause some to lift their eyebrows. That is about as far that the film takes religious terminology. The film's title is basically a statement as to when the film starts, which is at or around 12,000 years ago, or at the beginning of the Mesolithic period. Before any of the actors speak, we settle in with a narration that is downright annoying. What's worse is that it doesn't go away. Instead the cheesy narrator continues his lecture about the ancient tribesmen's journeys, nature, the sun, etc. until you basically want to get up and leave the room until he stops.

Once the narrator disappears for a while, we're introduced to the film's protagonists, D'Leh (Steven Strait) and Evolet (Carmilla Belle). In the introductory scenes, D'Leh and Evolet are children and looked at as outsiders by the rest of the kids in the tribe. D'Leh's father, who abandoned the tribe when he left to find food, is quickly labeled as a coward, ultimately leaving a stigma for D'Leh. Meanwhile, Evolet is seen as the young girl with the bright blue eyes who prompted a prophecy from Old Mother, the wise old woman of the tribe. The two young children make an instant connection, which goes on until they reach adulthood.

Years later, when D'Leh and Evolet are young adults and in love, their tribe is ransacked by an enemy tribe, and among the many people kidnapped is Evolet. The enemy is far more advanced, equipped with horses, metal weapons and even ships.

The predictable plot continues onward, with D'Leh going out to save his true love. By taking just two members of his tribe with him to take on an entire army, D'Leh has a difficult task ahead of him. Traveling through mountains, jungles, and deserts (all of which are in walking distance from each other), D'Leh and his fellow tribesmen take on giant bird beasts and straggling members of the enemy tribe.

When the historical inaccuracies couldn't become more farfetched, we encounter the enemy tribe dragging its prisoners through a desert to enslave them to build pyramids. The fact that the film chose pyramids, as in the Egyptian Pyramids, is either a huge mistake on their behalf, or an insult to the audience to think that they don't know any better.

Ultimately, as D'Leh and his tribesmen journey through the desert, they encounter tribe upon tribe to help them in defeating a common enemy. Coincidentally, these new tribes had members kidnapped to build the ancient pyramids as well. In the end, the good triumphs over evil and D'Leh and Evolet reunite after an epic battle.

"10,000 BC" is very much like a video game. For a while, the graphics keep you entertained, but after a while you just get sick of it and end up leaving the room. Like "Beowulf," the special effects are amazing, but the film itself is lacking. The acting is stiff and the historical and geographical inaccuracies are inexcusable. If "Apocalypto" can be a film using ancient dialects with a great storyline, why couldn't "10,000 BC?"

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho a student. umass.edu

Cinema thrives after re–opening

THEATER from page 5

from some of the larger theaters. I look forward to seeing their movies," says Lisette Lopez, a native of Munson that frequently patronizes the theater.

Carol Johnson, executive director of Amherst Cinema Arts Inc. says that on Jan. 25, 2008, re-opening night, the theater sold out for the movies "No Country for Old Men" and "The Diving Bell and the Butterfly." Richard Pini, one of the original founders of The Pleasant Street Theater came to the re-opening all the way from France.

She says that the support has been solid ever since. With the initial donations they spruced up the lobby and the restroom, redid plumbing, installed new speakers upstairs and downstairs while also installing an online ticketing system that allows people to buy tickets in advance and pay with credit or debit cards. They also installed bigger screens. Currently they're making some upgrades to the projector systems themselves.

"Northampton really stepped up to provide the initial investment in theater but we are really counting on cinema lovers to support Pleasant Street on an ongoing basis," says Johnson.

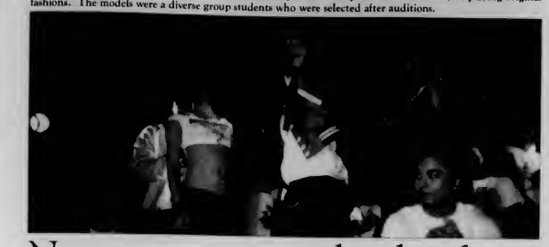
Andrea Murray can be reached at akmurray a student.umass.edu

COURTESY ANDREA MURRAY

After a rocky history, the Pleasant St. theater is thriving since its Jan. 25 re–opening. The building is updating itself with new speakers and online ticketing systems, making movie–going easier.

Your roommate is tired of hearing you gripe about movies.

Write for Arts & Living!
arts@dailycollegian.com



YES COMPUTERS
Apple Specialist
Your local Apple–authorized sales and service center.
Conveniently located in downtown Northampton.
A Big Deal for a Little Laptop
The ASUS Eee PC
Present this coupon for $50 OFF Any Asus Eee PC expires 3/07/08
$395!

●Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
●Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
●Rugged, shock-resistant design.
●Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
●Built-in wireless Internet.
Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St | 413-585-0007

COURTESY VIDEO ASSISTANT

Soul TV, a UMass registered student organization, put on a unique show on Saturday displaying original fashions. The models were a diverse group students who were selected after auditions.

Original fashion lines shown

FASHION from page 5

Union. The body painters struggled to put on their pasties and shorts if needed, and got comfortable for the hours of painting by the artists.

A steady flow of attendees started at around 7 p.m. inside the Student Union and comfortably found their seats, waiting for the show to begin. Senior Denise Dailey recited a poem about the meaning of the soul and how it represents the individual.

Each scene was first introduced by a body paint performer who set the mood for the next collection. Alex Petit-Frere, one of the body painters, said "Let's say that [the experience] was a good one. Very nerve racking at first, but when I got up there it was all good."

The scenes had distinct themes that would hint to the audience the style of clothes that were going to be modeled. The first scene was called "Fashion over Style." These collections emphasized the idea that clothing can involve risks that many people wouldn't take.

This scene featured designs by two UMass alumni, Nekisha Powell and Monique Jammott. The collection, called "Sweet Society Vintage," was designed by Monique Jammott. According to Smallwood, Jammott's designs contained "A lot of retro, old school and funky fresh styles."

Nekisha Powell's collection, including short cocktail dresses, was named "Donena Jahvaune."

The next scene, entitled "Elegance to the eye," included Gretchen Lafond and her collection, "Mademoiselle Boston." The pieces modeled were very sophisticated, elegant dresses, according to Smallwood.

During the "Soultry Vibes," scene Mike Idokitas, introduced his clothing line "Beeing." Smallwood said that this collection is a representation of who you are as a person. The shirts with their bright colors would say "I love beeing me."

After the collections were shown, the hosts of the night, UMass alumni Fallon Mercedes and Nedland Beauchamp, detailed the scenes that would be played out after the intermission.

Freshman Quinn Brown sang the Black National Anthem, "Lift Ev'ry Voice and Sing," during the intermission. Smallwood spoke on why she asked Brown to sing for the show.

"I was working him from last semester. His voice is like John Legend/ J.Holiday," Smallwood said. The UMass step team also went on stage to perform for the crowd.

After the intermission, the scene "Crank the Runway" showed off attire with a more urban feel. Daniel McLaurin, originally from Boston, designed the collection called "Sophisticated Swag." This scene was shared by designer Ihai Iran originally from Lawrence, Mass., with his collection, "Geno."

The next scene, "Soul Fusion" introduced collections that had versatile day to night attire starting with the collection "Marnya" that was designed by Avari Thompson Designs from the collection entitled "Eversse," designed by Irene Fortes were also modeled on the runway.

The Brian Stevens Collection closed the fashion show in the scene "Dare to be Bold." Stevens' designs incorporated formal wear for men like suits.

"He mixed sports jackets with jeans. Against the norm," Smallwood said.

"We got great feedback [about] the show. A lot of alumni were also supporting us, how proud they were that we were able to bring back the fashion and continue the legacy of UMass fashion show," said Sabrina Haskins, the vice president of Soul TV.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan a student.umass.edu.

New season means battle of sexes on WB's 'Beauty and the Geek'

By Kate O'Hare
Zap2it.com

In past seasons on The CW's "Beauty and the Geek," smart, socially inept guys were paired up with gorgeous, intellectually challenged girls in a quest for personal transformation and to win prizes, including a $250,000 grand prize.

Last year, in season four, executive producers Ashton Kutcher and Jason Goldberg shook up the premise by introducing one male beauty and one female geek into the cast.

In the new season, premiering Tuesday at 8 p.m. EDT, they go even further. This year, it's war.

"Now," says Goldberg, "it's beauty vs. geek."

So rather than having the opportunity to work together and learn from each other, the beauties and the geeks are at odds.

"We're almost through the run right now," says Goldberg, "but it's been really interesting to see the evolution of what's been happening in the house and with these people."

Also, the volume level of the cast has apparently changed.

"This year," Goldberg says, "more than any year, we have, I'd say, louder people than ever on this show."

Asked if this is the reverse of a kinder, gentler "Beauty and the Geek," Goldberg says, "It didn't start as (kinder and gentler), I'll tell you that. I'll tell you also that when you put these types of beauties and geeks in a house together, it just can't help itself. They just got there.

"Women are really, as we found on this show, comforting. That's their nature, to be comforting and help these geeks. Ultimately, the geeks, in a way, really were there to support our beauties and make them more well-rounded.

"But as the show evolved, they fell back into that very thing."

Goldberg is feeling positive about fan reaction.

"I think they're going to love it," he says. "It's a louder cast. There are fireworks in the cast. I really do like the people here. I love how it's unfolding. It's been a lot of fun. There's a lot of sex appeal, more so than I've seen before on the show.

"It's certainly got heart, and it's got comedy. Those things are there, but it's an outrageous cast."

Since the show began, the question has been raised about doing a complete flip-flop, pairing all male beauties with all female geeks. Based on his experience so far, Goldberg has his concerns about what would happen.

"It was a good look in the last cycle of the show at what would happen," he says. "To go all the way, it becomes a different show altogether. Look, women are naturally nurturing. Men, good-looking men, that are not so bright, are not. And that's a big difference in the show."

But, it could also be an eye-opener for guys in the audience.

"Ultimately," Goldberg says, "when we can take what looks like a duckling and turn her into a princess, maybe they'd look at their wife or girlfriend a different way."

While "Beauty and the Geek" is a certified success, Kutcher and Goldberg haven't been able to sell another concept they called "Fountain of Youth" when it was being considered at the now-defunct WB Network. The idea is for a cross-country race featuring teams consisting of a college senior and a senior citizen.

"I gotta tell ya," Goldberg says, "it's really frustrating. We believe in this show more than anything, and no one really wants to move forward with it. We are firm believers that it's a fantastic message and a fantastic point of view.

"I think they're missing the boat. It would be amazing, that's what it would be. There's so much to say with a show like that."

The WB's hit show "Beauty and the Geek" is changing its premise. While before, the beauties and geeks were supposed to work together, now the show's producers are pitting each group against the other.

Yosemite offers winter tours

By Marek Warszawski
McClatchy Newspapers

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK — No less an authority than Henry David Thoreau compared the sensation of tramping through snow to walking in a cloudy sky upside down.

A beautiful description, but there's a catch: You'd better be wearing snowshoes.

Without snowshoes, walking through snow isn't nearly as enjoyable – or poetic – as ranger Dick Ewart points out Saturday morning before leading a five hour snowshoe hike sponsored by the Yosemite Association.

"Indians figured out 10,000 years ago that you'll sink deep in the snow unless you make your feet real wide," Ewart tells the group.

A 32 year old Yosemite veteran, Ewart is as much a fixture at Badger Pass as the historic main lodge. During the decades, he's introduced thousands of park visitors to the secret splendor of winter while teaching them about the natural world.

After introducing the history of snowshoeing and displaying several different types of snowshoes, Ewart leads uphill from the base area and off the groomed ski slope. Since it had snowed more than a foot overnight, the going gets tougher as we sink with every step.

"People pay a lot of money to use stair-step machines," he says. "You get it up here for free."

Before long, we come across animal tracks that are partially covered by snow. The tracks are so faint it's impossible to tell what direction the animal is traveling, though Ewart believes it's probably a long-tailed weasel.

Someone asks Ewart why there are only two sets of tracks instead of four, which is what you'd expect a four-legged critter would leave behind.

"For the same reason that everybody is following my path," Ewart says. "It's a lot easier to get around."

He goes on to explain that some animals change their gait in the winter so that their hind feet land in the same hole as their front feet, leaving only one print. It's called direct registering.

Threatening skies loom overhead as we arrive at the top of the ski slope. Mount Hoffman, which lies 10 miles to the north, is almost completely enveloped in storm clouds.

Even so, Ewart continues to impart knowledge.

We learn that winter is caused by the earth's 23 degree tilt away from the sun, which in turn makes the sun's rays hit the earth at a lower angle. Because of the glancing nature of these rays, less energy is transferred to the earth's surface in the form of heat.

We learn that air, like any gas, expands and cools at higher elevations. Expanding on this concept, Ewart says that gaining 1,000 feet is roughly the climate equivalent of driving 300 miles north at the same elevation. This means going from Fresno (elev. 325) to Badger Pass (elev. 7,200) feels kind of like driving north 2,000 miles, which would put us in the middle of Canada.

"So let's keep walking in Canada," Ewart jokes.

"If we're walking in Canada," someone asks, "then how far is the North Pole?"

As we slog ahead, Ewart describes how various forest inhabitants survive the winter.

Trees, he says, are protected from freezing by the high-concentration of sugar contained within their sap. Fir and pine trees, which comprise most of the Sierra forest, can withstand temperatures down to 40 degrees below zero.

The way animals survive is even more fascinating. According to Ewart, they either hibernate (like ground squirrels, marmots and most bears), migrate to lower elevations (like deer and birds) or possess the ability to tough out the elements.

Those that tough it out spend most of their time inhabiting a one-inch thick zone between the ground and snowpack called the subnivean space. These critters move under the snow for protection from heat loss and predators, though some predators are small enough to spoil the party.

To help illustrate his point, Ewart removes a series of preserved animals from the inside pocket of his jacket. First there's a mouse, which mainly eats seeds. Then, a mole, which eats insects, worms and grubs. Finally, a gopher, which digs into the ground for bulbs and roots.

"It's like they're living in the same home but dining at three different restaurants," Ewart says.

Before we head back, the ranger stresses the importance of the eight-foot deep snowpack we've been trudging through all day. Without it, we'd have nothing to recharge our reservoirs or irrigate our crops.

"The way I like to think of it is that we're standing on top of California's economy," Ewart says.

Even a romantic like Thoreau would have to agree with that.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Online Room Selection is coming!
Check out the Room Selection Bulletin delivered to your residence hall mailbox this week and come to one of the Online Room Selection Information Sessions:
The Housing Assignment Office will review online room selection instructions, guidelines, and strategies, and will show you online room selection menus so you can get ready to select your own assignment.
Pick a one-hour information session prior to the room selection period you plan to participate in, and we'll see you there!

Date	Times	Location
Tuesday, February 19	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm.174-76
Thursday, February 28	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm 917
Tuesday, March 11	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, March 25	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, April 1	12:00-1:00pm or 1:00-2:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Wednesday, April 2	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Monday, April 14	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Tuesday, April 15	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Pierpont Hall Main Lounge
Wednesday, April 16	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76

www.housing.umass.edu UMassAmherst

History in theaters disappoints with no substance, intrigue

Portman shines, story lackluster in Chadwick's film 'Boleyn Girl'

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

To a history and movie buff, there are two things that are hard to resist in life – Tudor history and Natalie Portman. Mesh the two, and it might as well be heaven, but without a corset.

So naturally, one could imagine the delight upon hearing that Philippa Gregory's 2002 bestseller, "The Other Boleyn Girl", was being adapted for the big screen. Even more so, when word got around that BBC Films had drafted Portman to take on the title role of Anne Boleyn. It was a promise so good, there was swooning before the trailer was even released.

Two hours, stuck in the middle of some potentially silly, potentially arduous epic of a feature where copious amounts of horse-clomping and feigned dialects abound may not be everyone's idea of a good time. Yet for those who are into that sort of thing, "The Other Boleyn Girl" rests at the nexus of some great expectations.

The bad news is it really doesn't deliver.

For fellow fans of the subject matter, "The Other Boleyn Girl" corresponds with resurging interest in Tudor history. With everyone from Cate Blanchett to Showtime jumping on the Tudor bandwagon as of late, it's a safe bet that we haven't seen the last of these sixteenth century bedhoppers outside of textbooks.

Yet for most, it's the pairing of Portman and Scarlett Johansson that's most worth buzzing about.

As the sisters Boleyn, the two share screen time as they vie for the affections of the indelible Henry VIII (Eric Bana). Under any other starlets, such a feat may sound like standard fare. But with Portman and Johansson at the helm, it's a tantalizing cocktail of possibility. And what audience, hot for history or not, could claim immunity to such temptations?

The fun begins in a little manor home just north of obscurity. There, the Boleyn clan – an ambitious family of upstarts – bides time in preparation for more interesting times to come. Fate soon calls with a visit from rich relation, the Duke of Norfolk (David Morrissey).

Norfolk doesn't take to posturing – he's out trolling the countryside for cute girls to suit his hidden agenda. In the spirit of fatherly pimping, papa Boleyn (Mark Rylance) offers up his daughters – first cheeky Anne (Portman), then doe-eyed Mary (Johansson) – for the thankless task of playing bedfellow to the King of England.

Directed by Justin Chadwick, "The Other Boleyn Girl" boasts high production values and a sleek design. There's also no denying the drama of the set up; the rise of Anne Boleyn from shire bumpkin to royal company ranks as one of the great cautionary tales of European history. Spun from the fresh perspective of Gregory's novel and the possibilities seem almost endless. Yet still, the narrative stumbles.

For "Boleyn Girl", the problem is as simple as its source material. Screenwriter Peter Morgan ("The Queen") cuts state policy clean out, anteing up the drama by placing more emphasis on the bedchamber policy of his subjects.

The result: history as a high school soap opera.

Portman makes a great Anne Boleyn, though. Hollywood still gets it's casting of the bad Queen all wrong, preferring pretty faces to powerhouses, but with Portman, it's all relative. Unlike other Boleyns as portrayed by Genevieve Bujold ("Anne of the Thousand Days") and Dorothy Tutin ("The Six Wives of Henry VIII"), she gets the dichotomy of her character. Neither total hussy nor scheming shrew, but never straying far from either stereotype, Portman's performance is rich with complexity.

And Johansson isn't bad either, although she's sub to Portman for most of the picture. She's better here than she's been in her previous forays into period catastrophe – "The Black Dahlia" and "The Prestige") ranking among them. The role of placid Mary Boleyn suits her capabilities; emoting more through mannerism than bravado, the performance ranks reminiscent of some of her earlier gems.

Bana, however, fares less successfully. More stud horse than ogre of infamy, his Henry is a man removed from myth. Gone are the six wives and the Hans Holbein portraiture which would institute him perennially in the modern subconscious, and in its stead grows a fella whose desires often appear to transgress his more stately responsibilities as King.

For Henry, its girls first, politics later. The business of this kingdom is all about getting laid. Both the Break from Rome and the Declaration of Royal Supremacy come across as nothing more than afterthoughts in Henry's pursuit of another piece of action. And sadly, that's really all the plot amounts to.

Despite its best efforts, despite its sumptuous aesthetic and strong cast, the film isn't strong enough to avoid the pitfalls that historical fictions are sometimes heir to. Under better circumstances, a story of this ilk would really shine. Instead, it bustles under its own weight, and what we're left with barely measures up to the film's total potential.

One day, the rise and fall of Anne Boleyn will receive the due storytelling it deserves. Until that time comes, repeated listenings of the Kingston Trio song "With Her Head Tucked Underneath Her Arm" would be more suitable than this lackluster endeavor.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY FOCUS FEATURES

Scarlett Johansson and Natalie Portman play the Boleyn sisters in Justin Chadwick's fictitious take on the Tudor history.

Far–fetched '10,000 BC' inaccurate, predictable

COURTESY WARNER BROS. PICTURES

"10,000 BC," starring Steven Strait and Carmilla Belle, is a pre–historic love story that doesn't live up to expectations. The sub–par film pales in comparison to recent releases like "Apocalypto" and "300."

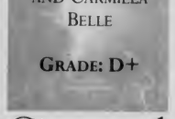
By Frank Godinho
Collegian Staff

Whether people flocked to see "10,000 BC" merely because of the lack of good movies out there, the uncanny similarities of its advertising campaign with "300," or because of its alluring and expensive-looking special effects, is something that remains to be seen. It should be said, however, that "10,000 BC" isn't worth two hours of your time, never mind your hard-earned six bucks.

In the politically correct world we live today, the term "BC" may cause some to lift their eyebrows. That is about as far that the film takes religious terminology. The film's title is basically a statement as to when the film starts, which is at or around 12,000 years ago, or at the beginning of the Mesolithic period. Before any of the actors speak, we settle in with a narration that is downright annoying. What's worse is that it doesn't go away. Instead the cheesy narrator continues his lecture about the ancient tribesmen's journeys, nature, the sun, etc. until you basically want to get up and leave the room until he stops.

Once the narrator disappears for a while, we're introduced to the film's protagonists, D'Leh (Steven Strait) and Evolet (Carmilla Belle). In the introductory scenes, D'Leh and Evolet are children and looked at as outsiders by the rest of the kids in the tribe. D'Leh's father, who abandoned the tribe when he left to find food, is quickly labeled as a coward, ultimately leaving a stigma for D'Leh. Meanwhile, Evolet is seen as the young girl with the bright blue eyes who prompted a prophecy from Old Mother, the wise old woman of the tribe. The two young children make an instant connection, which goes on until they reach adulthood.

Years later, when D'Leh and Evolet are young adults and in love, their tribe is ransacked by an enemy tribe, and among the many people kidnapped is Evolet. The enemy is far more advanced, equipped with horses, metal weapons and even ships.



The predictable plot continues onward, with D'Leh going out to save his true love. By taking just two members of his tribe with him to take on an entire army, D'Leh has a difficult task ahead of him. Traveling through mountains, jungles, and deserts (all of which are in walking distance from each other), D'Leh and his fellow tribesmen take on giant bird beasts and straggling members of the enemy tribe.

When the historical inaccuracies couldn't become more farfetched, we encounter the enemy tribe dragging its prisoners through a desert to enslave them to build pyramids. The fact that the film chose pyramids, as in the Egyptian Pyramids, is either a huge mistake on their behalf, or an insult to the audience to think that they don't know any better.

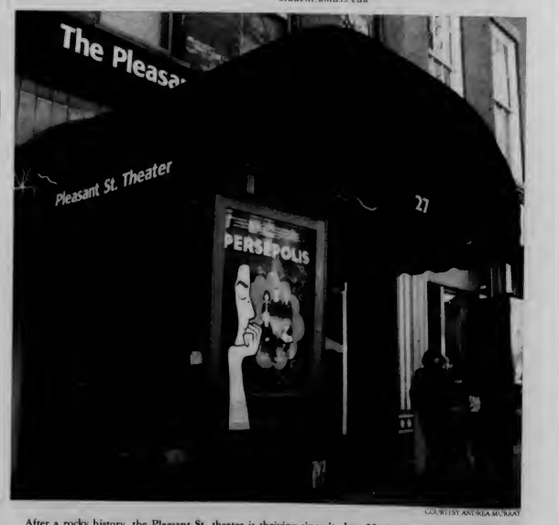
Ultimately, as D'Leh and his tribesmen journey through the desert, they encounter tribe upon tribe to help them in defeating a common enemy. Coincidentally, these new tribes had members kidnapped to build the ancient pyramids as well. In the end, the good triumphs over evil and D'Leh and Evolet reunite after an epic battle.

"10,000 BC" is very much like a video game. For a while, the graphics keep you entertained, but after a while you just get sick of it and end up leaving the room. Like "Beowulf," the special effects are amazing, but the film itself is lacking. The acting is stiff and the historical and geographical inaccuracies are inexcusable. If "Apocalypto" can be a film using ancient dialects with a great storyline, why couldn't "10,000 BC?"

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu

Cinema thrives after re–opening

THEATER from page 5



from some of the larger theaters. I look forward to seeing their movies," says Lisette Lopez, a native of Munson that frequently patronizes the theater.

Carol Johnson, executive director of Amherst Cinema Arts Inc. says that on Jan. 25, 2008, re-opening night, the theater sold out for the movies "No Country for Old Men" and "The Diving Bell and the Butterfly." Richard Pini, one of the original founders of The Pleasant Street Theater came to the re-opening all the way from France.

She says that the support has been solid ever since. With the initial donations they spruced up the lobby and the restroom, redid plumbing, installed new speakers upstairs and downstairs while also installing an online ticketing system that allows people to buy tickets in advance and pay with credit or debit cards. They also installed bigger screens. Currently they're making some upgrades to the projector systems themselves.

"Northampton really stepped up to provide the initial investment in theater but we are really counting on cinema lovers to support Pleasant Street on an ongoing basis," says Johnson.

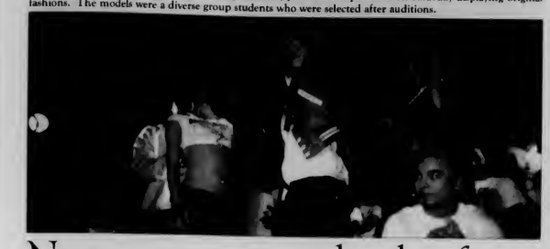
Andrea Murray can be reached at akmurray@student.umass.edu

COURTESY ANDREA MURRAY

After a rocky history, the Pleasant St. theater is thriving since its Jan. 25 re–opening. The building is updating itself with new speakers and online ticketing systems, making movie–going easier.

Your roommate is tired of hearing you gripe about movies.

Write for Arts & Living!
arts@dailycollegian.com



YES COMPUTERS
Apple Specialist
Your local Apple-authorized sales and service center.
Conveniently located in downtown Northampton.
A Big Deal for a Little Laptop
The ASUS Eee PC
●Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
●Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
●Rugged, shock-resistant design.
●Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
●Built-in wireless Internet.
Present this coupon for $50 OFF Any Asus Eee PC expires 3/07/08
$395!
Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St | 413-585-0007

COURTESY SOUL TV

Soul TV, a UMass registered student organization, put on a unique show on Saturday displaying original fashions. The models were a diverse group students who were selected after auditions.

Original fashion lines shown

FASHION from page 5

Union. The body painters struggled to put on their pasties and shorts if needed, and got comfortable for the hours of painting by the artists.

A steady flow of attendees started at around 7 p.m. inside the Student Union and comfortably found their seats, waiting for the show to begin. Senior Denise Dailey recited a poem about the meaning of the soul and how it represents the individual.

Each scene was first introduced by a body paint performer who set the mood for the next collection. Alex Petit-Frere, one of the body painters, said "Let's say that [the experience] was a good one. Very nerve racking at first, but when I got up there it was all good."

The scenes had distinct themes that would hint to the audience the style of clothes that were going to be modeled. The first scene was called "Fashion over Style." These collections emphasized the idea that clothing can involve risks that many people wouldn't take.

This scene featured designs by two UMass alumni, Nekisha Powell and Monique Jemmott. The collection, called "Sweet Society Vintage," was designed by Monique Jammott. According to Smallwood, Jammott's designs contained "A lot of retro, old school and funky fresh styles."

Nekisha Powell's collection, including short cocktail dresses, was named "Donena Jahvaune."

The next scene, entitled "Elegance to the eye," included Gretchen Lafond and her collection, "Mademoiselle Boston." The pieces modeled were very sophisticated, elegant dresses, according to Smallwood.

During the "Soultry Vibes," scene Mike Idiokitas, introduced his clothing line "Beeing." Smallwood said that this collection is a representation of who you are as a person. The shirts with their bright colors would say "I love beeing me."

After the collections were shown, the hosts of the night, UMass alumni Fallon Mercedes and Nedland Beauchamp, detailed the scenes that would be played out after the intermission.

Freshman Quinn Brown sang the Black National Anthem, "Lift Ev'ry Voice and Sing," during the intermission. Smallwood spoke on why she asked Brown to sing for the show.

"I was working him from last semester. His voice is like John Legend/ J.Holiday," Smallwood said. The UMass step team also went on stage to perform for the crowd.

After the intermission, the scene "Crank the Runway" showed off attire with a more urban feel. Daniel McLaurin, originally from Boston, designed the collection called "Sophisticated Swag." This scene was shared by designer Ihai Iran originally from Lawrence, Mass., with his collection, "Geno."

The next scene, "Soul Fusion," introduced collections that had versatile day to night attire, starting with the collection "Marnya" that was designed by Avari Thompson. Designs from the collection entitled "Eyerose," designed by Irene Lortes were also modeled on the runway.

The Brian Stevens' Collection closed the fashion show in the scene "Dare to be Bold." Stevens' designs incorporated formal wear for men like suits.

"He mixed sports jackets with jeans. Against the norm," Smallwood said.

"We got great feedback [about] the show. A lot of alumni were also supporting us, how proud they were that we were able to bring back the fashion and continue the legacy of UMass fashion show," said Sabrina Haskins, the vice president of Soul TV.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

New season means battle of sexes on WB's 'Beauty and the Geek'

The WB's hit show "Beauty and the Geek" is changing its premise. While before, the beauties and geeks were supposed to work together, now the show's producers are pitting each group against the other.

By Kate O'Hare
Zap2it.com

In past seasons on The CW's "Beauty and the Geek," smart, socially inept guys were paired up with gorgeous, intellectually challenged girls in a quest for personal transformation and to win prizes, including a $250,000 grand prize.

Last year, in season four, executive producers Ashton Kutcher and Jason Goldberg shook up the premise by introducing one male beauty and one female geek into the cast.

In the new season, premiering Tuesday at 8 p.m. EDT, they go even further. This year, it's war.

"Now," says Goldberg, "it's beauty vs. geek."

So rather than having the opportunity to work together and learn from each other, the beauties and the geeks are at odds.

"We're almost through the run right now," says Goldberg, "but it's been really interesting to see the evolution of what's been happening in the house and with these people."

Also, the volume level of the cast has apparently changed.

"This year," Goldberg says, "more than any year, we have, I'd say, louder people than ever on this show."

Asked if this is the reverse of a kinder, gentler "Beauty and the Geek," Goldberg says, "It didn't start as (kinder and gentler), I'll tell you that. I'll tell you also that when you put these types of beauties and geeks in a house together, it just can't help itself. They just got there.

"Women are really, as we found on this show, comforting. That's their nature, to be comforting and help these geeks. Ultimately, the geeks, in a way, really were there to support our beauties and make them more well-rounded.

"But as the show evolved, they fell back into that very thing."

Goldberg is feeling positive about fan reaction.

"I think they're going to love it," he says. "It's a louder cast. There are fireworks in the cast. I really do like the people here. I love how it's unfolding. It's been a lot of fun. There's a lot of sex appeal, more so than I've seen before on the show.

"It's certainly got heart, and it's got comedy. Those things are there, but it's an outrageous cast."

Since the show began, the question has been raised about doing a complete flip-flop, pairing all male beauties with all female geeks. Based on his experience so far, Goldberg has his concerns about what would happen.

"It was a good look in the last cycle of the show at what would happen," he says. "To go all the way, it becomes a different show altogether. Look, women are naturally nurturing. Men, good-looking men, that are not so bright, are not. And that's a big difference in the show."

But, it could also be an eye-opener for guys in the audience.

"Ultimately," Goldberg says, "when we can take what looks like a duckling and turn her into a princess, maybe they'd look at their wife or girlfriend a different way."

While "Beauty and the Geek" is a certified success, Kutcher and Goldberg haven't been able to sell another concept they called "Fountain of Youth" when it was being considered at the now-defunct WB Network. The idea is for a cross-country race featuring teams consisting of a college senior and a senior citizen.

"I gotta tell ya," Goldberg says, "it's really frustrating. We believe in this show more than anything, and no one really wants to move forward with it. We are firm believers that it's a fantastic message and a fantastic point of view.

"I think they're missing the boat. It would be amazing, that's what it would be. There's so much to say with a show like that."

Yosemite offers winter tours

By Marek Warszawski
McClatchy Newspapers

YOSEMITE NATIONAL PARK — No less an authority than Henry David Thoreau compared the sensation of tramping through snow to walking in a cloudy sky upside down.

A beautiful description, but there's a catch: You'd better be wearing snowshoes.

Without snowshoes, walking through snow isn't nearly as enjoyable – or poetic – as ranger Dick Ewart points out Saturday morning before leading a five hour snowshoe hike sponsored by the Yosemite Association.

"Indians figured out 10,000 years ago that you'll sink deep in the snow unless you make your feet real wide," Ewart tells the group.

A 32 year old Yosemite veteran, Ewart is as much a fixture at Badger Pass as the historic main lodge. During the decades, he's introduced thousands of park visitors to the secret splendor of winter while teaching them about the natural world.

After introducing the history of snowshoeing and displaying several different types of snowshoes, Ewart leads uphill from the base area and off the groomed ski slope. Since it had snowed more than a foot overnight, the going gets tougher as we sink with every step.

"People pay a lot of money to use stair-step machines," he says. "You get it up here for free."

Before long, we come across animal tracks that are partially covered by snow. The tracks are so faint it's impossible to tell what direction the animal is traveling, though Ewart believes it's probably a long-tailed weasel.

Someone asks Ewart why there are only two sets of tracks instead of four, which is what you'd expect a four-legged critter would leave behind.

"For the same reason that everybody is following my path," Ewart says. "It's a lot easier to get around."

He goes on to explain that some animals change their gait in the winter so that their hind feet land in the same hole as their front feet, leaving only one print. It's called direct registering.

Threatening skies loom overhead as we arrive at the top of the ski slope. Mount Hoffman, which lies 10 miles to the north, is almost completely enveloped in storm clouds.

Even so, Ewart continues to impart knowledge.

We learn that winter is caused by the earth's 23 degree tilt away from the sun, which in turn makes the sun's rays hit the earth at a lower angle. Because of the glancing nature of these rays, less energy is transferred to the earth's surface in the form of heat.

We learn that air, like any gas, expands and cools at higher elevations. Expanding on this concept, Ewart says that gaining 1,000 feet is roughly the climate equivalent of driving 300 miles north at the same elevation. This means going from Fresno (elev. 325) to Badger Pass (elev. 7,200) feels kind of like driving north 2,000 miles, which would put us in the middle of Canada.

"So let's keep walking in Canada," Ewart jokes.

"If we're walking in Canada," someone asks, "then how far is the North Pole?"

As we slog ahead, Ewart describes how various forest inhabitants survive the winter.

Trees, he says, are protected from freezing by the high-concentration of sugar contained within their sap. Fir and pine trees, which comprise most of the Sierra forest, can withstand temperatures down to 40 degrees below zero.

The way animals survive is even more fascinating. According to Ewart, they either hibernate (like ground squirrels, marmots and most bears), migrate to lower elevations (like deer and birds) or possess the ability to tough out the elements.

Those that tough it out spend most of their time inhabiting a one-inch thick zone between the ground and snowpack called the subnivean space. These critters move under the snow for protection from heat loss and predators, though some predators are small enough to spoil the party.

To help illustrate his point, Ewart removes a series of preserved animals from the inside pocket of his jacket. First there's a mouse, which mainly eats seeds. Then, a mole, which eats insects, worms and grubs. Finally, a gopher, which digs into the ground for bulbs and roots.

"It's like they're living in the same home but dining at three different restaurants," Ewart says.

Before we head back, the ranger stresses the importance of the eight-foot deep snowpack we've been trudging through all day. Without it, we'd have nothing to recharge our reservoirs or irrigate our crops.

"The way I like to think of it is that we're standing on top of California's economy," Ewart says.

Even a romantic like Thoreau would have to agree with that.

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Online Room Selection is coming!
Check out the Room Selection Bulletin delivered to your residence hall mailbox this week and come to one of the Online Room Selection Information Sessions:
The Housing Assignment Office will review online room selection instructions, guidelines, and strategies, and will show you online room selection menus so you can get ready to select your own assignment.
Pick a one-hour information session prior to the room selection period you plan to participate in, and we'll see you there!

Date	Times	Location
Tuesday, February 19	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm.174-76
Thursday, February 28	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 917
Tuesday, March 11	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, March 25	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm 168C
Tuesday, April 1	12:00-1:00pm or 1:00-2:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Wednesday, April 2	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Monday, April 14	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Tuesday, April 15	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Pierpont Hall Main Lounge
Wednesday, April 16	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76

www.housing.umass.edu UMassAmherst

Why UM can beat UNH

HOCKEY from page 12

do anything. It would not surprise me anymore to see the Mass Attack shock the Wildcats and win the first two games of the series than it would to see them get trounced and quickly sent packing.

The simple fact remains that UMass is good enough to beat New Hampshire, BU, Boston College or anyone else that's still standing in Hockey East. They proved that last fall, and other than a few losses to injuries, the roster hasn't changed.

The same group of guys that upended three straight Top 10 teams and moved to fifth in the nation won just five games during the second half of the season.

That said, the Minutemen still have the ability and the playmakers to make this weekend a very difficult one for the Wildcats.

Over the last two seasons UMass is 3-4 against UNH, the difference being a 3-2 double-overtime loss in the Hockey East Semifinals last year. And the two teams are no strangers when it comes to the postseason. The three times UMass has reached the semifinals, it played the Wildcats, going 1-2 in those contests. The pair has met just once before in the quarterfinals, a sweep by UNH in 1997.

However, those games have even less bearing on Friday night than the three meetings earlier this season.

What does matter is whether the Minutemen can continue to play the way they have the last two weeks.

After a terrible January, UMass coach Don Cahoon saw a lot of improvement in the team in February, even though the win-loss record didn't really indicate that. Now in March, the improved play has turned into victories.

The line of center Cory Quirk and forwards Alex Berry and James Marcou has anchored the UMass offense and carried the team through its current three-game winning streak. That may be enough at home against BU or against a Merrimack team that won six games this season in conference play, but that won't cut it inside the Whittemore Center, where the Wildcats are second in the conference in scoring offense (3.11 goals/game) and first in scoring defense (2.00).

In order to extend this season beyond Durham, Cahoon must continue to find ways to get more production behind the Berry-Quick-Marcou line. Michael Lecomte has played well between P.J. Fenton and Chris Davis, and the trio is starting to find a rhythm.

One of the best goals this season came in the first period Friday against Merrimack. With UMass already leading 2-0, Lecomte set Davis up perfectly for the third goal of the period.

Lecomte skated down into the corner and then from nearly behind the net, rifled the puck toward the crease, where Davis put his stick's blade to the ice and redirected the pass past the Warriors' Andrew Braithwaite.

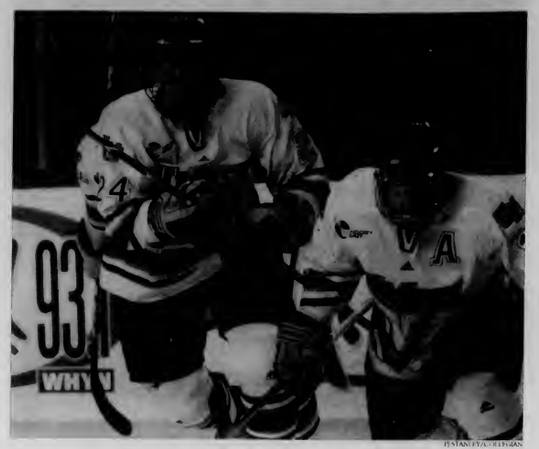
It was the type of goal the Minutemen needed. Already up a pair, Lecomte and Davis broke the game open early.

UMass will need to find a way to do the same this weekend. It's no secret that the Minutemen play better when their ahead. In fact, they have not won a single game this season when trailing in the third period. And the last time they won after trailing by two goals was Nov. 17 against BC. UMass trailed 2-0 after one and scored three goals in the second period.

Again, once they were ahead, the Minutemen managed to hold on in the third period for a significant road win. Whether they score early or simply control the momentum, the Minutemen have to come out swinging Friday night to have any chance of scoring the big upset.

And much like the game itself, winning the series will likely depend on UMass jumping ahead early. Winning on Friday is a must for the Minutemen to move on to Boston. If they lose that first game, they will be hard pressed to take two in a row facing elimination.

As far as talent is concerned, there is no concern. UMass has proven both earlier this year, and even last year for those players who returned, that they can play with anybody.



The question that remains is will they?

Jeremy Rice is the Collegian's sports editor. He can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Streak breeds confidence

Jr. overcame injuries, self to find success

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

ISTAN SYA / COLLEGIAN

Alex Berry has exploded late in the season, recording eight points in the last seven games, with six goals and two assists. He has five points on the Minutemen's current three-game win streak.

The play looked like a goal the moment it developed.

Sophomore defenseman Martin Nolet of the Massachusetts hockey team turned up-ice before spotting a teammate streaking through the neutral zone uncovered. Nolet made the 55-foot pass from face-off circle to red line. His teammate accepted the pass in stride with one thing on his mind – score.

The shot, a slap shot just inside the blue line on the left side, blistered through the air and over the shoulder of the opposing goaltender before tucking itself under the crossbar and rattling around the cage.

At the time, the goal gave UMass a 1-0 lead over Northeastern. But it also signaled the start of two resurgences. Firstly, UMass's rise back into the Hockey East playoff picture and, secondly, that of junior Alex Berry – a 6-foot-2-inch winger from Danvers with a rare combination of size, skill and tenacity. It was that which attracted UMass coach Don Cahoon and his assistants to Berry in 2004 when he was 19-years-old dominating the Eastern Junior Hockey League with the Boston Junior Bruins.

Alex spent two seasons with the Junior Bruins before committing to UMass. Initially, UMass was not on his radar screen, but after both sides made contact and Alex came to a game in Amherst, his decision was easy.

"I hadn't really given UMass much thought until I came here and I saw the kind of passion and commitment to winning that coach Cahoon and his staff had," he says. "I came back for my official visit and just fell in love with the school and the atmosphere. I came to a few games and it felt like a great fit for me. It was a place trying to build a tradition in Hockey East, and I wanted to be a part of that."

UMass's run to the quarterfinals of the 2007 NCAA Tournament marked the first big step in the building process. But while Alex played his part in the team's run to the NCAA Regionals, it wasn't to the extent he may have anticipated. A tough freshman season in 2005-06 became a mediocre sophomore year. And in 2007-08 with his team off to the best start program history, Berry still hadn't found his rhythm.

The Minutemen fell from No. 5 in the USCO/CSTV Division I Men's Poll and the top of Hockey East to the verge of elimination until defeating Merrimack, 4-2, last Saturday night in North Andover to clinch a spot in this weekend's Hockey East Tournament. UMass closed the season on a three-game winning streak after going 2-11-1 in the 14 games between the No. 5 ranking and the 5-1 win over Boston University that started the winning streak.

Since Berry scored that goal on Feb. 16 he has found the scoring touch that eluded his grasp during the first two-and-a-half years of his career with the Minutemen.

For Berry, UMass coach Don Cahoon and his teammates it just doesn't make sense why it took as long as it did – how a player blessed with such natural ability could become a mere footnote on a team quickly becoming a power in college hockey?

Oftentimes, players can't explain their struggles nor can they articulate their success. In Alex's case, perhaps his emergence correlates with the success of the line he's played on for three weeks with center Cory Quirk and winger James Marcou. But for Berry it all reverts back to the level of confidence he's gained since firing that shot over Northeastern goaltender Brad Thiessen's right shoulder 26 days ago.

LOSING IT

The summer of 2005 represented a major turning point in Alex's hockey career. Not only was he beginning his time at a Division I hockey program in the fall, but he received even better news in early June.

After recording 52 points and rating at a plus-17 in his second season with the Junior Bruins, the Toronto Maple Leafs selected him in the fifth round of the NHL Entry Draft.

"Coming into the draft, I didn't really know where I was going to go," Alex says. "To find out I was drafted by Toronto in the fifth round was just one of the greatest days of my life and hockey career; getting picked by an Original Six team."

When Alex arrived in Amherst, and his first season with UMass began, he failed to replicate the success he enjoyed at lower levels of hockey. As is the case with most young players, adjusting to the higher rate of failure was no easy task. But the alterations Alex needed to make were not on the ice.

"When Alex got here, he thought the transition was going to be a lot easier," Cahoon says. "He didn't realize how mature the players were, how strong they were, how well conditioned they were and the conviction they played with. That first year was a learning experience for him."

Alex played on different lines during that first month but couldn't get into a rhythm with any of the combinations. With his confidence floundering more and more through each scoreless game, Alex's mindset took the ultimate blow.

"It was the ninth game of the season against Northeastern, and I was going into the boards to finish my check," Alex recalls. "I came down on my knee wrong and tore my MCL; I was out for about six weeks. It was really frustrating. I was finally getting into the groove of college hockey."

The injury forced Alex to cope with different frustrations early but never imagined they would build on each other so quickly. It wasn't until the middle of February that Alex fully recovered from the injury. He scored the first goal of his career at the end of the month, a 4-2 win over Northeastern on Senior Night. Even with the goal, however, Alex fell short of his personal expectations and didn't always find himself in the lineup from night-to-night, damaging his confidence further.

FINDING IT

He tried to move on during his sophomore season, and believed himself to be making progress within the UMass system. The off-the-ice preparations he needed to undertake became part of the routine, and he felt healthy when the season began.

So when the MCL became a problem again at the beginning of his sophomore season, his body responded and healed much faster than it did the first time around. By the time Alex returned to the lineup, it was evident that Cahoon and his staff had built something special. For the first time since he came to Amherst, Alex became the offensive weapon he hoped to be when he signed with the Minutemen.

UMass's run to the NCAA Tournament ended with a 3-1 loss to Maine in the quarterfinals. It wasn't easy for Alex and his teammates to deal with the loss, but the steps they took as a program represented everything Alex came to UMass to be a part of.

Midway through 2007-08, Berry scored UMass's first goal while down 2-0 to Colorado College, leading a comeback that resulted in the program's first-ever tournament championship. With the Lightning College Hockey Classic Championship trophy in tow, the second half of the season began with UMass in the race for a Hockey East Championship and ranked fifth in the country.

The losing streak that followed baffled everyone involved with the Minutemen, and UMass stood on the verge of elimination and a huge step back from the progress of 2006-07.

But all of it ended with a slap shot. The shot Alex took, one night in Amherst against Northeastern.

He scored another goal later in the game and hasn't stopped since. It's been seven games since then and Alex's six goals in that span secured UMass's spot in Hockey East's postseason.

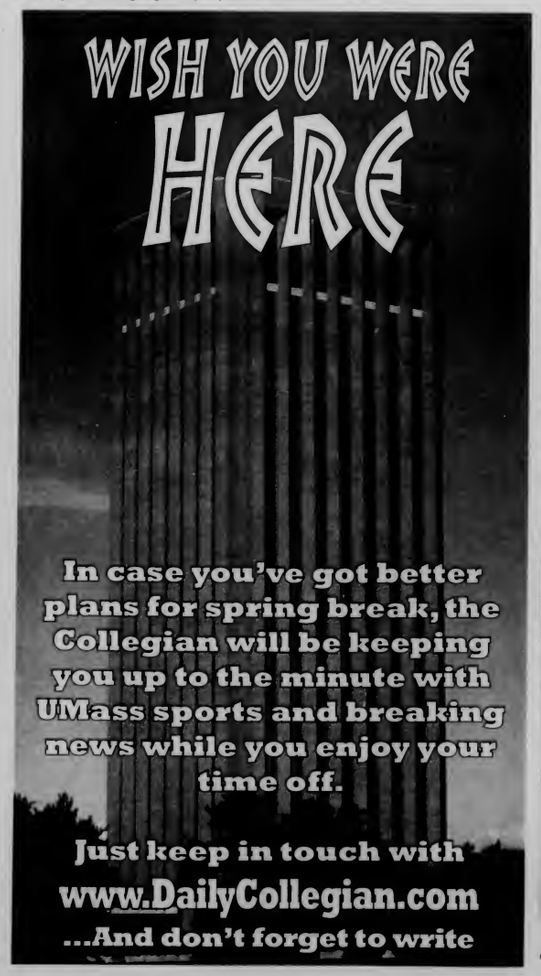
"It's just starting to click for me. I'm playing my best hockey right now. I'm shooting the puck, getting the puck in some great spots. Shots are going in for me. I have so much confidence going for me right now. It's so much easier to play when you're confident," Alex says. "In the middle of the season, I wasn't really scoring and my confidence just wasn't there so I was pressing a little bit. But, you get a couple of goals and the confidence builds and builds."

KEEPING IT

The Minutemen will leave Amherst Friday morning for Durham, N.H., and a date with the No. 1 seed in the Hockey East Tournament, New Hampshire. They're certainly not the favorite but they believe they're more than capable of upsetting the Wildcats.

Situations like this are nothing new to Alex and his teammates. The dismal record that was their January and February turned into a 3-0 mark so far in March. There's nothing in Alex's head second-guessing a decision he makes in the game or during practice. He's worked himself into a good place right now. He knows his job and where he fits it with the Minutemen.

The adjustment he had to make was more mental than anything, developing sound habits, executing his assignments on the ice and playing like the physical presence Cahoon brought him here to be. And for the first time in his career, Alex is completely confident. He knows he will score if the situation presents itself, and he knows his teammates will do the same.



"I'm trying to do what ever I can to get our team going in the right direction. It came down to the last game, but we're in the playoffs now," Alex says. "Anything I can do to help my team, that's what I'm going to do. I'm in a position on a good line, maybe seeing some time on special teams. But I'm focusing on the playoffs right now and going up to UNH and getting a win with my boys."

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

BRIAN THEOBERGE / COLLEGIAN

Berry's pairing with James Marcou on the team's top line late in the season greatly improved his scoring output.

UM meets UNH in first round

HOCKEY from page 12

goaltending undid UNH. Senior goaltender Kevin Regan enjoyed the best season of his career in 2007-08, leading the Wildcats to Hockey East's best scoring defense.

"There is no question that Kevin's been the backbone of our team," UNH coach Dick Umile said during Tuesday's teleconference. "I think in the preseason poll people picked us at the top of the league because of Kevin.

"He's played consistently well and gives us an opportunity to win every single night. It's comforting to know you have Kevin Regan back there. If you make a mistake, he's there to cover up for you."

UMass's descent began because of an inability to consistently create offense. Against the Wildcats, beating Regan isn't the only concern. Senior defenseman Joe Charlebois and Craig Switzer lead an experienced, well-coached defensive unit.

The Minutemen experienced success offensively against UNH in the three regular season games, scoring nine goals. But both teams were at such different points in their season at that time that not much can be drawn from the matchups.

"You can look at how they play and how they matched up against us," Kostka said. "The biggest thing for us is continuing to play the best we can within our system."

In the final three games of the regular season, UMass played like the dynamic, fluid team that was a legitimate national championship contender three months ago. The offense they struggled to create came as timely and often as they needed it to.

The formula worked well enough that the Minutemen should employ the same line combinations they used last week. The top line pairing of Marcou and junior Alex Berry on the wing with junior Cory Quirk playing the pivot will remain the same. Cahoon knows he will need production from the other three lines as well. Wingers Chris and P.J. Fenton both excelled last weekend in their roles in both even strength and special teams situations.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

2008 Hockey East Tournament

Quarterfinals
March 13–15
Campus Sites

- (1) New Hampshire
- (8) Massachusetts
- (2) Boston University
- (7) UMass Lowell
- (3) Vermont
- (6) Northeastern
- (4) Boston College
- (5) Providence

Semifinals & Championship
March 21–22
TD BankNorth Garden
Boston, Mass.

* – Note: Teams will be reseeded after each round.

HOCKEY EAST STANDINGS

	Team	Hockey East W	L	T	Pts.	Overall W	L	T
1	New Hampshire	19	5	3	41	23	8	3
2	Boston University	15	9	3	33	17	15	4
3	Vermont	13	9	5	31	14	13	7
4	Boston College	11	9	7	29	17	11	8
5	Providence	12	11	5	27	14	15	5
6	Northeastern	10	13	2	26	15	16	3
7	UMass Lowell	10	13	4	24	15	15	4
8	Massachusetts	9	13	5	23	14	14	6
9	Maine	9	15	3	21	13	18	3
10	Merrimack	6	18	3	15	12	18	4

Leaderer Mass Attack's new Ironman, two freshman set marks

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

He rarely gets mentioned in the papers or on the stat sheets, but the Massachusetts hockey team's most reliable player is defenseman David Leaderer.

After playing in both games this weekend in a sweep of Merrimack, Leaderer set a new school record for most games played in a career, with 147. It's safe to say he will be adding at least two more to that mark this weekend, and will be playing for the chance to extend that mark with a pair of wins over first-place New Hampshire.

"David's an incredibly competitive player," UMass coach Don Cahoon said of the player he's coached in games more than anyone else. "His competitiveness has allowed him to be a fixture in our lineup since he's gotten here."

Leaderer, year-by-year, played 38, 36, 39 and now 34 games from the 2004-05 season to this Spring. His scoring totals are not great (10 goals, 23 assists), but he has brought more than just offense to the Minutemen.

"He came here with a feistiness that was attractive to us," Cahoon said. "He rarely takes a day off. You can pretty well depend every day on what you're going to get."

It was no surprise when Leaderer earned a spot as assistant captain in his senior year. His dependability has made him one of the foundations of the team in the locker room and on the ice.

"It doesn't surprise me that because he's so emotionally prepared, that he goes out there and does a real good job," Cahoon said. "And that keeps him from getting hurt because he's always mentally into it. And it doesn't surprise me that he's in the lineup every night because I know what to expect from him."

BRIAN THEOBERGE / COLLEGIAN

David Leaderer has played more games than any other Minuteman, appearing in 147 contests since joining the team four years ago.

ROOKIES SET THE MARK

At the beginning of this season, freshmen James Marcou and Paul Dainton stepped into big roles for the Minutemen with heavy expectations set, not necessarily on them, but on a team that came within a game of the Frozen Four the previous year.

With the 2006-07 regular season in the books, Marcou and Dainton have already left their marks on the UMass record books.

With at least two games remaining on the schedule, Marcou is three assists away from the freshman record at UMass, set by Warren Norris (1993-94) who recorded 27 helpers in the team's first year in action in nearly two decades.

Marcou said he hasn't really taken time to ponder his personal impact on UMass sports, saying he's just focused on New Hampshire this weekend, where the Mass Attack will need Marcou to continue to make plays.

"It's good to get a good start in my first year here," Marcou said. "It's good that we got into the playoffs. We want to know what it's like and get that experience. But we're looking to go far here, and we've got UNH coming up."

Goaltender Paul Dainton also set some impressive numbers in his first year in maroon and white.

Dainton set marks for saves (808), goals against average (2.45) and minutes played (1,860:47) as a freshman. Previously, Gabe Winer had played the most minutes (1,763) and saved the most shots (615) as a freshman in 2002-03. Mike Johnson had the best freshman goals-against average in his first year, with a 2.62 mark in 1998-99.

A year after Jon Quick had the best goaltending season in UMass history, the Minutemen found themselves with an empty net after Quick departed for professional hockey. Dainton won the goaltending position over sophomore Dan Meyers, and has a 12-12-6 record as a starter.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Freshman goaltender Paul Dainton set UMass rookie records for saves (808), goals against average (2.45) and minutes played (1,860:47) this season, breaking marks set by Gabe Winer (2002-03) and Mike Johnson (1998-99).

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM of ART

Check us out on Facebook!
Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.
Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.
Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.
If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.
We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.
Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com
TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

UMass looks to improve on last season

M. HOOPS from page 12

right to play UMass, that game will be huge for all involved. Charlotte would likely have to win the tournament to get into the tournament, but would love the opportunity to knock off the Minutemen and potentially send them back to the NIT for the second straight season. The Rams, meanwhile, have NCAA aspirations much like UMass does, and will need to beat the Minutemen for the first time in three tries to have a shot at that opportunity.

UMass players said they have extra confidence having gone 3-0 against their potential opponents, but both them and Ford agreed that little of that truly matters now.

"It's a second season now so everybody is going to come in with a sense of urgency, so you have to come out with your best effort," point guard Chris Lowe said. "And if you don't, then you're going to come home early."

"It goes both ways. We know we can play with them but it's probably going to make them upset," Ford said, referring to the pros and cons of playing and beating a team multiple times in a season. "It's a lot easier for me to make adjustments if I lose to somebody."

Having lost to the Minutemen twice, the Rams seemingly have a lot of adjustments to make. But both games were close; a two-point loss at the Mullins Center and an eight-point loss at home at the Ryan Center. The problem URI had in those games was that only one or two players had strong efforts. They need their deep starting five to be more balanced.

"I think they have some of the best talent in the league," Ford said. "They have great senior leaders [Parfait Bitee, Will Daniels and Joe Mbang]. I think they are going to come into this conference tournament with something to prove, and an axe to grind. I think they will be renewed and be a very dangerous basketball team."

While the Rams may have the best senior trio in the conference, the 49ers have one of the most dynamic 1-2 punches in the league. Ford is well-aware that.

"Charlotte has two or three players that can beat you by themselves," he said. "[Leemire] Goldwire is a prolific scorer. Lamont Mack is one of the most improved players in this league and I think one of the best basketball players in our league. I think he causes a lot of problems for a lot of people."

UMass guard Ricky Harris knows it will be a tough matchup against either team.

"Whichever team we play I know it's going to be a dogfight throughout the whole 40 minutes," he said.

Those 40 minutes could go be the difference between the NCAA Tournament and the NIT.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

UM just trying to stay healthy

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Most coaches and players would envy the position of the Massachusetts men's basketball team at this point in last year's campaign. UMass was riding a six-game winning streak in addition to clinching a share of the regular-season Atlantic 10 championship with Xavier.

But the Minutemen hit a roadblock when it mattered the most.

On the surface, it looked like it was another poor UMass performance in the A-10 Tournament. After all, it was the fifth year in a row that the Maroon and White bowed out in the first round.

"Going into the Atlantic 10 Tournament last year with the high expectations, a lot was expected of us," sophomore forward Ricky Harris said. "To lose in the first round showed that we thought it was going to be given to us."

The Minutemen avoid making excuses, but in reality, nearly the entire roster contracted a respiratory illness during the week before their quarterfinal match.

"I've never been a part of anything like we went through last year," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "This time last year, I had six [healthy] guys here. We were playing 3-on-3 in practice [the Monday of tournament week]. It was a complete utter disaster, people don't realize how bad it was. But that was no excuse – we went into overtime against a very good basketball team."

Ford had limited participation from his players all week, but the team still managed to take Saint Louis to overtime in a tightly contested game. Though UMass received an NIT birth, that consolation was not enough to satisfy their NCAA Tournament aspirations.

"It was devastating because we had big plans about going to the [NCAA] Tournament," junior point guard Chris Lowe said. "We learned from it; coach Ford has us doing the little things so it doesn't happen again."

Instead of extra practice or time spent watching film, senior forward Etienne Brower emphasized a different form of preparation after the team's win over George Washington last weekend.

"I think to prepare we need to drink a lot of orange juice," Brower remarked. "A lot of the guys got sick last year. So if we just stay healthy, I think everything else will just fall into place."

Ford immediately discounts his program's recent history in the A-10 Tournament as irrelevant to this season.

"One year has the nothing to do with the other," Ford said. "This team has different challenges ahead. One year never equates to the next – it always falls to the next for whatever reason."

This year, there's no A-10 Regular Season Championship. However, there is a similar six-game winning streak and a strong possibility for an NCAA at-large birth.

But, in a way, Ford is correct. Though many players return from last year's squad, the Minutemen are playing a completely different style of basketball from 2006-07.

But there's another substantial difference: expectations.

Last year, most pundits agreed that the Maroon and White needed at least one win to receive reasonable consideration for an at-large bid to the NCAA Tournament. With frontcourt mates Stephane Lasme and Rashaun Freeman in the final years of their UMass careers, it seemed likely in November that the Minutemen would crack the 65-team field for the first time since 1998.

After losing such a prolific pair, most believed the Minutemen would fall off in 2007-08. The league's coaches picked the team to finish eighth at the beginning of the season.

But this year it's another senior who's placed high expectations on himself; senior forward Gary Forbes, this year's A-10 Player of the Year.

From the beginning of the season, Forbes has made it clear how much it would mean for him to experience the NCAA Tournament.

Yet Forbes is well aware that looking toward the NCAA Tournament is the easiest way to lose focus on the task at hand.

"We're going into the mindset of trying to win the Atlantic 10 Tournament," Forbes said. "We're not looking past anything or looking toward the NCAA Tournament. We have three games ahead that can allow us to accomplish something big."

Like last season, Forbes understands that his team's performance in the tournament will not define the Minutemen's season, for better or for worse. But he also knows that an A-10 Championship and a NCAA Tournament birth would be a special way to cap his collegiate career.

Michael King can be reached at mking@student.umass.edu.

MICHAEL ZHELTSOV – STAFF

Gary Forbes and the Minutemen are looking for a better result in this year's A-10 Tournament, after illness swept through the team last season.

Minutewomen lose 5th straight game

W LAX from page 12

in games right now, which is what we're asking her to do."

Three Yale players had multi-goals games. The same three players had two assists each, as well. Seven players total found the back of the net for Yale. Senior midfielder Lauren Taylor and senior attack Meredith Callahan padded their team lead in points – now at 15 – with two goals and two assists each on the day.

Redshirt junior midfielder Kaytlin McCormick notched the first goal of the day early in the first half, padding her team lead in goals to 13. The Minutewomen then took their time with offensive possessions for the rest of the half, a tactic used by Venechanos to cut down on the errant shots that have been plaguing the Maroon and White.

Yale, however, is also a patient team and waited for its shots, eventually leading to a three-goal run by the Bulldogs to end the first half with a score of 4-1. Yale started the second half how it ended the first, scoring three unanswered goals as a result of poor passing by UMass.

Junior attack Julie Pasquantonio ended the run by firing a shot to the left side of Bulldog goalkeeper Ellen Cameron, who had eight saves on the day.

However again, after a goal by the Maroon and White, Yale went on another run, only this time it was four unanswered goals.

After a Bulldog timeout, Yale coach Laura Field pulled Cameron in favor of freshman Katie Janian.

Sophomore attack/midfielder Jillian Liposky put together the final scoring play for the Minutewomen, scoring the first goal of her collegiate career. The score was on the only successful free-position shot conversion of the day.

The only other bright spot for UMass was in draw controls. The Minutewomen edged out the Bulldogs in draw controls 8-7.

As if it's schedule hasn't been hard enough already, the Maroon and White will next face No.1 Northwestern in Evanston, Ill., on March 16 at 1 p.m.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Losses not bothersome yet

Venechanos sees progress in team despite early struggles

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team continues to struggle early this season, losing its past five games to four ranked opponents, and having one of the toughest schedules in the nation.

Despite a stout defense led by senior Julie Papaleo and Jackie Rosenzwig, a strong comeback by redshirt junior Kaytlin McCormick and consistent play by freshman midfielder Jacklyn Lyons, the Minutewomen (1-5) have struggled to secure a win. UMass coach Alexis Venechanos, in her second year at the helm for the Minutewomen, continues to be optimistic, although her team continues to struggle.

"I'm really happy with the team's effort," Venechanos said.

UMass's opponents have outscored the Maroon and White 73-45 through the first six games, but the Minutemen still average 7.5 goals per game. The offensive production was not there Wednesday afternoon, as UMass fell to Yale, 10-3.

"I think the execution [needs to improve]," Venechanos said. "We need to obviously put some more goals away and do the little stuff right now as a whole."

Some of that "little stuff" also includes putting accurate shots on goal, something the Minutewomen have not done on a consistent basis. The Minutewomen have 97 shots on goal with a .678 shot-on-goal percentage, while their opponents have registered 117 shots with a .758 shot-on-goal average. UMass has far more unassisted and free-position goals than assisted goals.

UMass's midfielders have continued to excel on the attacking end as well as in their defensive responsibilities.

The team regularly collects more groundballs and win more draws than its opponents. Lately, the team has incorporated some freshmen into the starting midfield line, like freshman Hayley Smith and Vicki Farell, who started yesterday's game against the Bulldogs. Neither had any points, but Venechanos believes that giving freshman playing time is beneficial to their development.

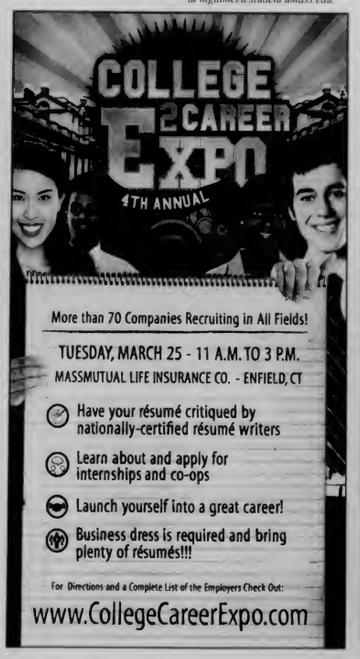
"We are changing some new systems and some new personnel around, and it's going to take some time to adjust to," Venechanos said.

The team tends to score early, but struggles keeping a lead. In four games this season, the Minutewomen have struck first, but have seen their lead slip away.

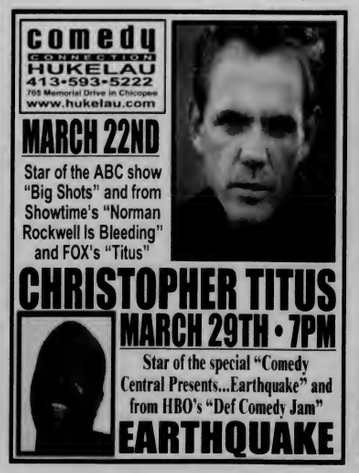
"We didn't have as many shots as we did in the past, so we had [fewer] opportunities to put those shots away."

Venechanos has mixed up her goalkeeping rotation, basing playing time on performance in practice. As a team, the Minutewomen have not recorded as many saves as their opponents. Redshirt junior Krissy Anderson and freshman Colleen Speth have registered time in goal this season, but Speth has seen the most action, starting the last four games while Anderson started the first three.

"I've been really impressed with her leadership and she is definitely a presence [in goal]," Venechanos said of the freshman.



With McCormick emerging as a major offensive threat, the Maroon and White have a dynamic 1-2 punch. But, senior captain Kathleen Typadis has not performed to her record-breaking pace a season ago, not finding the net in the Minutewomen's past two games. McCormick, on the other hand, leads the team in goals (12) and has four assists, also recording two hat tricks in the past five games.



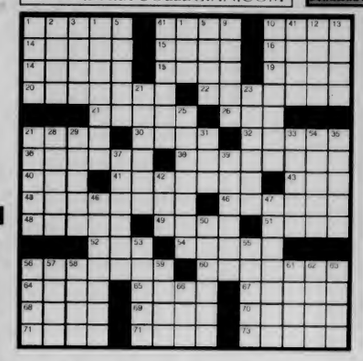
David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu.

PUSHANA PUSHPAKARAN – STAFF

Kaytlin McCormick scored one of the Minutewomen's three goals yesterday against Yale.

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes...we sell them... you make money!
(40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary.
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!...
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

Das' Crazy.



1	6						9	2
		5	6	4	3	8
8								3
		8	7		6	9
		9	4		8	7
5								9
		2	3	9	1	6
9	4						2	7

ACROSS
1 Waterproof covers, briefly
6 Tiller
10 Hardwood trees
14 La Scala show
15 Needle case
16 Actress Sorvino
17 Religious grp.
18 Flip through
19 False god
20 Quitter
22 Handle with kid gloves
24 Capital of Vietnam
26 DIY buy
27 Theater section
30 Squid squirts
32 Obligations
36 Combination punch
38 Removed with care
40 Black goo
41 Opportunity provider
43 Widebeest
44 Arm of the Indian Ocean
46 Caught sight of 48 Bean or Walles
49 Glitch
51 Towel ID
52 Buddhist sect
54 Fight site
56 Firedog
60 Christmas star's spot
64 Tender feeling
65 Big rig
67 Shop
68 Young 'uns
69 Greek god of love
70 Bearar
71 Tobacco kiln
72 Chimney sediment
73 Sergeant fish

DOWN
1 Sweeney ___
2 Copier
3 Gambling mecca
4 Soothsayer
5 Pacific island group
6 Actor Charlton
7 Lat.-ending abbr.
8 Feast on Oahu
9 Belorussian city
10 Left out
11 Verdi opera
12 Fast-food magnate Ray
13 Preserving substance
21 Alliances
23 Downy ducks
25 Flower arrangement
27 State gambling
28 During a broadcast
29 Disinfectant's targets
31 Actor Mineo
33 Hobgoblin
34 Sound adjuster
35 Writer Tarkel
37 Director Herzog
39 Singer Pete
42 '52 and '56 candidate
45 Runniest and squishiest
47 Touring car
50 Drawer
53 Scouts
55 Snug retreats
56 Singing voice
57 U.S. weather grp.
58 Movies on PCs
59 Roman fiddler
61 Oz dog
62 Black-and-white treat
63 Fringe benefit
66 Bovine reply

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

amherst cinema
Fri, Mar 14 - Thu, Mar 20
2007 Academy Award Nominated ANIMATED SHORTS 2:15 7:00
2007 Academy Award Nominated INTRODUCTION SHORTS 4:15 9:00 persepolis 1:15 3:15 5:15 7:15 9:30 No 7:15 Thu 3/20
4 MONTHS 3 WEEKS AND 2 DAYS 1:00 3:30 9:15 No 1:00pm Sun 3/16
There Will Be Blood 6:00
Sunday 3/16 2:00
Thursday 3/20 7:00
28 Amity St. (413) 253-2547
Downtown Amherst www.amherstcinema.org
PLEASANT STREET THEATER
The SAVAGES 2:30 4:45 9:15 Plus Sat & Sun 12:00pm Plus Wed 10:00am
JUNO 2:45 4:30 7:00 PLUS Sat & Sun 12:30pm & Wed 10:15am
7:15 9:30
27 Pleasant St. www.pleasantsttheater.org
Downtown Northampton (413) 584-5643

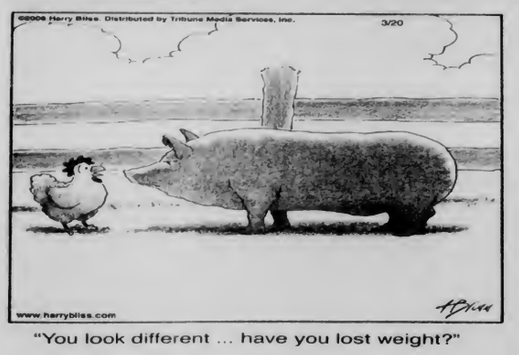
Participants Needed!
Participate in economic experiments to learn about how participants behave in auctions.
Earn at least $10 per session
No experience necessary!
Check it out!
www.umass.edu/expecon/recruitment.shtml

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Stuff your eyes with wonder . . . live as if you'd drop dead in ten seconds. See the world. It's more fantastic than any dream made or paid for in factories."

– Ray Bradbury

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI



COSMIC DANCER BY ANDREW KATSIKAS

"if u ain't dirty, u ain't here to party"

BLISS BY HARRY BLISS

"You look different ... have you lost weight?"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
One way to see how you look without a mirror is to smile at a baby and see if it cries.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Despite the similarities in the two words, listening to classical music does not necessarily make you classy.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your dreams will be haunted by giant Frug (half-slug half-frog). Stay awake and avoid the halfling beast.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Develop your photographic mind by trying to memorize long lists of numbers. Make sure to blink an abnormal amount.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
If time feels like it's going by too fast attend a history lecture. It will feel like time has stopped.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You've been walking around for the past three hours with a boogie hanging out of your left nostril.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Men and women are not equal. Example: bathroom lines.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Wow, everyone is really impressed that you can wear shorts in March. Seriously, you're such a tough guy.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Hold a vigil for all of the mild-mannered white males made uncomfortable in their sociology discussions.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You have a tendency to make weird noises. In a dark room, you could easily be mistaken for a gerbil.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Your hands have more cracks than a UMass sidewalk. Get some lotion and call the physical plant.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You're in for a world of pain, but you're into that sort of thing aren't you?

Thanks for being such a great listener.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APTS. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherst-lincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

APTS. FOR RENT

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June, Aug, or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island This Summer. Run errands, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax RESUME to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA P.O. Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone: 508-228-3942

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement(Computer Literate, Along with CV.) for more information write us at: Gina Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Summer on Cape Cod!! The Wychmere Harbor Beach Club is conducting interviews for summer employment on our Cape Cod property March 27,28,29 and April 3,4,5. Servers, Lifeguards, Beach Attendants and more needed! On-site housing is available. Visit our website at www.wychmereharbor.com for available positions and call (508) 432-1000 x129 for details!

SERVICES

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 13, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

One last shot at redemption

Rematch with Wildcats next for Mass Attack

By Joe Melont
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts hockey team has advanced to the Hockey East Semifinals in three of the last five seasons. Each time, the Minutemen drew New Hampshire in their path to the conference championship – including last season when the Wildcats defeated UMass, 3-2, in double overtime.

The Minutemen won't have to wait until the second round to take on the Wildcats this season. With the Minutemen earning the eighth and final playoff spot, they head to Durham, N.H., this weekend for a best-of-three series with the top-seeded Wildcats.

A home-and-home series between the teams in January signaled a turning point for both teams as the second half of the season began. The Wildcats swept the weekend, and the Minutemen began a plummet that took two months to amend while the wins over UMass were Nos. 3 and 4 in a 16-game unbeaten streak in conference play for UNH.

The Minutemen did fix things in time to qualify for the playoffs, winning three consecutive games to close out the regular season.

"If anything, it strengthened us, having to play until the last day kept us [mentally] fresh," UMass coach Don Cahoon said about the competition with Maine for the final playoff spot. "But we've got to play the game at the end of the day and be smart throughout the course of the weekend."

Smart play is key against a team like New Hampshire. At every position, on every unit, the Wildcats have a talented, experienced player who will almost certainly execute his assignment. The UMass upperclassmen, while not as talented as a whole, possess the same instincts and poise as the UNH veterans. Cahoon does, however, play several freshmen in key roles; James Marcou is UMass's primary playmaker and Paul Dainton emerged as the starting goaltender despite struggling at times in the season's second half.

"At this point in the season, age doesn't matter. Every body has played playoff hockey at some point in their life, we've all played at a high level of hockey at some point in our lives," UMass captain Mike Kostka said. "We've played the whole season together; there are no more freshmen on this team."

In 2006-07 many believe that the Wildcats were the class of Hockey East. But inconsistent defending and

See HOCKEY on page 8

PJ STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Chris Davis and the rest of the Mass Attack have a tall order ahead of them. The eight-seeded Minutemen travel to Duham, N.H., today for a best-of-three series with top-seed New Hampshire that begins tomorrow.

Why UMass can beat UNH

Jeremy Rice

Three months ago, I could have imagined writing this column with a much different angle. If you had asked me after the Massachusetts hockey team defeated New Hampshire, 4-1, in front of 5,756 fans on Dec. 8, if the Minutemen could repeat such a feat in the playoffs, I would have had two responses.

First, it would have to take place in Boston at the TD BankNorth Garden in either the semifinals or the Hockey East Championship, and second, yes, the Minutemen have the right type of talent – and enough of it – to outduel one of the nation's top teams.

Three weeks later, the Minutemen reinforced my opinion with impressive wins over Notre Dame and Colorado College in the Lightning College Hockey Classic.

Then the floor fell out from beneath the Mass Attack, who plummeted out of the national rankings and nearly hit the basement of Hockey East.

The Minutemen opened the 2008 portion of their schedule with consecutive losses to UNH, went winless in their first seven games after the break and were 2-11-1 before winning their final three games of the regular season.

No one had an explanation for what happened to a team many expected to at least match last year's success. Opposing coaches all said the same thing at post-game press conferences: no one knew why UMass wasn't winning, and everyone was surprised that they weren't.

Regardless of the whys and hows, the Minutemen began playing like they did for all of the 2007 calendar year right when they absolutely had to, beating a red-hot Boston University team with a convincing 5-1 victory at home and then sweeping Merrimack, as they should, in a home-and-home series this a past weekend.

Therefore it's hard to say what this team could do in Durham, N.H., this Friday. Saturday and possibly Sunday, because, really, they could

See RICE on page 8

Postseason begins for UM

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

(Editors note: Due to a late tip-off Wednesday night, UMass's opponent in the Atlantic 10 Tournament was not determined until after press time.)

In two hours tonight, 10 years could potentially be erased.

Maybe not erased, but, at the very least, forgotten.

With a victory in the second round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament tomorrow, the Massachusetts men's basketball team could find itself in the NCAA Tournament for the first time since 1998.

For that to likely happen, though, the Minutemen (20-9, 10-6 A-10) will have to win a game in the conference tournament for the first time in six years.

Standing in their way will either be sixth-seeded Charlotte or 11th-seeded Rhode Island, whichever team comes out on top in Wednesday's late first-round game. UMass swept the season series against the Rams and defeated the 49ers in its only meeting.

BRIAN FOGERTY/COLLEGIAN

Gary Forbes (center), Chris Lowe and Etienne Brower are hoping there is more to celebrate this year at the Atlantic 10 Tournament. Last year UMass was eliminated by Saint Louis, despite having a first-round bye.

A victory over either team would help validate UMass's strong season in a much-improved Atlantic 10 – but wouldn't necessarily lock down an at-large bid into the NCAA Tournament. Much like last season, a loss in its first game would likely cost the Minutemen any chance of that.

But UMass coach Travis Ford doesn't feel his team needs that validation – his contention is that his Minutemen have already proved to be an NCAA-caliber team.

"I think this is fun; I love this atmosphere and trying to go out and win three games in a row. But I think as far as being a true test of that a team is made of and how good they are, I don't know if conference tournaments do that," he said before practice on Monday.

"I think you've made your mark [in the regular season]."

UMass certainly made its mark on the Rams this year – winning two close matchups in February that started URI's end-of-the-season tailspin. The Minutemen also took a close contest with the 49ers, but that was almost two full months ago. UMass has played 13 conference games since then.

Ford thinks that the matchup between URI and Charlotte will be the most highly-contested first-round game. He sure wants it to be.

"I hope it goes into triple overtime and I hope they just wear each other out," he said.

No matter which team wins the

See M. HOOPS on page 9

No. 11 Yale beats up on Minutewomen

By Mike Gillmeister
Collegian Staff

One of the toughest schedules in the country is taking its toll on the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team. The No.11 Yale Bulldogs beat the Minutewomen 10-3, yesterday at McGuirk Stadium.

UMass (1-5) is now on a five-game losing streak since winning its home opener against Holy Cross. With the exception of the 9-8 loss against No.13 Dartmouth, every loss has been by at least seven goals.

Yale	10
UMass	3

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos knows that her team has the capability to be more of an offensive threat, but first the team needs to generate more chemistry.

"We can't win games [only] scoring three goals," Venechanos said. [The team needs to work on] just the little stuff right now. [We had] a couple of bad passes on the clears and that's when Yale took advantage. They're a smart team and they have leaders on the offensive and defensive ends. They were the better team today."

The Minutewomen converted 4-of-7 clears on the day, while Yale converted 10-of-12. The Bulldogs played a very physical game (24 fouls) and gave UMass five free-position shots, only one of which turned into a goal.

The Minutewomen couldn't capitalize on groundballs, either. Yale caused 12 turnovers, gaining the groundball each time. The Bulldogs also grabbed two groundballs on UMass turnovers caused by careless passing on the part of the Minutewomen.

Yale is a physical, defensive team and the fact that it has three players with seven or more goals shows how well-rounded the Bulldogs are.

Even though Yale has some pure-scorers, the Bulldogs took advantage of the inexperience of UMass freshman goalkeeper Colleen Speth. However, Speth made four saves and she is gaining the trust of her teammates.

"I've been really impressed with her leadership in there, she's definitely a presence," Venechanos said. "The women definitely like playing in front of her and she's keeping us

See W. LAX on page 10

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:53 | SAT H:48 | SUN H:42 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 2008

Justice for Jason

Vassell's pretrial to take place in district court today

Jason Vassell – a former University of Massachusetts student charged with assault with intent to murder and two counts of aggravated assault and battery with a deadly weapon – is scheduled for a pretrial court date in Hampshire District court today.

The incident is considered by many on the UMass campus to be a hate crime. Yesterday, students and professors joined in on a rally intended to raise awareness and lessen his charges, which are to be determined today.

"He is a survivor of a hate crime and a violent assault, who is being further traumatized by being isolated from his partner, his friends, his academic studies, his community, the legal system and the excessive charges against him," said Zane Barlow Coleman, a UMass biology professor, who taught and knew Vassell.

John Bowes, 20, was charged with two hate crimes and disorderly conduct. The other, Jonathan Bosse, has not been charged. Yesterday's rally followed a vigil for Vassell on Feb. 27 and was intended to raise awareness and lessen his charges before his pretrial hearing.

Eli Rosenswaike

INSIDE:

NEWS
Political posters become controversial: free speech or hate speech?
Page 3

FEATURES
Tired of pick-up lines? UM student gets the girl
Page 4

ARTS & LIVING
Actors at a "Stop-Loss" in new film
Page 8

SPORTS
UM falls in Atlantic 10 tournament
Page 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 104

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALOHA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1996. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Dominic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Lief Walcutt

SGA ballot wins popular vote

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS AND SHRUTI SEHGAL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association's (SGA) presidential election ballot form issued on campus during the voting period had three questions calling for campus reform. As of last week, all of these proposals have been passed by popular vote.

Two of the questions were implemented by the new on-campus, non-partisan organization, Advancing Democracy. The first question asked students whether or not Your Campus Meal Plan (YCMP) swipes should be exercised at the People's Market, a student-run business located in the Student Union.

"Someone from Advancing Democracy came down yesterday to our meeting and told us that all three questions passed with flying colors," said University of Massachusetts senior and People's Market employee Lisa Gozbekian. "But, we do need to still carry out some presentations with the administration. Some work still needs to be done."

"The YCMP swipes passed by 96 percent," said Advancing Democracy founder and UMass junior Steve Hoeschele. "That is an incredible margin, and the students at the People's Market are willing to come and see this to fruition."

When asked how this new change will affect the People's Market and UMass students, Gozbekian said, "We will be able to provide more for our customers. Many who have the YCMP swipes don't actually use them, and now they can use them here at the People's Market. It's also very exciting because it brings in more of our peers."

The second question on the ballot form presented students with an optional $3 fee per semester. The fee aims to fund Advancing Democracy's campaigning, lobbying, internships, and other campus-related activities that promote election reform.

"We still have a lot of work to do on the actual fee itself," Hoeschele said. "We need to meet with administrators, chancellors, and the system-wide president. At some point down in the line, the proposal needs to get down to the Board of Trustees, as they are the final authority."

Many UMass students weren't opposed to the fee, although steadily climbing student charges have become a topic of frequent debate at the University.

"If it just three dollars, it is not a big difference," said freshman chemistry major John Freal. "As long as it says three dollars and doesn't go up."

"I selected 'Yes' for this fee because it is for a legitimate cause. The fact that it is optional made me think, 'Why not?'" said freshman Marjorie Connolly, a history major.

With many of their funding problems solved through the approval of this fee, Advancing Democracy looks toward the future at UMass.

"We've been talking about doing a few campus activities," said Hoeschele. "In the fall, we plan to get a debate going between the Republican Club and the University Democrats. I think that would be really interesting. I don't think there has been a debate between them so far."

The final ballot question asked students to support or reject the proposal of changes created by a group of student leaders and administration following the student strike organized by the United Student Action Coalition in November.

The compromise includes plans for student fees, cost of higher education, diversity programming, and campus safety concerns.

"It [the proposal] means we get to negotiate," UMass senior and SGA Trustee Ruth Thompson said when asked to explain the impact of the proposal. "In the past, chancellors have ignored us. In addition to being listened to, we now have the opportunity to get things done."

In commenting on the general outcome of the ballot approvals, Gozbekian stated, "For me, this event shows that people are interested in matters that are going on," Gozbekian said. "Even though there was a low number of a vote people were involved. In the future, maybe we will be able to add more ballot questions that affect the campus and students."

Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldbenedi@student.umass.edu

Shruti Sehgal can be reached at ssehgal@student.umass.edu.

Particle collider comes online

Professors and students set to work at CERN site

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Scientists at the University of Massachusetts and around the world this summer will probe the mysteries of the universe 300 feet underground in a 16-and-1/2 mile long tunnel.

That's because in Geneva, Switzerland, the world's largest particle collider, called the Large Hadron Collider, will come online, run by CERN, the European Organization for Nuclear Research.

The project has been coming together for 25 years, with the hope that by smashing protons and other molecules into each other at high energies, discoveries can be made about the nature of the universe.

Carlo Dallapiccola is one of the associate physics professors at UMass working on the project.

"We've gotten to the point already where we have a pretty good idea of what's the most fundamental, what is all matter potentially made of, and what are the basic most fundamental laws of physics," said Dallapiccola. "That just a few pieces essentially explains the entire universe. You have to put it together in a very complicated way to explain the entire universe, but nevertheless it's from a few basic rules. But there's some holes, you can explain a lot, but not everything, and we have some very compelling reasons to think with this machine produce enough energy, [to create particles] that would fill in some of those holes."

Scientists have been smashing tiny particles into each other for years, but never at the energies possible with the LHC.

Particles will fly around a giant ring the length of 300 W.E.E. DuBois Libraries stacked end to end at almost the speed of light and -271.3 degrees Celsius, almost absolute zero.

Associate professor of physics Stephane Willocq explained why bigger is better in particle accelerators.

"It's an application of the famous $E=MC^2$, we're looking for new particles that are very heavy, that have large mass, and previous experiments have not been able to produce collisions at sufficiently high energies," said Willocq. "The potential discovery of these particles will answer a lot of puzzles in our current understanding of these constituents of matter. It's not the only way, but it's certainly the best way, to get sufficiently high energy to produces these particles directly."

Willocq also said that while other particle accelerators haven't been designed with a specific goal in mind, the LHC has been created specifically with the goal of finding new particles needed to explain current theories.

Willocq and Dallapiccola said the many people and teams doing research at CERN are often in contact with each other. There are weekly phone conferences, meetings are held in Geneva five times a year. There is a Ph.D. student from UMass at the LHC, and two other at UMass, as well at three other post-doctoral students work on the project with Willocq and Dallapiccola.

"We're motivated overall by interest in knowing exactly how nature works at the most fundamental level," Dallapiccola said. "Anyone who was curious as a kid, by how a television works, you want to break it apart, you're probably left unsatisfied, maybe you know how some of the pieces work but you want to go further than that. We want to go all the way, as far as you can go in that endeavor."

Willocq and Dallapiccola noted that while the LHC may be able to fill in some of the holes in current theories, it will most likely create some new ones as well.

"Like astronomers who look out at the universe and see a splotch of light and wonder 'What's that?' and they get a more powerful telescope and realize it's a galaxy made of stars just like ours and then they want to look past that, [it's] the desire to find out what it's all about," Dallapiccola said.

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu

Controversial SAFI posters create complaints to admin.

BY KATRINA CESSNA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Politically-charged posters hung earlier this week by the Student Alliance for Israel (SAFI) have sparked controversy, re-raising questions about the limits of free speech and expression in a public university setting.

The posters are components of SAFI's "Wall of Peace," a display which adorns the window of the RSO's office on the fourth floor of the Student Union.

The sign bearing the slogan "Arab leaders, stop inciting hate," although removed after one day, has resulted in the registry of at least one official complaint with the Center for Student Development (CSD), Arab Student Club (ASC) President Ryan Dawud said.

SAFI President, Matt Hoffman, explained that the group agreed to remove the poster after a student, unaffiliated with either group, complained to him that the charge put upon "Arab leaders" was too general. Dawud cited current peace agreements between Israel and two Arab countries, Egypt and Jordan, as proof of the verity of the student's claim.

Dawud said of the signs that while he was, "offended as an Arab and as a Palestinian," and that the political implication of the posters was less serious than "the fact that certain individuals are using an RSO and its office … [to] intentionally offend people and attempt to incite hate."

Hoffman, on the contrary, claimed that the display, part of a SAFI campaign titled, "Teach Kids Peace," was "not intended to make anyone uncomfortable on this campus."

Instead it was intended to "expose statements that the Palestinian authority uses to incite their children to hate Jews."

"We won't sit here silent…Anti-Israel activity will continue to occur anyway," said Hoffman.

Dawud found Hoffman's assertion that the UMass campus is pervaded by a strong anti-Israeli attitude untrue.

"[It's] laughable… our school has its own Office of Jewish Affairs, Hillel House, and Chabad House," Dawud said. "All we have is a small office in the Student Union. I don't even think there's an Office of Christian Affairs."

Larry Goldbaum, director of the office of Jewish Affairs, said that there is a fundamental difficulty with resolving the conflict between the two groups.

"They each see themselves as victims," he said.

Regardless of disagreement about politics, Goldbaum stressed the need for thoughtful discourse.

"Speaking as an administrator, the last thing anyone wants is for this to escalate," Goldbaum said. "The question is, how do you have an appropriate, intelligent conversation about these issues?"

Dawud has been having discussions, but not with SAFI.

While Hoffman claims to have both accommodated students' requests and responded positively to constructive criticism, Dawud described him as "hostile" during their conversation.

Both the Dean of Students and the interim vice chancellor have also become involved.

"We want to do this the right way," Dawud said. "Steps need to be taken to ensure that doesn't happen again."

Katrina Cessna can be reached at kcessna@student.umass.edu

BRIAN TEDDER / COLLEGIAN

The Student Alliance for Israel posted what members of the Arab Student Club say are offensive flyers on the window of the SAFI office in the Student Union.

FEATURES

'More than words...'

By David Humphreys
Photos By Jeromie Whalen
Collegian Staff

When Brigid Cunningham woke from her afternoon nap and looked out her window, she might have expected to see students coming from class or from cars in the parking lot. She didn't expect eight people and a multi-colored sign asking: "Will you be my girlfriend?"

"I was really shocked," she said, at a loss for words.

Cunningham, a freshman political science major, knew she was going on a date with Pasha Hashemzadeh, another freshman she had been casually dating since the end of September, but never expected him to arrive in such a romantic fashion.

Hashemzadeh had been planning this event for around a week, but was initially delayed because of inclement weather. Finally the right day came, and with the sun shining, he stayed inside all day, even skipping a class, just to perfect the hand-cut and -colored letters and buy roses and a bottle of sparkling apple juice.

And even with all of his preparation, he was still anxious. "I wanted to ask her out in a unique way," he said. "I was still really nervous ... and 50-50 on if she'd accept."

But he decided to do it anyway. The only thing left? Find sign holders. For that job, Hashemzadeh went to his friends.

"At first they all made fun of me and laughed," he said. "Then they helped me and held the signs."

With roses in hand and friends in tow, Hashemzadeh made his way outside, right below Cunningham's window.

"I didn't think he had that in him. My face was bright red," Cunningham said. "He said, 'What's your answer? What's your answer?' Then I nodded and they ran up."

"I was really excited and I ran into the building, up the stairs and gave her a kiss," Hashemzadeh said.

And though he got the girl, Hashemzadeh still doesn't consider himself a romantic.

"I don't want to do romantic stuff too often," he said. "I don't want to be looked at as a romantic guy."

But Cunningham has other plans for him. "I told him... 'You better keep this up, now!'"

David Humphreys can be reached at DHumphre@student.umass.edu

UMass freshman Pasha Hashemzadeh enlisted seven of his friends to hold hand-cut letters asking Brigid Cunningham to be his girlfriend. The letters took a majority of the day to make.

Falling short for 'Short Cuts'

By Alice Lee
Collegian Correspondent

Thursday nights at the Grad Lounge are quiet. The flat screen TV is just loud enough to match the volume of the conversations circulating through the lounge: the exchange of thesis ideas, or recommendations to a gig by some unknown artist coming to town.

A group of undergrads begin to gather. They resemble the type of group you wouldn't normally see together outside of a classroom. Even so, the group members don't have a problem with sharing a pitcher of beer — for academic reasons, of course.

While the staff discusses plans to meet up at the next Something Every Friday before the meeting officially begins, Charles Thompson, a University of Massachusetts senior, wonders where all the writers are. As the editor in chief of the student-run undergraduate literary journal, "Short Cuts," he has eagerly awaited the flood of submissions to come in. By this time last year, the submission inbox was overflowing. This year, he only remains skeptical and anxious for the next batch of short stories.

"It's a great mystery why we aren't getting a lot of short stories," he said. "I think we have been doing a lot more advertising this time than last time around, and last time we had three times as many."

It's true. The staff has been working hard to get some new forms of publicity within the campus. Aside from putting up fliers and tabling at the Campus Center, Thompson has appeared on WMUA's Saturday night radio show, "Two Birds and a Stone," to talk about the journal. Staff member Norman Hillipp even silk-screened the journal's logo, a black typewriter, onto T-shirts and distributed them to the staff for additional publicity.

"Short Cuts" began 10 years ago when two students, John Lawrence and Matthew Maggiacomo, decided to gather and publish short stories, which they had written for a comparative literature class. At the end of the course, the two students approached their professor, Therese Pasquale, and asked about starting a journal for undergraduate short story writers. Pasquale then contacted her former students, who became the first "Short Cuts" staff.

Thompson believes that after a decade, "Short Cuts" has "broadened their scope," now reaching out even to the students in the computer science and engineering departments. Even so, he finds the lack of submissions discouraging and not representing the potential of UMass students.

"I always like to think of UMass as a sleeping giant," he said. "All of these students with various talents either don't know where to put it or they just don't."

Thompson said there are currently many great opportunities open to students, but many people don't work at obtaining them. "Not that many of us are willing to go out of our way to make our time here worth something," he said.

Thompson's biggest concern about the lack of submissions is that students aren't seeing the opportunity, but acknowledges that there is not much that can be done.

"You can't coerce someone to write; either they write of they don't. If the campus isn't writing, then there's nothing we can do, we are just an outlet for it," he said.

Alice Lee can be reached at alee@xStudent.umass.edu

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM
SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art, a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art. April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760.

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons, Cuban, 1959– . Birth Certificate, 1991. Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy L. Miller class of 1925 Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Gustanini.

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

EDITORIAL OPINION

Yoke of morality

Leigh Greaney

As the time left before spring break slowly dwindles down to the final hour, classes are seemingly more and more torturous. As much as I do my best to sit and listen to what my professors are aiming to teach, my mind wanders. My eyes leave my doodle-filled notebook page and drift up the wall to the bulletin board of advertisements. Concert advertisement, roommate wanted, publish your work ... when is spring break, again? Wait a second – what is this? "Be an egg donor." What?

Well, that's interesting. I have eggs. Someone is willing to pay between $5,000 and $10,000 for those puppies? This sounds like a moral dilemma between genetic parenthood and a new car to me. I could have a son or daughter living inside another woman for nine months. At the same time, I could pay off some debt, take a trip, or even help pay for a semester at sea. Some of the earned money could even go into savings bonds for my newly born offspring.

Well, that's interesting. I have eggs ... This sounds like a moral dilemma between genetic parenthood and a new car to me.

But, doesn't something about that whole idea strike you as off? It's understandable that families who are unable to have children need egg donors in order to have a chance at getting pregnant. If their baby is unable to have his/her mother's genetic traits, he/she still could have a chance at inheriting the father's. But would that pose an issue for the mother? She would technically be raising a child that is genetically some other woman's child with their husband, lover, or partner. Would she, as the mother, still feel the connection with her baby that she would if she was the genetic mother? Is love just love or is there a connection between people that only genetics has to offer?

Moreover, wouldn't the egg donor bestow a moral issue? Not having to raise the baby, would the genetic mother still feel as if she were the baby's mother? If the baby has your eyes, your smile, and your same double jointed thumbs, does that make you the mother? Do you have to raise the baby from Day One to be the mother or are you the mother before the baby even opens his/her eyes?

At the same time, if a family decides against adoption and still desires to have a child, shouldn't they be able to? Sometimes the act of giving birth is enough for a mother to feel the instinctive mother-nature instinct. Sometimes just the act of having a child to look after is enough. Sometimes just being called "mom" is enough. Just loving the baby is enough.

In the case that love is just enough to feel like a mother and to start a family, the question of adoption arises again. If there are babies in the world without love and in search of love, wouldn't that be all the reason to adopt? If the eggs of the mother in question malfunction and are not able to create genetically matching children, her desire to have a child aims at the same goal as egg adoption. The only difference is that the baby would have the father's traits and still be carried in the womb. The end result of having a baby with another woman's genes is all the same. So, how important is appearance?

It's hard to tell which party has the bigger moral dilemma. Between the egg donor and the family receiving the egg, the issue surrounding motherhood is in question. Which mother serves as the true mother? It seems to circle the age-old argument of nature and nurture.

If nature proves to overpower nurture, egg donation could pose issues for the baby, which is the main concern. If the baby grows up looking everything like the father and nothing like the mother, they could possibly draw questions on their heritage. What seems like a good idea now to make money could very well end up in an unexpected knock at the door years down the line from a son or daughter you had without really having. Even if the adoptive parents allowed you to see the child throughout its life, the family structure could be problematic. The child could feel more connected to their genetic mother, the child could feel abandonment. The child could feel paid for.

That seems like a lot for a college student to take on. If it's not even to balance a life of classes, papers, grades, work, and life in general, adding a moral dilemma on top of that is a plateful. Get money, but be a mother of sorts? Yikes. Can you really put a price on that? To put a price tag on your eggs is putting a price on life, on your heritage, and on your moral fiber. It's all pretty heavy for a classroom bulletin board. It's all pretty heavy for anywhere.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Conservative? Vote Obama!

Eric Magazu

This past Saturday, Mar. 8, there was a special election in Illinois to fill a vacancy in the House of Representatives for the Fourteenth Congressional District that was left empty by the retirement of former Speaker of the House Dennis Hastert. A Democrat was able to win the seat in what should have been a safe election for most any Republican candidate. Many commentators, especially Republican activists, have tried to cite local concerns as the reason for this upset, but the problem for Republicans throughout the country lies much deeper.

President George W. Bush has done a poor job in his seven years in office. He ran as a compassionate conservative, and yet he has performed less than compassionately and less than conservatively in executing the duties of the office entrusted to him by the American people. His presidency has been dominated by a disastrous war to remake the Middle East in the image of America. Despite massive Republican gains in 2004, President Bush failed to capitalize on the opportunity to enact any legislation that would have helped restore America to her Constitutional roots and the values of our devoted forefathers.

If events work out poorly in the first two years of a Democratic president, there may be an opportunity for conservatives.

President Bush has only helped to further many causes championed by his political adversaries, and he has done so without even winning their gratitude. On the economic front, he expanded federal involvement in education and health care. On the moral values front, he failed to substantially address any of the issues that would help shore up the collapsing integrity of the American family. On the foreign policy front, President Bush altered the traditional conservative stance to remain apart from conflicts that are not directly related to the national interest.

President Bush cannot be distinguished from the politics of the Democratic Party in these areas. It is in precisely these same areas that the apparent Republican nominee for President in 2008, Sen. John McCain, lacks credibility. The lack of a conservative vision is that much more acute with Sen. McCain. Sen. McCain has displayed over and over again with his votes and his posturing that he has no interest in a conservative vision for America. Even in areas where President Bush was vainly advocating for a conservative position, Sen. McCain resisted going along with him.

Sen. McCain fought against President Bush's temporary across-the-board marginal tax reductions, he helped throw a wrench into Bush's attempt to nominate conservative judges, and he advocated for a campaign finance law aimed at curtailing freedom of speech during election seasons. Sen. McCain has been a leading advocate for an insecure immigration policy and outdoes President Bush in his proposed war policy in the Middle East.

Conservatives may agree with all of these arguments, but relent and propose that Sen. McCain would be far better than Sens. Barack Obama or Hillary Clinton. This may be true on a policy level, as the positions of Obama and Clinton are far from conservative, but, on a strategic level, considering the choices remaining, their potential presence in the White House would be far more beneficial for conservatives.

The reason for this logic is simple. A President McCain will divide conservatives along the lines of party loyalty versus philosophical loyalty. Conservatives will feel pressured to back the policies of President McCain because he is their party's standard bearer. This will be harmful if President McCain is proposing policies that are left-of-center, including a national health care plan or a weak immigration policy.

A President Obama or President Clinton will leave intact the opposition of Republicans in Congress. A conservative will not be pressured to vote for President Obama's health care plan or immigration policy. If events work out poorly in the first two years of a Democratic presidency, there may be an opportunity for conservatives to win a majority in one or both houses of Congress.

This situation is truly not ideal for conservative voters. The ancient Greek philosopher Aristotle warned that governments can be overturned when a large number of high-spirited people are excluded from the governing class. This is all the more so the case when the excluded class is comprised of a remnant faithful to the ideals of our ancestors. This is not to say that the American government is about to be overturned, but that in the long run it is not prudent to marginalize such a large segment of the American body politic.

What counts most in the end is not that there are conservatives in government, but rather whether our leaders are loyal to the law of God and the principles of our forefathers. The law of God teaches what is right to produce the harmony of man with God and of man with man. The principles of our forefathers teach the practical ways that the Law can be implemented in a constitutional republic such as that which we cherish in America. It is far more important that our leaders bind themselves to the instruction of God, as it is the only safe and true way to produce justice and harmony throughout the land.

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at emagazu@gmail.com.

A 'fundamental' objection

Adrienne Potter Yoe

Guest columnist

At the film "Peace, Propaganda, and the Promised Land," hosted by Hampshire College's Students for Justice in Palestine (SJP), I became a fundamentalist. I'm not sure what type of fundamentalist I am because my accuser, University of Massachusetts professor Sut Jhally, only mentioned that I was a fundamentalist "like Osama Bin-Laden." After the film I made an unpopular comment to Jhally, the director, after which he made his comment. As a Mount Holyoke student I have not seen any debates about this conflict be reduced to name-calling. The term "fundamentalist," was used to make me sit back, shut up, and mimic other audience members in nodding violently whenever Jhally uttered anything.

The attempt to shut up my legitimate criticism of the film is not isolated. It is part of the greater problem of academic intimidation occurring on campuses throughout the country by pro-Palestinian professors and students. Academia is a feisty world, and disagreements should not be uncommon. As someone who supports a fair, equitable peace process in Israel and the disputed territories, but does not support a Palestinian state at this time, it is not uncommon to find people who disagree with me. However, it is uncommon for those who disagree to resort to such forms of hyperbole as calling someone "fundamentalist."

Sadly, like his charge of "fundamentalism," Jhally's film, "Peace, Propaganda, and the Promised Land," is also lacking factual basis. "Peace, Propaganda, and the Promised Land," constantly references international law, without citing specific laws, their intended application, or how Israel is allegedly violating these laws. Without facts, the film sprays inaccuracies at its viewers, but leaves them without tools to discuss the media and its coverage of Israel and the territories.

One of the film's premises is that "political elites" and "corporate interests" control the media. Besides a flash of Joe Lieberman's face, no "political elites" were seen in the film by name, and no organization and no specific corporation or set of corporate interests were named. They were cast as threatening figures looming above the American media and obliterating truth.

The term "fundamentalist" was used to make me sit back, shut up, and mimic other audience members in nodding violently whenever Jhally uttered anything.

"Peace, Propaganda, and the Promised Land," continued to be problematic as it lambasted "the occupation." As an Irish-American with roots in Ulster, I have a nuanced understanding of illegal occupation because for centuries my family has been living under it. Coming from a place of experience, I take issue with the term "occupation" being used to describe Israel's role in the disputed territories.

The film did not discuss why the Israeli Defense Force is in the disputed territories, or the need for Israel to stop the flow of terrorism. While I attempted to explain this to Jhally audience members (some from the SJP) began screaming and mocking me. An elderly woman began screeching incoherently at me. Jhally did nothing to discourage this juvenile behavior. Instead, he comfortably watched me and my ideas be abused by a group of undereducated, raving students. After these antics ceased, Jhally made the point that I was a fundamentalist, like Osama Bin-Laden, and "completely irrational."

As a secular liberal who is against violence, I was torn between laughter at his outrageousness and disgust. Do students in his classroom who are not vehement supporters of his biased, ignorant ideas suffer?

Intimidation has a clear purpose: to turn me and my ideas into "the other," and by doing so he squashed his academic integrity and any hope of a contribution to the peace process. The film's problems paled in comparison to Jhally's reference of a quote concerning who live in prisons – the people of the Gaza Strip and West Bank – and are treated like animals, then become animals. Instead of adding, "I don't think that Palestinians are animals," he left the quote alone, and an audience member challenged this comparison. Why imply that Palestinians are animals if you are trying to make the case that Palestinians need to be autonomous with their own government? Having spent significant amounts of time with Palestinians through Seeds of Peace International Camp, I do not believe that they are "animals."

Nothing jars me more than the fact that this program is eating up taxpayer dollars to "educate" people. Neither the SJP or Jhally did a credible work in discussing the Israeli-Arab conflict. The conflict has two sides, not one, and if Jhally wants to speak about media bias in the Israeli-Arab conflict, then he has a duty to mention the role of the media in Arab countries, which often rivals even Nazi propaganda in its presentation of Jewish people. I hope that students will not be influenced by this ignorance and bias and will do the work behind truly understanding the Arab-Israeli conflict and the media's role in dissecting it.

Adrienne Potter Yoe is a Mt. Holyoke student.

Collegiate cartography

Hannah Nelson

As New York City has its boroughs, UMass has its residential areas. Before a student even steps on campus, housing has already subliminally influenced the way we perceive where we want to live with their information packets advertising Southwest as "urban" and Northeast as "quintessential New England." Each area then seems to have its own personality. Though in all fairness, not all the students who live in a specific area share its personality. If they do, I'd like to know what personality test is being used. Let's face it: Not everyone ends up where they want. Just ask the students who have done time in the Campus Center Hotel.

Orchard Hill is one of the highest points on campus. It's coincidental, then, that students in the Commonwealth College should live there. The honors program has an elevated status on campus, so why not make it obvious? It is only fitting to note that Southwest is on the lower end, and has an ever-sinking reputation. Urban in structure, a party by nature, Southwest often finds itself a scapegoat for the University's undesired image of violence. The discrimination that Southwest faces as the party center is easily seen through the backpack ban at Berkshire late-night. Just like everything else in the world, it would seem that the negative actions of a few equal a loss for others.

The honors program has an elevated status on campus, so why not make it obvious?

Since scapegoating seems to be one way of going about this, Southwest was created with the intention of expanding on-campus housing. It only takes a bit of simple math to come to the conclusion that in order to expand the undergraduate population, you need more rooms. But what has been the thorn in the University's side is the size of Southwest. To house 5,500 students in a relatively small area isn't a really bright idea. The fact that the infamous high rises had to be built, that the University had to defy gravity, is alone testament enough.

To digress to Northeast, it is akin to the quiet suburbs. It's a melting pot for UMass with its legacy housing targeted at international students and the promotion of diversity. The similarly constructed Central is unassuming, and many students express an interest in wanting to live there. It's the safe side of town.

For some, Sylvan is a mini-Southwest and a rebel twin to O-Hill, and for others it's one of the quieter parts of campus. I guess all that multiple living gives way for a multiple personality syndrome. North is the designated living space for upperclassmen, and hopefully its residents will forgive me for relating their space to a retirement home. After all, the upperclassmen are more and more frequently being displaced from the traditional halls to make room for frosh community living.

The option on freshman halls is generally a mixed one. As a freshman, I now regret not having taken advantage of the opportunity as I listen to others rave about them. The praise is from present and past participants, and the dissent is from the upperclassmen (and some of the participants themselves who would rather stay put in their halls.) It's like one giant, campus-wide game of opinion tug-of-war. Worst-case scenario is the looming sword over our heads that many see as inevitable: mandatory freshman housing.

What does that mean for the different housing areas? If you listen to skeptics, then it means more drunk freshmen in Southwest, and more destruction of the rich histories some buildings have carried in Northeast and Central. The upside? Let me get back to you on that one. I live in a mixed-year hall and I honestly don't think that a junior can really have a worse effect on a freshman than another freshman could. It's widely known that all-freshmen housing hasn't put the cork in freshman drinking, and as long as that isn't the real reason for the freshman communities, OK. My advice to the powers that be is to not make the students angry with more regulations than are necessary. For example, mandatory freshman housing.

The harshest comparison to be made would indeed be the Campus Center Hotel. I haven't forgotten about the students who are often dropped off there for lack of space. A bit ironic that this lot should be left without a proper home on campus and should be put in the Campus Center, a place where on any given day you can find the truly homeless. That's the sad part of it all. We, UMass students, can gripe and moan all we want about midterms (and housing for that matter), but sometimes we need to be reminded that there are worse fates than a warm dorm room and the promise of spring break.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

EAM WINS! ... GUY DOES THING! ... DISASTER! ... PANIC! ... VIOLENCE! ... BRITNEY SP

'Stop-Loss' stars discuss new movie

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Scheduled to hit theaters March 28, director Kimberly Peirce's film "Stop-Loss" tells the story of several friends from a small Texas town who complete tours of duty in Iraq. They return home much to the relief of family and friends, only to find out the Army is shipping one of them out once again. The movie's timeliness and controversial subject matter may help garner box-office success.

Gordon-Levitt talks career, politics

By Kevin Koczwara
Collegian Staff

Over the blanket of white noise on the telephone Joseph Gordon-Levitt ("The Lookout," "Brick") said, "I apologize to everyone on the phone right now. I'm not going to do this again."

It was a struggle to get the conference going, but once it did, Gordon-Levitt was open about his beliefs on the ideas of celebrity, acting, the military and working with Kimberly Peirce ("Boy's Don't Cry") on her new movie "Stop-Loss."

Q: What was your experience working with Kimberly Peirce?

A: She is just about the smartest, sharpest observer of humanity that I've ever met. With a few quick questions, in just a few minutes, she was able to get to know me frighteningly well and help me create the character that I played and figure out how I was going to go about finding the emotional truth in it.

Q: How did you get in touch with the director and the writer of this movie and what made you decide to take this role?

A: I got in touch with them the same way that I find any project. I read a lot of scripts. Most of them are not very good, unfortunately, which is, I guess, why most of the movies that come out nowadays suck. But this was a really good script. And then I met Kim who directed the movie. She's so brilliant, so creative, so smart. And I knew her work from "Boys Don't Cry."

Q: Describe your character in this movie. Is he anything like what you've played before?

A: Every character's different, of course. I've never played a soldier before and in my life have never considered what being a solider would be like. We never really hear what it's like to actually be a human being over there [in Iraq]. We're told of soldiers in terms of numbers and in terms of politics. And the fact is that the guys over there, men and women over there, they're not just numbers and they're not just policies. They're human beings. And that's what "Stop-Loss" is all about; it's trying to get people to consider it from the point of view of the human beings that are in the midst of this.

See "GORDON-LEVITT" on page 9

"GORDON-LEVITT" from page 8

Q: When you're working with the script and it finally comes to production, how much do you prefer to stick to the script and read the lines verbatim? Or do you prefer to improv or somewhere in-between?

A: Yes, it depends on the project. I did one project called "Brick," which was so precisely written and so kind of stylistically written, that I did my very best to stay strictly to the script and be as verbatim as possible.

"Stop-Loss" wasn't that way because "Stop-Loss" is not stylized. It's very realistic. And Kimberly Peirce, the director, was all about us trying to try different things, just be in the moment and be real and get to know our characters to the point where it's not a contrivance but as close to authentic as possible. And so we did all sorts of things. We did a lot of improvisations especially in rehearsals with Kim. And then, once you get shooting, there are certain technical reasons of making a movie, how cameras work, how the lights work, where you have to stick to a script to a certain degree depending on how they're shooting it.

Q: How did you prepare for this kind of movie? Did you speak with any soldiers before filming?

A: Yes, I got really close with a bunch of guys that had been over there and been through it. And the first thing we did actually was, when we got to Texas, was the simulated boot camp.

We went out into the sticks in Texas for a week. There were five of us actors and four real soldiers making up a squad of nine. There were three drill sergeants, all of whom were veterans that had been in the military for decades. I stayed close with those guys. In fact, I'm still friends with some of the guys that I knew. There were soldiers around us all the time.

Q: How did you get into character?

A: Well, that all depends. I mean, one way to do it is like what I did for "Stop-Loss." I got to know a bunch of people and made friends and got close to a bunch of people that, you know, would bear a similarity to the character I was playing. I got to know a bunch of soldiers that had been to Iraq.

One thing I always do for every part that I play is come up with a bunch of music that I can listen to that will put me in the right mood.

Q: What was it like to be on set with a retired sergeant major around all the time?

A: It made you respect the uniform. I never put my hands in my pockets, I will tell you that. Because Sgt. Maj. [Jim Beaver] would tell me not to do it. And he only had to tell me once. You know, it was a huge part of the entire experience of doing "Stop-Loss."

I felt a great sense of responsibility to properly represent in an honorable and a respectful way, what a United States soldier is. It made all the difference in the world, the fact that we had a bunch of real United States soldiers on the set all the time.

Q: I hear that you're not keen on the term "celebrity." How do you avoid all the traffic as a celebrity and try to keep integrity as an artist?

A: My focus is on the art and the craft itself, that's what interests me. There's a weird confluence in our culture nowadays between that celebrity thing, that kind of being rich and famous and being an actor.

The history of being an actor is not glamorous, rich, or famous at all, but I think because the United States has abolished the monarchy and loyalty, the role had to be filled somehow. It landed on actors and singers and stuff. There's really no fundamental link between being an actor and being rich and famous. It's just kind of been created in the last 100 years or so. Anytime anybody says to me, "Well, you're an actor so you have to expect to be a celebrity," I refuse to accept it. I don't think it's true. I think, you know, the art and craft of acting and telling stories is older than Hollywood. It's older than the English language. It goes back to what makes humans human.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar1@gmail.com

Phillippe keeps it real with views on war

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Ryan Phillippe is at a stop-loss.

The actor, whose previous works include "Cruel Intentions," "Flags of Our Fathers," and the 2005 Academy Award-winning film "Crash," just can't seem to say no to soldier roles.

Or at least it certainly seems that way.

The Delaware native is set to star in the new MTV Film's release, "Stop-Loss." The film, which hits theaters March 28, is directed by Kimberly Peirce ("Boys Don't Cry").

"Stop-Loss" centers on the tale of three returning soldiers, whose lives are divided by the controversial policy of the same name, which forces currently enlisted soldiers to return for multiple tours of duty long after their retired term of service is complete.

During a conference call Thursday, Phillippe took time out from press-touring to answer questions about the release.

Q: In 2006, you starred as a soldier in "Flags of Our Fathers." What was it that interested you in taking on another similar role?

A: I was interested in working with Kim Peirce. I truly believe her to be an artist. If you look at her first film, she's clearly talented. More than anything, I wanted to get involved to pay tribute to my grandfather. He served during World War II, so that continues to be an incentive for me to want to get involved in films with this content matter.

Q: Was the experience working with Kim Peirce as good as you hoped?

A: I've had the opportunity to work with a lot of really talented directors over the years. I've worked with [Robert] Altman, [Clint] Eastwood and Ridley Scott. I'd put her right up there with them. I think she may be a little tougher than some of them. She's got this drive and determination to get what she wants, and that's what a director has to do - be decisive, authoritative and unrelenting.

Q: Did you do any research before taking on the role of Sgt. Brandon King?

A: I watched hours and hours of video camera footage that the soldiers shot of each other to get a sense of their camaraderie. I also viewed many of the excellent documentaries that have been made about the Iraq conflict. With a role like this, you really want to make sure you know how to behave and appear like a soldier. I think you're doing these men a disservice if you don't.

See "PHILLIPPE" on page 9

"PHILLIPPE" from page 8

Q: In the production notes, you mentioned working with Jim Dever as a technical advisor, and you also mentioned working with him on "Flags of Our Fathers." What are the some of the ways he helped prepare you physically for the role?

A: Oh man, he's just the only guy you want for something like this. He's been a non-office sergeant major for 25 years now, and he's as hardcore as it gets. He had us doing full military training in Texas in the middle of August. One of the great things about it was that he also had us training with six professional soldiers. I was all for anything that made us look less like a bunch of actors.

Q: What was it like to be on location in Texas?

A: Well, it's funny actually. I'm pretty hip-hop. I don't even own a pair of blue jeans. When I got down there, I just started getting into everything. I started listening to country music, you know? Toby Keith, Kenny Chesney, really outside of my usual comfort zone. But that's what I love about acting. You get to adopt different personas. Plus, Texas is a great, unique state. I really enjoyed it.

Q: As a film, "Stop-Loss" seems more interested in telling things from a soldier's perspective. Were you pleased that the focus is more on individual stories than the war?

A: I am, and very much so. The last thing I wanted the film to be was preachy. Personally, I don't enjoy films that I feel have a hidden agenda, or are out there just to make a statement. I feel like it's kind of an insult to the audience. People already know how they feel, they don't need a movie to teach them how to think.

Q: Would you say that you prefer to get involved with films that have a polarizing effect on an audience?

A: When I pick a role, I'm usually more interested in a topic - a topic that will make people think or is original or has an interesting point of view. Films are bound to garner reactions from different people. Art is totally subjective. The best films are always open to individual interpretation.

Q: Over the years, there have been a lot of films which dealt with war, from WWII to Vietnam. How do you feel "Stop-Loss" compares to those films?

A: Well, I definitely think "Deer Hunter" is one of the best films ever made. The difference with a movie like "Stop-Loss" is that it's not being made in hindsight. With the war in Iraq right now, there's something vital about what we're depicting. Sure it's about the war, but it's also about the real-life people who deal with it every day. We're telling this story from a youth perspective, and it works. The average soldier is 21-24 year old, has a wife, a girlfriend, a family. We're really just trying to make this a film for them.

Q: So the $20 million question, then. How do you feel about the war?

A: In this position, you obviously want the war to end. It's vastly different from something like WWII, it's not a necessary war. You know, I'm an Obama supporter. I'm mostly looking forward to the idea of having a president who wants to do something for a change, and who doesn't believe in wasting lives.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu

Actors get personal in Q&A session concerning new film

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/14/2008 thru Thurs. 3/20/2008
Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

Doomsday (R)*
1:20 4:45 7:20 10:15

Horton Hears A Who (G)*
1:00 2:00 3:30 4:35
6:45 7:35 9:00 9:50

10,000 B.C. (PG-13)*
1:15 1:55 4:00 4:50
7:10 7:45 9:45 10:20

College Road Trip (G)*
1:30 4:10 7:00 9:15

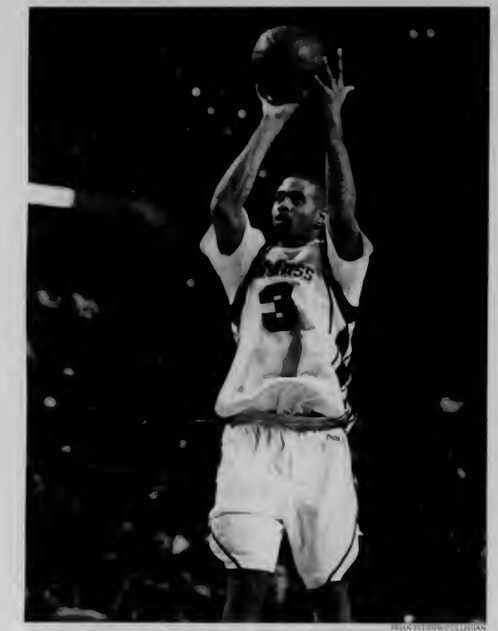
Miss Pettigrew Lives For A Day (PG-13)*
1:35 4:20 7:25 10:05

The Bank Job (R)*
1:50 4:40 7:40 10:25

In Bruges (R)
9:55

Semi-Pro (R)
1:05 4:05 7:05 9:40

The Other Boleyn Girl (PG-13)
1:10 4:25 7:15 10:00



Vantage Point (PG-13)
1:25 4:15 7:30 10:10

The Spiderwick Chronicles (PG)
1:40 4:30 6:55

* NO PASSES, NO SUPERSAVERS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Don't forget to check online for News and Sports updates during Spring Break.

Hair, Nails, Tanning, Waxing, Facials, & Massage
Owner
Ms. Abigael M. Sicard
267 Amherst Road
Suite #2 (Rt.116)
Sunderland, Ma
413-397-9988
Tuesday 10-6 • Wednesday 10-6
Thursday 10-7 • Friday 10-6
Saturday 10-3
Absolute SALON & DAY SPA

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Gary Forbes scored 14 points on 6-of-13 shooting in his final game for UMass. The senior won Atlantic 10 Player of the Year less than a week ago.

49ers defeat UMass in A-10 Tournament

Goldwire too much for Minutemen

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. – With a dismal first-half shooting performance against Massachusetts last night in the second-round of the Atlantic 10 Tournament, Leemire Goldwire's Charlotte teammates would have been justified to stay clear of him.

The senior guard scored just five points on 2-of-9 shooting from the floor, helping dig the 49ers into a 17-point hole entering intermission.

But after the second half ended, Charlotte's Lamont Mack wanted to sit right next to his senior leader, and rubbed his teammate's head to show support.

Mack and the rest of the 49ers hoped the head rubbing would translate into good luck as Charlotte stunned UMass in a thrilling comeback victory, 69-65, last night at Boardwalk Hall to advance to the A-10 Tournament semifinals against Temple tomorrow night.

For the second consecutive season, the Minutemen (21-10, 10-7 A-10) will likely play their next game in the NIT after an early A-10 tourney exit – rather than in the NCAA Tournament, which UMass has not been a part of since 1998.

The Minutemen will forever have Goldwire's 19-point second-half outburst and shooting clinic from 3-point range to blame if they don't receive an at-large bid into the Big Dance.

No shot will stick in UMass's collective mind more than the one Goldwire hit with 20 seconds remaining.

"As the clock went on [Charlotte] coach [Bobby] Lutz was like, 'shoot it, shoot it; just pull up.' That's what I did," Goldwire said after the game.

"That's great coaching," Lutz joked afterwards.

With the shot clock ticking down, Goldwire dribbled alone at the top of the key, while UMass's Tony Gaffney stood about five feet in front of him, giving Goldwire the necessary space to shoot. Almost everyone knew he was going to take the shot, but by the time Gaffney could get a hand in his face, the shot already went down – giving the 49ers a two-possession lead with not enough time for UMass.

"The plays he made in the game were unbelievable and everybody in the building knew he was going to shoot it and he still did it … and made it," Lutz said.

UMass coach Travis Ford was frustrated after the game, because he saw it coming, too.

"All we were talking about was 'don't give up threes,'" he said, referring to what he was telling his defense in the game's final minutes. "I knew that's all they were going to shoot."

The Minutemen gave up a lot of them in the second half – and most of them were supplied off the right arms of Mack (23 points) and Goldwire (24). The high-scoring duo bagged 17 consecutive points for the 49ers early in the second half, and 25-of-27 by the midway point in the second stanza to take the lead at 48-47 with 11:24 remaining in the game.

The Minutemen retook the lead quickly after, with back-to-back layups by Gary Forbes and consecutive lay-ups by Chris Lowe. After a lay-up by Charlotte's Charlie Coley that tied the game at 63-63 with 1:53 left, UMass regained after Dante Milligan tipped in a Forbes miss.

But Goldwire struck at the right time for the 49ers, hitting a deep 3-pointer to give Charlotte a one-point lead at 66-65 with one minute left – foreshadowing his game-clinching 3-pointer with 20 seconds left.

After the game UMass senior captain and leading scorer Gary Forbes dug his head into the ground, seemingly realizing what the loss could mean for the Minutemen's postseason future. If it were up to Lutz, Forbes and UMass belong in the NCAAs.

"That win is as good as any win I've ever had because we beat a quality team that should be in the NCAA Tournament," Lutz said. "If our league has BCS in it, there wouldn't be anyone debating whether UMass should be in and they deserve to be in."

After UMass's sixth consecutive loss in its first game in the conference tournament, Etienne Brower isn't so sure.

"Hopefully we get in, obviously everybody is praying for that but we needed this win," he said. "We needed a couple of wins to secure it. So we just have to wait a couple of days and see what happens."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Perimeter defense lacking

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

ATLANTIC CITY, N.J. – When Massachusetts men's basketball coach Travis Ford asserted at the beginning of the season that he did not want his team to live and die by the 3-point shot, he was referring to his offense. However, the Minutemen's ultimate undoing in the Atlantic 10 Tournament was their inability to defend the perimeter.

The Maroon and White blew a 17-point lead at halftime as the 49ers exploded from beyond the arc in the second half with nine 3-pointers, while UMass countered with only three.

As the opposition discovered its shooting touch, the Minutemen simultaneously lost their own. A potential rout rapidly evolved into a sixth consecutive first-game exit from the A-10 Tournament for the Maroon and White.

In the first half, Charlotte struggled offensively and shot a dismal 23 percent, including 1-for-10 from beyond the arc. It appeared that the 49ers would have to take the ball inside and avoid shooting from beyond the arc in order to spark their offense.

But the opposite came to fruition.

Charlotte persisted with the 3-pointer, especially down the stretch. The 49ers maintained a suitable presence in the paint to create opportunities away from the basket. The team derived much of its offense from setting screens on the perimeter to create open shots for its capable shooters.

Dynamic point guard Leemire Goldwire – one of the Atlantic 10's premier 3-point shooters and third team all-conference selection – made nearly half of his 3-point attempts (5-for-12) as a part of his game-high 24 points.

Yet for much of the second half, it looked like it would be the 3-point shooting performance of junior center Lamont Mack (23 points) that would ultimately break the will of the Minutemen. Mack shot 4-for-8 from beyond the arc during the final 20 minutes after attempting one in the first half.

Mack – a 6-foot-7 big man – prefers to take his offensive game to the perimeter and draw strong-rebounding defenders away from the basket.

Once Mack fouled out with 49 seconds remaining, responsibility for adding to the team's one-point lead fell to Goldwire.

The senior held the ball at the top of the key and launched a shot that sailed over the head of junior forward Tony Gaffney with 20 seconds remaining. Though the Charlotte guard surrendered nine inches to his defender, Goldwire created just enough space for the ball to travel the requisite 25 feet into the hoop.

"All I needed was a little bit of space. Once I got the ball, I knew it was going in," Goldwire said. "As the clock went down, coach said 'shoot it, shoot it.' I just pulled up and shot it."

"Everybody in the building knew he was going to shoot it, and he made it," Charlotte coach Bobby Lutz added.

An exasperated Ford searched for answers about his team's negligent perimeter defense after the game.

"When Leemire Goldwire gets hot, there's not much that you can do about it," he said. "He does a lot to create his own shot. But it was very disappointing the way we guarded him – it totally went against our scouting report."

Though sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris drew the original assignment, the Minutemen threw several defenders at Goldwire. But even the height advantage, defensive skill and athleticism of Gaffney wasn't enough to contain the prolific-scoring guard with the game on the line.

Charlotte's barrage of 3-point attempts in the second half was a reversal of roles from the first. At halftime, it seemed like the Minutemen were going to ride their hot 3-point shooting stroke to a blowout victory. Senior forward Etienne Brower made 4-of-5 long-range attempts in the first.

But shooting 52 percent with seven 3-pointers masked the team's poor free throw shooting and awful rebounding. Even Brower disappeared on offense down the stretch as he failed to add to his first-half point total.

Once the shots stopped falling, the Maroon and White's lead evaporated.

"We lived with a lot of fool's gold in the first half," Ford said. "We just thought that we were going to make 3-pointers the entire game instead of having to defend. It came a little too easy in the first half."

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Point guard Chris Lowe scored 12 points but managed just two assists, nearly five shy of his season average. Foul trouble plagued Lowe in the first half.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Etienne Brower scored 14 points and grabbed eight rebounds but the Minutemen were unable to stop Charlotte from the perimeter. The 49ers shot 10-of-24 from beyond the arc.

YES COMPUTERS

Apple Specialist

In downtown Northampton!

Now featuring the ASUS Eee PC

The Pioneer Valley's premier Apple- and Asus-authorized dealer.

Present this coupon for $50 off any Asus Eee PC!

expires 3/7/08

- Ultraportable: 7 inches and 2 pounds.
- Over 40 built-in programs, including a full office suite.
- Rugged, shock-resistant design.
- Simple, intuitive, Linux-based operating system.
- Built-in wireless Internet.

$395!

Yes Computers | 38 Pleasant St, Northampton, MA | 413-585-0007

Minutemen take on Army

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

For the second straight weekend the Massachusetts baseball team will head south to play a non-conference opponent.

Only this time it will be in Florida rather than Arizona and the Minutemen (0-3) will play Army (2-9), rather than undefeated and top-ranked Arizona State.

Both teams have struggled this year, especially with pitching.

Army has a team ERA of 7.63 and has yet to find a consistent starter who can get opposing batters out.

Ben Koenigsfeld, Drew Clothier and Joey Henshaw have each started three games for the Black Knights but none have an ERA of less than six.

The Minutemen shared a similar problem in their opening series, albeit against the best team in the country.

UMass coach Mike Stone elected to start the trio of Mitchell Clegg, Brian Leigh and Nick Serino.

Clegg and Leigh allowed three earned runs in five and 5 2/3 innings, respectively, while Serino excelled in his collegiate debut, limiting the potent Sun Devil offense to one run in four innings.

Stone said Serino was heavily pursued for recruitment coming out of high school since the Minutemen have a need for starting pitching. Serino's contributions will be key.

Leigh and Clegg are transfers, and with the exception of Jared Freni, who's recovering from an injury, UMass doesn't have a returning pitcher who started more than five games last season.

Though the Minutemen's pitching hasn't been stellar, the season has just begun. Most teams have played at least 10 or 11 games by now, especially those located or willing to travel south.

While Arizona State's hitters won their battle with the UMass pitchers, the Minutemen bats struggled as well.

The team hit a collective .214 over the weekend and struck out 34 times.

Junior co-captain Adam Tempesta led the Minutemen, going 4-for-9 from the plate and driving in three runs.

Sophomore Mike Donato also drove in three runs and went 2-for-8 on the weekend, while Brian Baudinet struggled from the plate (1-for-6) but displayed patience and drew four walks.

Army's averaging slightly over five runs per game this season but it does have the ability to score runs, as evidenced by its 23-0 romp over UMBC on March 2.

Freshman Clint Moore has become quickly acclimated to Division I college baseball. The freshman has started all 11 games this season and has compiled a .342 batting average as well as a .457 on-base percentage.

Moore also appeared in one relief appearance for the Black Knights, pitching one shutout inning.

Christian Gomez/Collegian

Sophomore Jared Freni allowed six runs (two earned) in one-third of an inning in his 2008 pitching debut against Arizona State.

Along with Moore, Andy Ernesto has paced the Army offense. The junior leads the team with 48 hits and holds a .292 batting average.

Game notes

Army holds a 2-1 lead in the all-time series between the two teams, including a 6-5 victory in 2006 ... The three games will be played at the New York Yankees Spring Training Complex in Tampa and will begin at 3 p.m. each day ... The Black Knights are currently on a four-game losing streak.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

4 + 5 April | 2008

GLOBAL EYES

A Smith College symposium

new ways of seeing art

to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art

4 April | 5:30 PM

5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist

Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all

5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium

REGISTRATION REQUIRED

Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

UMass to play unfamiliar foes down in South Carolina

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

It's going to be a spring break full of firsts for the Massachusetts tennis team.

The Minutewomen will travel to Charleston, S.C., next week to play in back-to-back meets. They face off against Charleston Southern College Tuesday, followed by the College of Charleston on Wednesday.

This will be the first time the Minutewomen have traveled to South Carolina, as well as the first time they have played either team.

UMass coach Judy Dixon is excited about the challenge.

"When we go to a place we've never been before and play a team we've never played before, everybody walks on the court with no expectations, and since there's no history, that makes it more exciting," said Dixon.

Charleston Southern is not known as a traditionally strong tennis school, but the College of Charleston is expected to be a stern test for the Minutewomen, especially because it will be UMass' second game in two days.

"The fact of the matter is, we will have to get used to playing on short notice, because that's what we have to do in the Atlantic 10 Championships, Dixon said. "We will sometimes be playing two matches in one day."

After being indoors all season, the Minutewomen will have to make a fast transition to playing outdoors. There are many subtle differences between indoor and outdoor courts, and having to deal with the weather adds another hurdle for the Maroon and White to overcome. To prepare for the sudden change, Dixon is having the team practice outdoors twice a day for three straight days before game time.

"It's always difficult to play outdoors," Dixon said. "I like our chances in the first match as long as we can remember what it's like to play outdoor tennis."

The rotation has not been fully decided. While senior Masha Pozar and freshman Candynce Boney are almost certain to play in the first and second positions, respectively, positions three through six are still being juggled around. Kaitlyn Carpenter is coming off a sprained ankle, making her playing status uncertain.

Dixon is looking for a big day from is Tanisha Hodgson. For most of the season Hodgson has been played in the third position, but has struggled as of late. Dixon mentioned that she will likely have her play at the fifth slot and wants to see how well she performs there.

"I feel like we need her to step up at number five, so that's were I've got my eye," said Dixon.

Boney has been the most consistent performer on the team so far and, as usual, will be counted on to score some points for the Minutewomen. She has displayed a dominating serve and a great forehand shot that keeps her opponents off balance. She was the only UMass player to win a match against Ivy League powerhouse Brown, and will look to continue her successful first season down in South Carolina.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

UMass travels south for USF Under Armour Classic

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team defeated the No. 2 team in the country in Texas A&M, 4-1, last week. However, UMass coach Elaine Sortino is frustrated with the other losses.

"I think it's frustrating, quite frankly, we've had heartbreaking losses," Sortino said about the teams start. "We've been in every game and our record could easily be 12-2."

UMass (6-9) will be in Clearwater, Fla., for the USF Under Armour Classic. The Minutewomen will face Raford (12-5), Florida International (8-18), Indiana (4-14) and Rutgers (6-8).

UMass went 2-3 two weeks ago at the NFCA Leadoff Classic Saturday in Columbus, Ga. Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter allowed one run in a win over the No. 2 Aggies.

Balschmiter was also named Atlantic Player of the Week for her performances in Columbus. She went 1-2 and recorded a save in a 6-3 win against Auburn. Against No. 19 DePaul, she gave up two runs (one earned) over 7 1/3 innings in a 2-1 loss. Overall she had 23 strikeouts in three starts.

The Minutewomen have faced nine teams ranked in the Top 25, recording two wins. The pitching has been a strong point this season for the Maroon and White, boasting a team ERA of 1.55. Balshmiter has a 1.15 ERA.

The Minutewomen start the tournament on Friday against Radford. Radford did not play the 2008 Buzz Classic because it was canceled due to tornados and heavy rain that was followed by snow and wind that made the field unplayable, according to the Radford Web site. Radford has already played two games in Florida this week, winning against Fordham, 6-4, and Penn State in eight innings, 1-0. Senior pitcher Ashley Taylor went all eight innings to get the shutout. Taylor is 6-3 with a 1.62 ERA.

Sortino likes how the defense, with a .953 fielding percentage, has played lately. However, on the offensive end she would like them to score more runs and give the pitching more support.

"[The fielders] ability to handle the ball more consistent is becoming more evident," she said. "I think offensively we just have to break out. I don't think our offense has even tapped what we are capable of. We can hit the ball."

The Minutewomen are hitting .218 over the first 15 games. Sophomore first baseman Sarah Reeves is the only player hitting above .300.

In Friday's nightcap, the Minutewomen play Florida International. Senior shortstop Monique White leads the team with .433 batting average and seven home runs. FIU defeated Quinnipiac Wednesday night in a doubleheader, 13-2, and 3-2. In the first game White broke FIU's all-time home run record by hitting her 20th career home run. In the next game, her 21st home run was a walk-off.

Though the Minutewomen do not play any ranked opponents, Sortino feels the competition is just as tough.

"The parity in this country is just incredible," she said. "There are 25 teams that are ranked, but there are many other great teams. We have to respect our opponents."

After the spring break the Minutewomen will start A-10 play at Fordham.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

Minutewomen face off with top-seeded Northwestern

By David Bruech
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team hopes to get back in the winning column by traveling to Evanston, Ill., to take on perennial powerhouse and three-time defending national champion Northwestern this Sunday.

This will be the second straight year in which the two teams have faced off and their seventh all-time meeting. UMass (1-5) is 1-5 all time against the Wildcats while Northwestern (5-0) has won the past five meetings dating back to 1984.

Last year, the Minutewomen suffered an 18-4 loss to the No. 2 Wildcats, at the First Annual Friends of Jaclyn Murphy Foundation Benefit Game held in Yorktown, N.Y., on March 23.

The game was held in honor of 12-year-old Jaclyn Murphy, who was diagnosed with a malignant brain tumor in March 2004.

Three Wildcats had hat tricks, led by attackers Meredith Frank and Hilary Bowen, who each had three goals and three assists for six points, respectively.

UMass jumped out to an early 1-0 lead with a goal from Kathleen Typadis a little over two minutes into the game. However, Northwestern scored the next 15 goals and led by that margin midway through the second half. Again, Typadis found the back of the net with 16:35 left in the game.

The Minutewomen had the final two goals of the contest, one by midfielder Holly Drown and another by attacker Claire Mancini, but the game was out of reach, giving UMass a .500 record at 4-4.

Northwestern outshot the Maroon and White, 35-10, and held a draw control advantage, 15-9.

The No. 1 Wildcats are undefeated and have outscored opponents 99-33 so far this season and have a 26-game winning streak. Northwestern will try to continue the streak when it open its American Lacrosse Conference schedule today against Ohio State.

UMass coach Alexis Venechanos is optimistic for this weekend's matchup despite the Maroon and White's losing five straight to four ranked opponents.

"We have a lot of things to work on ourselves," Venechanos said after yesterday's loss to No. 11 Yale.

"When we get opportunities, we need to put some goals away."

UMass continues to be outscored by its opponents, despite averaging 7.5 goals per game. The experienced defense led by Julie Papeleo and Jackie Rosenzweig must contain the potent Wildcat attack led by Bowen, who has a team-leading 24 goals and four assists and Hannah Nielson (14 goals and 15 assists).

Sophomore midfielder Danielle Spencer also has 20 goals with two assists for Northwestern.

The Minutewomen face a tough challenge, going against a defense that has only allowed slightly over six goals per game.

Venechanos is returning to compete against the program where she was an assistant coach for three seasons, and will face a Wildcat team filled with players she helped recruit.

We have to do some things defensively, we have to work on communication," Venechanos added.

"We have to bring the ball up together. We are going to work on a lot of things we need to do, and that will definitely help us [against] Northwestern."

David Bruech can be reached at dbruech@student.umass.edu.

THE ONLY THING GROWING FASTER THAN OUR GRADUATE PROGRAMS IS OUR REPUTATION.

Accounting
Cardiovascular Perfusion
Computer Information Systems
Education – Elementary Education – Secondary
Forensic Nurse Clinical Specialist
Interactive Communications Journalism
Law
MBA/CFA* (Chartered Financial Analyst)
MBA/HCM (Health Care Management)
MBA/JD (Joint degree in business and law)
Medical Laboratory Sciences/Biomedical Sciences
Molecular & Cell Biology
Nurse Practitioner
Pathologists' Assistant
Physician Assistant

Graduate Online Programs
Organizational Leadership: Higher Education, Human Resources, Information Technology, Insurance

Learn more: www.quinnipiac.edu

Graduate Programs: graduate@quinnipiac.edu
Graduate Online Programs: quonlineadmissions@quinnipiac.edu
Law School: ladm@quinnipiac.edu

QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY
1-800-462-1944 | Hamden, Connecticut

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

APTS FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast. Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

INFORMATION

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voice-mail: 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED. Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us. at: Gna Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

HEALTH ENERGY
Healthy ENERGY DRINK just launched! Reps wanted for nat'l expansion. Part-Time. More info: 1-800-969-8486 VPureEnergy.com Contact UpShot@VPureEnergy.com today for FREE can!

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St Amherst. www.birthright.org

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more

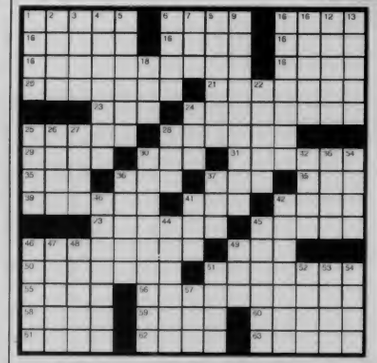
Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

TRAVEL

Montreal Weekend
From $99 Complete.
Best Hotels.
Best Prices.
montrealexpress.net
781-979-9001

MAKE IT HAIL



ACROSS
1 Rocky outcrops
6 Charts
10 Ostrichlike bird
14 Record
15 On the peak of 16 English title
17 Wind-speed measurement device
19 Football kick
20 Living rooms
21 Satellite of Uranus
23 UFO personnel
24 Protestant pastor
25 Ulysses S. Grant's bill
28 Pea coat or windbreaker
29 Cools down
30 Grass shack
31 Sheen
35 Mr. Blow or Mr. College?
36 Little one
37 Real cool
38 "Exodus" hero
39 Part of a foot
41 Coat coat
42 Shuttlecock
43 Solution
45 Mistaken
46 San Francisco ode
49 Ready alternative?
50 Property merchant
51 Dwindle
55 Wight or Skye
58 Without rest
58 Head honcho
59 Hint
60 Steps over a fence
61 Petty quarrel
62 Sacred song
63 Import duties

DOWN
1 Applaud
2 Barrett of gossip
3 Last of a teen?
4 Boring tools
5 Highfalutin
6 West and Jemison
7 ABA member
8 Like rhymes and verses
9 Hose attachment
10 Meals
11 Favorite hangout
12 Pyle or Ford
13 Sacrifice site
18 "... Softly"
22 Traffic jam
24 Table protector
25 Islands discovered by Tasman
28 Clickable image
27 Service charges
26 Stick (out)
30 Sidewalk game
32 Follow unobtrusively
33 Commits a faux paux
34 Coney Island thrill
36 Article of faith
37 "Ben ..."
40 Most lofty
41 ...-de-lance
42 Pre-Castro dictator
44 With caution
45 Big woods
46 Beds for babies
47 Ancient fabulist
48 Model wood
49 Org. of Flyers
51 Sighted
52 Mid-size engine
53 Glamour rival
54 Caustic solutions
57 Sailor's drink

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Participants Needed!
Participate in economic experiments to learn about how participants behave in auctions.
Earn at least $10 per session
No experience necessary!
Check it out!

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

COSMIC DANCER By Andrew Katsikas

"outsideinside"

This is the doodle box.

Draw a picture of your goals for spring break.

Make it Hale

				9
5			2	6		4		3
	3	9			1	7
9			6				7
	5						1
	6				7			9
		3	8			5	2
8		5		1	6			7
				7

Quote of the Weekend

"Like a diaphanous nightgown, language both hides and reveals."

— Karen Elizabeth Gordon

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Amanda Barros

Next week's contest will start on the Monday after spring break. If this upsets you and you simply cannot wait... you are a loser.

"DON'T TAZE ME BRO!"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You've not been citing your sources properly. You will be kidnapped and disposed of in a desert by the plagiarism police.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You are the only astrological sign that is acceptable for consumption by a pescetarian.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
The truth shall set you free. Unless you did something illegal, in which case the best it will get you is a plea bargain.

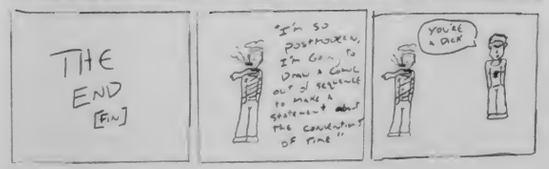
taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Listening to angry guitar will only distort your internal melody. You require the clarity of accoustic guitar and bassoon.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your break will be plagued by an endless procession of naked women. It will be the best plague ever.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You will spontaneously combust after reading this small blurb regarding your imminent demise. Luckily I made it wordy to prolong your existence. Tootles.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You are curently on the path to enlightment. But beware, the path is filled with many potholes and your rickshaw is rickety.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Your natural odor is more enjoyable than playing lazer tag while riding a unicorn.



libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Looking at cute pictures of animals online for seven hours a day is not a productive use of time.

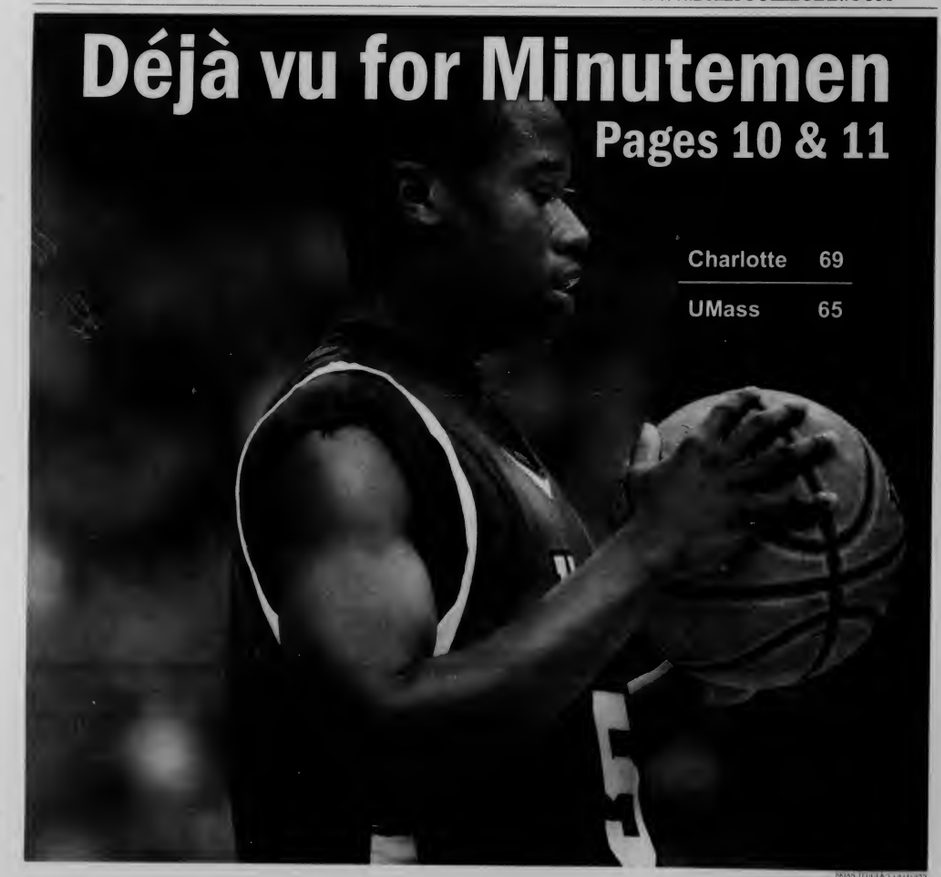
scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
When you were born your mother cried. So, ya..

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
The consequences for skipping class today will be dire...DIRE!

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The next week will go down in history as March 14, 2008 to March 21, 2008.

KILGORE By Knox Yeoman

BLISS By Harry Bliss



"You know what? I don't like you either!"

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 14, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Déjà vu for Minutemen

Pages 10 & 11

BRIAN HILLER/COLLEGIAN

INSIDE: A TASTE OF COMEDY ON CAMPUS | PAGE 5

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

CLOUDY : HI: 45 LO: 21 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MARCH 24, 2008

Defibrillators privacy risk for heart patients

UMass researchers test ability to extract medical information

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

New advances for wireless implantable cardiac defibrillators and pacemakers have improved the odds of surviving a cardiac arrest, but the new devices may expose patients to privacy and security risks.

Because these medical devices are equipped with wireless technology, health care practitioners can diagnose patients, read and write private medical information and adjust the device's therapy settings remotely.

Although patients will no longer need repeated visits to their doctor, researchers at the University of Massachusetts and other institutions have established that there is a possibility the patient's private medical information could be extracted and their devices reprogrammed by remote hackers.

"In the lab, we had one of these ICD devices, and we were able to read private information and change the settings that control the shocks to the heart," said study participant and assistant professor of Computer Science, Kevin E. Fu.

There has never been a case of a hacker targeting an implantable cardiac defibrillator, but the researchers stressed the purpose of the study was designed solely to identify and prevent future risks to patients.

"We have found solutions to mitigate problems before the devices are able to receive signals from greater distances," Fu said.

As of now, the devices typically receive short-range signals over several feet. The study was headed by Tadayoshi Kohno of the University of Washington, Kevin E. Fu, assistant professor of computer science at UMass and cardiologist Dr. William H. Maisel of the Beth Israel Deaconess Medical Center and Harvard Medical School.

The researchers began with some ideas of how the ICD worked and where it was vulnerable.

"An implantable cardiac defibrillator is a pager-sized device that is implanted under the skin in the chest and is connected to the heart via wires, which monitor the heart rhythm," said Dr. William H. Maisel. "If the heart has a dangerously fast rhythm, the ICD automatically recognizes it and sends a therapy to the heart muscle."

According to Maisel, the genius of the device is in the speed in which it reacts.

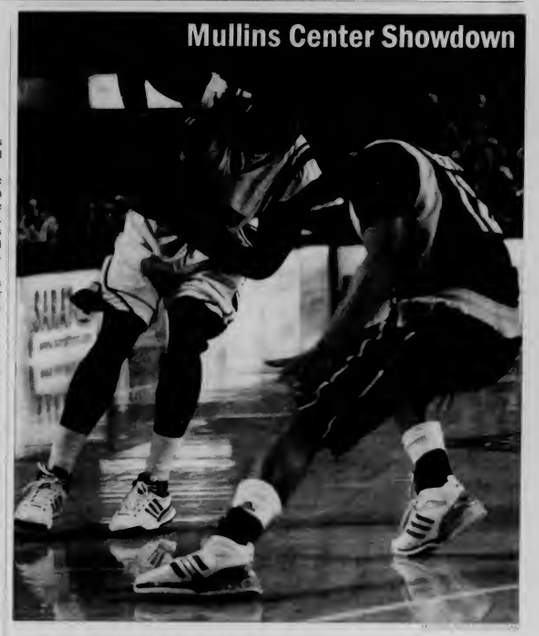
"This happens in a matter of seconds," said Dr. Maisel.

To test their theories, the team mounted a series of attacks on the test ICD. Some steps required manipulation of the signals being sent between the commercial programmer, which is the manufacturers' medical device, and the ICD.

"The ICD didn't check to see if we were the commercial programmer or a hacker," said first year UMass graduate student and study author Ben Ransford. "We were able to record the signals and replay them back, which resulted in the ICD thinking we were the programmer."

Once this occurs, therapy settings stored in the ICD could be turned off and the patient's birth date and name read.

Three deterrence and prevention mechanisms, requiring zero battery power were developed by the researchers to combat these possible risks, including a notification device that audibly alerts patients of security breaches.



"The purpose of the audible alert is to work as a deterrent, something like a car alarm," said Fu.

The other two prototypes include a tool that authenticates requests for access and a vibrating device that a patient can sense.

The study team believes that more safety features will undoubtedly be added in the future, and the prevention mechanisms they developed will have a use as well.

"A lot of the defenses we described will work in the future, and it's amazing what we've accomplished without physically opening up the test ICD," said Ransford.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

Ricky Harris helped lead his teammates to a comeback victory over Akron on Saturday, setting the minutemen up for a face off against Syracuse on Tuesday.

UMass professor moniters elephants

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Using satellite technology, a team of researchers from the University of Massachusetts track elephants across regions of conflict across Africa through the newly-founded nonprofit organization Elephants Without Borders.

By attaching global positioning units on the African elephants, Curtice Griffin, a professor in the department of natural resources conservation, and his team of graduate students have followed the animals as they move across national borders on the path of their seasonal migrations, from Botswana to Zimbabwe and into Angola.

Griffin hopes the knowledge gained will decrease potential conflicts between the elephants and local inhabitants. According to Griffin, human interaction has left elephant populations in some African countries devastated.

"The problem of human-elephant conflict is worse in Tanzania," Griffin said. "There are more people and farms. Elephants compete for water with Maasai cattle in the dry shrub lands and raid large farms on the western slopes of Mt. Kilimanjaro."

According to Griffin, the situation for the animals in Angola remains direr after 25 years of civil conflict have left elephant populations "decimated."

Griffin, along with two graduate students Alfred Kikoti and Mike Chase, has presented the research to national governments and area villages in the hopes that communities will keep ancestral elephant migration paths open and free of human development.

"Although having elephants near your village can be risky, they bring in tourists who bring in revenue," said Griffin. "This is especially important in arid regions where there are few other sources of income. When communities realize they can earn money from tourists coming to see the elephants, they are much less likely to harm them when conflict occurs."

Griffin and his team collar the large animals by darting them with tranquilizers from a helicopter, a process which he describes as dangerous.

"We usually dart the matriarch, the old female herd leader," said Griffin. "If she is down, the rest of the herd stays away while we put on the collar. If we dart another herd member, the matriarch will sometimes circle back and try to kill us."

According to Griffin, bull elephants, unless darted during a period of heightened breeding conditions – called musth – are less likely to put members of the team into harm's way while being collared.

The GPS technology allows Griffin to track the herds as they make their way across Africa from his office in Massachusetts. His team has collared as many as 50 elephants in Botswana and an additional 20 in northern Tanzania.

"Elephants aren't staying in the parks," said Griffin. "We have followed them from Botswana into Zimbabwe and Zambia, and they are moving across the Caprivi Strip of Namibia into Angola."

Griffin regularly travels to Africa with UMass students and plans to return to Africa in the summer of 2008 for an 18-day safari.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com.

COURTESY OF ENDANGERED.NET

A team of UMass researchers are tracking African elephants as they move along ancestral migration paths to avoid conflicts with humans.

Minutemen come back big to advance to NIT quarterfinals

BY ELI ROSENWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published online on the Daily Collegian's Web site on March 22.)

As the key player who helped Massachusetts fight back against Akron lay on the ground injured, the Minutemen players had doubts they could finish the comeback without him.

But with clutch free throws down the stretch, big 3-pointers by Ricky Harris and stellar point guard play from Chris Lowe, the Minutemen finished the game on a 22-5 run to slip by Akron, 68-63, in the second round of the National Invitation Tournament Saturday afternoon at the Mullins Center.

UMass (23-10) advances to the NIT quarterfinals for a rematch with Syracuse at the Carrier Dome on Tuesday night. The Minutemen upset the Orange, 107-100, earlier this season, setting a visiting team Carrier Dome record for points scored.

With 8:36 remaining in the game and Akron leading, 58-46, the chances of that rematch appeared unlikely as UMass was fading.

ENTER TONY GAFFNEY.

The 6-foot-9 junior forward scored just four points, but his tough defense on Akron star Jeremiah Wood (25 points) and timely steals completely shut down Akron's offensive rhythm, while also leading to easy UMass baskets during the comeback.

"He's the glue guy of our team: he keeps us going, he's the spark off the bench and he's basically the energy of the team," Harris said after the game.

"I don't know what it is about Tony, but he's got more energy than anyone on our team, including the coaching staff. We all just feed off of that."

Wood, who simply had his way with every defender UMass coach Travis Ford put on him, didn't get the good looks or get anything to go down while Gaffney was on him. But with UMass up 63-60 with 2:38 remaining, an Akron player fell awkwardly into Gaffney's knee, and he winced in pain on the court before being helped off.

With Gaffney down and out, that left only Luke Bonner and Dante Milligan (four fouls) – two guys who were no match for Wood – to defend the paint in the final minutes.

See M Hoops on page 6

Campus receives presidential honors for community service

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts' Amherst campus received national recognition during spring break for its inclusion in the President's 2007 Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll with Distinction.

The University received the presidential acknowledgement for service-learning programs across the campus, integrating community service and academic work.

"We are delighted to receive this recognition," said John Reiff, director of the UMass Amherst Office of Community Service Learning at Commonwealth College. "It acknowledges the amazing work that UMass Amherst faculty, students and staff have done to build sustainable programs that add value to our nearby communities."

Student Bridges – a student initiated and funded outreach program to build and strengthen ties between the University and local communities as well as increase the access to higher education for the residents of Holyoke – was among the campus programs and projects cited in the distinction.

The Community Service Honor Roll is the highest federal recognition a school can achieve for a commitment to both service learning and community building. UMass received the award along with fellow institutions of higher learning in Massachusetts Simmons College, Stonehill College, Wentworth Institute of Technology and the Mount Wachusett Community College.

The University of Colorado at Boulder and Chaminade University of Honolulu topped the list of presidential honors, along with the University of Pennsylvania and Syracuse University.

UMass was among those chosen based on the size and innovativeness of their service-learning programs, percentage of student participation in service activities, service incentives and the institution's scope of academic service-learning programs.

Since 2006, the Corporation for National and Community Service – a federal agency created to improve lives, strengthen communities, and foster civic engagement – has named universities and colleges across the country to the Community Service Honor Roll.

The Corporation also administers the Senior Corps, AmeriCorps, and Learn and Serve America programs.

Derrick Perkins can be reached dperkins@dailycollegian.com.

2007 Honor Roll Presidential Awardees

Chaminade University of Honolulu
Honolulu, Hawaii

Otterbein College
Westerville, Ohio

University of Redlands
Redlands, California

University of Massachusetts, Amherst
Wentworth Institute of Technology, Boston
Stonehill College, Easton
Simmons College, Boston
Mount Wachusett Community College, Gardner

University of Colorado at Boulder
Boulder, Colorado

University of Pennsylvania
Philadelphia, Pennsylvania

Syracuse University
Syracuse, New York

Amherst police make arrest in connection to break-ins

Police arrested a Hadley man last week in connection with a string of break-ins across Amherst from October of last year until March 11.

Michael D. Dicola, 22, of 41 Mountain Road, Hadley was charged with four counts of breaking and entering at nighttime, three counts of larceny over $250 and larceny of a firearm.

Dicola's arrest came after a police investigation of three separate break-ins at the Harp restaurant on Sunderland Road. According to police, Dicola allegedly removed cash and video recording equipment, among other objects, during each burglary.

Police did not disclose the total amount of cash allegedly stolen from the restaurant.

Dicola also was allegedly behind the break-in of a private apartment on Montague Road last November that resulted in the theft of a computer and a .38 caliber handgun.

Police arrested Dicola at his Mountain Road address on March 21.

The investigation into the Harp break-ins remains ongoing.

–Derrick Perkins

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
ISSUE 105
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Comics Editor Adam Szajgin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Race
Features Editor Dave Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marsea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holli Seabury
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Efi Rosenwaike
Assistant Photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcott
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Games

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts calendar semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the College Signal in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1956. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been broadsheet since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call weekdays between 8:30 a.m. and 5:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Across the Nation Around the World

Harvard no longer accepting transfers

COURTESY STUDENT BRITANNIA 2.0.COM

Students hoping to transfer to Harvard University only recently discovered the Cambridge-based college will not accept transfers for the next two years.

By Lingbo Li
Harvard Crimson (Harvard)

(U-WIRE) CAMBRIDGE, Mass. — Harvard University will not be accepting any applications for transfer admission for the next two academic years because its Undergraduate Houses cannot accommodate the extra students, the admissions office announced yesterday.

The news comes in the middle of the current transfer admission cycle; the deadline for transfer applications was February 15. Harvard has said that it will refund the $60 application fee, according to several transfer applicants.

Winthrop House Master Mandana Sassanfar said that the House masters had been discussing the space problem since early this fall.

"We all decided it was more important to have enough housing for our own students first," Sassanfar said.

"There are many possibilities that have been on the table for reducing overcrowding – moving students from one House to another – [and] some of that's being done," said Pforzheimer House Master James J. McCarthy. "[We're] trying to create some breathing space until we can begin the major renovations of the Houses."

However, McCarthy said that he hadn't heard of the news until Thursday, though he knew that the option was being discussed.

"It's not a decision House Masters would make," he said. "There was no vote."

"The reality is that the last couple of freshmen classes have been big, and every House is above capacity," said Cabot House Master Jay M. Harris. "There wasn't an inch of space."

The University has hired an architectural firm to look into the problem of Houses that cannot accommodate enough students, according to Interim Currier House Master Shahram Khoshbin.

"There are 13 Houses, 13 different architectural issues, 13 different types of problems," Khoshbin said, apparently referring to DeWolfe overflow housing. "Whoever is doing it is probably taking a lot of headache medication every day."

The announcement – which cited the findings of the Space Assessment Committee, convened over a year ago to analyze College residential space – is the latest in a series of moves designed to alleviate overcrowding.

Michigan restaurant offends university LGBT with logo

Campus groups find the image inappropriate and offensive

By Jillian Berman
Michigan Daily (U. Michigan)

(U-WIRE) ANN ARBOR, Mich. – When the owners of Quickie Burger and Dogs chose their logo, they thought it would make patrons crave an order of chili cheese fries. But the logo, a busty woman in a tight shirt straddling a hamburger, has drawn criticism from University of Michigan campus groups.

The newest addition to the South State St. landscape has caused a stir on campus with its brightly colored logo, which some believe is offensive.

The restaurant, which opened two weeks ago, sits south of campus at the intersection of State and Hill streets. Adorning the blue awning above the restaurant next to its name is an image of a cowgirl riding a hamburger.

The Stonewall Democrats, a lesbian, gay, bisexual and transgender caucus of the University of Michigan's College Democrats chapter, has taken offense with the restaurant's logo and recently began circulating a petition to sway the owners to change the logo.

LSA senior Kolby Roberts, a member of the Stonewall Democrats who have led the effort, said he finds the logo's message inappropriate and offensive.

"I have a problem that you take a women riding a hamburger and you put it next to the word 'quickie,'" he said. "It just seems like it's not putting a good message out there for the objectification of women."

Maria Arman, whose family owns the restaurant, said the logo was meant to invoke a cowboy theme.

"We were thinking beef, rodeo, so instead of putting a cowboy, we just picked a cowgirl," she said. "It's a rodeo-style cowgirl riding a bull, but instead, it's a burger. It was put together to be funny and different. No offense was meant to anyone."

Before selecting a logo for the restaurant, which features a maize and blue color scheme with televisions tuned to ESPN on the interior, the owners showed the logo to more than 100 people and none of them objected, Arman said.

"The people who we talked to told us, 'It's a college town and the kids will think its funny,'" she said.

LSA freshman Dan Yeomans said while he wasn't personally offended by the logo, he could see how others might interpret it in a negative way.

"I could see the same people who were offended by the South Quad T-shirts taking offense to this," said Yeomans, referring to a batch of dorm-sponsored shirts that featured lyrics from the popular, but controversial Soulja Boy song "Crank That."

Roberts said he believed the image was distasteful, regardless of the person.

"Basically, what it has is a provocatively dressed woman straddling a hamburger, and she's very busty and its kind of really horrible," he said.

Roberts and the Stonewall Democrats have begun circulating a petition, which he said currently has about 100 signatures. The group plans to send a letter along with the petition to the owners. The restaurant's name, he said, isn't a problem.

Roberts said the purpose of the letter and petition is to convince the Armans to alter the logo.

"I don't think anyone has a problem with the name because it implies that I'm going to get a quick burger," he said. "Instead, we're just thinking about getting rid of the logo. Maybe trying to change it so it's less offensive."

Arman said she would be open to talking with the protesters.

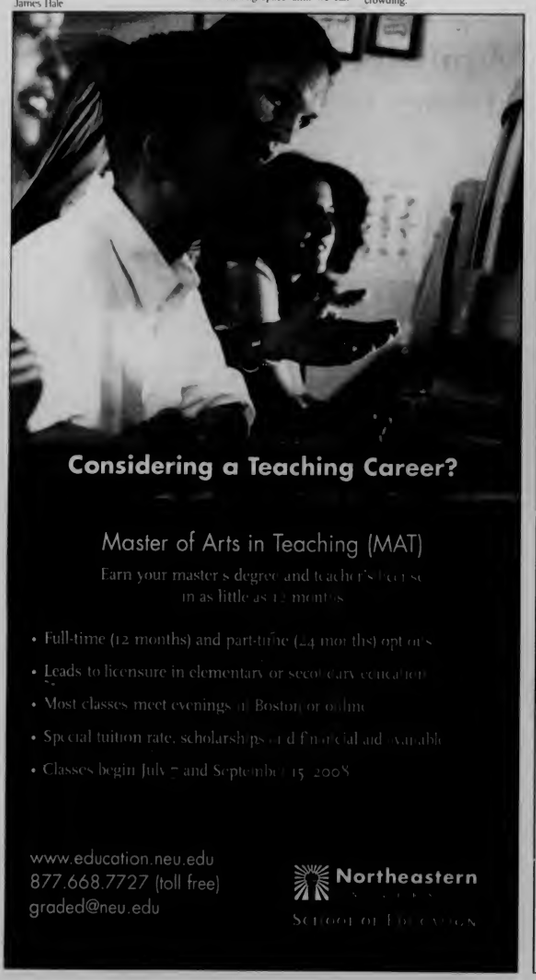
"We will consider talking to them," she said. "We're open-minded. We're not here to offend anyone or to make anyone angry."

Four die after fishing boat sinks

By Rachel D'Oro
Associated Press

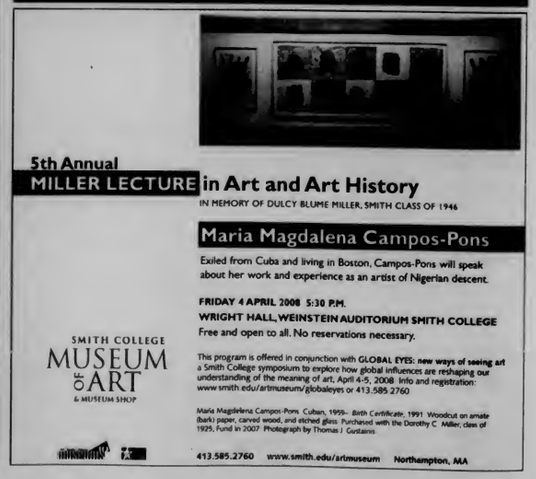
Four crew members died Sunday and another was missing after a Seattle-based fishing boat began sinking in high seas off Alaska's Aleutian Islands, the Coast Guard said.

The dead were among 47 crew members who abandoned ship after the 184-foot Alaska Ranger developed problems. Forty-two crew members were recovered safely, but a search was continuing for the missing person, said Chief Petty Officer Barry Lane.



The vessel started taking on water shortly before 3 a.m. after losing control of its rudder 120 miles west of Dutch Harbor, which is on Unalaska Island.

State environmental regulators were notified that the ship was carrying 100,000 gallons of diesel, according to Leslie Pearson, emergency response manager for the Alaska Department of Environmental Conservation. A Coast Guard c-130 crew reported an oil sheen that covered an area of a quarter mile by a half mile, Coast Guard spokesman Ray Dwyer said.



Those on board the Alaska Ranger were heading to Dutch Harbor in a Coast Guard cutter and the doomed vessel's sister ship, the Alaska Warrior. The vessel took part in the rescue operation along with two Coast Guard helicopters that were used to pluck crew members from life rafts, Lane said.

A C-130 also remained to help search for the missing crew member.

Coast Guard Lt. Eric Eggan said it was unknown how or when the four died.

Editorial Opinion

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

China repeats its mistakes

Elyse Clifford

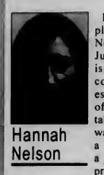
Despite Tibet's recent protests on the anniversary of the regrettable events that took place almost 20-years ago and the even more deplorable events of 1959, China clearly has not learned enough from the past. The U.S. has only recently removed China from the list of top ten human rights violators, but despite the urges of the EU President to restrain and "democratic principles" respecting the rights to peaceful protest, China has again responded to Tibetan demonstration with tactics of terror and brute force.

Some sources indicate that as many as 100 are dead in Tibet's capital, Lhasa, but there is no way to know for certain because of China's restrictions on media coverage. The Chinese government seeks to reshape events to its advantage through extensive censorship and a biased retelling of whatever takes place in Lhasa. The Chinese government has estimated that 10 to 20 have been killed in Tibet; however, reliable sources indicate that during a peaceful protest on Tuesday, 19 people were shot and killed by the People's Armed Police. Suppression with armed tanks and military vehicles as well as arbitrary arrests of the politically active have been ongoing since the night of March 15.

The government is concerned that the Summer 2008 Olympic ceremonies are being intentionally marred by the protests; however, Chinese-appointed Tibetan Communist Party Secretary Zhang Qingli took this sentiment way too far when he accused the Dalai Lama of orchestrating the protests in an attempt to destroy the Olympic ceremonies and called him "a jackal in Buddhist monk's robes, an evil spirit with a human face and the heart of a beast." Not only is this a laughably inappropriate way to refer to the Buddhist and Tibetan leader, but the Dalai Lama has openly expressed his support for the Olympic ceremonies. He has only urged China to demonstrate its worthiness of the honor by upholding the freedom and equality of the Chinese and Tibetan people.

Tens of thousands of Tibetans lost their lives and the country lost its political and religious leader.

The Dalai Lama was forced into exile in 1959, barely escaping the sacred palace before it was bombed and thousands of silent protestors outside the palace walls were murdered. He was granted asylum in India and was followed there by great numbers of loyal Tibetans. Since 1979, the Dalai Lama has entered into six rounds of dialogue with the Chinese government, none of which have been effective. In 2002, communications completely broke down and have not been reestablished.



During the Chinese invasion and occupation of Tibet in 1951, China set up a 17-Point Agreement that affirmed Chinese sovereignty and assured that Tibet's political system and culture would remain intact. However, the agreement was not honored, and these broken promises led to the 1959 uprisings, which were mercilessly crushed by the Chinese army. Tens of thousands of Tibetans lost their lives, and the country lost its political and religious leader, the Dalai Lama, who was forced into exile.

The Dalai Lama has recognized that independence for Tibet may no longer be an option and has instead pursued reformations in Chinese policy such as the demilitarization of Tibet. He has also pleaded for an immediate termination of the population transfer, where massive numbers of Han Chinese have been and continue to be relocated to Tibet, diluting the Tibetan language and culture and making Tibetans a minority in their own land.

China has made tremendous efforts to improve and prepare Beijing for the Olympics, hoping to show the world its development and success. However, it should recognize that the greatest opportunity to show its progress would be to change the Tibetan policies or, to truly redeem itself, free Tibet.

Elyse Clifford is a Collegian contributor. She can be reached at eclifford@student.umass.edu.

Online, campus gossip crosses the line

Hannah Nelson

It sounds like the plot out of a CW Network drama. JuicyCampus.com is a gossip site for college campuses creating a bit of a controversy, taking the friend walls of Facebook a run, a skip and a jump beyond its predecessors. The site brags, "Always Anonymous… Always Juicy…" which sounds a lot like more of a tagline to a late night TV ad.

The sole purpose of the site is for college students to dish on all the campus gossip, often providing full names and identifying sides of other students in ways that are less than flattering. JuicyCampus.com, which is still in its beta phase, was founded by 2005 Duke University grad Matt Ivester. The Privacy Policy claims "it is not possible for anyone to use this Web site to find out who you are or where you are located," a stretch from the social networking sites.

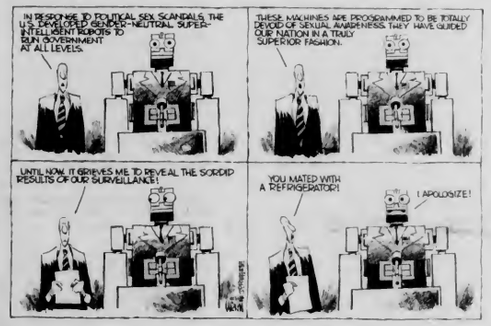
There are tabs for hazing, Greek life, professors, athletics, and the most popular of late being spring break, with students competing for "the most hook ups" bragging rights. Some threads are downright disturbing, such as one Boston University thread: "Does anyone know where to get roofies?" Posts like this go beyond a reputation or identity, even under the possible claim it was posted as "just as a joke." It is frightening to imagine that the author cannot be tracked and that the post had been up for six days without being removed. To ensure the posts remain anonymous, there are "services that offer free IP-cloaking," though the site does use cookies to remember where a user has voted or rated.

What is surprising is the list of Ivy Leagues and tier-one schools listed, from Dartmouth to Duke and Colgate to Columbia.

It isn't just the "party schools" like the Princeton Review's number one Arizona State and other top twenties and honorable mentions. The site has listings for about 50 campuses, including listings for the Air Force and the Navy. Yale is already planning a ban of the website on their campus networks, and many students are boycotting on affected campuses.

JuicyCampus.com is just another means of hate speech that deserves to share the fate of a cockroach.

Students at Pepperdine are having a harder time fighting their campus. An administrator at Pepperdine University, Timothy Chester, said of the site that it is "a virtual bathroom wall for abusive, degrading and hateful speech." But when Pepperdine undergrads tried to get the site blocked back in January, they were unsuccessful.



Some visitors to the site have taken to fighting back by posting flame threads toward the creator and the Web site itself. One Boston University alumnus had this to say in a rather lengthy post targeted at current BU students: "Everyone gossips, that is a given, but to try and humiliate someone through this medium is pathetic. Imagine how you would feel if you were the one being called these childish and hateful names, and everyone could read it."

Banned books can hardly be put on the same plane as a college gossip Web site, or can they? Both are methods of free speech, and people who want to ban books often use the claim that they are offensive or blasphemous in one way or another. Legal action is sketchy due to the anonymity, but New Jersey is trying to strike the underbelly of JuicyCampus.com with the claim that offensive material will be removed. The issue here is the idea of censorship meeting net neutrality. When does a means of free speech become a freedom too dangerous? The big question of where to draw the line between free speech and libel is written all over this site, and if legal action against it continues it could very well set a precedent for future cases.

Currently, dealing with slanderous materials online is messy because of nonexistent law. Problems faced over recent years by sites such as MySpace and Facebook go even further into a problem of Internet censorship. Anonymity is an extremely powerful asset, one that JuicyCampus.com is flaunting.

JuicyCampus.com is just another means of hate speech that deserves to share the fate of a cockroach, that is, if the recent surge in traffic doesn't kill it first. In fact, the morning I decided to visit the site, they had to use a ticker bar to tell visitors that "We are soooo popular!" to excuse the slow speed that prevented the page to load properly (most likely a side effect of the sudden media attention). I don't need to keep elaborating, as I am sure that many of you reading this will go check the site out for yourselves. As I am writing, there is yet to be a U-Mass listing. For the sake of wild spring break exploits, let's hope it stays that way.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu.

The well-informed student

Lauren Rockoff

I never feel informed enough. Do you?

If you were to read right through every newspaper everyday, watch every speech made by every political figure and generally live your life chained to news sites and YouTube, could you ever know enough?

Whenever you want to take a stance on something, you should think it through on several bases. Ask yourself: am I sure I've heard the whole story? Usually, this is the hardest thing to determine. If we are not there for a newsworthy event, and we did not write the news article ourselves, we are depending upon those who were there and who wrote the news every time we take a stance.

Have you decided on a presidential candidate to support? If yes, you've probably checked out his or her Web site and watched his or her speeches and debates on television. But when it comes to all those secondary news articles and opinion columns, surely you haven't depended on such information in making your decision, right? You're getting biases every way you turn. You will hear them on the street, in the phone calls you get from political supporters, from your friends, in The Boston Globe and The New York Times and even in the pages of The Daily Collegian – though this shouldn't stop you from paying attention.

The fact that you don't voice political opinions doesn't exempt you from the responsibility to form them.

Want to insulate yourself from this type of skewing and opinionated storytelling? First of all, you will have to watch all the presidential candidates' speeches if you want a clear idea of how each candidate differs from the others, and read any books they may have written, if you have time. And you will have to read through each and every Web site if you're in search of a definitive understanding of any of them. You may want to make decisions about most of the issues before picking a candidate to support and eventually, to vote for.

Also, remember that sometimes people change their minds, and usually you won't be able to call out Clinton, McCain or Obama on their inconsistencies (unless you make a YouTube video and cross your fingers). People are not made to be perfect campaigning machines, so if your choice slips up, it'll be up to you to weigh the negatives, and perhaps – at the risk of sounding trite – put yourself in his or her shoes. Low on sleep and high on criticism, might you have slipped up in such a way too? Finally, just because you've chosen a candidate, you don't have to take on all of his or her positions as your own.

This is an overdue reminder to you (and to everyone: party-affiliated, atheist, apathetic, etc.) to think for yourself and not through the eyes of your religion, your race or your gender. This isn't to say that every female who supports Hillary Clinton should immediately switch over her allegiance to an alternate candidate. It's just a reminder. It's easy to get caught up in a religiously-charged argument against another group of people and just as easy to champion an individual based on his skin color or religion. But we need to remember that only in seeing past these immediate indicators can we do political candidates the justice they deserve as individuals.

The second thing you should do is figure out the best way to get the big picture and avoid making assumptions about your alternative. If you're a Democrat, this may mean turning off your left-wing radio station for a second and attending a Republican club meeting, if only to passively observe. If you're a supporter of a Palestinian state, this might mean attending a Student Alliance For Israel-sponsored event. Whatever your beliefs, challenge them. At first you might find yourself frustrated or confused, questioning your every thought (or those of the clearly insane individuals around you); but in the end, the clarity that comes is worth it all.

Get your facts straight. Get your head out of the clouds. Give yourself the right to challenge the norm and the authority to make a choice without first consulting the masses. You may be surprised at what you discover – about yourself.

Another thing, you don't have to take a stance – publicly. That's why there are curtains and wall divides in voting booths. If you want to share your views, feel free, but you should never feel forced to do so. But please do not misunderstand me: the fact that you don't voice political opinions, doesn't exempt you from the responsibility to form them.

Apathy is the enemy. Read the paper, talk to your friends about current events, discuss the issues of your time and vote. If your wall or bumper is adorned with the date 1-20-09, or you've ever laughed at a Bush joke, you better vote in November. And while you're at it, recall that there is not only life outside of this election, but also outside of the U.S. Read the miniscule captions about the rest of the world, usually featured along the side or below the features on our presidential hopefuls.

Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu.

"The Daily Collegian UMass Yak-Back!"
AIRING DAILY ON UVC-TV 19
AT 1 P.M. AND 5 P.M.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

How did you spend spring break?

☐ Eschewing the general apathy of the contemporary student demographic, sought alternatives to ritual recreation and worked in service of the greater community.

☐ Went wild.

☐ Slept.

You must choose now at www.dailycollegian.com!

If you write a letter to the editor now, it will become more powerful than you can possibly imagine.
editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Teaching the art of sound

BY IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an age in which technology has blurred the line between audio and computer beyond recognition, many parties find themselves affected: the musician, the listener, the composer, the consumer and the record industry as a whole.

One art form which seems to have slipped under this massive, economically-driven scope is theater. As audio becomes less physical and more digital, from record players and reel-to-reel to minidisks and now computers, it allows sound to be more easily manipulated and woven into a production, much to the benefit of the sound designer.

A sound designer works with technical as well as conceptual aspects of sound, from the placement of microphones and speakers to the cues for sound effects and compositional work.

One such beneficiary is distinguished sound designer Robert Kaplowitz, who took up a three-year residency, which began in fall '07, at the five-college consortium's respective theater departments. Kaplowitz recently received an Off-Broadway Theatre Award (OBIE) award for sustained excellence in sound design for the 2006-2007 season. The OBIE awards are non-competitive honors without nominations, meant to praise an artist's body of work during a season. In that span of time, he designed for 14 Off-Broadway shows, including "Some Girls," "The Thugs," and a theatrical adaptation of "Carrie," in which the role of Carrie was played by a drag queen, and the telekinesis was operated by a puppeteer.

Kaplowitz cites influences ranging from minimalist composer Steve Reich to jazz legend Miles Davis to The Wu-Tang Clan, a collective of samurai film-sampling hip hop gurus.

"The way you build sound cues is the way you build a rap song," Kaplowitz said. "Take a sample to make the rhythm, add a layer, add a layer, add a layer, and let the lyric be what the actors are saying."

He taught theater to inner-city students with no prior theater experience and found "rap music is an amazing way to access theater." Its simple structures allow for anyone to understand and create it, similarly to how only a few chords are necessary to strum out a basic song on a guitar. "Rap is the new folk music," he said.

Kaplowitz, who has also previously taught at the Kennedy Center in New York City, will design a show per semester on each of the consortium's five campuses. "It's a really noble idea with minor flaws," said Kaplowitz. "A semester is not long enough to give students the tools to be designers. I love going from school to school and tasting the different ways of learning, but it's an appetizer for the schools, seeing if they want to take on the main course."

He sees this as the schools' opportunity to determine whether or not they want to employ a resident sound designer, one to teach the ins and outs of the young art and to produce prospective designers ready for real world sound design.

Time restrictions aside, the only other real obstacle Kaplowitz faces seems to be the lack of office space at Hampshire College, which means he has been relegated to hold office hours in the theatre department's fairly public Green Room.

Kaplowitz, 33, sees this as an opportunity to share his knowledge with a younger generation, one which does not have access to many teachers of this craft. The relatively young art form has only been taught in theater programs since the 1990s, starting with David Budries' sound design course at Yale's School of Drama. "My hope, regardless of what happens in the future, is that I'm leaving a pool of students who can teach each other and learn the way I learned, which is by doing it," he said.

Kaplowitz, hailing from Andover, Mass., attended NYU for collegiate studies, where he got his first taste of Broadway as a stagehand on shows such as "Contact," "Marie Christine" and "The Lion King." The knowledge gained in those settings gave him the foundation to become a more complete designer with the ability to manipulate entire worlds of sound within a production.

The role of a sound designer is one with major responsibilities, especially in a musical. In a play, the sound designer deals with all aspects of sound, creating sound cues, sound effects, composing music, working with instrumentalists on creating the designers' vision and even technical elements like microphone placing, whereas in a musical the designer has no control over the music and must work within stricter parameters.

COURTESY SOUNDMASTER.EDU

The study of sound design is a relatively new field and has only been taught in theater programs since the mid-90s.

One show in which Kaplowitz was allowed an enormous amount of creative control was "Request Concert" which consisted of seven pages of stage direction without the actress ever speaking. Kaplowitz was part of a team, including 17 playwrights, working on creating the focus of the production, a 48-minute radio program entirely from scratch. Another positive to this project was the amount of time given to complete the faux radio show: four months as opposed to the four weeks Kaplowitz is more familiar working with.

Another production which Kaplowitz flexed his creativity upon was "Light Raise the Roof," a drama about homelessness in New York City. He literally recorded 15 hours of actual New York City sound, from subways and streets to the underside of bridges and even playgrounds at 3 a.m., with the intent to prove that in New York City "when you're homeless, there's nowhere you can go to get a moment's peace."

Kaplowitz's principle aim is the idea of collaboration between himself, the director, the playwright and the show's other designers, known as "integrated theatre," where all of the creative minds behind a production are together, bouncing ideas off one another. His only bad theatrical experiences have come in non-collaborative settings. In such an environment he said, "I could be anyone. That's not interesting to me."

Kaplowitz also spoke of the old sound design mind set, in which the designer just made sound effects and played pre-recorded music, but the art form has evolved far beyond that.

"I'm more interested in what I can bring to the play and how my artistry can explain the text [of the play] that no other medium can explain," he said.

The designer is currently working on a symphonic piece, another Broadway show (which must remain unnamed), and even a musical which is a "heavy metal adaptation of 'Moby Dick.'" Kaplowitz proves time and time again the ability to stretch the limits and preconceived notions of sound. As he simply yet profoundly puts it: "Sound is a complicated animal."

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

TOMS to hold charity event

BY TERESA REILLY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Between classes tomorrow, stop by the Student Union Ballroom for some free food, live music and shoes. TOMS Shoes is hosting Shoenanigans between 11 a.m. and 3 p.m. all in the name of charity.

TOMS is a shoe company that has unique business practices and a tight-knit relationship with its customers. Customers are guaranteed a simple promise when shopping with TOMS: for every pair of shoes purchased, TOMS charitably donates a pair to children throughout the world who walk shoeless everyday. This past November, the company took part in a shoe drop in Africa supplying 50,000 less fortunate children with new pairs of shoes, and the company is looking to bring their efforts to Argentina this May.

As for the actual shoe, TOMS are modeled after alpartagas, which are made by the natives of Argentina. The shoe is made with a light canvas and is offered in a wide variety of styles. TOMS will have a wide selection of shoes for students to try out at the event; and if a preferred style or size is missing, they will graciously provide students with a redemption code so that they can receive free shipping while shopping online.

While shoes are the main focus of tomorrow's festivities, they aren't all that TOMS is bringing to campus. A "Do Great Stuff" table will be set up so that students may do their shopping online at stores that give a portion of their proceeds to various charities across the world.

There will be a jewelry table with hand-made crafts from the Philippines. All proceeds from the day's sales will go to help fund buying school supplies for children in that country.

Keeping in step with the theme, there will also be a corporate social responsibility survey and raffle where students will be asked how much they really know about big business and companies like TOMS. The prize is a gift certificate to a local restaurant.

While walking around students will enjoy the musical stylings of local band Skullfunked, as well as Tim Schurrer and Friends, a Nashville singer-songwriter.

Earthfoods will be serving desserts such as ginger cookies and sour cream coffee cake all day.

If students enjoy the shoes or are moved by the cause, they can continue to get involved by signing up for the UMass Barefoot Fundraiser. The UMass Outing Club will be taking names and $5 from anyone who wants to participate in a short walk to promote the issue of poverty. The walk will take place April 16 in support of National Day Without Shoes.

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY ADVANTAGE.TOGO.M

TOMS recently provided new shoes for 50,000 children in Africa. The company will be holding 'Shoenanigans,' a charitable event, tomorrow.

Latest Dr. Seuss film a treat for all-ages

All-star cast and strong message carry 'Horton Hears a Who'

BY FRANK GODINHO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Eight years ago, Jim Carrey starred in his first Dr. Seuss movie as the title character in the live-action version of "How the Grinch Stole Christmas." This time around, Carrey returns to the Dr. Seuss franchise alongside fellow comedic actors Steve Carell and Carol Burnett in the G-Rated animated version of "Horton Hears a Who!"

"Horton!" tells the story of a silly elephant [Carrey] who discovers life is not always what it appears to be. By discovering a tiny world floating by him on a spec of dust, his ordinary outlook on life changes forever. The simplicity of the story rekindles the nostalgic feeling of reading Dr. Seuss's books as a child to any viewer, regardless of age.

Horton's unique finding instills within him a new purpose that he never could have previously imagined. He becomes obsessed with trying to find a safe haven for the microscopic community, despite the criticisms of his jungle friends, who universally believe that the spec is just a figment of Horton's whimsical imagination.

Despite his friends' constant doubts and attempts to sway his actions, Horton insists that what he heard is real, a cry for help coming from a little world known as Whoville. He manages to remain steadfast in his belief that it wasn't imagined and gives up at nothing to try to communicate with the land that belongs to hundreds if not thousands of Whos.

Eventually, Horton's attempts are heard, and it's only fitting that the leader of the town, known only as The Mayor (Carell) hears him. As the mayor hears a faint voice traveling through time and space, he thinks that someone is merely playing a practical joke on him. However ultimately, he's left with no choice but to believe his ears and what he hears.

Horton tells the mayor exactly what is happening in his world with the spec, and the mayor's skepticism that he's talking with a giant elephant from another world quickly disappears. Horton and the mayor agree that the unimaginable is indeed a reality and so is the danger that lurks for Whoville's existence. Although the two are seemingly polar opposites in size and lifestyles, the two decide to work together for the common goal of protecting those in need.

As the film progresses, we learn that not everyone is as dedicated to protecting the spec as Horton is. One kangaroo [Burnett], the self-proclaimed ruler of the jungle community, is a disbeliever and doubts the very existence of the tiny land of the Whos without hesitation. Angry with Horton for what she believes is spreading lies, she sets out on a mission to destroy the spec and proceeds to rally together with other disbelievers in her crusade to put a stop to Horton's out-of-control imagination amounting to what can only be described as a battle of believing and disbelieving!

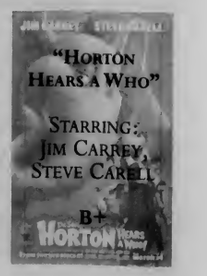
The comedic duo of Carrey and Carell work well together, as is evidenced by 2003's "Bruce Almighty." It should be stated however, that the pair's comedic talents translate more successfully in live-action films. With such an established history of making people laugh, one might have expected Carrey to stand out a bit more in his first-ever animated role. The eccentric actor known for his goofy roles, such as Stanley Ipkiss in "The Mask" and Fletcher Reede in "Liar Liar," is surprisingly a tad underwhelming in "Horton!"

As the number of animated films increases every year, it seems that iconic voiceovers performances like Eddie Murphy's in "Shrek," Ellen DeGeneres' in "Finding Nemo," are hard to come by. Gone are the days of Robin Williams [as the Genie] in "Aladdin." Although not bad by any means, Carrey and Carell, who are arguably two of today's funniest leading actors, could've done more with their roles.

Despite the film's lack of personality in its voiceovers, the famous Dr. Seuss story about a curious elephant and a town determined to be noticed provides a powerful message and is an enjoyable movie-going experience for all-ages alike.

The book-turned-film by Dr. Seuss, originally published in 1954, proves how fascinated we still are by his work today. Seuss's collection of short stories and animations have shaped the minds of young readers around the world, and the story of "Horton!" is no exception. No matter what the quality of the film, Seuss's legacy as perhaps the greatest children's author of all time will never be tarnished.

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu.



COURTESY TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

In his first roll in an animated film, comedic icon Jim Carrey stars as the voice of Horton, an elephant with a larger-than-life imagination.

COURTESY TWENTIETH CENTURY FOX

Steve Carrel provides the voice of The Mayor in the new animated feature, "Horton Hears a Who."

Creating art from eggs

BY MARGARET SLABY
McCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

FRESNO, Calif. — There are lots of things you can do with eggs. You can poach, fry or scramble them. You can toss, roll or hide them. A group of California women, however, would rather decorate them — but not in the traditional Easter fashion of dipping hard-boiled eggs in dye.

They call themselves the Egg Beaters, and they decorate empty shells in intricate ways to create Christmas ornaments, dioramas, jewelry and other items.

"It's very addicting," said Fresno's Clare Harris, who estimates she has completed several hundred projects in five years as an egger. "You make one, and you have to make another. It's also very relaxing to me. I can go in my little workroom and spend hours."

But for these artists, not just any old egg will do. "With the eggs at the store, the shells are too thin," said Betty Haley, an Egg Beater.

Although they sometimes use chicken eggs, much of their work is done with goose, emu, rhea, ostrich, quail, finch, turkey and peacock eggs. Most are not available locally and must be ordered from across the country. Costs can range from about 50 cents for a Bobwhite quail egg — if you buy 50 or more — to about $16 for a single rhea or large ostrich egg. Most eggs already are hollowed, cleaned and sterilized, leaving just an intact shell.

Harris gets many of her eggs — and some supplies, which include stands, rhinestone chains, pearls, beads, ribbons, figurines, paint and glitter — from The Golden Egg of Idaho. "It's not a cheap hobby," she said. "You can easily put $20-$30 into supplies for a project — and sometimes a lot more."

Harris already has spent $100 for her next project, a Cinderella coach made from an ostrich egg she will decorate with semi-precious stones.

There also are start-up costs, which easily can top $1,000. There are stands to hold an egg steady while pencil marks are made to distinguish where cuts will occur, compressor-run high-powered air tools for cutting, and extractors to collect eggshell dust. There are burs, drills and blades for the air tool as well as turntables, paint holders, pliers, tweezers, scissors and templates. Some eggers also buy project kits.

It's hard to say how long a project takes, Harris said, because eggers usually work on several simultaneously. Some of hers have included a golf cart, pagoda, Faberge style Christmas ornaments and keepsake boxes lined with satin and velvet. Her smallest creations are pendant necklaces using Bobwhite quail eggs, which are about an inch in diameter. Her largest [some of her dioramas] are made from ostrich eggs, which are about 16 inches in diameter. Harris keeps some of her decorated eggs in a curio cabinet; others she sells at art shows and boutiques.

Haley said her children stand in line for her decorated eggs. She has made more than 250 in five years. Works have included musical carousels, hot-air balloons, perfume daubers, clowns and Mickey Mouse. "I just like seeing what I can do with an egg," she said.

Many Egg Beaters learned the craft from Velma Smothers, who formed the group about nine years ago; the club has grown to about 20 members. Although Smothers has decorated thousands of eggs in three decades as an artist, she prefers to teach the craft and host the club's monthly meetings. Members work on a new project each month.

"I'm 84, so I've slowed down a bit," Smothers said. "It's so interesting and challenging, and it's fun to get other people interested in it. You do one [egg], and then you're hooked."

Putting a new twist on a long-standing Easter tradition, the Egg Beaters create elaborate ornaments, dioramas and jewelry from eggshells.

Taylor sees freshness in remake

BY RICK BENTLEY
McCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

Rachael Taylor loves the horror genre. But she had second thoughts about being part of the remake of the Asian horror film "Shutter," which opened Friday. The idea of copying something that was already a hit made her pause.

"I think the reason the Western market has tapped into the Asian horror films is that they are so good. I think when a movie is good, it is like trying to remake a painting. I was hesitant about taking another crack at it because you don't want to offend the fans of the genre," Taylor said in the Australian accent that she has had to mask with an American delivery in her feature film roles.

And Taylor has come face-to-face with those fans. She was in town to be part of a panel discussion on the new movie at the Wonderfest Convention in February.

"Shutter" is about what happens when newlyweds discover their honeymoon photos feature some gruesome ghostly images. This, uh, development is what makes the movie scary.

Taylor finally decided to be in the remake because while the essence of the film remained the same, there was a shift in story. The new "Shutter" focuses more on the journey that Taylor's character takes.

This is Taylor's second major movie that is heavy on special effects. Last summer she braved robots from another world as a computer geek in "Transformers."

If there's anything that appeals to Taylor even more than horror, it's loads of special effects. She compares the process of making a movie where creatures, robots or ghosts are added long after she is done with acting to childhood imagination.

"It is like going back to that time when you were 8-years-old and you are pretending about monsters and fairies and all that stuff," Taylor said.

The hardest part of making "Shutter" had nothing to do with special effects. It was the real world that kept throwing her for a loop. The movie was shot in Japan and Taylor kept having what she called "lost-in-translation moments."

Rachel Taylor stars as Jane Shaw in the new horror remake "Shutter."

She found herself feeling isolated and detached from the world because of the language barriers.

"I actually felt like a ghost in Tokyo," Taylor said. "The journey my character goes on in the film is a lot like that. She has to figure out what is real and what is not."

Taylor's work in Japan was just part of a trek she has been on for the past year. Her journey started with a move to Los Angeles from her small hometown of Launceston, Tasmania. She almost immediately began work on the big-budget "Transformers." Then she was whisked to Tokyo for "Shutter."

All of which has been good for her, she said. With the travel and different cultures, she believes she has changed, grown and become a stronger person.

While Taylor admits she was initially hesitant to take a role in another remake of an Asian horror film, the new rendition's emphasis on character development swayed the leading lady to sign on for the project.

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Wunsten Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

Accelerated Culinary Arts Certificate Program
THE CULINARY INSTITUTE OF AMERICA
Raise the Bar on Your Career Possibilities
Increase the Marketability of Your Bachelor's Degree in Hospitality and Tourism Management, Food Science, or Nutrition
In just 30 weeks of cooking, studying wine, developing menus, and exploring culinary trends, you will:
• Gain new skills and insight into culinary techniques, ingredients, and cuisines.
• Heighten your ability to work with chefs and lead a culinary operation.
• Learn in an inspiring setting in the heart of America's wine country.
Program Dates:
July 21, 2008–March 12, 2009
Space is limited, so apply now!
Applications are due May 1, 2008.
www.ciaprochef.com/acap
707-967-2496
The Culinary Institute of America at Greystone
Napa Valley, California
SWEET! The CIA has a certificate program in baking and pastry arts too!
www.ciachef.edu | 1-800-CULINARY
The CIA at Greystone is a branch of the CIA, Hyde Park, NY.
©2008 The Culinary Institute of America

GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY
Semester in Washington Program in Law
Get Washington internship experience and Georgetown academic credit this summer.
June 2-August 9, 2008
Gain experience that can help launch your legal career this summer in Washington, D.C. Enroll in Georgetown University's Semester in Washington Program in Law and see the legal and public policy process from the front row as an intern on Capitol Hill, in other areas of government, or at a law firm, corporation, a lobbying firm, or non-profit organization in the metropolitan Washington D.C. area. In the process, you'll gain academic credits while you study the legislative process and explore ethics, leadership, and social justice as they relate to the law. You're invited to join a community of achievers in Washington this summer and open new doors to opportunities for your future career.
• Work as a legal intern in metropolitan Washington, D.C.
• Earn up to six academic credits from Georgetown University.
• Build relationships that you can leverage throughout your career.
ENROLL TODAY
Visit scs.georgetown.edu/washington or call 202.687.8200
to enroll or find out when a representative will visit your campus.

UM advances to quarterfinals

M. HOOPS from page 1

"We all got kind of scared and nervous," Harris said. "That's one of our teammates – one of our brothers. We just had to keep rolling because we knew if he was there with us, he would have been fighting with us."

Although the Minutemen lost Gaffney to injury on the play, Gary Forbes drew the foul from Wood and went to the line for two. Forbes converted on both, giving UMass a 65-60 lead with 2:38 left.

UMass	68
Akron	63

But the key play came just before that on a loose-ball scramble at midcourt. After UMass regained the lead at 61-60 for the first time since early in the second half, Lowe and Nick Dials got tangled while going for the ball. Dials knocked down Lowe by his ankles, and the officials called an intentional foul – giving the Minutemen two free throws and the ball.

In the Atlantic 10 Tournament loss to Charlotte, Lowe missed crucial free throws in the game's final minutes in the eventual heartbreaking loss. This time around, Lowe calmly sank both shots and gave the Minutemen a three-point lead. With the ball back, UMass extended the lead to five when Forbes hit two foul shots of his own.

"It was a tough call at that time of the game," Akron coach Keith Dambrot said. "I don't know if it was an intentional foul or not, but I don't really care. We didn't handle the ball well during crunch time, so I'm not going to make any excuses.

"I wouldn't have called it, but I'm a little biased," he added with a grin.

But after the four UMass free throws in a 14-second stretch, Akron's Brett McKnight hit a 3-pointer to cut the lead to two with 2:14 left.

Both teams traded missed shots and turnovers over the next two minutes, before Forbes hit one of his two free throws with 20 seconds remaining to give UMass a three-point lead.

The Zips then wasted a few seconds off the clock after a poor inbounds pass bounced out of bounds off UMass, and Wood was forced to take a difficult, step-back 3-point attempt.

Wood's shot missed with about four seconds remaining, and Harris took the long rebound to a streaking Milligan who threw down an emphatic dunk to seal the victory.

Gaffney's status is uncertain for Tuesday's matchup with Syracuse, but Ford didn't seem too optimistic.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Mc. HALL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Ricky Harris led the Minutemen with 20 points in the win over Akron, shooting 50 percent from the field.

Season ends with 7-2 loss

HOCKEY from page 8

most of the period, resulting in scoring chances on shots from the point. Freshman Mike Lecomte nearly put UMass ahead 1-0 after deflecting a Mike Kostka drive from the top of the left face-off circle over the vacant top right corner of the goal.

But it was apparent that the already-overmatched Minutemen were on their last legs with 12 minutes left in the first period.

"We got behind the 8-ball early with the two-goal deficit and the five-minute major but never really got back into it, even with [Berry's] goal because we didn't get the big save at the big moment," UMass coach Don Cahoon said.

Dainton allowed four goals in just over 27 minutes of action. Cahoon removed him from the game after Dries and Fornataro scored 3:30 apart in the second period. The UMass forwards and defenseman did not perform particularly well, but Dainton's weakness in the first period-and-a-half set the Minutemen too far back.

"UNH is too good a team, too offensively capable to not have your goaltender at 100 percent," Cahoon said. "I'm not laying this all on Paul, but I think that was clearly the difference in the game."

The Wildcats scored some pretty goals as a result of the nifty stick-handling that is the hallmark of the UNH program. But Dainton put his team farther and farther behind Saturday by mishandling shots he normally saves with ease.

UNH outshot UMass, 40-39, and scoring chances were essentially even for the game. For the second consecutive night, the difference came in the execution of the chances. The Wildcats did, and the Minutemen did not.

UNH goaltender Kevin Regan solidified his case for Hockey East Player of the Year with his 37 saves. The Minutemen created more passing lanes than they did in Friday's game, but Regan's flawless positioning allowed UMass very little open net to shoot at.

"And at the other end of the ice, you have [Kevin] Regan who's immense," Cahoon said. "He was making it really difficult. We had great scoring chances, and he came up big on many, many occasions."

The Wildcat forwards exploited sloppy blue-line passes and offensive possessions by the UMass defensemen and forwards in both games of the series. Cahoon commented after Friday's game that it had to improve and altered Saturday's lineup accordingly.

UMass' fourth line on Friday featured junior Jordan Virtue in the middle with wingers Marc Concannon and Scott Crowder. Virtue and Concannon sat Saturday night with Brian Keane and Shawn Saunders getting the nod in their stead.

The line typically serves UMass well, disrupting the flow of the opposition's top line and maintaining offensive-zone possession. But Crowder's ejection forced Cahoon to shuffle his players around, essentially nullifying the effectiveness of any grouping.

Game notes

In his final game in a UMass uniform, senior winger P.J. Fenton moved into ninth place all-time on UMass's scoring list at 95 points with his assist on Berry's goal … Freshman winger James Marcou finished the season with 24 assists, good enough for the ninth best single-season total … UNH advanced to the Hockey East Semifinals for the seventh consecutive season; the last time UNH won the conference Tournament was 2003 when the Wildcats defeated Boston University, 1-0, in the championship game.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

Minutemen suffer record defeat at home

M. LAX from page 8

ute period during the second quarter to take a 5-1 lead.

Despite converting possessions into good scoring chances, the Minutemen simply could not finish. UMass took 28 shots, including 10 in the first quarter.

"I think that we're taking quality shots, but we're just not putting the ball in the back of the net," Cannella said. "You have to finish your opportunities. And if you don't, you put a lot of pressure on your defense."

In its previous games, the UMass defense thrived despite that pressure. But the challenge of stopping a team with a multitude of speedy and able scorers wore down the Minutemen.

Once the Greyhounds seized the momentum of the game, there was little chance for UMass to come back. The Maroon and White came out flat in all facets of the game in the second half. A 7-1 halftime deficit quickly ballooned into an embarrassing 14-goal loss.

Cannella acknowledged that the Greyhounds were the antithesis of his team on offense.

"They scored a few transition goals Loyola's an extremely fast team," Cannella said, referring to what he believed to be the turning point in the game. "They took it to us and finished their opportunities."

The Greyhounds needed 32 shots to score their 15 goals. Saturday's game proved that it's difficult for a team to stay competitive when an opponent converts nearly 50 percent of its shots. Loyola also displayed highly unselfish play as 12 players scored.

It was also the Maroon and White's third consecutive loss. The Minutemen dropped a close contest to Brown (4-2) on March 15, 4-3. Though both teams struggled to score, UMass went 48 minutes between goals in the first and fourth quarters.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Minutewomen snap four-game skid

W. LAX from page 8

Junior defender Jackie Rosenzweig led the Minutewomen defensive effort. Rosenzweig grabbed three of UMass' 12 ground balls and caused one turnover in spite of collecting five fouls.

"Jackie's a sparkplug back there," Venechanos said. "She's a real leader and they [the Minutewomen] love playing in front of her."

HC would have had 11 goals against Speth, but referees waved off Costello's second goal after they deemed her stick to be illegal. The ruling was that the pocket on Costello's cross was too deep.

The Eagles had a .28-to-.27 shot advantage over the Maroon and White, but most of their shots were erratic.

UMass will return to action on Tuesday afternoon when the New Hampshire Wildcats enter Warren P. McGuirk Alumni Stadium to start conference-play for the Minutewomen.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Sanders pitches no-hitter against Rutgers second inning. It was the first home-run of Reeves's career. She is hitting .275. Serio went 5-for-7 with four doubles in two games against the Rams. Serio is hitting a team-high .329 with an on-base percentage of .420. Before spring break UMass coach Elaine Sortino said she wanted the hitting to break out. Over 10 games, the Minutewomen's batting average has gone from .218 to .237.

SOFTBALL from page 8

While the Minutewomen could only manage five runs in two games against Fordham, the bats came alive against La Salle, scoring 21 runs over a two-game set. The pitching was equally as dominant as Balschmiter and Sanders combined for 19 strikeouts.

In the first game, the Minutewomen scored a season-high nine runs behind seven shutout innings from Balschmiter, allowing one hit and striking out 11. The 9-0 win was the Minutewomen's largest margin of victory this year.

In Game 2 UMass broke its season-high from the first game by scoring 12 runs and had their largest margin of victory with a 10-run win. Sanders gave up two runs in the first inning but then threw six scoreless innings. Sanders also had eight strikeouts and picked up her fifth win of the season. Salato went 4-for-9 with two homeruns against La Salle.

Under Armour Classic

Last weekend, as most students left for spring break, the Minutewomen played four games in Florida. Balschmiter pitched a seven shut-out innings and allowed one hit, while striking out four in a 1-0 win over Radford. Reeves doubled in the game's only run in the sixth inning.

Indiana took UMass to extra innings before taking a 2-1 victory. The Minutewomen scored one run in the first inning and could not give Balschmiter anymore support. She pitched eight innings giving up two runs, one earned.

UMass defeated Florida International, 2-0. Balschmiter got her third consecutive start, shutting out FIU. Cullington and Williams both went 2-for-3.

Sanders no-hit Rutgers in an 8-0 win, earning Atlantic 10 Player of the Week in the process. Mollica went 2-for-3 with two RBI's. Cullington hit a homerun in the top of the seventh.

Steve Games can be reach at sgames@dailycollegian.com

Mass Attack had talent to go farther team we saw so much from at other points during this season.

RICE from page 8

Whether you want to blame the general youth of the team, the second-half slide being too much for them or just claim that taking two from a clearly superior UNH team was too tall an order, you can't blame the Minutemen's earlier-than-expected exit on a lack of talent.

This year's version of the Mass Attack was at least as talented as last year's, which came within a game of the 2007 Frozen Four. The only cause for this earlier-than-expected demise is that the Minutemen just didn't want it enough. Their heads did not look to be in it when they most needed to be.

New Hampshire made it look easy, forcing turnover after turnover and converting each into a scoring opportunity, if not a goal. Pick a blue line, the Minutemen could not keep possession of the puck at either end.

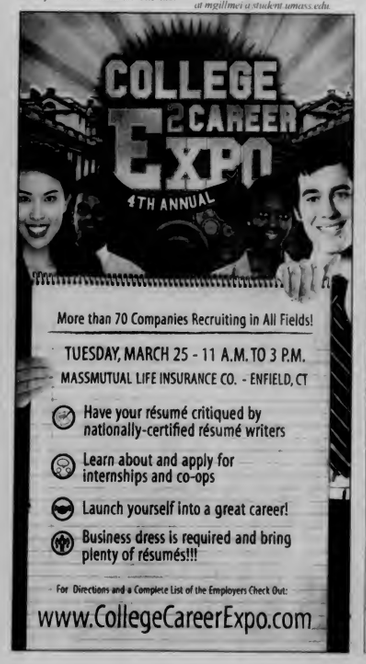
Once Dainton had retreated to the bench, every aspect of hockey was a struggle for the rest of the team. Everyone was downtrodden and tried to force plays, making it worse.

"I'm not as angry as I was last night," Cahoon said after the game. "More disappointed for sure, but not as angry."

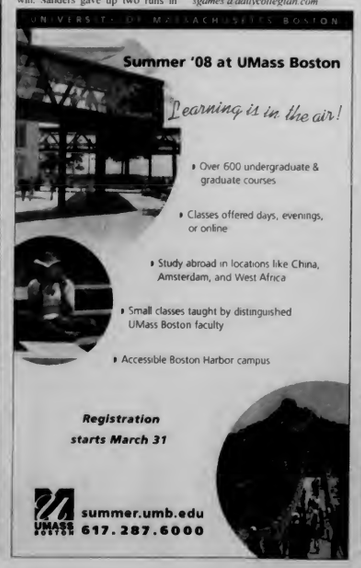
Seeing his team struggle to move the puck out of its own zone after UNH dumped the puck in for a line change had to be disappointing, and so must have the countless ill-advised passes across the ice, most of which were intercepted and taken the other way.

As I said, this is not a case of an eighth-seeded team getting blown away by a far better regular season champion. The Minutemen waited to break out of their collective funk, and though a three-game win streak appeared to have cured what ailed them, a five-goal loss to the Wildcats proved that time had run out on this UMass squad.

After seeing so many winnable games go to the wayside, you begin to wonder about this team's ability to shake things off and move forward. This was clearly a very emotional team, and perhaps the sudden drop off in January and February was too much for them to overcome.



As the team left the ice for the final time this season, Cahoon had his arm around Dainton, probably talking him up after one of worst games of his rookie year. Something about next year, I'm sure, was said.



Still, as tough a day as Dainton had in net, he received very little help from anyone else that night. It's ironic that the surprisingly steady play in net finally failed this team at the end when, had it not been there all year, UMass likely would have been watching Maine play in Durham this weekend.

When asked about this season as a whole, Cahoon described it simply as "odd."

I can't think of another word for it.

Jeremy Rice is the Collegian's sports editor, he can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Arigato II
Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Parking Garage
Lessers
Pleasant St
Arigato II
Main St.
Town Hall
Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

If you don't have anything nice to say, do sudoku.

			6	8		9	1
5	9						2	3
			9	5		4	2
6								5
			1	9		6	3
4	2						8	1
			3	2		1	6

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Ruthless
7 Omelet need
11 Golfer Hogan
14 ___ borealis
15 Oodles
16 Sci-fi craft
17 "___ the Menace"
18 Leo's bellow
19 Org. of Giants
20 Harden
22 Actress Tempest
24 Possible pathogens
29 Coats
30 Canyon's reply
31 Tender emotions
33 Husband-to-be
35 Pinchork part
36 Groups of seven
39 ___ non grata
44 Low digits
46 Family car
47 From the school of hard knocks
53 Catch with a lasso
54 Pekoe server
55 Seven-time AL batting champion
57 Dies
59 Zany Caesar
60 Dyeing tub
61 Eye part
63 AWOL student
68 "The Name of the Rose" novelist
69 Actress Garr
70 Did emcee work
71 Scand. country
72 Tree of Life location
73 Refines ore

DOWN
1 Naughty
2 Have regrets about
3 Fancy vase
4 2,000 pounds
5 Come up
6 Light beams
7 Coin order
8 Compact clump
9 Start of the end zone
10 Banner headlines
11 ___ burner
12 Smuggle
13 At least as much as 21 Standoff
23 Change color
24 Enreats
25 Homestead plot
26 Cut with an ax
27 Blow a horn
28 Diligent insect
32 Overbalance
34 Fragment from space
37 Reeled
38 Stitch
40 Vaccines
41 Nose alert
42 Back of the neck
43 All over again
45 Knight's title
47 Even-___
48 U.S. oil company
49 Bird of prey
50 Cure starter?
51 Distress letters
52 Plait and Wharton
56 Computer insert
58 Father
62 Wickedness
64 Function
65 City in GA
66 Court divider
67 6-pointers in football

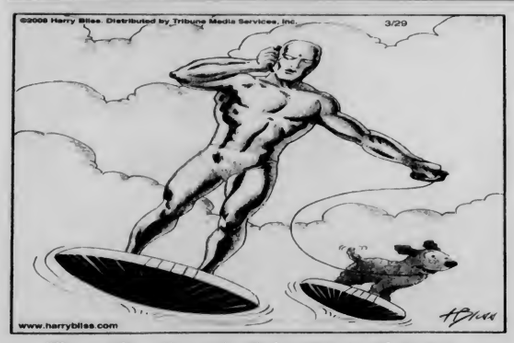
The Easter Bunny? Creepy? Why what ever are you talking about?

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

Quote of the Day

"I have to take number two!"

– Random kid at a highway rest-stop explaining to his mother why he is taking so long



Wondermark By David Malki

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"So, wait ... the celestial currents of space are north or south of the dog park?"

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Spring break is over; put your hooters away.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Say Bye, Bye, Bye to sleeping in, and get back N'Sync with your scholastic endeavors.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
In 2010, chickens will take over the world and relegate homosapiens to human coops.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Don't worry; I'm sure no one will notice that you didn't exercise at all over break.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Tie a string to two coffee cans, and make a phone that connects to a room across your quad. Can you hear me?

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
A Vengaboys ringtone can make even the most unenjoyable phone calls well worth it.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You will successfully conquer the treacherous wilderness of UMass and the beasts that dwell within its borders.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
On the road of life, you are a dead woodchuck. On the bright side, your carcass just made a 13 year-old kid laugh.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Don't make your girlfriend mad while she's holding a knife and reading Lorena Bobbit's biography.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Sticks of deodorant and bars of granola are not mutually exclusive.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Remember my little dairy feind, too much cheese in the mouth directly correlates to too much cheese in the arteries.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
If unpaid parking tickets equal bad karma, you are in danger of being run over by the meter maid.

Spring break may be over, but Comics always wants to party.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Apt. for Rent

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Apt. for Week

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 Bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winn-co.com

Employment

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Employment

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gna Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers wanted, must be able to work approx. 20 hours per week, nights and weekends, apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst

Employment

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errance, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA PO Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone; 508-228-3942

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity.Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

Services

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 24, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen fall flat

Four-goal second period ends season

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

(Editor's note: This story was originally published online at the Daily Collegian's Web site on March 15.)

DURHAM, N.H. — On Friday night, it wasn't until the third period that New Hampshire put away the Massachusetts hockey team. The Wildcats decided not to wait so long Saturday.

UNH	4
UMass	1
UNH	7
UMass	2

UNH (25-8-3, 19-5-3 Hockey East) erupted for four second-period goals on its way to a 7-2 win over the Minutemen, eliminating UMass (14-16-6, 9-13-5) from the Hockey East Tournament and ending its season.

Senior captain Matt Fornataro recorded his first-career hat trick Saturday and had four goals in the series. However, it was junior winger Jerry Pollastrone who led the Wildcats with five goals in the two games and the game's first Saturday.

UMass forward Scott Crowder received a game misconduct and five-minute major for a hit from behind at 7:01 of the first period. Fifty-seven seconds into the UNH power play, Pollastrone fired a wrister from the right face-off circle that kicked off the glove of goaltender Paul Dainton and rolled into the net.

BRIAN THEISEN/COLLEGIAN

Freshman goaltender Paul Dainton was pulled in favor of backup Dan Meyers early in the second period in the Minutemen's final game of the season, a 7-2 loss at New Hampshire.

Fornataro extended UNH's lead 20 seconds later, taking a feed from freshman Danny Dries in the slot and lifting it over Dainton's right shoulder.

The Minutemen succeeded in killing the final three minutes of Crowder's major. Alex Berry cut the UNH lead to 2-1 with a power-play goal of his own. UMass worked the puck around the UNH zone well for

See HOCKEY on page 6

No excuse for Mass Attack's step backward

Jeremy Rice

(Editor's note: This story was originally published online at the Daily Collegian's Web site on March 15.)

DURHAM, N.H. — Whatever ills the Massachusetts hockey team fell under Friday in letting a 1-1 tie after two periods turn into a 4-1 defeat, it apparently got worse overnight.

The Minutemen lost 7-2 to New Hampshire Saturday night at the Whittemore Center with a performance that is difficult to describe as anything but embarrassing.

Remember, this team was ranked fifth in the country following a 5-4 win over Colorado College in the Lightning College Hockey Classic – a win that if followed up by anything better than the 2-11-1 run that ensued, likely would have gone down as one of the most significant wins in the program's history, one that might have signaled the next big step in carrying UMass hockey to national relevance.

Instead, the Mass Attack laid an egg on the second half of its 2007-08 regular season, and after stringing a few wins together to salvage a postseason berth, UMass laid another one.

Friday night's 4-1 loss was a clear case of the Minutemen beating themselves with sloppy play. Saturday, however, they let themselves get beat.

The Wildcats played inspired, powerful and clever hockey and proved they were the better team this weekend. But on Saturday, it seemed like the Maroon and White barely tried to disprove that.

UMass coach Don Cahoon cited poor goaltending as the factor that broke the game wide open. After falling behind 2-0 early, UMass fought back and made it 2-1 after one period. That's when Dainton let up a couple goals he probably shouldn't have.

However, when going down the roster, it's difficult to find a player who did much better. Dainton certainly didn't have his best game, but facing seemingly unending breakaways and odd-man rushes, what net minder would?

Scott Crowder's game misconduct for hitting from behind was ill-timed and put the Minutemen in an early hole, and from that point on, anyone in a maroon sweater seemed resigned to their fate.

Even after Dainton gave up the two goals in the second period and was pulled in favor of sophomore Dan Meyers, the Wildcats still scored twice more before the period ended, taking a ridiculous 6-1 advantage into a lame-duck third.

If nothing else, it was disappointing not to see more from a

See RICE on page 6

UMass perfect in early A-10 action

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team picked up where it left off last season in Atlantic 10 play. The Minutewomen were unbeaten in A-10 play in 2007 and have started 4-0 in 2008.

The Minutewomen (14-11) have gone 8-2 since the start of spring break. Sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders highlighted the week when she threw her first career no-hitter in an 8-0 win over Rutgers on March 16. The Minutewomen went 3-1 at the USF Under Armour Classic in Clearwater, Florida. They went on to split two games with South Florida (winning 2-0, and losing 2-1) before opening the A-10 portion of the schedule.

With the four conference wins UMass extended its A-10 winning streak to 23 games. The Minutewomen make their home debut this Wednesday against Dartmouth.

The A-10 winning streak almost hit a bump as Fordham held a 2-1 lead going into the top of the seventh. Fordham got to junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter, scoring two early runs. Balschmiter only surrendered one hit after the first inning.

In the top of the seventh, second baseman Stacy Cullington led off the inning with a double. Third baseman Whitney Mollica singled to left field and advanced to second on the throw to third. Sarah Reeves flied out to center, but the runners were unable to tag. With one out, right fielder Samantha Salato doubled to right center to score both runners. Sophomore catcher Jessica Serio added an insurance run with an RBI double. Balschmiter closed out the Rams hitters, 1-2-3, in the bottom of the inning.

UMass defeated Fordham, 1-0 in Game 2. Sanders pitched a two-hit shutout over seven innings, while striking out two. Reeves scored the only run with a leadoff homer in the

See SOFTBALL on page 6

UM embarassed at home

Worst loss ever at Garber Field at hands of Greyhounds

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Coming off a 50-shot performance against Sacred Heart last Tuesday, the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team appeared to be making progress offensively, despite the 9-7 losing effort. But few could have expected what happened in the team's next game.

The Minutemen (2-5, 0-1 ECAC) suffered a 15-1 home loss to Loyola (4-3, 3-0 ECAC) Saturday afternoon. It was the team's worst loss at Garber Field in program history. A 14-2 loss during the 1965 season to Dartmouth previously held that distinction.

UMass kept the contest close in the first quarter, but the game quickly slipped away before halftime. The Minutemen then let the game spiral out of control in the second half as Loyola extended complete domination.

Loyola	15
UMass	1

"It falls on everybody," UMass coach Greg Cannella said of team's performance against the Greyhounds. "If the offense doesn't produce, the defense and goalie will play tighter. You have to give credit to Loyola since they played an impressive game."

But Cannella knows that blame for such a devastating loss cannot be spread solely among the players.

"I told them that I've done a poor job coaching them and to put this one on me," he said to his players after the game. "We'll try changing some things and try to get the guys confident in what they're doing."

Cannella knows that how the team responds in its next game will determine its character and resolve. The Minutemen have a week to prepare for league rival Penn State (4-3, 1-1 ECAC) on the road.

BRIAN THEISEN/COLLEGIAN

Evan Blum scored the only the goal for UMass in a 15-1 loss at Garber Field Saturday.

"I have to go back to the drawing board and do some thinking about what our plan will be for the future," Cannella said. "Obviously we're going to have to concern ourselves more with ourselves than with our opposition. Hopefully we can do that and get better."

The Minutemen scored the first goal of the game and took a 1-1 tie into the second quarter. After the first 15 minutes, Loyola seized control of the contest with its potent transition offense. The Greyhounds scored four goals within a two-min-

See M. LAX on page 6

McCormick scores 4 in win

Four-game slide halted with win over Eagles

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team snapped a six-game losing streak on Saturday with a 13-10 win against the Boston College Eagles.

Eagle attack Jenna McCabe netted the first two goals of the day past UMass freshman goalie Colleen Speth.

The Maroon and White then rallied back with four straight goals, the first coming from sophomore attack Stephanie Hopkins, followed by senior captain Kathleen Typadis. Sophomore midfielder Merritt Cosgrove and senior defender Jeannette Villapiano found the back of the net shortly after that.

The Minutewomen (2-6) excelled on both offense and defense against the Eagles. Typadis and junior attack Kaytlin McCormick each had four goals on the day. McCormick padded her team-lead in goals while Typadis finally hit her stride as one of the team's most potent offensive threats.

"It was a total team effort," Typadis said of her high-scoring game. "The past couple days we've done a lot of reps with driving to the net lefty-lefty [closing in on the goalie's left side from the left side of the field]."

A big part of UMass's effective play was its ability to control draws. The Maroon and White held an 18-to-seven advantage over the Eagles in draw controls, an area UMass coach Alexis Venechanos noted was where the Minutewomen's momentum started.

"It was great to get a win," she said. "I think it started with Kelsey [Schreiner]'s draw. It was a great team effort."

Schreiner's draw control led to McCormick's capping off her four-goal performance with the game-winning score midway through the second half. McCormick also had a ground ball to her credit. The four goals tied a career high for her.

UMass	13
BC	10

McCormick led UMass' impressive effort in free-position shots. Three of McCormick's goals were off of free-position shots. The Minutewomen were six-of-eight in free position shots, while BC only converted two-of-five.

The Eagles were productive with clears, however. BC went 11-of-14 in clears, while UMass went eight-of-12. The Eagles also played an incredibly physical game, earning 38 fouls to the Minutewomen's 22; although, both teams were given yellow cards in three occasions.

JEFF STANLEY/COLLEGIAN

Kaytlin McCormick led the Minutewomen to their second win of the season with four goals.

See W. LAX on page 6

Maroon and White swept by Dukes in conference series

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

If its first few games against Atlantic 10 competition is any indication, it's going to be a long and difficult season for the Massachusetts baseball team.

The Minutemen (2-7, 0-3 A-10) dropped all three games against Duquesne over this past weekend, putting themselves in an early hole in the conference standings. UMass is tied with La Salle at the bottom of the 14-team conference.

After poor field conditions postponed Friday's game and moved the series from Pittsburgh, Pa., to Seton Hall's artificial turf field in Greensburg, Pa., the two teams played a doubleheader on Saturday. Strong pitching from the Dukes (6-10, 3-0 A-10) in both games led to the doubleheader sweep.

The final game of the series was more of the same, with Duquesne's freshman hurler Grant Gillespie limiting the Minutemen to three hits in the 5-2 victory. UMass finished with more errors (five) than its three hits in that game and finished with four runs in the series after 2-0 and 6-2 losses during the doubleheader.

The Minutemen get right back into action this week with six games in the next seven days. They will travel to Storrs, Conn., to face UConn on Monday and play their first home game of the season a day later against Sacred Heart.

UMass heads back to Connecticut on Wednesday for a road tilt with Hartford. After a day off on Thursday, the Minutemen welcome conference foe Xavier for a three-game set at Earl Lorden Field.

In Game 1 against Duquesne, both teams had just five hits in a classic pitchers' duel. But the Dukes' junior right-hander Ryan Juran got the better of UMass's Mitchell Clegg, going the distance with a complete game shutout. Clegg had 10 strikeouts to Juran's four but couldn't escape the early jams that Juran did.

After a brief rest, the two teams got right back into it for the second game. UMass starter Bryan Leigh (six runs and 14 basrunners allowed in six innings) was out-classed by Duquesne's Paul Bugajski, who allowed just one run in seven innings.

Brian Baudinet led UMass at the plate, driving in both runs and reaching base three times, but it was not enough to overcome another strong pitching performance from the Dukes.

The final game of the series was the messiest for UMass, with its pitchers allowing nine hits and eight walks, while the defense committed five errors. UMass held the lead, 2-1, after four innings but only mustered two hits in the final seven innings.

The Minutemen began spring break on a positive note, taking two out of three from Army at the New York Yankees Spring Training Complex in Tampa, Fla. They took both games of a doubleheader (1-0 and 7-1) on March 16 but dropped the final game of the series in dramatic fashion, 12-11, a day later to narrowly miss the series sweep.

UMass had an 8-1 lead after three innings but allowed Army to score nine runs in the sixth. The Minutemen trailed by four runs heading into the final inning and cut the lead to one before Mike Donato struck out with the potential winning run on base.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 48 LO: 32 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2008

DINOSAURS INVADE MULLINS | PAGE 5

Progress with negotiations

Trustees introduce proposal to meet demands of students

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Board of Trustees for the University of Massachusetts system pushed forward a proposal to increase financial aid and create advisory groups on the relationship between students, police and diversity on campus. The proposal is just one step in what outgoing Student Government Association president and student negotiator Aaron Buford described as a continuing process.

The proposal comes out of negotiations between student leaders and the campus administration following a two-day student strike last November. It addresses demands that students made in four areas.

FINANCIAL AID

The administration has agreed to increase financial aid spending by $600,000. Buford said that this increase will go to students who are the most in need. The proposal also provides funding for a "Lobby Day," allowing students to leave campus for one day to lobby in support of affordable public higher education at the Massachusetts State House.

Students demanded a rollback of student fees, which the administration felt unable to agree to. A statement from interim Chancellor Thomas Cole says that cuts in funding received from the state have already forced budget cuts on the Amherst campus. That factor coupled with the fact that the administration has committed to boost faculty ranks makes a decrease in fees impossible.

Cole said it is "unrealistic to expect further cuts in expenditures or significant increases in state support can be achieved to allow for rollback of student fees, at least in the immediate future."

Cole also said that the aid will allow for a "modest increase in the percentage of grant support for students with the greatest need."

POLICE ADVISORY BOARD

The proposal includes the creation of a Community Police Advisory Board, with more students than administrators as board members. The board comes in response to a student demand that undercover police be removed from residence halls.

DIVERSITY BOARD

A Diversity Advisory Council of students, staff and faculty will advise the

See PROPOSAL on page 3

Leaders of last semester's student strike have made progress in their negotiations with the UMass administration.

Fee increase for students

BY KRISTEN HEALY
Collegian Staff

The Board of Trustees for the University of Massachusetts system has approved a 3.1 percent student charge increase for the 2008-2009 academic year.

This is the fifth consecutive year that the Board has been able to keep the increases of tuition and fees under the rate of inflation. According to the Board of Trustees, this rate is significantly lower than rate increases expected at other public universities.

"As the cost of attending public colleges has risen seven percent over the past five years, the cost of attending UMass has increased by only 3.4 percent," said Chairman of the Board of Trustees Robert J. Manning in a statement. "We consider this year's increase to be modest but significant in terms of enhancing academic quality on all five campuses."

The final vote was held on March 19 during a Board meeting at UMass Dartmouth, confirming a vote held earlier in the month by the Board's Committee on Administration and Finance. The total increase of tuition and fees will be between $266 and $311 for in-state students at the four undergraduate UMass campuses: Amherst, Lowell, Dartmouth and Boston.

University of Massachusetts President Jack M. Wilson and the University's Chancellors are aiming to put 20 percent of the money that comes into the Universities through this increase go towards student financial aid. Their goal is to continue to provide a significant amount of financial aid to students needing it, while also making sure that the amount given out in financial aid grows at a rate higher than inflation.

"These efforts, combined with our success in increasing student financial aid, continue to make academic excellence affordable for Massachusetts students and their families," said Wilson in a statement.

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu

Rematch with the Orange

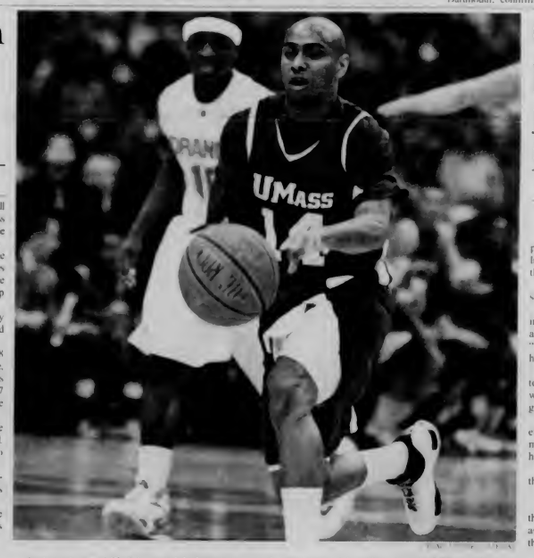
Trip to NIT semis at stake for Minutemen

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It may not be the way the Massachusetts men's basketball team hoped to stand at the beginning of the season, but UMass remains one win away from qualifying for the semifinals of the National Invitational Tournament at Madison Square Garden.

Before the Minutemen can look ahead, they must complete a feat that has never been accomplished before: win two games at the Garner Dome in one season. The Maroon and White travel to Syracuse, N.Y., tonight to face the Orange with a trip to MSG on the line.

The team's win over Akron at the Mullins Center Saturday marks UMass's second trip to the NIT quarterfinals. It reached the semifinals in 1991.



UMass (23-10) defeated Syracuse (21-13) on Nov. 28 before 20,644 hostile fans. The Minutemen outran the Orange, 107-100, in what was one of the team's original displays this season of the capabilities of its up-tempo offense. The 107 points was the most scored by a visiting team at the Dome since its inception in 1980.

"It's hard to beat a team twice, but we know that we're capable of doing it," junior point guard Chris Lowe said. "We're going to have to grind it out, just like you have to do this time of year."

The Minutemen certainly did not ride their defense to victory the first time around: the 100 points is most UMass has allowed this year.

But the Minutemen did what they like to do best: shoot the basketball. UMass took a season-high 73 field-goal attempts against Syracuse, including 31 from 3-point range.

See BASKETBALL on page 7

Junior point guard Chris Lowe and the Minutemen travel to Syracuse tonight with a trip to the NIT semi-finals on the line. Lowe's play has generated lofty comparisons to players such as LeBron James from opposing coaches this year.

Comparisons lofty for Lowe

Junior leads team with inspired play at point

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

LeBron James. John Stockton. Chris Lowe.

Wait, hold on.

How does Massachusetts point guard Chris Lowe possibly belong with perhaps the best talent in NBA history and one of the premier point guards ever to play the game?

Ask the man who coached LeBron James in high school, and he'll tell you.

"In my opinion, that's one of the best point guards in America," Akron coach Keith Dambrot said of Lowe, after UMass defeated his team in the NIT on Saturday. "He has a lot of the same attributes that LeBron James had when I coached him in high school.

"He's creating opportunities for everybody on that team," Dambrot added. "He just has that knack to make winning plays – on both ends of the floor. We tried to get two guys on Lowe, and we had our hands full."

Lowe didn't exactly carve up the Akron defense either. The junior floor general did have a solid performance with 17 points and five assists, but he's certainly had better games this season.

The game he had against Saint Louis on Feb. 17 at the Mullins Center was one of those times.

Billikens coach Rick Majerus certainly took notice. "Oh, he's very good," Majerus said after dropping the game to the Minutemen. "Obviously he had 13 assists and two turnovers, so the statistics speak for themselves – those are Stockton-esque statistics."

See LOWE on page 7

Journalists to discuss presidential election

With the media circus surrounding the 2008 election in full swing, a panel of journalists will discuss the coverage from the campaign trail in the Campus Center on Wednesday.

Hosted by the journalism program at the University of Massachusetts, national political correspondent for USA Today Jill Lawrence, deputy publisher of Governing Magazine Mark Stencel and faculty member Mary Carey, who covers local and national politics for the Daily Hampshire Gazette, will lead an open discussion of the media and the presidential election cycle.

"You have three pretty unique perspectives from the panelists," said Steve Fox, the panel moderator for the evening and a professor of journalism at UMass. "Lawrence is writing and blogging [from the campaign trail], Stencel has covered past campaigns and Carey has a local perspective, covering national issues on a local scale."

According to Fox, all three will be able to speak on how covering an election in which no single candidate has emerged for both parties by late March has effected their reporting as well as looking back at the missteps taken by the media throughout the election cycle.

"The goal is to make it interactive," Fox said. "These are people who are out there. It's imperative to hear about the people who are out there and [reporting]."

Fox called the current presidential cycle one of the tightest races ever, making the panel discussion a timely event.

"It's intense horse-race coverage," he said. "There are that many more Web sites and blogs. It's a lot more pressure and intensity."

The discussion will range from newly developed innovations in the election cycle, including major new Web sites, blogs and the skills needed by modern journalists to work across a multitude of mediums.

Fox will bring his own experience to the table as moderator. As a political reporter for the Washington Post, Fox covered both the 2000 and 2004 election cycles.

The discussion, open to the public, will focus more on journalism than political activism, according to Fox.

—Derrick Perkins

Wal-Mart forces competitive pricing

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Wal-Mart Supercenters affect the prices of conventional supermarkets located within a five-mile radius, resulting in lower prices for consumer goods, according to University of Massachusetts researchers.

Wal-Mart Supercenters have proved to help both individual shoppers and families save money when making purchases. Even though conventional supermarkets are lowering their prices as a response, prices remain lower at Wal-Mart Supercenters.

UMass resource economist Nathalie Lavoie and graduate student Richard Volpe were published in the spring 2008 issue of the Review of Agricultural Economics, explaining the results of a study they conducted about Supercenters.

For their study, Lavoie and Volpe collected price data on identical national brand goods and store brand goods from six Supercenters in Massachusetts, Connecticut and Rhode Island. In addition, they collected the same products from conventional supermarkets that are located in the same area. The products included dairy, frozen goods, health and beauty aids, meat, produce and dry grocery.

Lavoie said that from the results, she could conclude that "families that shop exclusively at supermarkets within five miles of a Supercenter can expect to save between $37 and $104 per person each year, since Wal-Mart will cause these stores to lower their prices."

Families that shop exclusively at Supercenters "can save $88 to $223 per person," Lavoie said.

For towns and cities that do not have a Supercenter nearby, the supermarket prices did not lower in response to the competition. Shoppers who are willing to travel away from these towns and cities to Supercenters can expect to save from $186 to $298 per person each year.

Wal-Mart is able to keep their prices low because of Everyday Low Pricing, a strategy in which all goods are marked up by the same percentage regardless of what price they were bought at. This eliminates the usage of coupons or waiting for sales to happen. Along with providing the consumers with cheaper products, it also cuts the manufacturers cost of producing coupons and helps reduce instability when it comes to production and shipping quantities.

Most supermarkets use a different method called "high-low pricing," in which most products are given a high price, but some products are more endorsed.

"Wal-Mart also has enormous buying power since they can buy huge quantities at a given time, which enables them to drive down prices that they pay manufacturers for goods," Lavoie said. "Supermarket chains in New England such as Stop & Shop and IGA are too small to pos-

See WAL-MART on page 3

Competition from large retailers such as Wal-Mart forces local businesses to lower prices in order to boost sales around the country.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 106

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3499 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sirkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Staigin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenzweike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1996. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Games

Nasal spray could improve memory

BY VIVIAN HO
THE DAILY FREE PRESS (BOSTON U.)

BOSTON — A nasal spray could help students remember more from those all-night cram sessions by reducing sleep deprivation's negative effects like short-term memory loss, recent research has shown.

The nasal spray improved short-term memory in animal tests and the spray's main component, Orexin-A, is a peptide found naturally in the brain, said Defense Advanced Research Projects Agency spokeswoman Jan Walker.

In studies, Orexin-A improved short-term memory, something that other research shows is negatively affected by sleep deprivation.

Though research on this particular nasal spray is in its early stages, and has not yet been tested on human beings and its side effects are unknown, scientists have tested Orexin-A on monkeys and received positive results, Walker said.

University of California at Los Angeles neuroscience researcher Jerome Siegel and his colleagues worked on the nasal spray and recently published a paper on their research results in the Journal of Neuroscience in December 2007, Walker said.

Despite the "success" of the drug in animal tests, Walker said DARPA has conducted the fundamental research of Orexin-A. She said the overall and side effects need to be addressed with clinical trials before the nasal spray could be generally available.

Walker said there is a difference between the nasal spray and other drugs containing the peptide, because research for the nasal spray "was not intending to show whether or not Orexin-A prevented or reduced sleepiness, but whether the substance ameliorated some of the cognitive deficits associated with sleep deprivation."

Although there is less research on the use Orexin-A in nasal sprays, the peptide's effects on sleep have been researched before, said Sleep Health Center Regional Medical Director Doug Kirsch.

PETER P. CHOW/COLLEGIAN

Researchers recently discovered a compound that could reduce memory loss from sleep deprivation. It could be administered to the body via a nasal spray, which could help students who study during all-night cram sessions.

Students experience poverty

BY MICHELLE FIRESTONE
THE DAILY CAMPUS (U. CONNECTICUT)

STORRS, Conn. — Students will experience what it's like to live on welfare by participating in UConn's first annual Food Stamp Challenge. The challenge is sponsored by the Public Interest Research Group (PIRG) as part of their Hunger and Homelessness campaign.

Nineteen people, including Barry Feldman, UConn vice president and chief operating officer, have signed up for the challenge, which will take place from March 30 to April 4. Participants will live off $4 a day during the six-day period. On March 29, the group will go to buy their food for the week.

PIRG hopes the challenge will increase students' awareness of the issue of hunger and homelessness.

"In 2007 alone, the Connecticut food stamps program served nearly 200,000 individuals," said Kathryn Post, a 4th-semester psychology and human development and family studies major, who is one of the co-coordinators of the campaign. "Those are really shocking numbers, but many people don't think twice about it because they aren't exposed to those problems on campus. So many of us have meal plans and have access to the dining halls all day long and we could eat all day if we wanted to, or if we could stomach it."

"I think it is going to be similar to the sleep out," said Chad Engle, an 8th-semester chemistry major participating in the challenge, in reference to an event that PIRG sponsors to raise awareness for the homeless. "I think it will be just as challenging and just as eye-opening," he said.

Engle, who has participated in numerous different campaign events, feels that PIRG has been very successful in educating and advocating about the issues of hunger and homelessness.

"One reason why people join PIRG is that instead of talking about an issue they want to make a change," he said. "I found personally the more you get out there and tell people about it, the more they'll want to do about it."

A few weeks ago, Engle and Post traveled to the state capital to lobby for a policy supporting the funding of 650 new supportive housing units in Connecticut. The policy, if approved, will increase Governor Jodi M. Rell's proposal of 150 housing units. ConnPIRG has also organized a conference entitled "Hungry for Change: CT Symposium on Hunger and Homelessness" to be held on Saturday, April 5 from 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. in the Merlin Bishop Center. According to PIRG's Web site, the conference will "work to raise awareness of the current and growing issues of hunger and homelessness in Connecticut and beyond." PIRG is looking to get participants from the various different area councils on campus. Organizations such as CT Housing Coalition, Habitat for Humanity and Partnerships for Strong Communities will be in attendance.

In addition to events, PIRG conducts numerous fundraisers for local charities and soup kitchens. One of their biggest fundraisers is the Swipe-A-Meal Campaign, which they hold every year. In this campaign, students donate $2 by swiping one of their flex passes. This semester, the campaign raised almost $12,000 for local charities and shelters, exceeding the $10,000 goal PIRG set.

Leaders consider ban of alcohol vaporizers

BY JILL LASTER
KENTUCKY KERNEL (U. KENTUCKY)

(U-WIRE) LEXINGTON, Ky. — Students looking for a new way to get a buzz may have to cross state lines if a proposed law passes the state Senate.

A bill that would ban Alcohol Without Liquid, a machine that vaporizes alcohol and mixes it with oxygen, passed a Senate panel last week. The machine produces a mist that over 20 minutes is equal to taking one shot of distilled spirits.

Alcohol Without Liquid is already banned in 21 other states, including Ohio, Indiana and Tennessee.

Rep. Susan Westrom, D-Lexington, said one of the reasons she sponsored House Bill 202 is that the company selling Alcohol Without Liquid is marketing to college students. The device has undergone no governmental testing, so it could be extremely dangerous, she said.

"How many college-age students read the fine print when they have a good time?" Westrom said. "It just doesn't happen."

The company's Web site, which calls Alcohol Without Liquid "the most exciting thing to happen to people who like to party since the discovery of alcohol," says the device gives users a new, low-calorie way to enjoy alcohol. It also says the product is completely safe.

"It combines alcohol with extra oxygen to produce a cloudy alcohol vapor, which can be safely inhaled," the site said. "The impact is immediate. The effect is lasting and hangovers are history."

No representative for the company could be reached by press time.

Out of 50 students asked in the White Hall Classroom Building Friday, five said they had heard of Alcohol Without Liquid. None said they had tried it.

Tennis elbow a chronic injury

BY PRIYAMVADA GUPTA
THE TARTAN (CARNEGIE MELLON U.)

PITTSBURGH, Pa. — At times, even the best of players may fall prey to an injury they never cared to check. Tennis elbow is one such injury which can affect anyone and, if overlooked, may lead to chronic pain refraining the injured from lifting or gripping objects.

As the name suggests, playing tennis is one of the main causes of tennis elbow, but many other activities that involve repetitive actions of the hand or wrist, like using a screwdriver, hammering, painting, raking and weaving, can also lead to the injury.

Tennis elbow mainly affects the outer surface of the elbow bone. It is caused due to overuse of the forearm muscle. Researchers believe that two most common causes of the condition are lateral epicondylitis and radial tunnel syndrome.

Lateral epicondylitis is caused due to repeated contractions of the forearm muscle. The forearm muscle is in action when the arm is raised or straightened. The main areas affected in the injury are the muscle and tendon areas, which are attached to the outside bony formation of the elbow.

Doctors suggest that lateral epicondylitis may be a degenerative process as a result of aging or repetitive swinging of the arm. Constant rubbing of the bone against the muscle causes abrasion of the tissues. This creates an area that has a smaller chance of healing because it has insufficient access to nutrients and oxygen due to inadequate blood flow. Consequently, there is a degeneration of the tendon demonstrated by small tears and inflammation.

The second reason behind tennis elbow, radial tunnel syndrome, is the compression of a nerve fiber within the forearm. This is the main nerve involved in operating several muscles around the hand and wrist.

Regardless of how the patient acquires tennis elbow, the first few weeks are almost disabling. In the beginning, when the injury is fresh, patients experience sudden pain that radiates from the outside of the elbow into the forearm and wrist. The pain worsens when the person squeezes something in his or her hand or turns a doorknob. If the wrist is moved with force, or is strained by any attempt of stabilizing it by force, the pain can become almost unbearable.

It takes just a few weeks for the pain to get worse, to such an extent that it may hurt even when a person's arm is still.

Men and women are equally likely to suffer from tennis elbow. Tennis elbow usually affects the dominant arm of an individual. For example, a right-handed person will more likely be injured in the right hand, though in around 25 percent of the cases, it may affect the non-dominant arm.

Tennis elbow is commonly seen in two groups of people – manual laborers and sports participants, especially racket sport players. Interestingly, 95 percent of the reported cases are of non-players.

Maha Mahmoud, a junior in the Carnegie Mellon University Tepper School of Business, shared her experience with tennis elbow as a teen.

"I suffered from tennis elbow after I served assuming an incorrect posture," Mahmoud said. "It took an entire month of regular physiotherapy, and absolutely no tennis, for me to recover."

Combating the soph. slump

Housing program promises to improve academic performance

BY TIM HOFFINE
THE LANTERN (OHIO STATE U.)

COLUMBUS, Ohio — Sophomores slumping and muddling through their second year has long been a topic of discussion – even during Ohio State University President Gordon Gee's college days.

But now some higher education experts said a lack of university support could be partly to blame for sophomores underachieving or not eventually graduating, creating what they call a "lost year."

"For first-year students, there is a lot of focus on them, a lot of celebrating their arrival on campus," said Sue Mosley-Howard, dean of students at Miami University in Oxford.

Miami University will begin requiring sophomores to live on campus next fall, and sophomore-specific programs are being developed.

"We really make sure first-year students feel welcome, we cater to them, we develop a lot of programming around them. And at a lot of colleges that drops off after freshman year," she said.

Gee recently proposed requiring OSU sophomores to live on campus, and Student Affairs Vice President Richard Hollingsworth indicated sophomore-specific programs could follow. Experts say such steps could help regain the "lost year."

No one is saying OSU suffers from a "sophomore slump" or a "lost year," even though the university is considering taking action.

"I don't have enough evidence to know [if such a problem exists]," Gee said, adding that "in my days" sophomore slumps were a topic of discussion.

"We're doing great things in our freshman year, and trends look very good throughout the four-year experience," Gee said. "I'm very focused on putting our students first, and that's one of the reasons I made that proposal."

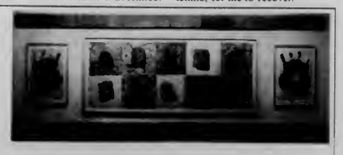
Gee stressed his proposal was designed to help build community at OSU, rather than address a specific sophomore problem.

Building community, though, is one way to address sophomore struggles.

Molly Schaller, an OSU graduate and assistant professor at the University of Dayton who researches second-year college experiences, said universities typically offer programs that help freshmen pick majors and get acquainted with the university, but none that support commitment to their majors or help students strengthen their identity with the university.

Schaller said a second-year residency requirement – when combined with tailored academic, professional and social services – could advance the "academic integration and social integration" crucial to student persistence toward graduation.

"How do we get them in a major, and how do we make them feel successful in their major? That's academic integration," Schaller said. "The residency requirement is a component of social integration. Making Ohio State feel like it is 'my' place. People to study with, people to struggle with, that's what the residence life requirement is all about. You increase those things, and retention rates shoot through the roof."



While Gee said Ohio State already enjoys high retention rates, Hollingsworth and Provost Joseph Alutto pointed to other areas where OSU could improve.

During January's Board of Trustees meeting, the two described how programs such as living and learning communities could support on-campus residence life. They also pointed toward increased student safety and academic support, such as tutoring and leadership opportunities, as added benefits of requiring students to live on campus.

And Hollingsworth said sophomore-specific support could be on the way.

"Housing more students on campus, including sophomores, will certainly provide the opportunity to enhance existing services and to create new programs specifically designed to support second-year students," he said in an e-mail.

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413 585 2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons, Cuban, 1959– Birth Certificate, 1991. Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925, Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Gustanini.

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

New lice treatment developed

UMass researchers discover possible key to ending ailment

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A growing resistance to over-the-counter and prescription drug treatments developing in head lice has led doctors and scientists in pursuit of an end-all solution to this perennial childhood affliction.

Researchers at the University of Massachusetts have now discovered that ivermectin – a compound used to treat intestinal worms and parasites – may hold the key to stopping head lice.

Head lice are resisting currently used treatments because medications are "using compounds that all act on the same part of the louse's nervous system," said John Marshall Clark, a UMass professor of Veterinary and Animal Sciences.

Ivermectin proved 100 percent effective at killing head lice in a recent study conducted by Clark.

Clark and his team of researchers tested ivermectin on a strain of lice collected from school children in Florida. The particular strain that they used showed resistance to permethrin, the insecticide used as the active ingredient in many over-the-counter treatments.

Compounding the problem of lice becoming resistant to current treatments, many of those same treatments pose a danger risk if not used properly.

"Since most people find head lice intolerable, they often repeatedly apply insecticides without realizing their potential harm if overused or misapplied," Clark said in a statement.

According to Clark, these insecticides would have to be overused on a grand scale to be harmful because they have a chronic, rather than acute toxicity. This means that the harmful effects only occur following a long build up of exposure to the toxin, rather than immediately after any exposure to the toxin.

Using ivermectin in treatments may bypass both of these problems associated with current treatments.

In Clark's study, ivermectin was mixed with water, olive oil, shea butter and other ingredients in order to put the treatment into a form that can be applied to the skin or scalp. The product was 100 percent effective in killing the lice after just 10 minutes. The topical mixture of ingredients even made the product more effective, which might indicate that it allowed the ivermectin to penetrate the lice more easily.

The advantage of ivermectin is that its rapid effectiveness would keep people from overusing it, and it is not well-absorbed through the skin. This makes it less harmful in externally used products.

The potential harm of chronic exposure to toxins, according to Clark, is shown in lice-killing pesticides such as malathion. This pesticide is used in the treatment Ovoide, and contains organophosphates, "which when overused produces organophosphate induced delayed neuropathy (OPIDN). This is when cells in the nervous system start degrading," said Clark.

Head lice affects 12 million people in the U.S. per year, mainly children. Unfortunately, children are also more susceptible to the harmful products in treatments.

"Children are usually more susceptible to toxins because they don't metabolize them as quickly. Also, they are still developing so their nervous systems are going through change," said Clark.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

Retailers struggle against Wal-Mart

WAL-MART from page 1

sess such power, which gives Wal-Mart a significant cost advantage."

Plans for a Wal-Mart Supercenter to be built in Hadley have recently fallen through, leaving students with mixed feelings towards whether they would rather shop at a Supercenter with lower prices or a local supermarket with higher cost goods.

UMass sophomore Tara Williams said, "I would rather go to a local grocery store and get better quality while supporting the local community. I hate Wal-Mart just because it is monopolizing the economy and prohibiting the opportunity for small family businesses from making it in the economy."

UMass sophomore Erin O'Connor previously wrote a paper on how Wal-Mart is able to keep their prices so low. She was not happy with what she found.

"When I did research, I found it quite disturbing how Wal-Mart treated their employees and paid them so little or denied them benefits," she said. "I try my hardest to avoid shopping at Wal-Mart and giving them business, because I know now how evil of a company it is and I do not want to support that."

Although it is a fact that some students would rather support local businesses that shop at big chains, it is also a fact that individuals and families can save money if they shop at Wal-Mart.

"We conclude that Wal-Mart Supercenters have a positive effect on the welfare of price-sensitive consumers," said Lavoie.

Alyssa Montalbano can be reached at amontalb@student.umass.edu.

Progress from negotiations

PROPOSAL from page 1

chancellor on diversity issues, including recruiting students of diverse backgrounds to come to UMass, as well as increasing community outreach.

STUDENT SPACE

Student groups will be able to use audio/video equipment in the Campus Center and Student Union buildings for a reduced fee. Strike leaders had demanded "student control over student space," asking for affordable or free use of the campus buildings for student groups.

"We expect to work more closely with the students' Campus Center Student Union Commission concerning student use of space in those statements," Cole said in his statement.

"It's by no means done," Buford said of the negotiation process. "I think it's the beginning."

He added that "a part of the process was institutionalizing" the negotiations, allowing students more of a voice in campus affairs. Students will continue negotiating with representatives of the administration on a monthly basis.

Buford also said that until students feel their demands have been met, the negotiations will continue along the same lines of financial aid, diversity, police presence and student space issues.

Buford described the negotiations and proposal as a "significant start" and said that the school is on a path toward "significant change on campus."

The proposal was passed during the SGA elections earlier this month, was contingent upon the fee increase. The proposal will be officially signed in an open SGA meeting on April 2.

Elizabeth Howley can be reached at ehowley@student.umass.edu.

Mexico becomes world's 2nd fattest country

Fast food fuels shift to unhealthy lifestyles

BY FRANCO ORDONEZ
MCCLATCHY NEWSPAPERS

MEXICO CITY — Fueled by the rising popularity of soft drinks and fast-food restaurants, Mexico has become the second fattest nation in the world. Mexican health officials say it could surpass the U.S. as the most obese country within 10 years if trends continue.

More than 71 percent of Mexican women and 66 percent of Mexican men are overweight, according to the latest national surveys.

With diabetes now Mexico's leading cause of death, activists and leaders hope to renew efforts to crack down on junk food and other fatty-food consumption and encourage citizens to exercise more. But it will be a tough battle, as industry groups are expected to put up a fight.

No one knows better the country's affection for fattening foods than Lidia Garcia Garduno, who's run a fruit stand in central Mexico City for the past 10 years.

"People don't eat right anymore," said Garcia Garduno, mixing a drink of strawberries and pineapple. "Instead of coming here and purchasing a fruit drink, they prefer to walk across the street and buy fried pork chips. That's why so many Mexicans are obese."

In 1989, fewer than 10 percent of Mexican adults were overweight. No one in the country even talked about obesity back then, said Barry Popkin, a University of North Carolina-Chapel Hill professor who studies global weight gain. Experts were too concerned with poverty and hunger.

"It certainly snuck up on them," said Popkin, who's working with the Mexican health ministry to develop strategies to address obesity throughout the country. "Mexico has probably had the most rapid increase of obesity in the last 15 years."

Mexican Health Secretary Jose Cordova, who launched a new health campaign Feb. 25, agrees. "We have to put the brakes on this obesity problem."

Some Mexicans say there's less space on an already crowded Mexico City subway because riders are getting larger. At a flea market in the south of the city, vendors hawk clothes brought from the United States made for overweight individuals.

Francisco Princegali knew he was eating too much junk food when he bent down last week and heard a tear.

"I ripped my pants because of the fat," said Princegali, who's 20, crumbling up a wrapper of sweetened bread he'd purchased from a vendor. "I think I'm addicted to junk food."

Princegali, sucking in his stomach, said that many of his pants were too tight these days. Some people are addicted to alcohol and smoking, he said. "My problem is I love fried chicken – Kentucky Fried Chicken."

As in the United States, Mexicans are living more sedentary lives. Studies show that they're eating more fat and processed foods, and fewer whole grains and vegetables. Foods – healthy and unhealthy – that once were unavailable now can be purchased at new modern supermarkets. In some areas of the country, it's easier to get a soft drink than a clean glass of water. The vast majority of Mexico City's public schools, and many private schools, lack drinkable water, Popkin said.

The national study also found that a quarter of Mexican children ages 5 to 11 are too heavy, a 40 percent increase since 2000.

According to the government's National Institute of Public Health, the consumption of soft drinks increased 60 percent in Mexico over the last 14 years.

Last week, children lined up to purchase soft drinks and potato chips outside their school in the center of Mexico City.

Virginia Soriano, 35, said it was difficult teaching her children good eating habits when they were flooded with advertising for fatty foods. Naomi, her daughter, says her favorite things to eat are McDonald's Chicken McNuggets and Coca-Cola. The 6-year-old sometimes pushes away her dinner plate if it has too many vegetables, Soriano said.

"She'll say, 'This has no taste,'" Soriano said. "She wants McDonald's or Kentucky Fried Chicken."

Legislators have considered putting warning labels on junk food and taxing whole milk to encourage consumption of skim milk. Past efforts, however, have foundered, and some lawmakers have reported difficulty fighting powerful industry groups. In 2006, legislators voted down a proposed tax on soft drinks, arguing that it discriminated against the poor. Leaders hope that the growing concern over diabetes will lead to greater public acceptance of such efforts.

PepsiCo joined the education ministry last year in launching a new health program, "Living Healthily," that encourages more daily exercise and better eating habits. But consumer group El Poder del Consumidor, "Power of the Consumer," has accused the company of surreptitiously marketing its products to children.

Monica Bauer, a spokeswoman for PepsiCo International, said that the program, which includes a video game that teaches healthy eating habits, didn't include any advertising.

"We understand there is an obesity problem," she said. "We're trying to be part of the solution."

Welcome Back
to Your Award Winning Dining Services!

MARCH - APRIL - MAY Upcoming Events

MARCH 27 ..... Spring Fever
APRIL 2 ..... Visiting College Chef Series: Stanford
WEEK OF MARCH 31—APRIL 4 AMERICAN PRODUCE WEEK
APRIL 10 ..... Visiting College Chef Series: Ohio State
APRIL 11 – 14 ..... Family Weekend
APRIL 16 ..... Visiting College Chef Series: Harvard
APRIL 14 – 17 ..... Student Iron Chef Competition
APRIL 2 – 25 ..... Cooking/Baking 101
APRIL 24 ..... Taste of UMass
MAY 1 ..... Taste of Home
MAY (TBA) ..... Spring BBQ
MAY 15 ..... Midnight Buffet

www.umass.edu/diningservices
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Dining Award
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy

Constantine's Sword

The Church, the Jews, and the roots of religious intolerance

Former Catholic priest James Carroll is on a journey…

FILM: Focusing on Christian antisemitism as a prototype of religious intolerance, this film brings to life the history of religious violence that threatens the world today.

SPEAKER: A discussion after the film will be introduced by Dr. Philip Cunningham, a member of the advisory committee on Catholic-Jewish relations for the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Thursday, March 27 at 7:00 pm
School of Management Room 137
UMass Amherst

Free with UMass I.D.
More information at www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Newman Catholic Center, The Ark Episcopal Center, and Student Affairs and Campus Life, in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Climbing Mt. Sinai

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

It takes a muscular physique and a dogged mindset to conquer one of the more difficult challenges of touring Egypt. This past weekend, I luckily possessed the latter trait (unfortunately not the former) when faced with a particularly arduous task.

No, the challenge was not trying to consume 15 shawerma pitas in less than five minutes, although I have considered organizing this competition. Rather, it was hiking up Mount Sinai, the famous mountain in the Bible where Moses was said to have received God's 10 commandments.

The journey my friends and I underwent to reach the top of the mountain consisted of walking 3,750 steps in about two and a half hours. Surrounding us throughout the ascension was a magnificent landscape consisting of deep valleys, sharp ridges and rocky peaks.

It was all so spectacular that it appeared as though only a creator could have constructed such a surreal environment.

At one point we stopped at a small plateau and decided to remain silent for a short period of time. The brief serenity that followed, consisting of no sounds, no movement, no hint of any civilization, but instead cushioned by majestic mountains, created a sense that there was, indeed, someone watching all of us from above.

Once at the top of Mt. Sinai, we positioned ourselves near a cliff and watched the picturesque sunset descend behind a large mountain range. The final hint of sunlight vanishing from behind a mountain peak was the ideal end to our exploration.

Previously that day, we had visited St. Katherine's Monastery, first established in 330 AD and located near what is believed to be the burning bush from which God talked to Moses. One of the oldest Christian churches in the entire world, it is still a functioning monastery in which 22 monks currently reside and practice.

Amidst the tragic political divisions in the Middle East, I realized instantly that smiling is a great liberator.

The day before arriving at Mount Sinai and St. Katherine's Monastery, our group had visited Dahab, a popular tourist destination bordering the Red Sea. We relaxed on a beach near our hotel, absorbing the sunlight and listening to the gentle blue waves in complete silence.

The imposing mountains of Saudi Arabia were within close viewing distance across the sea. At night, the soft sounds of the water calmly rebounding off the base of our verandas epitomized the tranquil essence of Dahab.

Back in Zamalek, the main international student housing dormitory, I am helping to organize a discussion about the Israeli-Palestinian conflict for this upcoming Wednesday night.

Assisted by two Palestinian friends, we hope to facilitate a dialogue about the peace process, terrorism and political remedies to the current crisis by encouraging students from all political, ethnic and religious affiliations to participate in the discussion. I have been emphasizing to concerned students that professors, politicians and religious figures should not take part in events such as this one.

Too often these people's opinions are shackled by conflicts of interest, past grudges against certain ethnic groups, or blind adherence to empty platitudes. An Israeli politician or Hamas terrorist may wield more political influence than college students right now. But the future of the peace process and the survival of innocent civilians depends exclusively on these college students who are our leaders of tomorrow.

This is why it is important to hold discussions regarding life and death issues such as the Israeli-Palestinian conflict without the presence of demagogues who are driven by passion and polemics, rather than by reason and logic. Public policy dictated by emotions tends to favor just one government-designated group of people, with little consideration for those outside of that group.

In regards to highly contentious issues such as the Middle East peace process, public policy should be shaped exclusively by decisions that will provide the best conditions for permanent peace for the greatest number of people, regardless of ethnicity or race.

Hopefully, the discourse generated by students this Wednesday will express opinions in accordance with this principle. In any case, I feel that the private setting, absent from any pompous academics or polemical demagogues, is an ideal environment to produce meaningful dialogue.

A different type of dialogue has taken place weekly inside the classrooms where I, along with my co-teacher, Carrie, teach English to Iraqi and Sudanese refugees every Sunday.

This sort of discussion, however, does not pertain to political processes, but rather, concerns pronouncing the word "enthusiastic" and other difficult vocabulary correctly. The Iraqi and Sudanese students are very smart – many are engineers and computer scientists, and are able to absorb the words and grammatical structures quickly.

Our class has a very congenial atmosphere; we laugh and make fun of each other constantly. For instance, this past Sunday I gave a flower to an Iraqi engineer named Hayder in the middle of class after he played the part of a fictional woman in a dialogue of a student workbook. Everyone in the class burst out laughing.

Amidst the tragic political divisions in the Middle East, I realized instantly that smiling is a great liberator.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

Label me American

John Gruenenfelder

I come to you today as the son of a mixed race couple, of a white father and a Hispanic mother. And yet, I feel allegiance to neither. I look at my father and say, yes, he is white. And I look upon my mother and say, yes, she is Hispanic.

Yet I, the child of both, am neither. I am not white, nor am I Hispanic. I am both. I am not a Mexican-American, nor a white-American. Rather, I am just an American.

This is, I believe, something rather unique to our nation. If I had to assign a label, I suppose I would be a Mexican-American, but that does not begin to tell the whole truth.

I am devoutly sectarian, and devoutly American. I read the Constitution and the Bill of Rights and see those words (of, originally, unilaterally white opinion) as the closest thing I can consider as gospel.

History easily shows us that we have not always followed those guidelines. It took almost 100 years after the Constitution was written for Lincoln to deliver the Emancipation Proclamation that granted equal rights to all people. And it was another 100 years before we actually accepted that proclamation.

I admit that my rhetoric is brought forth by an eloquent speech made by Barack Obama. Even if you have no intention of voting for him, you could nary spend 40 minutes worse than listening to his speech on YouTube.

Many pundits and columnists have labeled it as the best political speech since JFK's speech on his Catholicism. Having listened to it, it is hard to disagree. It is a wonderful speech about what this country is and what it still hopes to become.

Of all our creeds and ethics, have we not formed a single country?

To be honest, I have never felt like an outcast. Though my last name of Gruenenfelder might lead you to think otherwise, I am indeed half Hispanic, or Mexican, or Latino or whatever. I look at my father and he is most definitely white. I look at my mother and she is most definitely Hispanic. Yet I am neither.

Of course, I grew up and spent my first 25 years in the Southwest. Surely this will color my opinion. Arizona has, especially of late, not looked fondly at its mixed heritage, but it is there nonetheless.

I do not feel put off by this. Rather, I consider myself an American. I am a product of those who came before me. I read the Constitution and wholeheartedly believe that our forefathers had remarkably forward thinking ideals – ideals which I believe in and wish to uphold.

I am not white, nor am I Hispanic. I am both, and I am an American. A wholly unique demographic shared by those people who are children of this land, half native, half immigrant or otherwise. I feel no less American than those who have lived here for five generations. Indeed, my Hispanic grandmother has just become a great great grandmother. Is she no less American than I?

My Hispanic grandfather speaks with a decidedly Mexican accent, fought bravely in World War II in the European theater, and spent his career as a miner.

Despite his accent, is he less of an American? Certainly not. Nor is my white grandfather who fought in the Pacific theater. They both placed their lives on the line for this nation, something I cannot say the same of myself.

Locally, we have non-white American influences. Our library, the most easily recognizable structure on campus, is named after W.E.B. Du Bois, a prominent African American. And yet, having traveled the halls of the library, there is little to relate to the person other than his name.

I enjoy greatly the freedoms I am afforded in this country. Our land is not without its faults, something anybody who keeps up with the news is readily aware, yet I would no sooner denounce my citizenship than I would stop breathing.

I am frequently reminded of our nation's original and supremely appropriate motto, "E Pluribus Unum." Out of many, one. If you look at the broad cross-section of our nation, is that motto, chosen hundreds of years ago in 1782, not still appropriate? Of all our creeds and ethics, have we not formed a single country?

My father is American, as are my grandfathers, my mother and my grandmothers. I feel no allegiance to my Mexican roots any more than I do to my distant European roots in Sweden. I do not disown my heritage, but personally, the here and now have always held greater importance to me.

As Senator Obama stated in his speech, race relations are "a part of our union that we have not yet made perfect." We can, if we try, make this a more perfect union. Remember that we are a nation of one from many. E Pluribus Unum.

John Gruenenfelder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jgruenen@student.umass.edu

Vatican makes sinning a whole lot easier

Joshua H. Wilder

I believe it was Bob Dylan who once wrote, "The sins they are a-changing."

Well, maybe not. But that is what he would be singing today in lieu of the Vatican's new list of seven additional sins. Released earlier this month, this updated list of no-nos tackles some topics that may surprise you.

Surely everyone remembers the oldies but goodies: lust, gluttony and envy, but what about thou shall be aware of genetic manipulation? Thou shall not pollute the earth?

According to the Vatican, in this new, global era, people need to consider that sin is not just based around the individual, but is in fact a societal construct. New vices to avoid today also include violating others' fundamental human rights, inflicting poverty and accumulating excessive wealth.

Just for clarification, this doesn't mean that the rest of us are off the hook now when it comes to the original sins, you slackers. According to Papal University's Father Gerald O'Collins, the original sins are still relevant and important.

Sloth, for example, condemns being disengaged and not getting involved in helping others. This issue is still relevant today, especially in big cities where people may not help fellow citizens in trouble. People collaborate by doing nothing, he said, and that is still an attitude that needs to be changed.

Still, despite the often times sensationalized coverage of the new sins on shows like Good Morning America and The View, this humble columnist believes that this updated list is actually an interesting and refreshing way to look at our responsibility to both one another and the environment.

For clarification, the best way to inspire change in people is not, contrary to the Vatican's mantra, to tell them that they are going straight to hell. Not to say that you cannot use fear as a tool to induce change in people; it has been done for hundreds of years by dictatorships and even bullies on the playground.

Scaring someone into doing something for you is a tried and true method to get what you want. There is nothing groundbreaking in that. The interesting thing about the new sins is that they really attempt to promote a better society for all people, not just Catholics or the Pope.

One major focus of the new list is on the environment, which is perhaps the biggest shock of them all. According to the Vatican, environmental irresponsibility is a new sin to focus on because it affects all people. In this new, modern world, our sins have a much greater social impact, he said.

If you drive a Hummer around all day, guzzling gas and polluting the air just so you can try and get a date, your actions have a negative impact on everyone. It makes it harder for that nice old lady to breathe through the smog coming out of your tank.

Promoting something to help the masses? That is a pretty heady idea, especially considering where it came from.

It uses up more gasoline and adds to the demand, making us all pay more at the pump. And you are contributing to global warming, melting the polar ice caps and eventually sinking states like Florida underwater. Thanks a lot, bro.

It seems as though the Vatican is actually pursuing something that would benefit all humans, animals and everything else in this world, instead of just going after its own best interest. Promoting something to help the masses? That is a pretty heady idea, especially considering where it came from.

Consider the fact that the Catholic Church had no problem torturing and killing anyone who disagreed with them; take the Crusades, for example. Unfortunately, they usually don't stand out as beacons for human rights.

But to see them put out this list that tries to help the environment and improve living conditions for people across the world is a pleasant surprise.

Granted, for what it's worth, the whole thing may just be lip service. For one thing, these sins aren't new – the church has already condemned accumulating excessive wealth for centuries, by that Jesus fellow for one.

Plus, the sins don't replace the old seven, making it even harder for many people to follow them all. Most people are lazy.

In the end, the whole thing may equal out to nothing more than a good publicity move by the Vatican. It seems to me that these sins are here to remind the world that sin has a social dimension, and that our actions can have a huge impact on others.

All and all, it seems like a valuable lesson to heed, taken with a grain of salt and 100 Hail Marys.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu

"I can't believe how amazing the Collegian is. If I weren't running for president I would totally hawk my opinions on the Ed/Op page."

-Hilary Clinton

Lucky for you, we've only got space for students.

Send us your manifestos:

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dinosaurs 'Walking' to the Mullins Center

Unique live experience brings extinct creatures to UMass

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

There is something about dinosaurs that brings out the kid in many people. Films like "Jurassic Park" have thrived by tapping into that state of wonderment when it comes to the long-extinct beast. Now there is an all new live show that brings the dinosaurs back like never before.

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience," is a 90-minute journey that features 15 life-size dinosaur puppets walking around the arena in a realistic history lesson that chronicles the Triassic, Jurassic and Cretaceous.

Based on the award-winning BBC documentary of the same name, "Walking with Dinosaurs" storms into the Mullins Center for seven shows over four days starting on March 27.

Justin Terry, a 2007 graduate of the University of Northern Colorado with a degree in theater, knows better then most what goes through a dinosaur's head. Terry is the suit captain as well as a performer for the show. Running a small team of five, he and "his boys" are the performers inside the suits of the three Raptors, one Lilliensternus and the baby T-Rex.

"When I graduated [I] went to an acting show case in Los Angeles and the casting director [for "Walking with Dinosaurs"] was there," said Terry in a phone interview. "He looked over my resume and a couple of things on there were what they were looking for. The director called me and I did an audition. He told me some of the perks of the job and I got it.

"I never really had a plan after college but I never saw me playing a dinosaur – that's for sure," he said. "The first couple of months on tour I would be backstage waiting to go onstage and looking out through the dinosaur suit and realize, 'So this is my life right now.'"

As suit captain, Terry deals with the upper management as well as setting schedules and training. The five small dinosaurs are all self contained puppet units, meaning one person per suit. From the inside the puppeteer performer controls body, eyes, mouth and sound effects.

"When I first got here, we did a month and a half of training ... We actually still train about four or five times a week," Terry said. "There's a lot of leg and core training, because each suit has 80 to 100 pounds [of weight]. We have to learn to move very quickly without injuring ourselves."

The larger dinosaurs, which include the Plateosaurus, Stegosaurus, Brachiosaurus and the Tyrannosaurus Rex, are controlled by a team of three. One driver and two others up in the "voodoo lounge" that control head and tail motion and one in charge or minor movements including mouth, blinking and roars. The voodoo lounge which is basically a crows nest, houses the controls through animatronic wireless puppetry.

The larger dinosaurs weigh in at approximately 1.6 tons, about the size of a standard family car, and run on 7 kilowatts of power from 12 truck batteries. They also house 24 microprocessors, along with 15 hydraulic rams and six hydraulic motors and run on six roller blade wheels.

"The first time I went backstage, it was pretty awe-inspiring," Terry said. "Now I'm pretty used to it, but people on backstage tours are taken back and it reminds you that these are really impressive."

The five smaller dinosaurs are completely controlled by the single person inside. To perfect the movement of the dinosaurs, the members of Terry's crew watch documentaries and birds.

"We don't have a dino expert to tell us what to do," said Terry. "We watch documentaries that say how we think they moved based on bone and muscle structure. We also watch birds walking for strides."

Terry does admit that there are some liberties he can take in his performance because he is in a suit.

"Since I'm in a suit I feel like I can get away with a lot more because people don't know what I look like," said Terry.

He admits that it's hard to explain a show like this without visuals – even when he is telling old friends what he is doing now.

"I pretty much tell them I'm a dinosaur and they assume I'm Barney," said Terry. "I tell them to go to YouTube and look at it and they are really impressed. It's a show that's really hard to explain if you don't have visuals. People don't know how to take you saying you are in a dinosaur show."

Terry is still surprised by the sheer number of people who have come out to see the show in the year it has been touring.

"The amount of people it has brought in I never imagined," Terry said. "I never thought I would have performed for over a million people so far. And not a single one has seen my face. Knowing you are performing for five to eight thousand people at a time is remarkable.

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience," begins with shows March 27 and 28 at 7 p.m. There are three shows March 29 at 11 a.m., 3 p.m. and 7 p.m. and two final shows on March 30 at 1 and 5 p.m. Tickets are available through the Mullins Center box office or through Ticketmaster and run $30 to $70.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskill@collegian.com

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience"

Mullins Center

March 27
7 p.m.

March 28
7 p.m.

March 29
11 a.m. 3, 7 p.m.

March 30
1, 5 p.m.

$30-$70

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience," is a 90-minute show that features 15 life-sized dinosaurs which are both fully animatronic and people in suits. A series of seven shows in four days begins on Thursday.

A Fine Frenzy brightens NoHo

By Heather Waxman
Collegian Staff

A few days after many Americans gathered around their television sets to watch the latest contestant get the boot on "American Idol," 23-year-old Alison Sudol performed for her own herd of fans, lighting up the stage of Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall on Saturday.

Sudol, who goes by the stage name "A Fine Frenzy" via Shakespeare's "A Midsummer Night's Dream," pranced her way on stage in a multi-patterned vintage dress and matching cowboy boots.

Her set kicked off with a spellbinding introduction from keyboardist Stephen Leblanc. Sudol sat down to the piano, her red hair coruscating beneath the dim lights. With a nod of her head, the first song, "Come on Come Out," emerged and guitarist drummer Jesse Siebenberg joined in the mix.

Hunched over her porcelain piano, a mirror-image of her pale skin, her crimson-colored head playfully bobbed up and down.

Sudol's charming persona made her a genuine crowd favorite. She periodically glanced out towards the crowd, flashing a mesmerizing half-smile and batting her fragile lashes. She manifested a contagious euphoria which made a smooth transition through her music.

The ethereal songstress handled herself with a quirky sense of grace. In response to chants of "You're so cute," and "I want to take you home," she flashed a million-dollar grin masked beneath a giggle and modestly said, "Well, thank you very much ... I'm very flattered and um ... blushing."

An obvious crowd pleaser was "Almost Lover," the first single off her debut album, "One Cell in the Sea."

"I was 19, and it was one of those summers," Sudol said, before gingerly stroking the first chord.

She invited the audience to croon along to the lyrics. "So long my luckless romance/my back is turned on you/should've known you'd bring me heartache/almost lovers always do." With the song's denouement came ear-piercing cheers and endless rounds of applause.

Despite her spine-chilling rendition of "Almost Lover," an even more captivating ballad seemed to resonate with the audience. "Ashes in Wine" literally echoed from the speakers. The ending result was utter silence followed by an eruption of cheers, accompanied by a standing ovation from a few of the seated audience members.

The songbird clearly has a passion for mellow-dramatic ballads, as she even included an instrumental that she created in her living room and uses to put her to sleep.

"You all might fall asleep on each other, but that's okay, we'll just wake you up again," she said with a smile.

She did however mix it up a bit with the catchy, head-bopping tune "Think of You." The slightly-humorous "Liar, Liar" contained an accordion-inspired introduction then quickly gained traction with a catchy drumbeat.

She playfully trilled, "Liar, liar you're such a great big liar with the tallest tales that I have ever heard."

Being A Fine Frenzy's first headlining tour, the band encountered more wiggle room. It surprised the crowd with two covers, one placed earlier in the set, the other scoring a spot in the encore.

The latter, Death Cab for Cutie's "I Will Follow You into the Dark," possessed a unique take on love. She stepped away from the piano and stood in front the microphone, hands clasped securely over her heart. The crowd ate it up.

The former was a Beatles' classic. She told the crowd, "I had the pleasure of singing this with the great Rufus Wainwright and Sean Lennon in Denver, so we thought why not cover the Beatles' 'Across the Universe?'" After a few gasps, the tune began while the audience gladly accompanied her on.

The dimple-stricken beauty managed to sneak away from the piano twice more, once during "Borrowed Time," in which she pranced around the stage circa Ella Fitzgerald.

The second was a look into the future with the first song off her sophomore album entitled, "What I Wouldn't Do." Sudol propped her acoustic guitar on her lap and took the crowd back to the days of Johnny Cash and June Carter with her old-fashioned lyrics, "Oh what I wouldn't do/if I had you, babe/if I had you."

The Iron Horse was filled to the brim with small round tables. With a tavern-esque atmosphere and a handful of drunkies, the split level floor

See FRENZY on page 6

COURTESY VIRGIN RECORDS

A Fine Frenzy brought her upbeat style and bright personality to the Iron Horse stage in Northampton on Saturday night.

'Never Back Down' stuck against ropes

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

"Never Back Down" is a teen drama at its suggiest. A flaccid retread of yesterday's news, chances are, you've seen its kind before and have known well enough to stay away. For those still willing to chance it, "Never Back Down" is everything you'd expect out of a genre flick, and less.

Sean Faris stars as Jake Tyler, a teen football star with the tendency to turn loggerhead at the mention of his recently deceased dad. Booted from his Iowa homeland after one such gridiron temper tantrum, Jake makes his way with his kid brother (Wyatt Smith) and shrill mom (Leslie Hope) to the spray-tanned alcoves of Florida's roughest sector, Orlando.

Once in town, Jake finds that his reputation precedes him. Ostracized from the get-go because of his flannel tees and knowledge of the "Iliad," his stock begins to rise when video gets out of his raging temper. Before long, Jake's fending off the overtures of a local ruffian (Cam Gigandet), interested in recruiting him for the school's junior Fight Club.

"Never Back Down" has two things going for it, and they're both Cam Gigandet. "The O.C." cast-off is fun to watch and volatile on screen, a combination which makes for some entertainment. Sure, he's pulling his best imitation of Tyler Durden, but the guy's got charisma. If this were his star vehicle instead of Faris', we might be talking big time.

"Never Back Down" proceeds on a predictable trajectory. Jake rejects Gigandet's offer and promptly gets pummeled. Rebounding with the help of a nerdy sidekick (Evan Peters), Jake seeks out Orlando's resident mixed martial arts guru, Jean Roqua (Djimon Hounsou).

Despite [illegible] takes Jake under [illegible] grooming him for [illegible] rematch with Gigandet.

Fights are the [illegible] and butter and the [illegible] more in their several [illegible] way-on, way-off [illegible] use MMA a [illegible] of karate, judo and [illegible] fields of ass-kicking [illegible] their pent-up frustrations.

But don't get [illegible] hopes up. Nothing [illegible] they hit, or [illegible] whatever [illegible] silence never gets [illegible] 13 spot. Both Faris and [illegible] stay pretty [illegible]

Djimon Hounsou [illegible] the Mr. Miyagi [illegible] bad. The actor [illegible] ous works in [illegible] and "Blood Diamond." [illegible] the dull side of [illegible] ette before. Given [illegible] past, it's tough to [illegible] guy the right to [illegible] fierce.

Without the [illegible] "Never Back Down" [illegible] back to watching [illegible] Chris Hardy's script [illegible] yet falls short of [illegible] the script wants to [illegible]

See NEVER on page 6

"Never Back Down"

Starring: Sean Faris, Cam Gigandet and Djimon Hounsou

C

Gunn's lessons go beyond style

By Mary C. Curtis
McClatchy Newspapers

Tim Gunn should teach a course in leadership.

Whether he's coaching a nervous designer with a wayward sense of color in "Project Runway" or offering fashion advice to a fledgling fashionista without a clue in "Guide to Style," Gunn remains calm.

He's critical yet supportive, incisive yet kind. He leaves you with dignity intact and a "Make it work."

And that voice, that soothing voice that is never raised.

From the high-school teacher to the corporate honcho in the corner office, everyone who leads could learn from Gunn.

The every-seat-filled, standing-room-only crowd of mostly women that made a pilgrimage to Belk department store in Charlotte recently was happy with the Liz Claiborne fashions, but absolutely thrilled to see and hear the man.

"He's funny, genuine and humble," said Elizabeth Ireland, 22, who spoke with Gunn one-on-one at a pre-fashion-show brunch. "He pushes people forward without shutting them down."

Rachel Powers, 33, had bought her $100 worth of Claiborne clothes the day before so she could be at the head of the line for a photo with Gunn. "I'm going to e-mail it to all my friends."

During the Q&A, every question was prefaced with "I love you," or, in the case of 37-year-old Latonjia Gill, "All my friends love you."

"He tells you the truth," she said. "He tells you so that it helps you."

So how do you do it? I asked him. How are you nice, tough and honest, all at once?

It's something he learned in his decades of teaching, he said. When he approaches designers and their creations, he first tries to understand what they're trying to achieve, Gunn said. If you're mean-spirited, people will shut down. They have to believe you want them to succeed.

Gunn in action is Lesson No. 1.

He welcomed all the ages, shades and sizes in the crowd and on the runway. He joked about anorexic high-fashion models that look as though they "haven't left puberty yet."

Gunn led the applause when Carol Farley stood to ask a question about leggings and announced she had lost 135 pounds.

"He doesn't realize how great an impact he made on my life," said Farley, 50, who turned to Gunn's televised advice as she went from size 24 to size 10.

"I'm going to live off this for days."

The crowd only loved Gunn more when he admitted he's not perfect, another lesson invulnerable leaders might take note of. The supreme multi-tasker said he is "a hair shy of a psychotic breakdown."

He took time for private chats with all those standing in line for their commemorative photos and a copy of his book. "What's your name?" he asked a young fan. "Grace," he repeated. "I love that name."

Kristina Hannum, with a doctorate in leadership development, looked with admiration at the Gunn style of dealing with others.

"If we could just bottle that and sell it to people," said Hannum, 41.

"I only wish I could translate it to interacting with my own children."

COURTESY OF BRAVO

The calm, collective leadership that has made Tim Gunn a star on shows like "Project Runway" and "Tim Gunn's Guide to Style" is now on display in his speaking tour and question and answer sessions.

First headlining tour success

FRENZY from page 5

and a loft attached to a massive set of wooden stairs made it nearly impossible to find a place to stand. The weak lighting did not help the cause but consequently did not faze Sudol, nor did it hinder her performance one ounce.

It is clear that she grabs her influences from all avenues which is quite refreshing for a young up-and-coming artist. The aerial sounds fabricated by keyboardist Steven Leblanc channeled the Icelandic-ambient sounds of Sigur Ros and the Album Leaf. Inspiration from mainstream bands such as Coldplay and Keane emanated as well as beloved classics from Aretha Franklin and Elton John.

Despite recent appearances on late-night shows like Leno and Letterman, and gaining exposure through "CSI: NY" and the popular teen dramedy reality series "The Hills" Sudol has failed to gain nationwide recognition.

Judging from Saturday's performance, there is vacancy for faith that her time for wide esteem is fast approaching. A Fine Frenzy's lyrics are simple yet profound, and her songs ooze a certain purity and truth that only come around once in a blue moon. It is evident that nature is on her side.

Heather Waxman can be reached at hwaxman@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY VIRGIN RECORDS

The current tour is the first headline venture for A Fine Frenzy. Recent singles, as well as appearances on the talk show circuit and being featured on television shows like "The Hills" are responsible for her breakthrough success.

Fight scenes can't save bad plot

NEVER from page 5

with the likes of "Fight Club" as its all male brawling circles can attest, but it lacks the latter's ferocity and irreverence.

By borrowing clichés from "The Karate Kid" school of fortune cookie plot devices, "Never Back Down" has the trappings of a sentimental sports drama. But even there, charm fails to take flight. Imitation may be the sincerest form of flattery, yet often times, the flick feels like bad plagiarism.

"Never Back Down" also works as a butched up version of the recent Touchstone Films release, "Step Up 2: The Streets."

Director Jeff Wadlow ("Cry Wolf") duplicates the film's heavy emphasis on modern fads by allowing pivotal turning points to occur via YouTube and text message. The point is clear, from the fish out of water standard, right down to the rain-soaked finish. It's assembly line déjà vu between the two.

To its credit, the tough guys here are a little easier to buy than they were in "The Streets."

As companion pieces go, "Never Back Down" fits with "Step Up 2" like a set of his and hers crappy teen movies. Yet as far as fighting flicks are concerned, "Never Back Down" is too derivative to garner any bonafide street cred.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student

COURTEST SUMMIT ENTERTAINMENT

"Never Back Down" is one part "Karate Kid," one part "Fight Club" and one part "Step-up 2." The rehashed plot points and sub-par fight scenes leave the audience hoping for something better.

Check out a site that is going to add excitement to your career.

www.nelabcareers.org

From our stellar reputation to our unrivaled recreational opportunities, DHMC is consistently impressive. Because of our great location in Northern New England, you'll be able to hike, bike, ski or snowboard to your heart's content.

So if you're open to bringing your passion, positive energy and unique perspective to DHMC, then a world of excitement and opportunity will be open to you.

Exceptional Laboratory Careers Await – visit www.nelabcareers.org life works here.

DARTMOUTH-HITCHCOCK MEDICAL CENTER
Lebanon New Hampshire
EOE

planet fitness

JOIN NOW!

BLACK CA... Membership Sp...

$19.99 a month

...ship includes:

...fitness locations

UMass set for 'Cuse rematch in NIT

BASKETBALL from page 1

And the team made nearly half of those 3-pointers, converting 14.

The Minutemen even survived a 2-for-9 3-point shooting performance from sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris during the first half. Harris finished with a game-high 25 points.

Yet much has changed since that last meeting. The Minutemen do not rely on the 3-point shot as much as they did earlier this year. More importantly, Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim is without guard Eric Devendorf, who suffered a season-ending knee injury earlier this year. Devendorf scored 23 points and added five rebounds and two assists against UMass on Nov. 28.

While employing a seven-man rotation, the Orange may have trouble running with the Minutemen. In their first meeting, the five Syracuse starters played an average of 37 minutes and showed little fatigue down the stretch. After logging a season of basketball with a short bench, things might be different for the Orange — but it's not something Ford wants to assume will happen.

"We're going to play our style of basketball. Syracuse's zone defense allows them to rest," Ford said. "If they get tired, then they get tired. It's not something we're going to focus on in this game."

After the game, a frustrated Boeheim was at a loss for words about how to get his team to play better defense.

"Well, we haven't been able to fix it in six weeks, that's all I can tell you," he said.

Though the Orange didn't surrender 100 points again, the Orange finished near the bottom of the Big East in scoring defense, allowing an average of 74 points per game.

Without Devendorf, freshmen Jonny Flynn and Donte Green have carried much of the offensive load. Expect Greene and junior forward Arinze Onuaku to test the Minutemen in the paint. The pair scored 20 points each against UMass in the first meeting, as a part of the team's 52 total points in the paint.

Senior center Dante Milligan played well (17 points, seven rebounds) in that contest but saw limited action due to foul trouble. However, the team will most likely be without junior forward Tony Gaffney who injured his knee against Akron on Saturday.

If the Minutemen cannot defend the frontcourt, then the team's only chance may be to outrun and try to outscore the Orange — again.

"They're a more post and rebound-oriented team [without Devendorf]," Ford said. "Onuaku is getting a lot more touches inside. There's no question that they've become a much more physical basketball team."

At the time, the win over the Orange looked to be the centerpiece of a resume that would get the Minutemen into the NCAA Tournament as an at-large selection. Though UMass dropped several games in-conference that it needed to win, Syracuse's 9-9 performance in conference play hurt the Minutemen even more. Therefore, the team's RPI kept getting worse even when they were winning games.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

UMass point guard Chris Lowe has been compared to NBA legends LeBron James and John Stockton this season by opposing coaches.

Lowe compared to LeBron, Stockton

LOWE from page 1

Dambrot and Majerus were quick to heap praise upon Lowe, but they weren't the only coaches to do so this season. But for some reason, his terrific campaign has seemingly gone unnoticed by coaches in the Atlantic 10 Conference.

Lowe has been the catalyst this season for the Minutemen offensively, helping the transformation from a half-court offense to an up-tempo one go smoothly. UMass coach Travis Ford calls him the fastest point guard from end-to-end in the country, and he very well may be right. His quickness and decision-making has helped the Minutemen become one of the premier scoring teams — with their 82 points per game average ranking eighth in the nation.

Lowe's 188 assists this season (6.1 per game) are tops in the conference, and also rank him No. 5 on the school's all-time single-season list. Just a junior, Lowe is only behind three players in UMass history with 459 career assists. If he can duplicate this season in his senior year, he'll be alone in first.

Despite the words from the coaches and the stellar assist numbers, Lowe was not among the 15 players honored on the three A-10 all-conference teams at the end of the regular season.

Dambrot recognized these things in the process of scouting the Minutemen, and centered his entire focus on Lowe, rather than A-10 Player of the Year Gary Forbes.

"My view of their team is probably different than anybody's in the country," he said. "Chris Lowe is the guy that we had to stop, not Gary Forbes or Ricky Harris. With the tape I've seen, that guy is one of the most winning guys in America."

Dambrot was likely just as shocked as the Minutemen were to see Lowe miss out on the postseason awards.

"To lead the league in assists, and not make a team — the words I have to say probably can't get into a newspaper," Forbes said after the announcement. "To me, C-Lowe is the best point guard in this league and probably one of the best point guards in the country."

Ford was equally perplexed.

"I have great respect out of all players that made it, absolutely," he said. "Do I think [Lowe is] one of the top 15 players in the league? Easily. No question. That's an opinion, but that's a fact as well. He's got something to prove."

Lowe's assist totals and assist-to-turnover ratio (2-to-1) show how well he's run the offense, but his other numbers display how solid his all-around game is, like Dambrot talked about.

The best example of this was against La Salle back on March 5. On that night, Lowe upstaged seniors Gary Forbes, Etienne Brower and Dante Milligan on Senior Night, becoming just the third player in school history to record a triple-double.

The 6-foot guard pulled down his 10th rebound in the game's final minutes, to complete the feat and go along with his 14 points and 14 assists. LeBron James would be proud.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswaike@dailycollegian.com

Minutewomen host UNH

LACROSSE from page 10

Typadis, who was the leading scorer (52 goals) last season and is ranked second all-time in goals for the Minutewomen, is now second on the team in goals (eight), behind team-leader McCormick (17).

"She [Typadis] definitely stepped up, and it's good to have her back on board," Venechanos said.

"During the games, at times, our attack has been really predictable, and we just worked on that through the whole week of practice, and it definitely benefited [us]," Venechanos said later.

That practice definitely payed off for the Minutewomen, as they held an 18-7 advantage on draw controls, and shot a season-best 6-for-8 on free-position shots.

The Wildcats have a six-game winning streak going, with their last defeat coming at the hands of No. 20 Dartmouth on March 2. Since then, UNH has outscored opponents, 106-65, and have seven players who have scored 10 or more goals this season.

"They're a great team, and they're on a roll right now," Venechanos said.

"They won six games and have a taste of winning [while] we just got back to winning, so it's going to be a strong game."

The Wildcats opened its America East schedule on Saturday, defeating Maryland-Baltimore County, 11-4.

Midfielder Michaela Hardy and attacker Shauna Kaplan lead a balanced attack that put up 11 goals against the Retrievers, while each had three points for UNH.

"They have a great attack and are very disciplined," Venechanos said.

"They have great athletes, great speed, and they are playing very well this part of the year."

Last season, UMass lost a heartbreaker to the Wildcats, 11-10, in a game in which Typadis had four goals, keeping her 31-game scoring streak alive.

Melynda Zwick also had two goals and two assists for the Minutewomen, who were tied 6-6 at halftime. Back-and-forth scoring categorized the game, with UNH attacker Ashley Durepo netting the game winner with a little over four minutes left.

"We know what they are going to do, and they know what we are going to do, so we are hoping to keep stepping up," Venechanos said.

"[There have] close games the past few years, but for the most part, we're just going to play tough defense — and look to score more goals than they do."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Stone and Co. drop to 2-7

BASEBALL from page 10

was on a fielder's choice by Bryan Garrity.

By the time their last chance presented itself in the top of the ninth, the Minutemen faced a familiar nemesis from last season.

In a tie game in the ninth inning last season, UConn's Matt Karl came up to the plate with two men on base and hit a home run off Chris Lloyd to give the Huskies an 8-5 lead.

Karl then proceeded to preserve the victory by striking out the side in the bottom of the ninth inning. Although he didn't end the game in such dramatic fashion this time, he once again pitched a scoreless ninth to end the game.

After playing 10 games away from home, UMass plays its home opener today at Earl Lorden Field against Sacred Heart (1-16).

The Pioneers have struggled all season, with a one-run victory over Fairfield preventing them from currently having a winless season.

Like many teams that struggle, Sacred Heart has struggled from both the plate and the mound.

Jeff Hanson has a .333 average in 11 starts but the next-closest regular starter is batting .262.

While the Minutemen have struggled this season, they finished last season 10-11 at home.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

The Massachusetts baseball team is 2-7 to start the season, but will have plenty of chances in the upcoming days to improve upon that mark. The Minutemen play five games in the next six days.

Mixed results for tennis team

TENNIS from page 10

go-to person this week, her match against the College of Charleston was a match that stuck out in my mind as the best played match of the day," Dixon said.

In the Minutewomen's meet against the College of Charleston, the wind was blowing over 20 miles an hour. Those conditions under normal circumstances would call for a cancellation and a rescheduling, but because there was no way to go back to South Carolina again, Dixon decided to play anyways.

Dixon felt that if the weather had been better UMass might have pulled out the victory.

"I would say that if we played that match in better conditions it could have gone either way. Even though we lost 6-1, all of the matches were hotly contested so I was pleased with their effort against such a solid team," Dixon said.

Despite the disappointing result in the second meet, Dixon noted that playing in the elements did give some great experience for the team, as they prepare for the upcoming A-10 Tournament.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

UMass freshman midfielder Jaclyn Lyons and the Minutewomen welcome No. 16 New Hampshire to McGuirk Stadium today at 3 p.m. The Minutewomen recently ended a six-game losing streak against BC.

CHECK OUT
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Sports Podcasts
www.dailycollegian.com
EVERY WEDNESDAY THERE WILL BE NEW UMASS MEN'S BASKETBALL AND HOCKEY PODCASTS

The University of Massachusetts Amherst
Journalism Program Presents...

Campaign 2008: An Endless Cycle?
Wednesday, March 26
4 - 5:30 pm
Room 168C UMass Campus Center

A panel discussion featuring:
Jill Lawrence
National political correspondent, USA Today
Mark Stencel
Deputy publisher, Governing Magazine
Mary Carey
Political writer, Daily Hampshire Gazette
Steve Fox
Journalism Professor, former Washingtonpost.com editor, moderator

Ask your journalism professor how you can earn EXTRA CREDIT for attending.
Free Refreshments!

A-10 proving itself in postseason

Xavier rolls into Sweet 16; UD, UMass thriving in NIT

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Staff

At the beginning of the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship, Xavier was the only team locked in for the NCAA Tournament. Many others appeared to be on the bubble, with only Massachusetts being favored to get an at-large bid.

But with Saint Joseph's upsetting Xavier and UMass losing in the second round, it opened up opportunities for other schools. Temple, the No. 2 seed in the A-10 Tournament, took advantage of Xavier losing and grabbed the automatic bid for winning the conference.

Atlantic 10

No. 5 St. Joseph's (21-13, 9-7 A-10) put the most impressive run together in the tournament with upsets over No. 4 Richmond and No. 1 Xavier before losing to Temple (21-13, 11-5 A-10) in the conference championship.

NCAA Tournament

With the A-10 conference being represented by three teams in this year's NCAA Tournament, the conference was hoping to gain some respect on a national stage.

When the matchups were decided on Selection Sunday, the selection committee placed Xavier (29-6, 14-2 A-10) in the West Region as a No. 3 seed matched up against the Southeastern Conference Tournament champion and No. 14 seeded Georgia.

Georgia (17-17, 4-12 SEC) made its way into the NCAA Tournament by winning four SEC Tournament games in three days, despite only winning four SEC games all season. With the momentum, the Bulldogs looked to upset Xavier.

After one half, Georgia was more then Xavier could handle, leading by nine. Once the second half started, Georgia brought its lead to 11, but Xavier was resilient and came back with a 22-6 run to end Georgia's season.

As for the second round, Xavier faced off against No. 6 Purdue. Despite being known as one of the best defensive teams in the Big 10, Purdue could not handle the balance that Xavier provided on offense. With four Musketeers scoring in double figures, it was too much for the Boilermakers to handle as they fell, 85-78.

Next up for Xavier is a tough No. 7 West Virginia team in the Sweet 16. The Mountaineers (26-10, 11-7 Big East) paved their way into the Sweet 16 with a win over No. 10 Arizona followed by an upset of No. 2 Duke. The two teams will play Thursday.

The other two teams from the A-10 that made the NCAA tournament have not shared Xavier's success. Temple was given a No. 12 seed and St. Joseph's was given a No. 11 seed despite losing to Temple in the A-10 Tournament.

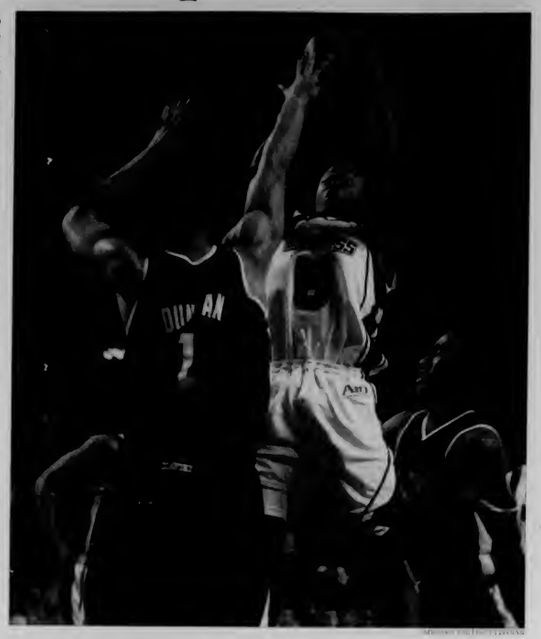
Temple had a first-round matchup against No. 5 Michigan State in the South Region. Temple got ahead in the first few minutes of the game, only to lose its small lead as the Spartans (27-8, 12-6 Big Ten) went on to win with ease, 72-61.

As for St. Joseph's, they were matched up against No. 6 Oklahoma. The Sooners (23-12, 9-7 Big 12) handed the Hawks a 72-64 loss. St. Joseph's did make a run late in the game and brought the score to within four, but couldn't complete the comeback.

Both Temple and St. Joseph's were popular picks to upset in the first round, but didn't make it on to the second round.

NIT

Dayton had been ranked as high as No. 14 this year in the Associated Press Poll but after struggling in conference play, the Flyers found themselves out of the NCAA Tournament and playing in the National Invitational Tournament.



After starting out the season 14-1 with wins over Pittsburgh and Louisville, Dayton (22-10, 8-8 A-10) lost three games in a row to drop them from the rankings. The Flyers couldn't recover after the losing streak. They went 3-5 over the next month and never won back-to-back games in that span.

The mid-season collapse left Dayton out of the NCAA Tournament, despite having an RPI rating of 33. Dayton had the highest RPI rating of all teams left out of the tournament and still only got a No. 3 seed in the NIT.

Dayton won convincingly over an undersized Cleveland State team in the first round of the NIT, 66-57.

No. 2 Illinois State is next for the Flyers on Monday at 7 p.m. on ESPNU.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

Xavier's Josh Duncan (left) challenges the shot of UMass guard Ricky Harris in a regular season game earlier this year. The Musketeers are still alive in the NCAA Tournament and face West Virginia in the Sweet 16.

Boston College sophomore defenseman Carl Sneep (right) and the Eagles are hoping to make a strong run in the upcoming Division I NCAA Hockey Tournament. The second-seeded Eagles take on third-seeded Minnesota starting this weekend.

BC, UNH in hunt for NCAA title

HOCKEY EAST from page 10

No. 2 Boston College takes on No. 3 Minnesota in Worcester, Mass., this Saturday. If the Eagles come out on top, they will face the winner of No. 4 Air Force and No. 1 Miami.

The four winners of each region advance to the Frozen Four, which is held at the Pepsi Center in Denver, Colo. starting April 10.

Awards presented

Members of three Hockey East teams took home yearly honors.

UNH goaltender Kevin Regan was awarded the CCM/RBK Player of the Year honor.

Regan led the Hockey East in the top three statistical categories. His goals-against average (1.83), wins (18), and save percentage (.940) were the best marks in the conference.

Colin Wilson, a Boston University freshman, was named the Pro Ambitions Rookie of the Year. In his first season, Wilson narrowly missed the top five among Hockey East scoring leaders.

Vermont coach Kevin Sneddon was chosen by his colleagues as the CCM/RBK Bob Kullen Coach of the Year. In his third year with the Catamounts, Sneddon guided his team from two consecutive sixth-place finishes to an impressive second-place finish, ahead of conference champions, BC.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

Crew team starts season with victory

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's rowing team opened up its spring season victoriously, in a scrimmage against Coast Guard on Saturday.

With windy conditions on the Connecticut River, the races got underway around 9 a.m., with UMass dominating in all races. Between the varsity eight, second varsity eight, novice eight, varsity four and lightweight four, the two teams raced in a total of 13 races with UMass winning all 13.

The two schools' varsity eight and second varsity eight squads raced in a total of five races. UMass' varsity eight won three of five and the second varsity took the other two.

The varsity eight squad consisted of rowers Andrea Morand, Ali DiMatteo, Airlina Burrill, Sarah Marsan, Terri O'Brien, Kelly Barrett, Rachel Nealer and Erin Kelly and was led by coxswain Dana Pulda.

The second varsity eight included Liz Euiler, Julie Marcus, Samantha Smith, Haley Fitzgerald, Dani Vollman, Amanda Mawn, Claire Champine and Kesley Schacter. The coxswain was Molly Morgan.

The novice eight shared the success as the varsity squads when they took all four of the races against Coast Guard. The two competed in three four-minute races, and also in one three-minute race.

The novice eight squad was led by coxswain Carly Payne and had rowers Jen Coyne, Emily Hagan, Megan Donavan, Anna Tocco, Rachel Spielberg, Alex Lucas, Jen Dolan and Ellie Brazenall.

The last squads to compete were UMass' varsity four and lightweight four against Coast Guard's varsity four. UMass' varsity four took all four of the matches.

The varsity four teams included rowers Chelsea Wakeham, Jess Romain, Karen Plevock and Meredith Kerny. The coxswain was Molly Bogle.

The lightweight squad consisted of rowers Liz Tran, Lindsay Dawson, Amy Nash and Chelsea Finnegan with Sam Schnoerr as the boat's coxswain.

The dominance displayed by UMass shows just why they have been ranked No. 1 in the Atlantic 10 conference. The rankings, which are decided by the coaches in the conference, are also due to the dominance that UMass has had in rowing that has spanned over a decade.

Led by Coach Jim Dietz, the squad looks to earn another Atlantic 10 conference title. The title would be the team's 13th consecutive after dominating the conference for over a decade.

Although the match against Coast Guard was just a scrimmage, it showed the team a lot. "It was a good day today, as we learned a lot about ourselves and our abilities," said coach Jim Dietz. "After a difficult spring break week in Amherst, it was a good conclusion to a difficult training period."

With strong winds blowing through Amherst all week, the team got a good week of training in before they compete in their first scored regatta of the season.

UMass will face off against other schools from New England this coming Saturday in Kingston, R.I. The teams will fight for the Yankee Cup in what will be the opening of the official spring season.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

CHECK OUT OUR MULTIMEDIA SECTION ON OUR WEBSITE
www.dailycollegian.com

I NEED COMICS AND YOU NEED FRIENDS. DEAL...OR NO DEAL?
comics@dailycollegian.com

www.skankydogfish.com

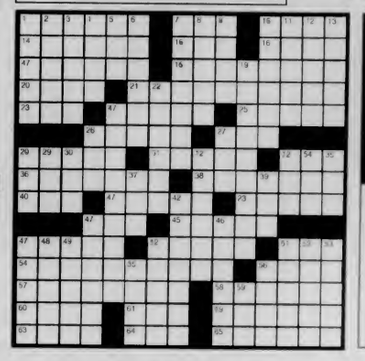
			2			7		3
		8			7		9
7			9	1
			1	2	6			9
2								6
6			8	7	9
				3	5			2
	1		4			8
3		4			1

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Random radio noise
7 Sixties campus grp.
10 Stiffy formal
14 Kind of cat
15 Gold in Madrid
16 Wife of a rajah
17 Perspicacity
18 One who forgives
20 Eternal City
21 Loss of right
23 Double curve
24 Jewel weight
25 Clan divisions
26 Of a city
27 Tartan topper
28 Rustler's rope
31 Fusses
33 Current unit, briefly
36 Type of case
38 Type of illusion
40 Actress Arthur
41 Wore
43 All possible
44 Brooks or Blanc
45 Ward off
47 Something of value
50 Muffles
51 Commit a moral offense
54 Manual calculating devices
56 Sicilian volcano
57 Perfect piece
58 Most peculiar
60 First name in daredevils
61 Variety of rummy
62 Rue
63 Loch for monsters
64 Perform
65 Score

DOWN
1 Frighten
2 Tex-Mex order
3 Grads
4 Record the rate of, as a race
5 Chill
6 Chat
7 Female singing voice
8 Window leak
9 Disgruntled
10 For the time being, briefly
11 Amassed
12 Motionless
13 Gets stuck in mud
19 Calamities
22 Spoke pompously
24 Ded needlework
26 John Dos Passos trilogy
27 Surpass
28 Sci. class
29 Had a meal
30 RR stop
32 Give
33 Dead-eye
34 Besmirch
35 Double over
37 Actor Holbrook
39 Climbing vine
42 Luxurious
44 Soldier's awards
46 La Costa, e.g.
47 Quaker of the forest
48 Great ___ Lake
49 Fathers
50 Harmonious sounds
51 Strict
52 Map within a map
53 Cooper's Bumppo
55 Latvian capital
56 Advantage
59 Fairway moisture

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
Two movie passes...you like it?

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Man is least himself when he talks in his own person. Give him a mask, and he will tell you the truth."
– Oscar Wilde

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

SCRATCH N' SNIFF By Derek Cuneo

RETRO GEK By Steve Dickenson and Todd Clark

BLISS By Harry Bliss

"I'm your attorney! You're incarcerated! No, I won't water your plants!"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your calf muscles are FREAKISH.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Avoid choking under the pressure of a life and death situation by brushing up on your heimlich maneuver technique.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Tonight will pick up where the past week's stripteases have left off.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You seem very grumpy. Clearly you do not eat enough fluffernutter.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You're so disarmingly beautiful that the army wants to clone you and use your phenotype against insurgents.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You are a bottomless armpit of stink. Seek olfactory sanctity with a scented gluestick.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You may sleep under the stars, but you are in no way beneath them.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are having more mood swings than a bipolar see-saw. Control your anger, young grasshopper.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You make a fine chef but an even better meal.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You can't be Hans Solo for the rest of your life. Seek out your best friend's sister and show her Uranus.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will be locked in an epic game of Monopoly, like the eternal struggle between Red Skull and Captain America.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Creativity is fun, but it should be avoided during prenatal child development.

A Meaningful Job Helping Children Learn
Part-time, year-round position available in motivating and coaching the Kumon method of reading and math.
Position also available in computer processing.
KUMON MATH READING SUCCESS
For more information, contact stephenarmstrong@charter.net or visit www.kumonamherst.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 Bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winn-co.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gna Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers wanted, must be able to work approx. 20 hours per week, nights and weekends, apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errance, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA PO Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone: 508-228-3942

Summer in Maine Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity.Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

A-10 proving itself in postseason

Xavier rolls into Sweet 16; UD, UMass thriving in NIT

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Staff

At the beginning of the Atlantic 10 Men's Basketball Championship, Xavier was the only team locked in for the NCAA Tournament. Many others appeared to be on the bubble, with only Massachusetts being favored to get an at-large bid.

But with Saint Joseph's upsetting Xavier and UMass losing in the second round, it opened up opportunities for other schools. Temple, the No. 2 seed in the A-10 Tournament, took advantage of Xavier losing and grabbed the automatic bid for winning the conference.

Atlantic 10

No 5 St. Joseph's (21-13, 9-7 A-10) put the most impressive run together in the tournament with upsets over No. 4 Richmond and No. 1 Xavier before losing to Temple (21-13, 11-5 A-10) in the conference championship.

NCAA Tournament

With the A-10 conference being represented by three teams in this year's NCAA Tournament, the conference was hoping to gain some respect on a national stage.

When the matchups were decided on Selection Sunday, the selection committee placed Xavier (29-6, 14-2 A-10) in the West Region as a No. 3 seed matched up against the Southeastern Conference Tournament champion and No. 14 seeded Georgia.

Georgia (17-17, 4-12 SEC) made its way into the NCAA Tournament by winning four SEC Tournament games in three days, despite only winning four SEC games all season. With the momentum, the Bulldogs looked to upset Xavier.

After one half, Georgia was more then Xavier could handle, leading by nine. Once the second half started, Georgia brought its lead to 11, but Xavier was resilient and came back with a 22-6 run to end Georgia's season.

As for the second round, Xavier faced off against No. 6 Purdue. Despite being known as one of the best defensive teams in the Big 10, Purdue could not handle the balance that Xavier provided on offense. With four Musketeers scoring in double figures, it was too much for the Boilermakers to handle as they fell, 85-78.

Next up for Xavier is a tough No. 7 West Virginia team in the Sweet 16. The Mountaineers (26-10, 11-7 Big East) paved their way into the Sweet 16 with a win over No. 10 Arizona followed by an upset of No. 2 Duke. The two teams will play Thursday.

The other two teams from the A-10 that made the NCAA tournament have not shared Xavier's success. Temple was given a No. 12 seed and St. Joseph's was given a No. 11 seed despite losing to Temple in the A-10 Tournament.

Temple had a first-round matchup against No. 5 Michigan State in the South Region. Temple got ahead in the first few minutes of the game, only to lose its small lead as the Spartans (27-8, 12-6 Big Ten) went on to win with ease, 72-61.

As for St. Joseph's, they were matched up against No. 6 Oklahoma. The Sooners (23-12, 9-7 Big 12) handed the Hawks a 72-64 loss. St. Joseph's did make a run late in the game and brought the score to within four, but couldn't complete the comeback.

Both Temple and St. Joseph's were popular picks to upset in the first round, but didn't make it on to the second round.

NIT

Dayton had been ranked as high as No. 14 this year in the Associated Press Poll but after struggling in conference play, the Flyers found themselves out of the NCAA Tournament and playing in the National Invitational Tournament.

After starting out the season 14-1 with wins over Pittsburgh and Louisville, Dayton (22-10, 8-8 A-10) lost three games in a row to drop them from the rankings. The Flyers couldn't recover after the losing streak. They went 3-5 over the next month and never won back-to-back games in that span.

The mid-season collapse left Dayton out of the NCAA Tournament, despite having an RPI rating of 33. Dayton had the highest RPI rating of all teams left out of the tournament and still only got a No. 3 seed in the NIT.

Dayton won convincingly over an undersized Cleveland State team in the first round of the NIT, 66-57.

No. 2 Illinois State is next for the Flyers on Monday at 7 p.m. on ESPNU.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Xavier's Josh Duncan (left) challenges the shot of UMass guard Ricky Harris in a regular season game earlier this year. The Musketeers are still alive in the NCAA Tournament and face West Virginia in the Sweet 16.

Boston College sophomore defenseman Carl Sneep (right) and the Eagles are hoping to make a strong run in the upcoming Division I NCAA Hockey Tournament. The second-seeded Eagles take on third-seeded Minnesota starting this weekend.

BC, UNH in hunt for NCAA title

HOCKEY EAST from page 10

No. 2 Boston College takes on No. 3 Minnesota in Worcester, Mass., this Saturday. If the Eagles come out on top, they will face the winner of No. 4 Air Force and No. 1 Miami.

The four winners of each region advance to the Frozen Four, which is held at the Pepsi Center in Denver, Colo. starting April 10.

Awards presented

Members of three Hockey East teams took home yearly honors.

UNH goaltender Kevin Regan was awarded the CCM/RBK Player of the Year honor.

Regan led the Hockey East in the top three statistical categories. His goals-against average (1.83), wins (18), and save percentage (.940) were the best marks in the conference.

Colin Wilson, a Boston University freshman, was named the Pro Ambitions Rookie of the Year. In his first season, Wilson narrowly missed the top five among Hockey East scoring leaders.

Vermont coach Kevin Sneddon was chosen by his colleagues as the CCM/RBK Bob Kullen Coach of the Year. In his third year with the Catamounts, Sneddon guided his team from two consecutive sixth-place finishes to an impressive second-place finish, ahead of conference champions, BC.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu

Crew team starts season with victory

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's rowing team opened up its spring season victoriously, in a scrimmage against Coast Guard on Saturday.

With windy conditions on the Connecticut River, the races got underway around 9 a.m., with UMass dominating in all races. Between the varsity eight, second varsity eight, novice eight, varsity four and lightweight four, the two teams raced in a total of 13 races with UMass winning all 13.

The two schools' varsity eight and second varsity eight squads raced in a total of five races. UMass' varsity eight won three of five and the second varsity took the other two.

The varsity eight squad consisted of rowers Andrea Morand, Ali DiMatteo, Airlina Burrill, Sarah Marsan, Terri O'Brien, Kelly Barrett, Rachel Nealer and Erin Kelly and was led by coxswain Dana Pulda.

The second varsity eight included Liz Euiler, Julie Marcus, Samantha Smith, Haley Fitzgerald, Dani Vollman, Amanda Mawn, Claire Champine and Kesley Schacter. The coxswain was Molly Morgan.

The novice eight shared the success as the varsity squads when they took all four of the races against Coast Guard. The two competed in three four-minute races, and also in one three-minute race.

The novice eight squad was led by cosswain Carly Payne and had rowers Jen Coyne, Emily Hagan, Megan Donavan, Anna Iocco, Rachel Spielberg, Alex Lucas, Jen Dolan and Ellie Brazenall.

The last squads to compete were UMass' varsity four and lightweight four against Coast Guard's varsity four. UMass' varsity four took all four of the matches.

The varsity four teams included rowers Chelsea Wakeham, Jess Romain, Karen Plevock and Meredith Kerny. The coxswain was Molly Bogle.

The lightweight squad consisted of rowers Liz Tran, Lindsay Dawson, Amy Nash and Chelsea Finnegan with Sam Schnoerr as the boat's coxswain.

The dominance displayed by UMass shows just why they have been ranked No. 1 in the Atlantic 10 conference. The rankings, which are decided by the coaches in the conference, are also due to the dominance that UMass has had in rowing that has spanned over a decade.

Led by Coach Jim Dietz, the squad looks to earn another Atlantic 10 conference title. The title would be the team's 13th consecutive after dominating the conference for over a decade.

Although the match against Coast Guard was just a scrimmage, it showed the team a lot. "It was a good day today, as we learned a lot about ourselves and our abilities," said coach Jim Dietz. "After a difficult spring break week in Amherst, it was a good conclusion to a difficult training period."

With strong winds blowing through Amherst all week, the team got a good week of training in before they compete in their first scored regatta of the season.

UMass will face off against other schools from New England this coming Saturday in Kingston, R.I. The teams will fight for the Yankee Cup in what will be the opening of the official spring season.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

555 deal
Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 Each!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

CHECK OUT OUR MULTIMEDIA SECTION ON OUR WEBSITE
www.dailycollegian.com

I NEED COMICS AND YOU NEED FRIENDS. DEAL...OR NO DEAL?
comics@dailycollegian.com

www.skankydogfish.com

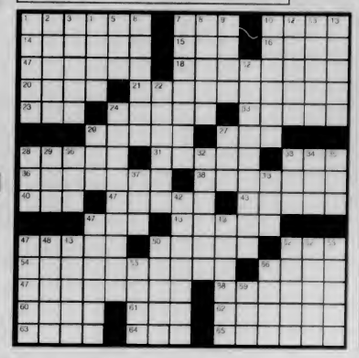
		2			7		3
	8			7		9
7		9	1
		1	2	6			9
2							6
6		8	7	9
			3	5			2
	1		4			8
3		4			1

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Random radio noise
7 Suites campus grp.
10 Stuffy formal
14 Kind of cat
15 God in Madrid
16 Wife of a rajah
17 Perspicacity
18 One who forgives
20 Eternal City
21 Loss of right
23 Double curve
24 Jewel weight
25 Clan divisions
26 Of a city
27 Tartan topper
28 Rustler's rope
31 Fusses
33 Current unit, briefly
36 Type of case
38 Type of illusion
40 Actress Arthur
41 Wore
43 All possible
44 Brooks or Blanc
45 Ward off
47 Something of value
50 Muffles
51 Commit a moral offense
54 Manual calculating devices
56 Sicilian volcano
57 Perfect piece
58 Most peculiar
60 First name in daredevils
61 Variety of rummy
62 Rue
63 Loch for monsters
64 Perform
65 Score

DOWN
1 Frighten
2 Tex-Mex order
3 Grads
4 Record the rate of, as a race
5 Chill
6 Chat
7 Female singing voice
8 Window leak
9 Disgruntled
10 For the sme being, briefly
11 Amassed
12 Molonies
13 Gets stuck in mud
19 Calamities
22 Spoke pompously
24 2d needlework
26 John Dos Passos trilogy
27 Surpass
28 So. class
29 Had a meal
30 Rfl stop
32 Give
33 Dead-eye
34 Besmirch
35 Double over
37 Actor Holbrook
39 Climbing vine
42 Luxurious
44 Sickler's awards
46 La Costa: e g
47 Quaker of the finest
48 Great ___ Lake
49 Fathers
50 Harmonious sounds
51 Strict
52 Map within a map
53 Cooper's Bumppo
55 Latvian capital
56 Advantage
59 Fairway moisture

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM



CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
Two movie passes...you like it?

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Man is least himself when he talks in his own person. Give him a mask, and he will tell you the truth."
– Oscar Wilde

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Scratch N' Sniff By Derek Cuneo

Retro Geek By Steve Dickenson and Todd Clark

Bliss By Harry Bliss

"I'm your attorney! You're incarcerated! No, I won't water your plants!"

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Your calf muscles are FREAKISH.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Avoid choking under the pressure of a life and death situation by brushing up on your heimlich maneuver technique.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Tonight will pick up where the past week's stripteases have left off.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You seem very grumpy. Clearly you do not eat enough fluffernutter.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You're so disarmingly beautiful that the army wants to clone you and use your phenotype against insurgents.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You are a bottomless armpit of stink. Seek olfactory sanctity with a scented gluestick.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You may sleep under the stars, but you are in no way beneath them.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are having more mood swings than a bipolar see-saw. Control your anger, young grasshopper.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
You make a fine chef but an even better meal.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
You can't be Hans Solo for the rest of your life. Seek out your best friend's sister and show her Uranus.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will be locked in an epic game of Monopoly, like the eternal struggle between Red Skull and Captain America.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Creativity is fun, but it should be avoided during prenatal child development.

A Meaningful Job Helping Children Learn
Part-time, year-round position available in motivating and coaching the Kumon method of reading and math.
Position also available in computer processing.
KUMON MATH · READING · SUCCESS
For more information, contact stephenarmstrong@charter.net or visit www.kumonamherst.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast, Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 Bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winn-co.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

APT. FOR WEEK

EMPLOYMENT

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gna Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers wanted, must be able to work approx. 20 hours per week, nights and weekends, apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst

EMPLOYMENT

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errance, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA PO Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone: 508-228-3942

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity. Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

SERVICES

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment. GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, MARCH 25, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Huskies hound Minutemen

Dicato pitches well, but offense not enough in loss to UConn

UMass starting catcher Bryan Garrity and the Minutemen have started slowly this season, losing five straight games, including yesterday, to rival Connecticut. The Maroon and White return to action today for its home opener against Siena at Earl Lorden Field.

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Kyle Multner gave the Massachusetts baseball team a 2-1 third-inning lead with a two-run home run against Connecticut yesterday.

In the bottom half of the inning, the Minutemen gave it right back with throwing errors by Jim Macdonald and Ryan Franczek. UConn capitalized and scored two unearned runs off starting pitcher Mike Dicato to take a 3-2 lead.

UConn	4
UMass	2

The Huskies eventually won the game 4-2

it's been that kind of season for the Minutemen (2-8, 0-3 Atlantic 10).

Dicato pitched well for UMass, scattering nine hits over 7 2/3 innings for two earned runs, but the costly errors and the Minutemen's inability to produce runs resulted in the loss.

The Huskies jumped out to an early 1-0 lead after Peter Fatse, who stole second base after singling with one out, was knocked in by a Mike Nemeth single.

Multner responded for UMass in the top of the third inning with the home run that knocked in Andy Tuetken, who had singled earlier in the inning.

After the promising top of the inning, the bottom didn't go as well.

UConn centerfielder Gordon Stevens grounded out to begin the inning and Pierre LePage grounded to Macdonald, but the junior third baseman's throw was off-target, allowing LePage to reach base.

The leadoff hitter then stole second and scored on a single by Elliot Glynn, who after a Pat Mahoney flyout, also stole second base. It was UConn's third steal of the game.

The aggressive baserunning paid off, as Glynn scored on a Mike Olt double. Once he crossed the plate, Glynn accounted for the second unearned run of the game.

Unlike the Huskies, UMass failed to create opportunities to put together a big inning. The Minutemen never had two runners on base at the same time and McDonald was the only baserunner to advance to second base, and this

See BASEBALL on page 7

Pozar and Co. split matches over break

Maroon and White win one, lose one in first-ever trip to SC

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's tennis team went 1-1 on its trip to South Carolina over spring break, defeating Charleston Southern 4-3 and dropping a meet to College of Charleston 6-1.

This was a week of firsts for the Minutewomen. It was the first trip they have taken to South Carolina, the first time they had played either of the teams this decade, and the first time they played outdoors all season.

UMass coach Judy Dixon was pleased with the results of the trip. She had two goals for the week: get the team used to playing outdoors and win one of the two meets the team competed in. She accomplished them both.

She was especially happy that the Minutewomen were able to overcome Charleston Southern, which earlier this season beat Charlotte, the team that knocked UMass out of the Atlantic 10 Tournament last year.

"We knew that we really wanted to do well against Charleston Southern, who beat Charlotte 5-2. That bodes well for the conference seeding as we will probably get a higher seed than Charlotte," Dixon said.

Based on the win last week, it seems likely that the Minutewomen will earn a top four seeding in the A-10 tournament.

Dixon felt that the key to the UMass victory was the doubles point. UMass won two out of the three doubles matches to secure what would ultimately be the tiebreaker of the meet.

The Minutewomen also scored three singles match victories. Senior captain Masha Pozar won her 10th match of the season, (6-2, 6-1) Tanisha Hodgson won her second match of the season (6-4, 6-2), and Laura Dinai also pulled off a victory (6-4, 6-2).

Dinai, who plays in the sixth slot, had the best week among all of the players on the team, winning every match she competed in this weekend, including two doubles matches (her partner was Maude Lecluyse). She was the only player to win a match against the College of Charleston.

"She was probably the real

See TENNIS on page 7

Tough schedule continues

UMass draws No. 16 UNH today at home

UMass midfielder Merritt Cosgrove and the Minutewomen snapped a six-game losing streak over the weekend by defeating Boston College. They draw No. 16 UNH today.

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team and New Hampshire have a history.

The Maroon and White will look to continue its turnaround when it faces No. 16 New Hampshire in its final non-conference game today at 3 p.m. at McGuirk Stadium.

Today's matchup will be the 37th all-time meeting between the two squads, and is the longest in program history. But these two teams have taken different paths this season. While UNH has gotten off to a hot start, the Maroon and White have struggled against non-conference, ranked opponents.

Out of the last eight meetings between the Minutewomen and Wildcats, seven of the duels have been decided by either one or two goals.

After losing six consecutive games to four ranked opponents, the team got back on track Saturday, defeating Boston College, 13-10, at McGuirk Stadium, thanks in part to captain Kathleen Typadis and redshirt junior Kaytlin McCormick.

"We were really excited about the one [victory] against BC," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said. "We definitely needed this win; we definitely needed it for our confidence, and it's good walking off the field and getting the W, for sure."

The senior midfielder, who has been inconsistent at times this season, notched four goals for the Minutewomen (2-6), while McCormick continued to look impressive this season, tying her career-high on Saturday with four goals.

"[Typadis is] multidimensional, and is a great scorer, and we're hoping for more goals this season [from her]," Venechanos added.

See LACROSSE on page 7

HEA well-represented

Boston College, UNH high seeds for NCAAs

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Boston College earned its way atop the Hockey East for a record eighth time.

Behind freshman goaltender John Muse, who stopped all 29 shots he faced in Saturday's Hockey East Championship game against Vermont, the Eagles skated to a 4-0 win. It was their third conference championship in the last four seasons.

"Winning the three titles in four years is something," BC coach Jerry York said in the conference call. "It's something we're very, very proud of and it's very hard to do."

Saturday's game was only the second shutout in Hockey East Championship game history.

Early in the game, Muse was at his best.

He sent away numerous Catamount shots that seemed destined for the net. The Catamounts held a 6-1 man advantage early in the game but it was the Eagles that struck first.

From a great effort by tournament MVP Nathan Gerbe, teammate Ben Smith put his team up 1-0 when he banked home a shot that trickled behind Vermont goaltender Joe Fallon.

The Eagles continued to play aggressive and put men in front of Fallon in attempts to hinder his vision. Five minutes into the period, Eagle defenseman Tim Kunes padded his team's lead when he intercepted a pass at the blue line and fired a wrist shot that beat Fallon blocker side. Fallon, who was screened, had no chance on the play. It was Kunes' first goal of the season.

In the final minute of the period, the Eagles converted a power play opportunity to go up 3-0. By strong forechecking from Eagle Kyle Kucharski, Andrew Orpik picked up the free puck and sent a beautiful pass to a wide open Brian Gibbons for his 13th goal.

The Catamounts were forced to use a different strategy going into the third period, already down 3-0.

Vermont conjured up a variety of scoring chances but Muse turned them all aside.

At the 18:55 mark, Gerbe tallied an empty net goal on a pass from Benn Ferriero.

After the game, Brennan, Ferriero and Sneep of the Eagles were accompanied by UNH to the all-tournament team. It will be Ferriero's second appearance on the team.

Hockey East

TOURNAMENT BOUND

BC and UNH were named to the Division I NCAA Hockey Tournament.

In the last 10 of 11 years, Hockey East has been represented by at least one team in the NCAA Championship game. Since 1993, the Hockey East has sported 15 of the 30 teams that have advanced to the championship round.

In the first round of the tournament, the No. 1 Wildcats take on Notre Dame on Friday. If the Wildcats beat the Irish, they will take on either No.2 Colorado College or the defending national champions Michigan State.

See HOCKEY EAST on page 8

The No. 1 New Hampshire Wildcats are prohibitive favorites against fourth-seeded Notre Dame on Friday in the Division I NCAA Hockey Tournament. James vanRiemsdyk (pictured) hopes to improve upon last year's finish.

UMASS BASEBALL WINS HOME-OPENER | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 51 LO: 34 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2008

Area government positions announced

BY LISA DEBENEDICTIS AND SHRUTI SEHGAL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Student Government Association recently published its official election report for the 2008-2009 academic year.

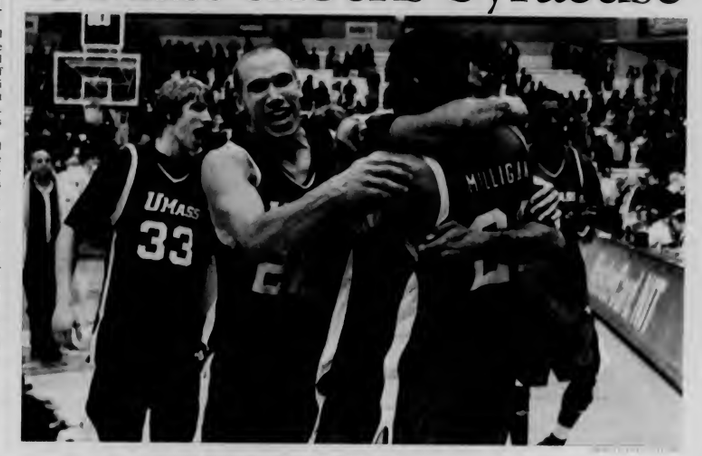
The document provides voting statistics, ballot qualifications, official clauses, complaints and the results for governmental positions at the University of Massachusetts.

As detailed in the report, a total of 2,425 votes were cast for Area Government positions. The Southwest Residential Area had the largest voter participation with a total of 885 ballots, while the North Residential Area had the lowest turnout of 66 ballots.

"The elections in Southwest went much better than last year, I think, due to better advertising," said newly elected Southwest Governor Chris Faulkner.

In the Southwest Residential Area, Faulkner won the position of governor by a landside of 504 validated votes, and Jason Thurm received the title of lieutenant governor with 461 validated votes. Liz Paquette received the position of treasurer, and Kristi Ortez was awarded the title of secretary.

In the Sylvan Residential Area, Annie Lajoie received the title of governor and Michael Urbanowski won the position of lieutenant governor. Urbanowski also received the largest amount of votes for secretary of this area. The position of treasurer was awarded to David Wemhoener.



In the Northeast Residential Area, Sahil Shanghavi won the position of governor with nine votes, and Stephen Brown was awarded lieutenant governor. Jimmy Cheung received the largest amount of votes for both secretary and treasurer in Northeast.

In the Central Residential Area, Andrew Dawson and Andrew Katcher tied for the position of governor with four validated votes each. Similarly, Kiel Boutelle and Bilal Janjua tied for the position of lieutenant governor. Jess Hegarty received the position of secretary with four validated votes, and Jason Dell'Orfano was awarded the title of treasury.

In the North Residential Apartment Area, Timothy Alden received the title of governor with 39 validated votes, and Keith Sheffer won the position of lieu-

See ELECTION on page 3

UMass shocks Syracuse

Seniors Etienne Brower, Gary Forbes and Dante Milligan celebrate UMass's 81-77 win over Syracuse last night in the quarterfinals of the NIT. The Minutemen take on Florida next Tuesday at Madison Square Garden in the NIT Semifinals. See page 12 for more coverage.

Wal-Mart decides against supercenter in Hadley

Plan for expansion stopped after 3 yrs.

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Wal-Mart has announced that it will no longer continue with its plan to build a 212,000 square foot supercenter in Hadley. This decision ends three years of work to create the store in the Hampshire Mall.

Developers from Pyramid Companies, which had been working with Wal-Mart to build on the site they are developing, have notified residents and local officials that Wal-Mart is no longer a perspective tenant.

Plans for development of the supercenter first began in March 2005, where Wal-Mart and its developer filed its first environmental report.

On November 2005, residents reported that Wal-Mart's plan did not show most of the wetlands which were on their plans.

Wal-Mart had planned on building on top of an area over 5,000 square feet of wetlands. The Wet Lands Regulation Center states that the Conservation Commission cannot permit filling of wetlands over 5,000 square feet without a variance by a commissioner of the Department of Environmental Protection.

In March 2006, the Hadley Conservation Commission, Massachusetts and the DEP ruled that Wal-Mart had in fact, not reported all the wetlands, and that new plans were required if the project was to move forward.

Almost two years later, Pyramid continued to appeal these rulings through the Division of Administrative Law Appeals process. The State has yet to make a decision regarding the wetlands.

Alexandra Dawson, who chairs the Hadley Conservation Commission, said she received a letter from a lawyer with Pyramid withdrawing their application on behalf of Wal-Mart.

However, she said this doesn't mean Wal-Mart won't come back at a later date.

"There is nothing to prevent Wal-Mart from coming back with a new set of plans," she said. "I highly doubt that will happen though. I think they'll find another nest in the valley."

David Elvin, a member of the group Hadley Neighbors for Sensible Development, which has been following Wal-Mart's plans closely, is not convinced that Wal-Mart is giving up.

"I'm suspicious of everything they do," he said. "It's a strategic move to get the community to lose interest, and then reduce the site plan to meet wet land regulations."

The wetlands are not the only problem Wal-Mart and developers are facing. The amount of traffic a new supercenter would bring is of big concern. The store would bring over 6,500 new trips per day, adding to the 22,000 trips already on Route 9.

The amount of traffic through South Maple Street, which crosses a bike path, would also be increased by four to five times what it is now.

The Hadley Planning Board and Massachusetts Department of Conservation and Recreation notified Wal-Mart that a tunnel or a bridge would be necessary for safe travel to pedestrians and bicyclists, but Wal-Mart was only willing to put up a yellow flashing light.

Route 9 would also suffer one to two minute delays at each stop light, which creates a problem with air pollution because of the excess amount of standing traffic.

Under the Clean Air Act, new projects cannot add to green house gases. Elvin states that this project would increase this by 25 percent, which is illegal.

However, "If Wal-Mart reconfigures their site plan and re-addresses problems, anything is possible in development," said Elvin.

Nick Seamon, who is the owner of the Black Sheep Deli in Amherst, is happy to see the plans for a supercenter terminated.

"I'm not a big fan of Wal-Mart. I'm sorry they're there in the first place," he said. "They don't do anything for the economy."

Seamon also feels that with each new addition to the Hampshire Mall, the downtown area becomes a little more nonexistent.

"In 1974 there were no malls and the downtown was booming. You can't buy a pair of men's pants downtown anymore," he said.

However, he states that this problem isn't anyone but the town's fault.

"The town hasn't done anything to preserve downtown," he said. "They don't have what they had 25 years ago. The less that goes down in Hadley, the better for downtown."

Yet, despite Wal-Mart's recent decision to pull out of development in the Hampshire Mall, Senior Manager, Public Affairs and Government Relations of Wal-Mart stores Chris Buchanan, said Wal-Mart has in fact not abandoned plans for Hadley.

"Wal-Mart constantly re-evaluates its development plans in view of a host of cost and operating and sales projections," he said. These factors continue to be under review.

The idea for expansion came after reviewing the performance of the already existing Wal-Mart, and the realization that there were additional ways to serve their customers.

"The existing store does not offer a full range of food and grocery products and we are still very eager to do so on behalf of our customers," Buchanan said.

Buchanan stated that a new supercenter in Hadley would mean more shopping options, convenience and lower prices for the surrounding area, including that of Amherst.

Jess Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

Humans v. zombies to return

BY NICOLE CARRIERO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The popular Humans vs Zombies game will be resuming on the University of Massachusetts campus.

The game started during the fall 2005 semester at Goucher College in Baltimore, where roughly 80 students, out of a class of 1,000, played the game for the first time. The original creators, Brad Sappington and Chris Weed, got their fellow students involved. They also created a Web site, made available to other students at other schools, which provided rules on how to play HvZ and instructions for how to start the game at one's campus. The game quickly spread to more schools across the nation.

UMass undergraduate students Dante Ciliberti and Devin Ashe noticed the game's popularity and felt inspired to bring the game to UMass. To be successful, they teamed up with undergrad Jake Boxer who provided technical support. Collectively, they were able to not only advertise the game but also create their Web site, www.UMasshvz.com, where people can sign up, interact and while playing and possibly "register a bite." As a result, last semester they got over 1,000 UMass students to play HvZ. This marked the largest turnout for HvZ on any campus across the country.

The game is recognized and played because it provides people with a fun and unique reason to get out and meet new people. Along with making new friends, the game creates situations that support camaraderie, teamwork and loyalty.

The game's dynamics are straightforward. The original zombie tags humans and they become zombies. Those zombies "get hungry" and hunt more humans by tagging them. Humans can "attack" the zombies with Nerf darts, marshmallows or socks. Ciliberti reminds all to "please use only clean socks." To establish who is on what side, zombies wear bandanas on their heads and humans wear them on their arms.

Furthermore, once tagged, zombies and humans must report their status on the Web site where tracking of players is enabled, missions are announced and a forum is up for

See HvZ on page 7

UMass economics professor Lee Badgett was named one of Curve Magazines "20 Powerful Lesbian Academics."

COURTESY MASSACHUSETTS ECONOMICS

UMass professor named 2nd in list of 20 powerful lesbian academics

BY JASMINE RENEE PINA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Female economist and University of Massachusetts professor Lee Badgett has been named by Curve Magazine one of the "20 Powerful Lesbian Academics."

Badgett said that being a formal female economist is different, but she got used to it after a while.

"It is hard to break in that world," she said. "Being a feminine economist is hard because there are many challenges for women in economics."

Badgett was listed as the second of the women listed in the article, "20 Powerful Lesbian Academics." She said it was odd to end up on the list if not used to the attention. However, she wants that type of influence, and said it was powerful for her to be a part of that because there aren't many enlightened professional feminists as a whole. She also said she wants there to be good data, ideas and reasoning for people to see.

Badgett thinks the article on lesbian academics portrays a place that values research on gay and lesbian orientations. She considers UMass to be an "open environment."

"The article is also important to UMass because it pushes envelopment in social policy and it said plenty about the good intellectual environment for students and faculty," she said.

She also believes that the purpose of the article was to offer a view on lesbian and gay studies and the work that's involved. She finds the people in the article to be very influential.

Badgett's attributes consist of putting certain issues in contact with concerns people have about gay marriage, laws and anything related to sexual orientation, and she has a strong interest in public policy that goes hand-in-hand with being serious about discrimination based on sexual orientation, race, gender and family.

A professor in the economics department at UMass, Badgett has also been visiting UCLA law school for the last two years. She had the opportunity to stay but chose to come back to UMass. She and her partner enjoy living here at UMass; she says she loves the people, the work she does, getting to know new faculty and the campus in general.

Badgett has also been named director of a new campus program — the institute for gay and lesbian strategic studies. She enjoys being director but it is not permanent because it is a three-year term.

Badgett said she loves the life of an economist but has other interests, including walking her dogs, gardening and playing the guitar and drums. She likes basketball, tennis and soccer.

"Unfortunately, I only get to do these things once every three weeks, except for walking my dogs, of course."

Jasmine Renee Pina can be reached at jpina@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 107

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPY EDITOR Adam Stagen
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Alyse McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ART WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbacciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS A NON-PROFIT ENTITY, OPERATING ON A SELF-SUSTAINING BASIS AT TOWNSEND HALL. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE COLLEGIAN WAS AWARD LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HOLDS COPYRIGHT ON ALL MATERIAL PUBLISHED SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS IN OFFICE 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Stephanie McPherson

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Across the Nation Around the World

Personal Facebook photos exposed afer security lapse

BY MICHAEL LIEDTKE
ASSOCIATED PRESS

A security lapse made it possible for unwelcome strangers to peruse personal photos posted on Facebook Inc.'s popular online hangout, circumventing a recent upgrade to the Web site's privacy controls.

The Associated Press verified the loophole Monday after receiving a tip from a Byron Ng, a Vancouver, Canada computer technician. Ng began looking for security weaknesses last week after Facebook unveiled more ways for 67 million members to restrict access to their personal profiles.

But the added protections weren't enough to prevent Ng from pulling up the most recent pictures posted by Facebook members and their friends, even if the privacy settings were set to restrict the audience to a select few.

After being alerted Monday afternoon, Facebook spokeswoman Brandee Barker said the Palo Alto-based company fixed the bug within an hour.

"We take privacy very seriously and continue to make enhancements to the site," she said.

The latest lapse serves as another reminder of the perils of sharing sensitive photos and personal information online, even when Web sites pledge to shield the information from prying eyes.

Before the fix, Ng's computer-coding trick enabled him to find private pictures of Paris Hilton at the Emmy awards and of her brother Barron Nicholas drinking a beer with friends and photos of many other people who hadn't granted access to Ng.

Using Ng's template, an AP reporter was able to look up random people on Facebook and see the most recent pictures posted on their personal profiles even if the photos were supposed to be invisible to strangers.

The revealed snapshots showed Italian vacations, office gatherings, holiday parties and college students on spring break. The AP also was able to click through a personal photo album that Facebook co-founder Mark Zuckerberg posted in November 2005.

Some members of social networks like Facebook post photos of themselves or others in potentially embarrassing or compromising situations that include illegal drug use or underage drinking that can cause trouble at school or work. None of the photos reviewed by the AP appeared to fall into this category.

Despite the risks, more people than ever – especially teenagers and young adults – are publishing personal photos and other intimate details about their lives on the Internet.

News Corp.'s MySpace.com, the only online social network larger than Facebook, suffered a security breach that exposed its members' private photos earlier this year.

REUTERS

Some private photos on Facebook, though restricted to the user and their friends, were seen by strangers during a recent lapse of security.

21-year-old 'feels good' after declared brain dead

Zach Dunlap, 21, was pronounced brain dead on Nov. 19 after being injured in an all-terrain vehicle accident.

Four months after he was declared brain dead and doctors were about to remove his organs for transplant, Zach Dunlap says he feels "pretty good."

Dunlap was pronounced dead Nov. 19 at United Regional Healthcare System in Wichita Falls, Texas, after he was injured in an all-terrain vehicle accident. His family approved having his organs harvested.

As family members were paying their last respects, he moved his foot and hand. He reacted to a pocketknife scraped across his foot and to pressure applied under a fingernail. After 48 days in the hospital, he was allowed to return home, where he continues to work on his recovery.

On Monday, he and his family were in New York, appearing on NBC's "Today."

"I feel pretty good, but it's just hard ... just ain't got the patience," Dunlap told NBC.

Dunlap, 21, of Frederick, said he has no recollection of the crash.

"I remember a little bit that was about an hour before the accident happened. But then about six hours before that, I remember," he said.

Dunlap said one thing he does remember is hearing the doctors pronounce him dead.

"I'm glad I couldn't get up and do what I wanted to do," he said.

Asked if he would have wanted to get up and shake them and say he's alive, Dunlap responded, "Probably would have been a broken window that went out."

His father, Doug, said he saw the results of the brain scan.

"There was no activity at all, no blood flow at all."

Zach's mother, Pam, said that when she discovered he was still alive, "That was the most miraculous feeling."

"We had gone, like I said, from the lowest possible emotion that a parent could feel to the top of the mountains again," she said.

She said her son is doing "amazingly well," but still has problems with his memory as his brain heals from the traumatic injury.

"It may take a year or more ... before he completely recovers," she said. "But that's OK. It doesn't matter how long it takes. We're just all so thankful and blessed that we have him here."

Dunlap now has the pocketknife that was scraped across his foot, causing the first reaction.

"Just makes me thankful, makes me thankful that they didn't give up," he said. "Only the good die young, so I didn't go."

—Associated Press

'Sex-shy' pandas to start new program to encourage mating

China's notoriously sex-shy pandas are being put through a rigorous "sexercise" program in a new effort to encourage them to mate, state media reported on Tuesday.

The Chengdu Panda Breeding and Research Centre in the southwestern province of Sichuan is making male pandas walk on their two legs to strengthen their pelvic and hip muscles, in order to better prepare them for sex, the China Daily said.

The move, which is achieved by luring male pandas up with an apple, looks remarkably like a dance routine and is aimed to boost the animal's sexual stamina, the report said.

Giant pandas are known to be sexually inactive, but the new measure follows several other initiatives taken to try and encourage breeding, including panda pornography.

The quirky measures aim to ensure the survival of one of the world's most endangered animals.

As of November last year, China had 239 giant pandas in captivity, with another 27 pandas living outside the country. About 1,590 more are thought to be living in the wild.

The pandas at the base in Chengdu are also put through a fitness and sensory stimulation program.

In one experiment, a male panda is placed in a den normally occupied by a female panda, and vice versa, so they can smell each other's odor, the report said.

When the two show signs of wanting to have sex, they are placed in the same den, the report continued. It did not say if the experiment has been successful.

Pandas are also showcased having sex in front of their inexperienced counterparts to show the latter how it's done.

More than 30 percent of pandas at the base in Chengdu can now have sex naturally, compared to just 10 percent a decade ago, according to the report.

—Associated Press

The Chengdu Panda Breeding and Research Center will help pandas mate by using a rigorous "sexercise" program.

The Bryant Master of Professional Accountancy
Technical Excellence. Market Advantage.

"Bryant's accounting programs are developed with and for the marketplace. I continue to be impressed by the quality of employees we recruit from Bryant."

ROBERT CALABRO '88
TAX PARTNER, PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS

Start your career with a competitive advantage. Earn your Master of Professional Accountancy (MPAc) degree at Bryant University.

- The two-semester MPAc program meets the 150-hour requirement for CPA licensure.
- Benefit from Bryant's impressive national reputation for excellence in accounting and 98 percent accounting placement rate.
- More than 40 firms recruit at Bryant each year.
- Build your accounting knowledge, and learn the leadership, client relations, and project management skills that will set you apart from the crowd.

To learn more about this program and upcoming information sessions:
Contact us at (401) 232-6230 or e-mail mpac@bryant.edu

GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
Smithfield, Rhode Island
www.bryant.edu
(401) 232-6230

Bryant UNIVERSITY

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons, Cuban, 1959– Birth Certificate, 1991. Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925, Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Gustavino

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM of ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Voter turnout low for SGA, Southwest with most ballots tenant governor. Both Andrew Dawson and Matthew Rosenthal received two votes for the position of treasurer. Clive Wan and Alex Gomberg each received one vote for the title of secretary.

ELECTION from page 1

For commuter representation, Vanessa Snow won the position of governor with a total of 24 validated votes. Aaron Buford won the position of lieutenant governor, while Nathan Lane, and Analua Fontes received the positions of treasurer and secretary respectively.

As a result of ties and low number of votes, the SGA has not administered several positions. However, several candidates have officially received their titles, and intend to improve the well-being of students in the designated areas.

"In the upcoming year I plan to uphold some of the traditions," said Faulkner. "Southwest Fest had a pretty good turnout, this year we had problems with the Southwest Barbeque, but we plan to bring it back next year. We also plan to have a hypnotist; we are going to bring back the one we used previously. At one point we had a meeting with a committee considering a meeting to renovate the Southwest concourse, and I'm hoping to continue that and as always we will be continuing Southwest Week. However, all of our plans depend on how the budget comes in."

When asked to comment on future developments from these elected leaders, UMass sophomore English major Monica Sweeney addressed some topics that she believes need to come to light.

"Some of the issues that I find most crucial regarding better funding for UMass is public safety and a greater emphasis and support system for student organizations. I have volunteered for PHENOM [Public Higher Education Network of Massachusetts] and the problems students and faculty face regarding limited public school funding is becoming increasingly more detrimental. In terms of public safety, recent cover stories in The Daily Collegian regarding violence in the school only begin to highlight the ill-fostered security at UMass," said Sweeney.

"I would like to see activities that will get more students involved. We also need more input from people in their living areas," commented SGA Butterfield representative Jennifer Leclair.

"With the warmer weather, I would like to see some live performances in my living area," said UMass freshman history major Alex Chautin. "I would also like to see more exciting events, instead of the lukewarm activities that we have now."

Shruti Sehgal can be reached at ssehgal@student.umass.edu Lisa DeBenedictis can be reached at ldebened@student.umass.edu

Vermont Senate considers lowering legal drinking age

BY BEN NUNNERY
THE DARTMOUTH (DARTMOUTH)

HANOVER, N.H. — A committee in the Vermont Senate passed legislation creating a task force to consider lowering the state's legal drinking age. The legislation will now be debated by the full state Senate in the coming weeks, according to Vermont state Sen. Hinda Miller, D-Chittenden, who introduced the bill. The legislation calls for a five-member task force to assess underage and binge drinking in Vermont and to argue the merits of lowering the drinking age.

"I have teenagers myself, and I've always wondered about these laws, if they're really creating the results we want," Miller said.

Many alcohol education groups, such as Mothers Against Drunk Driving, are opposed to even the consideration of lowering the drinking age, according to the Associated Press. Such groups cite the reduction in alcohol-related fatalities since the National Minimum Drinking Age Act was enacted in 1984. Miller said this statistic might not be directly related to the 1984 legislation.

"People always cite 40 percent reduction of alcohol-related driving accidents, but the distribution is among all ages, not just young drivers," she said. "We've done a lot since 1985. We've got designated drivers, comprehensive laws against DUI, liability against drinking establishments and penalties for selling to underage drinkers."

The National Minimum Drinking Age Act required states to set the drinking age at 21 or lose federal highway funds, which, for Vermont, total approximately $17 million.

"We're not in a position to lose 17 million dollars," Miller said. "There is a national movement to unhook the drinking age, which is a state responsibility. If we do our research and there is enough evidence that this might produce good results, we might unhook those dollars."

Miller and others are working with former Middlebury College President John McCardell, who currently heads Choose Responsibility, a nonprofit organization that highlights the dangers of binge drinking and advocates lowering the drinking age to 18. McCardell is part of the movement to encourage the United States Congress to grant a waiver, allowing states to determine whether things are better or worse with a lower drinking age, according to the Associated Press.

William Goggins, director of education and enforcement for the state Liquor Control Board, opposes the reduction of the drinking age and Miller's bill to create a committee to review changing Vermont's drinking age.

"I think it's irresponsible and a waste of valuable time," he said.

A decrease in the drinking age could have a significant impact on Dartmouth students, allowing many who are currently underage to travel across the border to purchase and consume alcohol. Further, a number of Dartmouth College students reside in Vermont and commute to the college, particularly during the summer.

Gray wolf leaves endangered species list after near extinction

BY ETHAN THEUERKAUF
THE FLAT HAT (COLLEGE OF WILLIAM & MARY)

WILLIAMSBURG, Va. — Government officials announced on Thursday that the gray wolf, scientific name Canis lupus, of the Northern Rocky Mountains will be removed from the endangered species list.

The removal will end a 13-year restoration effort in Montana, Wyoming and Idaho. The gray wolf was almost extinct in the 1990s due to excessive hunting and habitat degradation, but populations have recently rebounded thanks to hunting bans and reintroduction campaigns.

"Gray wolves in the Northern Rocky Mountains are thriving and no longer need protection," Deputy Secretary of the Department of the Interior Lynn Scarlett said in an Associated Press article.

Environmental groups plan on contesting the species' removal from the list, arguing that removing federal protection for gray wolves would violate the Endangered Species Act, which requires politicians to use the most accurate science to determine adequate population sizes.

Government officials, such as Gray Wolf Recovery Coordinator Ed Bangs of the Fish and Wildlife Service, suggest that the wolf stocks are adequate and that, even with federal protection, one out of four wolves died every year. Despite this death rate, the wolf population has risen 24 percent each year.

When gray wolves first went under protection in 1974, they were almost extinct.

By the late 1980s, the gray wolf had only around 200 square miles of territory around Glacier National Park, but now they have almost 113,000 square miles of territory.

In 1995, around 66 gray wolves were released into Yellowstone National Park and Idaho. This initial stock rose to around 1,300 and combined with about 230 wolves that have moved into Montana from Canada.

The restoration effort was unpopular with ranchers because of wolf attacks on livestock. A thinned population meant better survival for their livestock.

However, even while gray wolves were federally protected under the Endangered Species Act, ranchers and wildlife agents were permitted to kill wolves that were attacking livestock.

Since the late 1980s around 724 wolves were killed legally and around that same number are estimated to have been poached illegally.

Hunting of wolves could be allowed as soon as this fall and wildlife agencies in Montana, Wyoming and Idaho are already planning hunts analogous to big game hunts for bears and mountain lions. Allowing hunting will likely reduce the chances that gray wolf populations will spread to nearby states.

Similar instances of wolves being removed from federal protection have occurred in Michigan, Minnesota, Wisconsin, Arizona and New Mexico. The Arizona and New Mexico populations are struggling despite reintroduction efforts.

Environmental groups such as Defenders of Wildlife and the Natural Resource Defense Council believe that new wolf populations should be established in Maine, New York, Oregon, Colorado, Utah and Washington, and possibly New Hampshire, Texas and parts of the mid-Atlantic.

Many experts say the reintroduced populations are strong enough to survive without protection. With hunting once again legalized, only time will tell if gray wolf populations in the Northern Rocky Mountains are viable.

After its near extinction in the 1980s, the gray wolf of the Northern Rocky Mountains will no longer be listed as an endangered species.

Constantine's Sword

The Church, the Jews, and the roots of religious intolerance

Former Catholic priest James Carroll is on a journey...

FILM: Focusing on Christian antisemitism as a prototype of religious intolerance, this film brings to life the history of religious violence that threatens the world today.

SPEAKER: A discussion after the film will be introduced by Dr. Philip Cunningham, a member of the advisory committee on Catholic-Jewish relations for the U.S. Conference of Catholic Bishops.

Thursday, March 27 at 7:00 pm
School of Management Room 137
UMass Amherst

Free with UMass I.D.
More information at www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST

Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Newman Catholic Center, The Ark Episcopal Center, and Student Affairs and Campus Life, in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival

Welcome Back
to Your Award Winning Dining Services!

MARCH - APRIL - MAY Upcoming Events

MARCH 27 ..... Spring Fever
APRIL 2 ..... Visiting College Chef Series: Stanford
WEEK OF MARCH 31—APRIL 4 AMERICAN PRODUCE WEEK
APRIL 10 ..... Visiting College Chef Series: Ohio State
APRIL 11 – 14 ..... Family Weekend
APRIL 16 ..... Visiting College Chef Series: Harvard
APRIL 14 – 17 ..... Student Iron Chef Competition
APRIL 2 – 25 ..... Cooking/Baking 101
APRIL 24 ..... Taste of UMass
MAY 1 ..... Taste of Home
MAY (TBA) ..... Spring BBQ
MAY 15 ..... Midnight Buffet

www.umass.edu/diningservices

DINING SERVICES UMass Amherst

ivy

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Baffled by the bracket?

Nicholas O'Malley

Every year, around the early going of March, they come out. Fresh, clean and full of potential, the Men's NCAA tournament brackets are your chance to be Nostradamus for a day.

It's an amazing annual event where the everyday fan becomes part of the action by selecting who he or she believes will win each tournament game, and who will reach the Final Four and eventually, win the national championship.

With the millions of bracket creations that emerge each year come the promises from Web sites and companies for the reward of good predictions. Companies often offer millions of dollars, or even a million pizzas, for a perfect bracket.

You think that going for that perfect NCAA tournament bracket for a million dollars is a good deal? Forget it, you're better off trying to win the lottery fives times. You can try as hard as you can and research the teams as much as you want, but after 2 rounds, your bracket is just as ruined as everyone else's. ESPN received thousands of online submissions this year for its "ESPN Tournament Challenge," but not one survived the first round. One would think that, with the millions of brackets made annually, somebody would have to get it right, but the odds have shown why the opposite has occurred.

If you took each of the 63 tournament games and gave each team a fifty percent chance to win, you'd be looking at about 1:2^63 odds of picking a perfect bracket (that's one in 9 quadrillion).

The most generous odds of flawlessly selecting your college hoops teams is about one in 150 million.

Of course, the seedings and favorites of the tournament make many picks much easier and increase the chances of perfection exponentially. The numbers, however, are still staggering.

According to Carl Bialik of the Wall Street Journal, the most generous odds of flawlessly selecting your college hoops teams is about one in 150 million. Other predictions, however, have put the chances upward of one in 240 billion.

We live in a world fueled by expert opinions: Wall Street, politicians, researchers and the likes. We often take the opinions and estimates of others as fact. So it's a wonderful diversion when something as simple as the brackets come along that are fun, engrossing, relevant and most of all, absolutely random.

This is what makes pools based off of the brackets so much fun. Even if you choose on the basis of which school's name sounds cooler, you're probably going to get as many picks correct as some professional analysts. So if you happened to have thought Siena, Villanova and Davidson were cool names this year, you looked like a pure genius.

You could also take the popular mascot route and look at college teams based upon what masked entertainer happens to be dancing up and down the court. You think a boilermaker is better than a bear? A badger beats a titan? Or that a bulldog will succumb to my personal favorite, the hilltopper (which is actually some sort of red blob)? You'd be right this year.

But then again, there's always the problem with repeat mascots. In this year's tournament, you'd have to choose among the Villanova, Kentucky, Kansas State, Davidson and Arizona Wildcats and the Georgia, Drake, Mississippi State, Gonzaga and Butler Bulldogs.

This bracket experience would be much better if only a team with a Minuteman mascot had been invited to the big dance – but that's a story for the back page.

In a world of pampered, "show me the money" athletes, the NCAA tournament is a wonderful change in that the athletes are just as young and poor as the rest of us college folk. The stars of the show are students rather than filthy rich stars that flood the rest of television. So if you're enjoying a Men's NCAA tournament game, but have a big exam to study for, don't worry. So do they.

Nicholas O'Malley is in it to win it. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

Right to left: a treacherous accusation

Michael Phillis

On the day when practical jokes and foolish behavior run rampant, Dinesh D'Souza, a prominent conservative author, will speak at UMass.

The back cover of one of D'Souza's latest books, "The Enemy at Home," informs the reader of his radical beliefs concerning the culturing the cultural left in America. According to D'Souza, "the cultural left in this country caused 9/11."

Having forced myself to read his tirade against a major group of Americans, I was quite unaware that there was an audience for this kind of rubbish at our University.

In short, the explanation given by D'Souza is that the cultural ideas of the left as he sees them, such as feminism, gay rights, the destruction of the patriarchal family, sex education, abortion and the withdrawal of troops by liberal presidents, are major reasons why the World Trade towers fell and the hijacking of American commercial flights occurred. The horror of the Islamic world at the fact that a vile American culture has bred such unthinkable ideas as feminism and equal rights for gays is the apparent root of the liberal role as instigator in one of the greatest days of murder in American history.

I guess it could have been worse. Criminal Scooter Libby or the future felon Tom Delay could have been invited. Maybe it's just a matter of time. UMass may just have to wait until their speaking fees come down a notch.

While the arguments themselves are destructive and hurtful to a large portion of the population, what I find to be the biggest fault in D'Souza's argument is that, whether or not he is aware, he is fundamentally attacking the First Amendment of the Constitution. By citing the cultural left and specifically naming individuals such as Hillary Clinton and Ted Kennedy as accomplices to murder, D'Souza is marginalizing free thought and debate.

The practical conclusion to be reached, if an individual is to take Dinesh D'Souza's claims to heart, is frightening. The belief that leftist Americans are causing the violent deaths of the nation's citizens leads to the thinking that they should no longer be allowed a place in government or even the right to voice their dissent. After all, who would trust the enablers of murderers to hold office? There are two separate arguments that have been made against the behavior and ideals of the left since 9/11. The first point of view held by many Americans is that while in personal disagreement with the cultural left, they do not consider them to be unpatriotic but instead simply in some disparity with conservative thinking about the path in which America should follow.

Somehow I do not believe the towers fell because of the liberal embrace of the gay or feminist movements.

The second and far more radical of the two is held by individuals such as D'Souza, who believe that the evils of the leftist agenda and its immorality is literally killing Americans. This idea proposes that people on the left are not only unpatriotic but enemies of America. The founders that drafted the Declaration of Independence and the Constitution believed instead that not only was educated dissent necessary for the success of the American experiment in democracy to work, but it was entirely essential.

Dinesh D'Souza is out of touch with reality and is part of a group that is seeking, as Karl Rove so aptly stated, "a permanent majority." The idea of a permanent majority however, is destructive to a democracy because it can only be established if the dissenting opinions are stifled and made to appear as dangerous, traitorous or even treasonous.

By going about his writing with the aura of scholarship and superior intellect, D'Souza masks his shortsighted knowledge of the fundamental principles of American democracy. In no way is dissent unpatriotic or harmful. On the contrary, dissent is brave and beneficial. For D'souza not to realize this simple, profound fact that has enabled the United States to boast the longest living constitution in the world demonstrates the profound shortcomings of his narrow-minded worldview.

Often, to truly understand the fallacy of an argument, the argument must be boiled down to its most fundamental state. To dismiss D'Souza, all that must be asked is whether or not the more-than-three-thousand dead from 9/11 were killed because people in the Islamic world hate people like Michael Moore, who advocate teaching women proper condom use as well as arguing that two men should be able to be in a romantic relationship without fear of harassment and violence. Somehow I do not believe the towers fell because of the liberal embrace of the gay or feminist movements, or for that matter the fundamentalist Christian movement. America owes herself a far better explanation for terrorism than the one offered by D'Souza.

Even if an individual's own political persuasion does not place them in allegiance with the ideas of people like Michael Moore, it should not be difficult to understand that at the very least the opposition is not responsible for murder.

The world has a way of presenting ironies that when realized, should at the very least provide some entertainment. Therefore, UMass should be sure to observe this irony. As the Republican Club plays host to an author who accuses a major political group of enabling terrorism, it is fitting that he should arrive on the day of fools. The campus should understand that they have a joker in their midst, to be laughed at one day and forgotten the next.

Michael Phillis is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mphillis@dailycollegian.com.

This is the election that has no end

Dan Nicastro

One of my favorite Monty Python skits is a faux "do-it-yourself" show offering painfully simple advice to very complex, abstract problems. In explaining how to rid the world of diseases, one of the hosts explains that first you should "become a doctor and find a marvelous cure for something, and when the medical world really starts to take notice of you, you can jollily well tell them what to do and make sure they get everything right so there'll never be diseases anymore."

As the Democratic presidential primary extends to what seems like its second year, maybe we should utilize some Monty Python-like logic (a painfully ironic term) to make sure a situation like this never happens again.

There can be no doubt that this will be one of the most historic (if not most important) presidential elections the United States has ever experienced. I feel obligated by law (and my mother) to point out that in our 232-year history, our presidential leadership has only reflected a portion of our population.

Thus, when both Hillary Clinton and Barack Obama appeared to be strong, viable candidates, it was clear that the Democratic nomination would be a long contest. Few, however, envisioned a primary season that would have remained competitive into April, exposing divisions that threaten to split the Democratic party into several factions.

Following the Monty Python "do-it-yourself" model, the complex question we must face is how to prevent the primary season from dragging on to a point that endangers the harmony of a political party.

The painfully simple answer is to have everyone vote at the same time.

I would like to note that this is not a novel solution and I am certainly not the first person to suggest an overhaul of the electoral system. We have not, however, faced a situation quite like the current primary fiasco and we have very rarely entertained the idea of serious, dramatic changes to our electoral system.

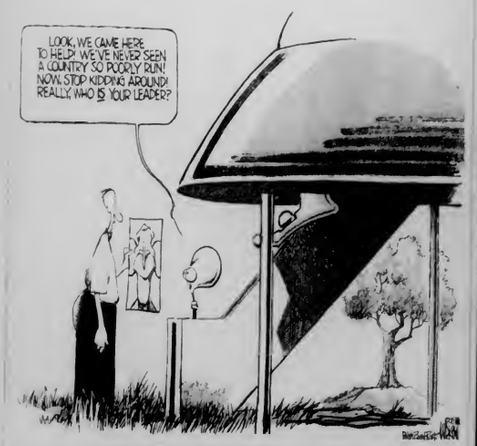
A mythological ethos surrounds the founding of our country. At some point, laws, statutes and general principles about American government were established for certain logical (or illogical) reasons. Over the course of history, they transitioned from their position as rationally formed laws or principles and were re-codified as part of American tradition. This transformation discarded any context for the formation of these laws or principles, leading to governmental structures that were elevated to a semi-mythical status, seemingly untouchable by the general populace.

I feel obligated by law (and my mother) to point out that in our 232 year history, our presidential leadership has only reflected a portion of our population.

Because of this, we are stuck with an electoral system mandated by the 50 states and the national party committees that requires 50 separate primaries to take place over the span of five months.

There are legitimate reasons to keep the current primary system the way it exists, but even most of these can be chalked up to unwillingness to change the existing system.

Yes, smaller states like New Hampshire are able to receive more attention from politicians than a national primary would provide, but that does not mean that a nationwide primary day would only steal focus away from smaller states. Instead, it would more evenly distribute attention, creating a more widespread consensus about the effectiveness of a candidate. Candidates would need to focus on localities while not alienating their bases of support.



Defenders of the current primary system also maintain that individual state primaries allow candidates to interact with local people and give them a chance to speak to local issues. This forgets, however, that modern campaigns begin months (and in some cases, years) ahead of primary dates. Why can't we move the primary date further back, leavin g plenty of time for candidates to speak to local issues and interact with locals during fundraising appeals?

The current primary system also takes a huge toll on candidates, draining them of both money and energy before the general election even begins. A single primary day could cut down on costs (as candidates would be able to use the national media for their advertisements and not have to spread their money over five months of primaries) and cut down on mental anguish, as travel time and campaigning would have a specific end-point.

The benefits of a one-day primary outweigh the costs. There may be states that do not receive the attention they currently enjoy because of their importance as symbolic icons of the primary season, but overall, candidates will have both the time and the need to address local issues, much more so than in the general election. Primaries are meant as an appeal to a candidate's base of supporters and a measure of the candidate's general attractiveness to that base.

As we are currently seeing with the Democrats, primaries that drag on expose factions and divisions, damaging the party even before the primary season is complete. While we may like to defer to tradition and keep our governmental structures the same as they have functioned for years, it may be time for a change. Don't be worried about the future, however. Everything will work out if we always look on the bright side of life.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Spring reflections from the 'City of Sin'

By Skye McIntyre
Collegian Staff

If you're like me, the last thing you want to do while casually perusing this publication is to wrap your mind around a word problem.

While this is completely understandable, bare with me for a minute, you don't have to be a Nobel Prize contender to figure this one out. What do you get when you combine a lively group of 16 college co-eds with a week's worth of vacation time and throw them into a city swarming with activity and void of an open container policy?

In case you haven't already guessed, I'm talking about perhaps college's best-loved and longest-running tradition – spring break.

Sure, I bet you had the time of your life slurping down key lime pie shots out of an unmemorable blonde's navel in Punta Canta. Guaranteed you felt giddy after a few decidedly delicious brownies in Amsterdam. I don't doubt the feeling of white, sandy beaches underneath your toes in Miami was your version of paradise.

But did you follow a dentally-challenged man who told you to call him Uncle Jerry down dark alleyways to end up at quite possibly the most frightening casino in America? Not unless you were one of the fearless (or fearsome, in the case of good old Uncle Jerry) men and women on jetBlue flight * bound for an infamous destination in southwestern Nevada.

To quote the late, great Elvis Presley, "Viva Las Vegas."

The other 15 trip-goers and I are quite close friends. So tight in fact, that we refer to ourselves as "The Family." We travel in packs and live by a saying made popular by the MTV reality show "Rob and Big." When last October rolled around, and the thought of a week completely free of the drudgery of campus life was a mere glimmer in our undergrad eyes, we knew we had to plan something epic. We knew we had to "Do work."

A Facebook thread was started, and not long after, one of the 16 suggested the so-called city of sin as a perfect place to drown ourselves in all things excess. After months of money collecting, talks with contradicting hotel receptionists and more hours logged on yelp.com than with our noses in textbooks, the day finally arrived.

We floated rather seamlessly through Logan Airport's check-in and security, (except for one of us who forgot that liquids over 3.4 ounces have to go in your checked baggage, ahem, Matt) and met at the gate. A quick, group hand-holding session and pep talk set the tone for what would be the trip of a lifetime. Here's a brief run-down of the week's events; what can be remembered of them, of course.

Saturday: We touch down at approximately 11:30 p.m. Vegas time. A quick cab ride to a Motel 6 behind the strip and we've officially arrived. 2 prostitute sightings, three slot machine sightings in the next-door 711, and a 2 a.m. trip to the nearest casino. Later, we lock our doors and sleep sans bedspread with one eye open.

Sunday: With one of the most unmerciful slumbers of our lives under our belts, we hop in four cabs, endless luggage in toe, and set out for the Stratosphere, our hotel and home for the next week. Trip member Chris recommends we go to Harrah's, where we dance 'til we drop (literally) to the music of a live band at an outdoor concert and bar. It's here that many of us consume $35 long-island iced teas complete with neck straps for easy drinking, make a very old man's wildest dreams come true, and gain a mother figure in a sassy older woman who tries to take us under her wing.

One of three thrill-rides on top of the hotel Stratosphere, which launches riders over the top of the hotel. The Stratosphere is the largest free-standing structure west of the Mississippi River.

Heading to Las Vegas during spring break in search of adventure and unrestrained excitement, Skye McIntyre and friends received all they could hope for and more.

Perhaps most importantly, we make a confidante in Tammy D., the limo driver, who promises to cart us around all week at a discounted rate.

Monday: St. Patty's day. We don our green and take an early afternoon limo drive to the heart of Las Vegas: the Strip. Some of us gamble at the MGM Grand, some of us take down Irish car bombs at the New York New York hotel. All of us think it's a brilliant idea to stop at a liquor store and consume bottles of wine and 24 oz. beer cans while dining at our two favorite Vegas eateries: McDonald's and Fatburger. A quick pit-stop back at the Stratosphere for a power nap (or to pass out for the night, Kelly) and we're back with Tammy D. for a short drive to the old Strip and the Freemont Downtown Experience. A chance encounter with Uncle Jerry lures us toward dollar beers and dollar shots. Our fate is sealed for the night.

Tuesday: We ask our hotel's concierge if they have any free passes to big-name Vegas clubs. Dressed to impress, Tammy takes us to the Palms (made famous as the home of one of MTV's Real World casts). In no time at all, we're in the Playboy Club being served by bunnies hand-picked by Mr. Hefner himself, then club Moon, gazing out at breathtaking views of the city. It doesn't get much better than this.

Wednesday: We decide to see the celebrity-impersonation show "American Superstars," conveniently located just up the escalator in our hotel. A few of the guys find a potential mate in Christina Aguilera, and all of us are amazed by Michael Jackson's dance moves. It is here that I truly realize, yes, we are actually in Vegas. Tammy's waiting, so we hurry downstairs and over the Hard Rock Hotel and Casino. After giving the bouncer $100, we are begrudgingly let into the ultra-hip, ultra-snobby Body English nightclub, a favorite of Ms. Lindsay Lohan herself.

Thursday: We decide to stick around the Stratosphere, spend some time at the roulette table, and then meander over to Polly Esther's, a nightclub on the main floor. No one lasts very long among the mostly middle-aged crowd, and it's not long before we're shoving spicy chicken sandwiches in our mouths somewhere around 3 a.m. Casualty of the night: one of trip member Erica's big toenails. Her white, patent-leather high heel is covered in blood, the victim of an overly passionate dancer. No worse for the wear, she's good to go in no time.

Friday: Dinner at Jimmy Buffett's restaurant Margaritaville, then a walk down the strip to see the fountain show at the Bellagio. The prospect of an open bar for ladies and a beautiful outdoor patio beckons us to the Hawaiian Tropicana Bar. We're amazed by a street magician and it seems as if the majority of us are ready to depart Vegas after a long week in the desert.

Saturday: We pay extra for late check-out and are whisked away to the airport at around 8 p.m. We arrive in a zombie-like state back to Logan at 6:30 a.m. Boston time after a cross-country red eye. "Too much Vegas" seems to be the general consensus, but make no mistake – we had the time of our lives.

Though it wasn't what most would consider a typical spring break in terms of location, we wouldn't have had it any other way.

Fourteen of us are seniors, and with the thought of graduation in the very near future, it was a great way to bond before we're separated and face full-time jobs and full-time responsibility. Would I do it again? In a heart beat.

If you ever make it to Las Vegas, you can find Uncle Jerry at the Golden Spike hotel and casino. Tell him the kids from Boston sent you.

Then again, don't confuse him. After all, he didn't know Massachusetts is a state.

Skye McIntyre can be reached at smcintyre@student.umass.edu.

Why? dazzles listeners

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

The Left of the Dial concert series, presented by the Smith College radio station WOZQ and UMass station WMUA, brought listeners yet another sonic experience to the Iron Horse Entertainment Group Monday evening.

Berkley, CA four-piece Why? displayed their swirling, self-described "folk-pop, indie-hop, sometimes-mustachioed, psych rock" to the Iron Horse Music Hall with Oakland's Cryptacize. Cryptacize's noticeably different style strongly contrasted with that of the former, drawing what can best be described as confused applause from the crowd.

Cryptacize took the stage after somewhat local (Montague, Westfield) opening act The John Bobbit Experience made their rounds. The trio pumped out some danceable, mutilated noise jams as well as murkier, ambience-filled pieces, despite one of their guitarists' failing amplifiers. Layers were piled on thickly by the electronics twiddler/vocalist while the drummer cranked out some head-nodding grooves, all in front of a seated, near comatose audience. The drummer eventually abandoned the drum set in favor of a guitar, which also meant mostly abandoning a sense of rhythm and beat to pursue more atmospheric, noisy territories.

Next to take the stage was Cryptacize, another three-piece consisting of minimal percussionist Michael Carreira at the center, flanked by Nedelle Torrisi (autoharp, guitar, vocals) and Chris Cohen (guitar, vocals).

The percussion consisted of a single tambourine-like drum, a hi-hat and a bass drum, occasionally accompanied by various other pieces such as a triangle, spoons, cowbell and a banana-shaped maraca. He was joined by Torrisi's soft female vocal, which with Cohen often harmonized, as well as whimsical guitar phrases. Cohen summoned sharp tones reminiscent of Grizzly Bear, while Torrisi created appropriate foils to his sound, strumming seemingly simple, jagged notes.

The modest musicianship brought to mind 1980s Pacific coast anti-instrumentalist band Beat Happening, whose short, angular songs needed no virtuoso musicians, but instead a shared love of rhythm and jarring noise. Cryptacize seemed to mimic this ideal, though the band lacked almost any semblance of structure. Their songs flourished when the band collaborated to create a bit of rhythm, scratching the surface of a groove but never delving too deep into that idea. The stop-and-go mindset of the songs may have held the audience back from being more interested, though the sounds they created were as aurally pure as they were pleasing.

Why? provided the unquestionable highlight of the evening, treating the audience to their strange brand of folky indie-pop

See WHY? on page 6

Replacing their more electronically produced elements with a standard setup of traditional instrumentation, Why? delivered a performance on par with their acclaimed recordings Monday.

'Chicago' a wake-up call

Kevin Kocziwara
Collegian Staff

Brett Morgan ("The Kid Stays in the Picture") attempts something really big in the world of documentary filmmaking with "Chicago 10."

The film is based on the Chicago riots of 1968 during the Democratic National Convention that culminated in the prosecution of 10 suspected masterminds and leaders of what began as a non-violent protest and ended in tragedy. The film jumps from animated courtroom to archived footage to shots of police brutality, hippies chanting and smoking a lot of marijuana to Allen Ginsberg trying to calm everyone who is involved using a simple word: "um."

The animation looks like the footage from the screens at Universal's Island of Adventure's rollercoaster and main attraction, The Hulk. It has the same feel and it proves to be the most glaring flaw in the film. While the film has a decidedly gritty feel, with the actual footage and soundtrack supplied by Rage Against the Machine, the animated courtroom scenes lack the same luster.

They lose their punch and kick, and as a result, by the end you feel almost no pain for Bobby Seale as he is kicked, gagged and beaten by the bailiffs. The courtroom scenes have no actual footage and Morgan uses the transcripts to re-create the scene. He has accurate depictions of the prosecution and trial of each of the ten.

The courtroom scenes act as a vessel of narration for Morgan as well and this impedes at times on the archival footage he has so meticulously gathered. The shot of police beating men and women needs no narration from the stand. He also leaves much of Bobby Seale out. He never covers why he is actually there, what he is accused of and what he was really doing at the time of the riots. This lack of understanding or context leads the audience to not care for him in the same manner that they care for the others who organized the event.

The YIPPIE group steals the show in the film. Bobby Seale may be the best in the courtroom but outside of it the YIPPIES are stars. They are funny, heartwarming and the most civil human beings in the film. They want freedom to speak, freedom to give their opinion and they want the Vietnam War to end. They go to Chicago to spend some time smoking weed, listening to music and practicing a non-violent approach to life. They also like to have fun and joke with the mayor, the police and the media.

Abbie Hoffman uses the media as a means to purvey his own message. He is interviewed by ABC and CBS news and his interviews always get his point across while being accented with a good amount of humor. He has the charisma the

See CHICAGO on page 6

Melding animation with archived footage, "Chicago 10" depicts the Chicago riots of 1968 while delivering a strong message in support of the power of free speech.

Why? delivers a unique sound

WHY? from page 5

that borders on the brim of hip hop, while showcasing many of the stronger songs on the quartet's recently released record "Alopecia," as well as some tunes from their previous full-length, "Elephant Eyelash." The hip hop grooves found on their studio material were sacrificed in favor of more organic sounds, with extremely successful results.

Vocalist/lyricist/odds and ends instrumentalist Yoni Wolf's dead-pan delivery droned over and beneath the heavy percussion, keyboard and guitar layers. Lyrics were often harmonized, or more appropriately, echoed by drummer (and Yoni's brother) Josiah Wolf.

Yoni's half-spoken, half-sung vocals added to the dark void of his poetic lyrics, which delve into references of drugs, sex/death imagery and other shock factors. His cold stare focused beyond the audience was serious and unflinching, and obscured by his curly mop of hair draped over the side of his face. He smiled, but no more than once throughout the performance, and even that was in response to his own joke about booty-shaking.

Josiah's drumming emerged as the most impressive portion of the set, as he simultaneously beat out low-end rhythms on his drum set and chimed angelic tones on vibraphone, all of which surrounded him. His dizzying percussion, coupled with Yoni's frequent additions of maraca-wielding, cymbal-crashing and snare hits, made for a nearly nauseating sonic landscape.

Highlights included the crowd favorite "Yo Yo Bye Bye," from 2005's "Elephant Eyelash" LP, as well as the faux-uplifting spirit of "Rubber Traits," from the same record, in which Yoni advises the listener to "always be working on a suicide note." During the same song, Yoni curiously edited himself, opting to recite his wish to "hump gentle on a bed of nails" as "do something on a bed of nails."

The tracks from "Alopecia," released earlier this month, sounded like nearly perfect renditions, including "The Vowels Pt. 2," "The Hollows," and "These Few Presidents." Instrumentation came off as very natural and organic in the live setting, where drumming and other instrumentation imitated the more electronically-produced cuts on the record faithfully. The studio takes found on their records consistently up the hip hop aspect of this project, though the band has been moving further and further from its hip hop roots, founded by Yoni as a solo performer, and transitioning now into a full-band, indie-pop/rock sound.

As Yoni's outsider poetry and hip hop lyricism have evolved, his words have become more conducive to a verse/chorus/verse archetype, allowing for more focus on sonic moods, complex instrumentation and textures. Evolution and fusion are key aspects of modern music, and Why? is a sparkling example of today's artists melding genres and seeking new ground on which to tread.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY TO MEAD KING, SCI'0

Blending a mixture of more traditional indie-rock, hip hop, and atmospheric sounds, Why? provides listeners with a fresh array of sounds when experienced live.

While the concept is a relatively inventive one, the animated sequences in "Chicago 10" fail to deliver as effectively as the rest of the film. The movie is at its strongest when actual footage is carrying it.

Film delivers message

CHICAGO from page 5

movie needs to allow it to move so fluidly and to help retain the audience's attention.

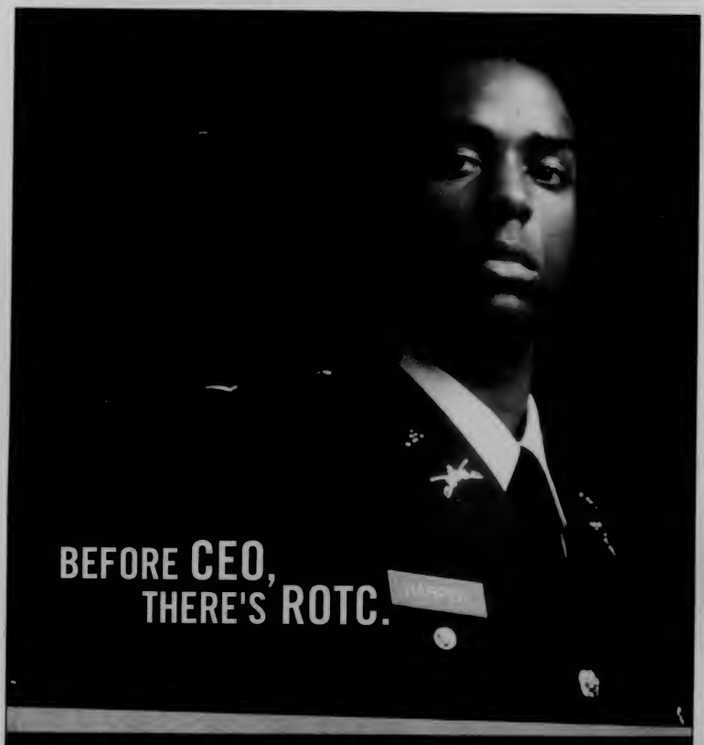
Beyond just the retelling of historical events, the movie also serves as a social commentary on today's war protestors. In the context of the film, any protests going on today are nothing compared to what people would go through to stand up against a war they did not support.

To hear someone say they do not support the Iraq War is the norm in Amherst and on the UMass Campus but we, as a community, do not in fact gather and commit to the cause.

The small protests about fees and tuition that have surfaced throughout campus don't amount to anything that the people in Chicago accomplished. They went to a city with a mission, a message and a will. Today, people do not support our president in polls but in public people are afraid to stand with one another. It is eye-opening to see what once was and the heart and passion that went into a protest.

The idea that future generations will continue to stand up against tyranny and keep the American government in check is repeated throughout the film. It is as if the film is mocking the generations to come, implying that the current generation has been prone to kneel down as of late.

"Chicago 10" strongly delivers its message. It is a documentary definitely worth viewing if you have any interest in social change and the real strength of freedom of speech. It stumbles in animation but leaves nothing behind with its powerful archival footage.



Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT
OUR MULTIMEDIA SECTION
ON OUR WEBSITE
www.dailycollegian.com

Hair, Nails, Tanning, Waxing, Facials, & Massage
Owner
Ms. Abigael M. Sicard
267 Amherst Road
Suite #2 (Rt.116)
Sunderland, Ma
413-397-9988
Tuesday 10-6 • Wednesday 10-6
Thursday 10-7 • Friday 10-6
Saturday 10-3
Absolute

Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
PUFFTON VILLAGE
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Contact Major John Smolenski at 413-222-9870 or email jsmolens@acad.umass.edu.

Spring cleaning is going green in 2008

Leading brands and consumers shifting to "all-natural" cleaners

BY AMY HOAK
MARKETWATCH

It's spring cleaning time, and as Americans get ready to scrub down their homes this year they're finding they can choose from an array of new detergent products that claim to be safer to use than those currently under the kitchen sink.

Products marketed as "non-toxic," "natural" or "green" now crowd store shelves, promising to be safer to the people who use them as well as the environment. And more of these products are in the works.

"You're going to see more products in the marketplace this year, and in the coming years, that meet certain consumers' expectations for being green but also being effective cleaners," said Brian Sansoni, vice president of communication for the Soap and Detergent Association.

Sales of "natural" household cleaners and supplies – including bathroom and kitchen cleaners – have grown 26 percent from January 2007 to January 2008, according to SPINS, a market research and consulting firm for the natural products industry.

The new products are driven by consumer demand, as well as companies such as Wal-Mart, Target and Home Depot, as they request safer products from their suppliers, said Clive Davies, chief of the Design for the Environment program of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Joining newer brands, including Method, are established companies such as Clorox. This year, it introduced its Green Works line, including an all-purpose cleaner, a glass and surface cleaner, a toilet bowl cleaner, a concentrated cleaner and a bathroom cleaner.

The new Clorox products are made from plant-based ingredients derived from coconuts and lemon oil, and are at least 99 percent natural – the only non-natural components come from preservatives necessary to maintain shelf life, said spokeswoman Aileen Zerrudo.

"We still stand by the traditional products," she said. "We also know that the consumer wants a natural way to clean." While existing Clorox products have disinfecting properties strong enough to kill powerful germs including the MRSA superbug, its new natural products don't, she added.

But the new products coming out generally work better than the earliest "green" products, said Lauren Heine, senior science advisor with the nonprofit group Clean Production Action.

"Early green products weren't very good. That's not true anymore. The new green chemicals and products look great," she said. Consumers may be paying a premium for these products now, but that will change as more companies begin using green ingredients and the supply infrastructure matures, she added.

Manufacturers claim that all their products are screened for safety, and they're safe if used as directed. But environmentalists will point to negative health effects and environmental consequences from exposure to some traditional ingredients.

It could be that they're both right – to an extent. That's because there are some unknowns about the effects of some cleaning ingredients, said Urvashi Rangan, senior scientist and policy analyst at Consumers Union, which publishes Consumer Reports.

"For the most part, most of the ingredients fall somewhere in between. There's a big gray area," she said. "Thousands of ingredients on the market don't have the safety testing that you might hope they do."

This is with the exception of those proven to be most toxic, she added.

It's that gray area between safe and unsafe that worries some consumers, she said. And some ingredients may affect only people with sensitivities to them, said Heine.

Some ingredients have proven to be harmful when used incorrectly. Ammonia – commonly found in floor, bathroom tile and glass cleaners – can be irritating to the respiratory passages when inhaled and can burn skin on contact, according to Consumer Reports' Greener Choices Web site, at GreenerChoices.org. And mixing ammonia products with chlorine bleach produces a poisonous gas.

Other ingredients are believed to have negative effects on the environment. Nonylphenol ethoxylates – found in some detergents, stain removers, citrus cleaners and disinfectants – "can act as hormone disrupters, potentially threatening the reproductive capacity of fish, birds and mammals" when released into the environment, according to the Greener Choices site.

To help consumers identify products that use the safest available ingredients, the EPA has developed a Design for the Environment label. A list of products that meet the standards for this program is on the EPA's Web site. Visit the site at http://www.epa.gov/dfe/pubs/projects/formulat/label.htm.

Some consumers feel that if a product hasn't been proven to cause cancer or reproductive harm it's safe if used as directed, Rangan said. Others are leery of unknown health and environmental effects or are concerned about the consequences if their children are exposed to harmful ingredients. For these people, natural products have a certain appeal.

To address this type of consumer, some products on the market are being made without ammonia, for example, Heine said. Products are also made to be less volatile, so fewer chemicals will enter the air, and cleaning formulas are being made so that they're more biodegradable than their predecessors, she added.

But Sansoni, of the Soap and Detergent Association, said some marketers of natural products as well as activists may "go overboard" and fuel some unfounded fears about the use of traditional cleaners.

Cleaning products people have been using for years are safe when they're used as directed, he said. And according to a recent survey done by the group, 85 percent of the 1,013 adults who were polled believe that statement.

"Most consumers aren't walking around with a chemistry textbook in their pocket. The most important thing on the label is the safety and usage information," he said.

Plus, words like "nontoxic," "natural" or "green" are often marketing terms, and not terms of science, Sansoni said. And on that, Rangan agrees.

She advises looking at the ingredients before buying a natural cleaning product. Manufacturers aren't required to detail every ingredient in their products (a protection they're given to guard secrets from competitors). But if a product claims to be natural, make sure the company spells out why, she said.

"If you don't see an ingredient list and see something that claims to be natural, you may want to take a pass," Rangan said. That may be especially a good idea if the natural alternative costs more, she said.

COURTESY MEMEYERS.COM

Popular cleaning solutions are facing stiff competition from a recent surge of all-natural alternatives to hit the market.

Clorox is just one of a number of companies to embrace the "green" culture by offering a brand new line of cleaning products.

Popular game returns to UMass

HvZ from page 1

players to comment and make suggestions.

Ashe and Ciliberti create the missions. They both strive to make the missions unique and enjoyable while challenging and fun. Winners are rewarded with "medicines" and "immunity periods."

The missions are also meant to get students engaged and one of the most memorable missions for them also involved getting people concerned about the community.

Last semester, Ashe and Ciliberti decided to have both teams compete in a way that would do a great service to the Amherst community. They had the zombies and humans compete in a food drive. The food was donated to The Food Bank of Western Massachusetts based in Hatfield. The member of either the human or zombie teams who donated the most food would win for his whole team.

Doug Ramsdell, a senior majoring in engineering, won the food drive for the zombies. About the food drive, he said, "We almost got one ton of food; it was great!"

About the overall experience of the game, he said, "All your friends are now your enemies and your friends are all brand new. I couldn't hang out with my usual friends – they were humans."

"Orchard Hill and Northeast were the worst places to be human and for the first time; Southwest was the safest place to be," said Boxer. "The Zombies had it pretty bad in Orchard Hill because of the balconies."

Players this semester should note that Orchard Hill balconies became hot spots for humans who would enjoy being up high and safe while aiming and shooting Nerf darts at unsuspecting zombies.

Trenton Bollinger, 22, an English major, said about last semester's game play, "I really enjoyed the atmosphere it created. It added another element to the college life beyond the dull week and simply looking forward to Friday. I had a lot of fun."

Ashe, 21, a Political Science and Chinese double major may already have campus recognition. Though he didn't win the candidacy for next year's Student Government Association President, Ashe remains heavily involved in campus affairs.

His campaign for presidency highlighted his experience on the SGA Ways and Means committee where he deals first hand with budgets and securing them for Registered Student Organizations. Ashe believes in working toward building a sense of community on campus.

Ciliberti, 22, a Psychology major, jokingly admitted he "seeks fame." On the HvZ UMass Wiki site, Ciliberti is mentioned as the creator of HvZ as well as being the, "operator of the pre-existing and successful Capture the Flag game on campus." Ciliberti and Ashe created a Facebook group for their RSO which includes HvZ and Capture the Flag, planning to resume in the spring. The RSO is called "Mass Games."

Ciliberti's own description for the group is "The Mass Games RSO is dedicated to organizing large recreational activities promoting teamwork, community, and leadership."

Boxer is also involved with the Mass Games group, serving as its IT Officer.

Ciliberti and Ashe have to come up with "marketing strategies for the missions" while they also "settle debates and handle negotiations," according Ashe.

Boxer, 22, a Computer Science major, is also a fan of the community feeling that HvZ enables, but he admits that he's also in it for the programming experience. For example, Boxer had to write new software to support such a large group of registered participants. He spent about 20-25 hours creating the Web site. He said it was "an added necessity to redo it because we had about 15 times as many people playing."

The web fees are costly and Ciliberti, Ashe and Boxer enjoy paying for the server because it gives them greater flexibility to provide the game to their classmates. If need be, they can send 25,000 emails out in an instant and their server will support that.

Boxer suggests that people register and connect with other players using Facebook because it helps them stay organized. However, he has warned that "some people don't like Facebook because it makes them easier to find so it's a trade-off."

The three have plans for future games with Mass Games which include: Assassin, Scavenger Hunt, Nerf Capture the Flag, Cardboard Tube Fighting, Grudge Match Basketball and more, if any students have a suggestion.

Registration for the game is now open and will continue through March 27.

Nicole Carreiro can be reached at ncarreir@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY PACKRATS.ORG

NERF guns and bandanas will be a common sight on campus in the coming weeks as the popular game Humans vs. Zombies returns.

You excel with hands-on opportunities.
The Programs of the School of Tourism and Hospitality Management at Temple University
Undergraduate
• Bachelor of Science in Tourism and Hospitality Management
• Bachelor of Science in Sport and Recreation Management
Graduate
• Master of Tourism and Hospitality Management
• Master of Education in Sport and Recreation Administration
• Ph.D. in Business Administration/Tourism
Non-Credit Programs
• Event Leadership Certificate Program
To learn more, call 215-204-3103 or visit us at www.temple.edu/STHM
Join us for one of our upcoming information sessions on main campus, 1700 N. Broad St., Room 412, at 5:30 p.m.
March 27 | April 21
Online registration available.
School of Tourism and Hospitality Management
TEMPLE UNIVERSITY

Why? delivers a unique sound

WHY? from page 5

that borders on the brim of hip hop, while showcasing many of the stronger songs on the quartet's recently released record "Alopecia," as well as some tunes from their previous full-length, "Elephant Eyelash." The hip hop grooves found on their studio material were sacrificed in favor of more organic sounds, with extremely successful results.

Vocalist/lyricist/odds and ends instrumentalist Yoni Wolf's dead-pan delivery droned over and beneath the heavy percussion, keyboard and guitar layers. Lyrics were often harmonized, or more appropriately, echoed by drummer (and Yoni's brother) Josiah Wolf.

Yoni's half-spoken, half-sung vocals added to the dark void of his poetic lyrics, which delve into references of drugs, sex/death imagery and other shock factors. His cold stare focused beyond the audience was serious and unflinching, and obscured by his curly mop of hair draped over the side of his face. He smiled, but no more than once throughout the performance, and even that was in response to his own joke about booty-shaking.

Josiah's drumming emerged as the most impressive portion of the set, as he simultaneously beat out low-end rhythms on his drum set and chimed angelic tones on vibraphone, all of which surrounded him. His dizzying percussion, coupled with Yoni's frequent additions of maraca-wielding, cymbal-crashing and snare hits, made for a nearly nauseating sonic landscape.

Highlights included the crowd favorite "Yo Yo Bye Bye," from 2005's "Elephant Eyelash" LP, as well as the faux-uplifting spirit of "Rubber Traits," from the same record, in which Yoni advises the listener to "always be working on a suicide note." During the same song, Yoni curiously edited himself, opting to recite his wish to "hump gentle on a bed of nails" as "do something on a bed of nails."

The tracks from "Alopecia," released earlier this month, sounded like nearly perfect renditions, including "The Vowels Pt. 2," "The Hollows," and "These Few Presidents." Instrumentation came off as very natural and organic in the live setting, where drumming and other instrumentation imitated the more electronically-produced cuts on the record faithfully. The studio takes found on their records consistently up the hip hop aspect of this project, though the band has been moving further and further from its hip hop roots, founded by Yoni as a solo performer, and transitioning now into a full-band, indie-pop/rock sound.

As Yoni's outsider poetry and hip hop lyricism have evolved, his words have become more conducive to a verse/chorus/verse archetype, allowing for more focus on sonic moods, complex instrumentation and textures. Evolution and fusion are key aspects of modern music, and Why? is a sparkling example of today's artists melding genres and seeking new ground on which to tread.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

COURTESY TO MILAN RECORDS

Blending a mixture of more traditional indie-rock, hip hop, and atmospheric sounds, Why? provides listeners with a fresh array of sounds when experienced live.

While the concept is a relatively inventive one, the animated sequences in "Chicago 10" fail to deliver as effectively as the rest of the film. The movie is at its strongest when actual footage is carrying it.

Film delivers message

CHICAGO from page 5

movie needs to allow it to move so fluidly and to help retain the audience's attention.

Beyond just the retelling of historical events, the movie also serves as a social commentary on today's war protestors. In the context of the film, any protests going on today are nothing compared to what people would go through to stand up against a war they did not support.

To hear someone say they do not support the Iraq War is the norm in Amherst and on the UMass Campus but we, as a community, do not in fact gather and commit to the cause.

The small protests about fees and tuition that have surfaced throughout campus don't amount to anything that the people in Chicago accomplished. They went to a city with a mission, a message and a will. Today, people do not support our president in polls but in public people are afraid to stand with one another. It is eye-opening to see what once was and the heart and passion that went into a protest.

The idea that future generations will continue to stand up against tyranny and keep the American government in check is repeated throughout the film. It is as if the film is mocking the generations to come, implying that the current generation has been prone to kneel down as of late.

"Chicago 10" strongly delivers its message. It is a documentary definitely worth viewing if you have any interest in social change and the real strength of freedom of speech. It stumbles in animation but leaves nothing behind with its powerful archival footage.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu.

BEFORE CEO, THERE'S ROTC.

ENROLL IN ARMY ROTC BECOME AN ARMY OFFICER
U.S. ARMY

Contact Major John Smolenski at 413-222-9870 or email jsmolens@acad.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT
OUR MULTIMEDIA SECTION
ON OUR WEBSITE
www.dailycollegian.com

Hair, Nails, Tanning, Waxing, Facials, & Massage
Owner
Ms. Abigael M. Sicard
267 Amherst Road
Suite #2 (Rt.116)
Sunderland, Ma
413-397-9988
Tuesday 10-6 • Wednesday 10-6
Thursday 10-7 • Friday 10-6
Saturday 10-3

Plan Ahead for Next Year
Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.
Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Spring cleaning is going green in 2008

Leading brands and consumers shifting to "all-natural" cleaners

BY AMY HOAK
MARKETWATCH

It's spring cleaning time, and as Americans get ready to scrub down their homes this year they're finding they can choose from an array of new detergent products that claim to be safer to use than those currently under the kitchen sink.

Products marketed as "non-toxic," "natural" or "green" now crowd store shelves, promising to be safer to the people who use them as well as the environment. And more of these products are in the works.

"You're going to see more products in the marketplace this year, and in the coming years, that meet certain consumers' expectations for being green but also being effective cleaners," said Brian Sansoni, vice president of communication for the Soap and Detergent Association.

Sales of "natural" household cleaners and supplies – including bathroom and kitchen cleaners – have grown 26 percent from January 2007 to January 2008, according to SPINS, a market research and consulting firm for the natural products industry.

The new products are driven by consumer demand, as well as companies such as Wal-Mart, Target and Home Depot, as they request safer products from their suppliers, said Clive Davies, chief of the Design for the Environment program of the U.S. Environmental Protection Agency.

Joining newer brands, including Method, are established companies such as Clorox. This year, it introduced its Green Works line, including an all-purpose cleaner, a glass and surface cleaner, a toilet bowl cleaner, a concentrated cleaner and a bathroom cleaner.

The new Clorox products are made from plant-based ingredients derived from coconuts and lemon oil, and are at least 99 percent natural – the only non-natural components come from preservatives necessary to maintain shelf life, said spokeswoman Aileen Zerrudo.

"We still stand by the traditional products," she said. "We also know that the consumer wants a natural way to clean." While existing Clorox products have disinfecting properties strong enough to kill powerful germs including the MRSA superbug, its new natural products don't, she added.

But the new products coming out generally work better than the earliest "green" products, said Lauren Heine, senior science advisor with the nonprofit group Clean Production Action.

"Early green products weren't very good. That's not true anymore. The new green chemicals and products look great," she said. Consumers may be paying a premium for these products now, but that will change as more companies begin using green ingredients and the supply infrastructure matures, she added.

Manufacturers claim that all their products are screened for safety, and they're safe if used as directed. But environmentalists will point to negative health effects and environmental consequences from exposure to some traditional ingredients.

It could be that they're both right – to an extent. That's because there are some unknowns about the effects of some cleaning ingredients, said Urvashi Rangan, senior scientist and policy analyst at Consumers Union, which publishes Consumer Reports.

"For the most part, most of the ingredients fall somewhere in between. There's a big gray area," she said. "Thousands of ingredients on the market don't have the safety testing that you might hope they do."

This is with the exception of those proven to be most toxic, she added.

It's that gray area between safe and unsafe that worries some consumers, she said. And some ingredients may affect only people with sensitivities to them, said Heine.

Some ingredients have proven to be harmful when used incorrectly. Ammonia – commonly found in floor, bathroom tile and glass cleaners – can be irritating to the respiratory passages when inhaled and can burn skin on contact, according to Consumer Reports' Greener Choices Web site, at GreenerChoices.org. And mixing ammonia products with chlorine bleach produces a poisonous gas.

Other ingredients are believed to have negative effects on the environment. Nonylphenol ethoxylates – found in some detergents, stain removers, citrus cleaners and disinfectants – "can act as hormone disrupters, potentially threatening the reproductive capacity of fish, birds and mammals" when released into the environment, according to the Greener Choices site.

To help consumers identify products that use the safest available ingredients, the EPA has developed a Design for the Environment label. A list of products that meet the standards for this program is on the EPA's Web site. Visit the site at http://www.epa.gov/dfe/pubs/projects/formulat/label.htm.

Some consumers feel that if a product hasn't been proven to cause cancer or reproductive harm it's safe it used as directed, Rangan said. Others are leery of unknown health and environmental effects or are concerned about the consequences if their children are exposed to harmful ingredients. For these people, natural products have a certain appeal.

To address this type of consumer, some products on the market are being made without ammonia, for example, Heine said. Products are also made to be less volatile, so fewer chemicals will enter the air, and cleaning formulas are being made so that they're more biodegradable than their predecessors, she added.

But Sansoni, of the Soap and Detergent Association, said some marketers of natural products as well as activists may "go overboard" and fuel some unfounded fears about the use of traditional cleaners.

Cleaning products people have been using for years are safe when they're used as directed, he said. And according to a recent survey done by the group, 85 percent of the 1,013 adults who were polled believe that statement.

"Most consumers aren't walking around with a chemistry textbook in their pocket. The most important thing on the label is the safety and usage information," he said.

Plus, words like "nontoxic," "natural" or "green" are often marketing terms, and not terms of science, Sansoni said. And on that, Rangan agrees.

She advises looking at the ingredients before buying a natural cleaning product. Manufacturers aren't required to detail every ingredient in their products (a protection they're given to guard secrets from competitors). But if a product claims to be natural, make sure the company spells out why, she said.

"If you don't see an ingredient list and see something that claims to be natural, you may want to take a pass," Rangan said. That may be especially a good idea if the natural alternative costs more, she said.

COURTESY MRSMISTER.COM

Popular cleaning solutions are facing stiff competition from a recent surge of all-natural alternatives to hit the market.

COURTESY MRSMISTER.COM

Clorox is just one of a number of companies to embrace the "green" culture by offering a brand new line of cleaning products.

Popular game returns to UMass

HvZ from page 1

players to comment and make suggestions.

Ashe and Ciliberti create the missions. They both strive to make the missions unique and enjoyable while challenging and fun. Winners are rewarded with "medicines" and "immunity periods."

The missions are also meant to get students engaged and one of the most memorable missions for them also involved getting people concerned about the community.

Last semester, Ashe and Ciliberti decided to have both teams compete in a way that would do a great service to the Amherst community. They had the zombies and humans compete in a food drive. The food was donated to The Food Bank of Western Massachusetts based in Hatfield. The member of either the human or zombie teams who donated the most food would win for his whole team.

Doug Ramsdell, a senior majoring in engineering, won the food drive for the zombies. About the food drive, he said, "We almost got one ton of food; it was great!"

About the overall experience of the game, he said, "All your friends are now your enemies and your friends are all brand new. I couldn't hang out with my usual friends – they were humans."

"Orchard Hill and Northeast were the worst places to be human and for the first time; Southwest was the safest place to be," said Boxer. "The Zombies had it pretty bad in Orchard Hill because of the balconies."

Players this semester should note that Orchard Hill balconies became hot spots for humans who would enjoy being up high and safe while aiming and shooting Nerf darts at unsuspecting zombies.

Trenton Bollinger, 22, an English major, said about last semester's game play, "I really enjoyed the atmosphere it created. It added another element to the college life beyond the dull week and simply looking forward to Friday. I had a lot of fun."

Ashe, 21, a Political Science and Chinese double major may already have campus recognition. Though he didn't win the candidacy for next year's Student Government Association President, Ashe remains heavily involved in campus affairs.

His campaign for presidency highlighted his experience on the SGA Ways and Means committee where he deals first hand with budgets and securing them for Registered Student Organizations. Ashe believes in working toward building a sense of community on campus.

Ciliberti, 22, a Psychology major, jokingly admitted he "seeks fame." On the HvZ UMass Wiki site, Ciliberti is mentioned as the creator of HvZ as well as being the, "operator of the pre-existing and successful Capture the Flag game on campus." Ciliberti and Ashe created a Facebook group for their RSO which includes HvZ and Capture the Flag, planning to resume in the spring. The RSO is called "Mass Games."

Ciliberti's own description for the group is "The Mass Games RSO is dedicated to organizing large recreational activities promoting teamwork, community, and leadership."

Boxer is also involved with the Mass Games group, serving as its IT Officer.

Ciliberti and Ashe have to come up with "marketing strategies for the missions" while they also "settle debates and handle negotiations," according Ashe.

Boxer, 22, a Computer Science major, is also a fan of the community feeling that HvZ enables, but he admits that he's also in it for the programming experience. For example, Boxer had to write new software to support such a large group of registered participants. He spent about 20-25 hours creating the Web site. He said it was "an added necessity to redo it because we had about 15 times as many people playing."

The web fees are costly and Ciliberti, Ashe and Boxer enjoy paying for the server because it gives them greater flexibility to provide the game to their classmates. If need be, they can send 25,000 emails out in an instant and their server will support that.

Boxer suggests that people register and connect with other players using Facebook because it helps them stay organized. However, he has warned that "some people don't like Facebook because it makes them easier to find so it's a trade-off."

The three have plans for future games with Mass Games which include: Assassin, Scavenger Hunt, Nerf Capture the Flag, Cardboard Tube Fighting, Grudge Match Basketball and more, if any students have a suggestion.

Registration for the game is now open and will continue through March 27.

Nicole Carreiro can be reached at ncarreir@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY TM.EDU/CC/CM

NERF guns and bandanas will be a common sight on campus in the coming weeks as the popular game Humans vs. Zombies returns.

You excel with hands-on opportunities.
The Programs of the School of Tourism and Hospitality Management at Temple University

Undergraduate
- Bachelor of Science in Tourism and Hospitality Management
- Bachelor of Science in Sport and Recreation Management

Graduate
- Master of Tourism and Hospitality Management
- Master of Education in Sport and Recreation Administration
- Ph.D. in Business Administration/Tourism

Non-Credit Programs
- Event Leadership Certificate Program

To learn more, call 215-204-3103 or visit us at www.temple.edu/STHM
Join us for one of our upcoming information sessions on main campus, 1700 N. Broad St., Room 412, at 5:30 p.m.
March 27 | April 21
Online registration available.
School of Tourism and Hospitality Management
TEMPLE UNIVERSITY

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.™

UMass's press sparks late rally in NIT win

BASKETBALL from page 12

free throw to give the Orange a four-point lead with 60 seconds remaining.

Sophomore shooting guard Ricky Harris scored three of his game-high 23 points on the next possession. Senior forward Gary Forbes, who was held to a single-digit scoring total for the first time this season, found Harris wide-open on the wing, to bring UMass within one point.

With the team swarming around the Orange, a loose-ball scrum resulted in junior point guard Chris Lowe grabbing possession. Lowe found Milligan in the post, who then authoritatively slammed the ball into the hoop for UMass's first second-half lead.

"It's not the first time we've been down like this before," Milligan said. "It just shows how tough we are mentally and physically as a team."

Syracuse held the Minutemen to 24 points in the first half, though it was more of a credit to the team's poor 23-percent shooting percentage than the Orange defense. Early in the game, UMass struggled to create offense from half-court sets.

In the second, the Minutemen unabashedly pushed the ball up the court on nearly every opportunity at a near reckless pace.

"After we scored, we were able to start pressing. That allowed us to fatigue them and get a few key turnovers down the stretch," Ford said.

The adjustment was ultimately the difference in the game for the Maroon and White. Syracuse center Arinze Onuaku (20 points, eight rebounds) – the one player that Ford feared could take over the game – looked out-of-synch late in the second and missed multiple easy baskets.

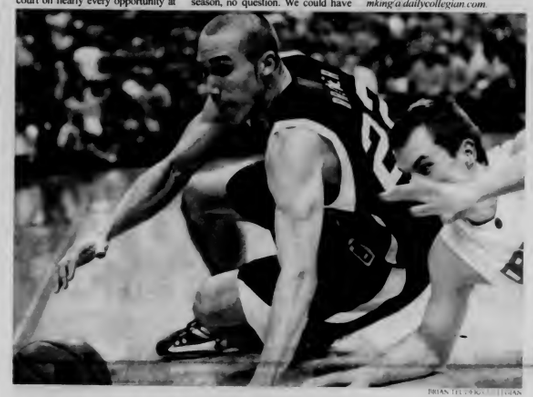
"We knew we couldn't guard Onuaku in the half court," Ford said. "The key to limiting his production was to control the tempo of the game."

Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim acknowledged that the UMass defensive pressure affected his players down the stretch.

"You can't miss lay-ups and win major college basketball games – period," Boeheim said.

UMass appeared to be in danger of suffering an embarrassing loss coming out the locker room after halftime down by 19 points, but the team kept the game close enough to allow for a late second-half run.

"I told them to be excited at halftime," Ford said. "It was the worst half of basketball we've played all season, no question. We could have easily been down by 30 points. Only being down 19 wasn't a problem. We had to make a few adjustments against their zone."



When Milligan picked-up his second foul near the midpoint of the first half, Ford rotated through a combination of forwards to defend the low-post. Junior center Luke Bonner provided an indispensable offensive effort, using a combination of sky hook shots and 15-foot jumpers to expose his shorter defenders.

Without junior forward Tony Gaffney (injured knee), the Minutemen were in desperate need of a spark off the bench – something they found in Bonner.

"Luke Bonner's eight points in the first half were absolutely critical tonight," Ford said. "You need someone step-up in games like this."

UMass looked far from the team that set the Carrier Dome opponent scoring mark in November with its 107-point output. Fortunately for the Minutemen, both teams started the game with sloppy play on offense. The Orange failed to score its first basket until the 16:30 mark after either missing a lay-up or turning the ball over on its first five possessions, while UMass did not reach double figures until the 11:53 mark.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Senior Etienne Brower and Syracuse junior Krystof Ongenaet fight for a loose ball during UMass's 81-77 win at the Carrier Dome last night. Brower scored 19 points on 6-of-13 shooting.

Duo leads the way

ADJUSTMENTS from page 12

Carrier Dome record with 107 points – they knocked down any and all open looks from 3-point range.

And similar to Act I, the main culprit that did Syracuse in was Ricky Harris – with help this time from Etienne Brower. After combining for eight points and missing on all but two of their 10 3-point attempts, the duo exploded in the second half for 34 points on an incredible 8-of-12 performance from the perimeter.

"The last eight minutes I told our guys, 'If you can just get some stops, we'll score at the other end,'" Ford said. "We got those key stops and our guys just stuck with our system – you know this is not the first time we've come back from a lot of points down this year. We've done this more than once.

"It's not an easy way to play, but we've seemed to do this quite a few times," he added.

The Minutemen did it just a few days ago to get here, coming back from a 12-point deficit with about eight minutes remaining against Akron on March 22 for the 68-63 victory.

Syracuse coach Jim Boeheim was left practically speechless during the postgame press conference, after the Minutemen stunned his team again, this time ending his season.

"The only way they could get back in the game was with pressure, and we have seven guys and we got tired a little bit," Boeheim admitted after the game. "But we handled the pressure overall alright – we actually had less turnovers in the second half (nine) than we did in the first half (10) – but we missed too many lay-ups."

And those who turned the TV off missed everything.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenzw@dailycollegian.com.

Maroon and White take on fourth Ivy League foe

By Scott Feldman
Collegian Staff

This season, the Massachusetts tennis team has taken on Brown, Cornell and Dartmouth in a brutal schedule of Ivy League teams. So far they have yet to defeat an Ivy school, but the team hopes that streak will be over by sundown.

This afternoon, the Minutewomen (5-8) will travel to New Haven, Conn., to take on the Yale Bulldogs (3-8) in their fourth matchup against an Ivy League school.

Yale has traditionally fielded elite tennis teams, but they are in the midst of an unusually bad season. The Bulldogs have a sub-500 record and are on a five-game losing streak, having failed to play up to their lofty preseason expectations.

Still, despite Yale's underwhelming record, they do have a few advantages going into today's meet.

First off, history is on the Bulldogs' side; the Minutewomen have never beaten Yale, going 0-10 since 1981.

Second, the Bulldogs will get to play their first home match all season against UMass. Because their arena has been under construction, Yale has been forced to play every meet on the road.

The Minutewomen will have to adjust to playing indoors again, after playing back-to-back outdoors matches in South Carolina.

For UMass to win, the team must make sure it maintains a high level of confidence. As UMass coach Judy Dixon pointed out, there is an intimidation factor that comes with playing an Ivy League school, regardless of its record.

"I think that what happens is when we go play a school like this, right away the team thinks, 'Ivy League, Ivy League oh my goodness this is going to be tough,'" Dixon said. "And Yale is thinking 'oh this is not a conference match' and they go in a little bit looser."

However, Dixon also noted that the Bulldogs' five-match losing streak might be weighing on their minds.

"I would say that Yale has lost five matches in a row and its confidence might be a little shaky," Dixon said.

Senior captain Masha Pozar will have a challenging match today. She is slated to face Yale junior Janet Kim, who is ranked as a top 15 player in the East. Pozar must play at her absolute peak in order to give herself a chance to pull off the upset.

Last week, No. 2 player Candyce Boney lost two singles matches in a row for the first time all season. Dixon noted that Boney had a severe cold in South Carolina and believes it hurt her performance.

"She is healthy now, so I'm hoping she'll be able to turn it around now," Dixon said. "She didn't really play that badly in South Carolina, it's just that she didn't play as well as she has been all season."

Boney matches up well with Yale's usual number two Jessica Rhee, so Dixon is counting on her being in top form this afternoon.

No. 6 player Laura Danai was the only Minutewoman to go undefeated in both singles and doubles play over spring break. Her performance has been a pleasant surprise for Dixon, who hopes it continues against the Bulldogs.

"I think that no matter who we put her out against she has a shot. I've always felt that UMass tennis has to win from the bottom up, not the top down and I really feel like we have a No. 6 player that I can really count on," Dixon said.

Regardless of whether or not the Minutewomen win today, Dixon feels that the team is beginning to hit its stride.

"No matter which way this match goes and it should be close, I'm positive about what is to come in the next two weeks," Dixon said.

Scott Feldman can be reached at Sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Minutewomen not satisfied with early-season results with a 9-6 record and a 0.92 ERA with two saves. She has compiled 122 innings and recorded 119 strikeouts, while walking 21.

SOFTBALL from page 12

The Minutewomen opened the season with three losses all by one run, including a loss to No. 12 Michigan, 1-0. UMass played seven Top 25 teams, going 1-6. The Minutewomen defeated No. 2 Texas A&M, 4-1. The last time UMass beat a second-ranked team was in 2002 when it beat Stanford, 3-1. In the six losses to the ranked opponents, the Minutewomen lost by an average of 1.5 runs per game. UMass never lost by more than two runs in any of those games.

"Someone told me yesterday that our strength of schedule is No. 1 in the country," Sortino said. "I don't think I'm satisfied, but I feel pretty inspired by what we've been able to do. The fact that every game we've played, no matter who we've played, we've been in the game from the beginning to the end with our chances to win."

In the first 15 games UMass was batting .217 as a team. Sortino looks at the teams UMass has played and feels that has something to do with it. UMass took No. 9 Arizona to 13 innings with reigning College World Series Most Outstanding Player Taryne Mowatt on the mound. Down 4-0 in the bottom of the 13th inning, the Minutewomen scored two runs and had the winning run at the plate, but could not complete the comeback. In the last 10 games, UMass bumped its average to .237.

"We're not going to have double-digit hits against Arizona and UCLA," Sortino said. "Considering the youth and the new people we had out here I thought we handled it pretty well and once again we positioned ourselves to play and win in a lot of those games."

Since the A-10 play started, the hitting has improved even more. In those four games UMass has scored 26 runs on 42 hits.

"In the last four games where we've faced pitching that was not at the same level, we've been able to handle the bats a little bit better," Sortino said.

Sortino says the A-10 has improved a lot over the past few years as new coaches have settled into their respective programs. Fordham lost both games to UMass; the Rams, however had many opportunities to take those games. Even though UMass beat La Salle easily in both contests, Sortino thinks La Salle has greatly improved from a year ago.

Dartmouth (4-11, 0-0 Ivy) is the only Ivy League team UMass will see all season. The Minutewomen hold a 5-0-1 record against the Big Green all-time. Last year UMass destroyed the Big Green, 8-0 and 20-0. The 20 runs set a school record last season.

Steve Gomes can be reached at sgomes@dailycollegian.com.

Depth not a concern for Sortino despite key losses rough sophomore campaign at the plate. As a freshman, she struggled some defensively, but earned Atlantic 10 Rookie and Player of the Year honors for hitting .394 with 12 homers and 61 RBIs.

ROSTER from page 12

Her offensive numbers dipped considerably in 2007, but her fielding on the hot corner improved. In 2008 she is batting .298 with two home runs and 10 RBIs.

Shortstop Whitney Williams shored up a struggling infield last year and gave the Minutewomen a very strong arm in the infield. She's hitting .238 with four RBIs this season. She hit .304 last year with 13 RBIs.

At second base, Cullington is coming off a career year, batting .313 with 54 RBIs and a school-record 15 homers. She has started off the season with one in the first four games, but more games against softer competition later in the schedule will likely change that.

Behind the plate, Serio found a niche as the team's catcher last season, replacing K.J. Kelley, a four-year starter. Originally a third baseman, Serio learned her new position on the fly and it immediately paid dividends.

Her hitting struggled at times last season while she got comfortable defensively, but she leads the team in hitting with a .329 average. Her eight doubles also lead the team.

Behind the starters, Boutin and Lindsay Maroney, sophomore Michelle Libby and junior Carly Morin are all listed as infielders, but are not give specific positions.

Meghan Carta and Stephanie Mayne are also listed as catchers and are competing for the backup role to Serio.

"Between Meghan and Steph, it's a dogfight," Sortino said. "Both of them can swing the bat."

Outfield

In the outfield, left and right field will continue to be occupied by Proctor and Samantha Salato, respectively. Last season Proctor was the team's most consistent offensive threat, while Salato dramatically increased her power numbers from her freshman year.

Both were very reliable in the field last season and neither has committed an error. Salato has one outfield assist thus far.

In centerfield, possibly the biggest changeover occurred from 2007, where Carly Normandin has the dubious challenge of replacing Candice Molinari, who was the smallest Minutewomen last year but also the fastest and had one of the strongest arms on the team.

So far, Normandin has been sensational in the field and has really impressed Sortino. Early in the season she was competing with Davina Hernandez, as both players got starts, but Normandin appears to have secured the starting job.

She's already robbed one home run, has an outfield assist and made a handful of other diving catches, proving her value at one of the most athletically demanding positions.

"She's doing a great job," Sortino said. "She's thrown some runners out already. I love Candice to death, but Carly has filled her cleats substantially."

Hernandez, a junior, and sophomore Jill Andrews will be the primary support for the outfield. Both players, as well as Libby, have great speed and see significant time as pinch runners.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

THE BRYANT GRADUATE PROGRAMS

THE BRYANT MBA
- A rigorous program that can be completed in one or two years.
- Complete the program with a class of other professionals.

THE BRYANT MPAc
- The two semester, full-time MPAc program meets the 150-hour requirement for CPA licensure.
- More than 40 top regional and international firms recruit at Bryant each year.

THE BRYANT MST
- This highly specialized program builds an expertise in taxation.
- The 10-course program can be completed on a part-time basis.

TO LEARN MORE ABOUT THESE PROGRAMS AND UPCOMING INFORMATION SESSIONS:

CONTACT US AT (401) 232-6230 OR GRADPROG@BRYANT.EDU

Bryant UNIVERSITY
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
Smithfield, Rhode Island
www.bryant.edu | (401) 232-6230

5-goal second half keys Wildcat victory

UMass offense sputters in second half; now lost 6-of-7

BY DAVID BRINCH
COLLEGIAN STAFF

After the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team won its first game since the first week of the season on Saturday, the Minutewomen again suffered a tough defeat, falling to No. 16 New Hampshire, 10-6, yesterday at McGuirk Stadium.

UNH	10
UMass	6

"UNH is a great team, and we didn't have our chemistry near the end of the game," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

Four Minutewomen tied career highs in three respective categories, as attack Stephanie Hopkins scored two goals, attack Melynda Zwick had three assists and defender Julie Papaleo forced three turnovers.

But all of this was not enough, as the Wildcats (8-2) scored five goals in the second half en route to their eighth straight victory.

"We had some opportunities, but we need to play a complete game," Venechanos said.

"We had some good moments, we scored some goals, we had some good sets of slides, [and] Colleen made some good saves, but we kind of have to do that the whole game to win right now."

The freshman goalkeeper had a career-high 12 saves in her sixth-straight collegiate start, and has improved her save percentage in each game, as well as scooping up nine groundballs and causing two turnovers.

"The defense did a good job of keeping low angle shots and Colleen came up with some good saves for us," Venechanos said.

Venechanos fiddled with the lineup and reassigned players to hybrid positions in order to sure up transition game, as Jeannette Villapiano and Holly Drown both moved from midfield to defense to start the game. Jackie Rosenzweig also relocated to midfield from her regular defensive position.

"We feel like they are good leaders back on defense and we need them on attack as well, so those three do a good job at seeing what we need," Venechanos said.

"All three of them bring something to our team that we need, [and] we want to keep them on the field as much as we can."

Midfielder Michela Hardy had an impressive game for UNH, scoring a game-high four goals, including three in the second half – she also caused five turnovers. Attacker Shauna Kaplan had two goals and two assists for the visiting team, and midfielder Ashley Crook recovered a game-high four groundballs.

The first half was tight, with the Maroon and White and Wildcats trading goals throughout the first 30 minutes of play. UMass struck first six minutes into the game when Zwick found Hopkins cutting across from the left side of the field.

Nearly three minutes later, the Wildcats answered as Crook fed attacker Moira Talbot to tie the game.

Villapiano scored on a free-position shot to put the Minutewomen up, 2-1, before Kaplan scored back-to-back goals in a 27-second span. Her first goal came on a free-position shot to tie the game and the second was unassisted to put UNH up one.

Captain Kathleen Typadis recorded a goal in her second straight contest, notching her ninth score of the season, coming off a pass from Zwick to tie the game at three. The Wildcats scored the next two goals before Kaytlin McConnick, the UMass/Dinn Bros. Athlete of the Week, scored her team-leading eighteenth goal to cut the Minutewomen deficit to one just under four minutes before half-time.

Into the second half, UNH went on a five-goal tear, and it was clearly too much for UMass, who tallied two goals late in the game from Hopkins and freshman Jackie Lyons.

Despite the result, Venechanos was impressed with her team's poise playing yet another ranked opponent this year.

"The effort was there for the most part and we're just looking forward to our A-10 conference schedule starting, [and] are looking for a clean slate," Venechanos said.

The Minutewomen will open their Atlantic 10 schedule when they take on Richmond Friday afternoon, followed by George Washington on Sunday.

"We're looking forward to going down there, playing two great teams in Richmond and George Washington because we feel like we've seen everything this season," Venechanos said.

"I've though we have been through a lot already, we are excited and much looking forward to the A-10 slate."

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

Sophomore Merritt Cosgrove and the Minutemen suffered a 10-6 loss to New Hampshire yesterday.

Bats come alive in win; Hartford up next

BASEBALL from page 12

Pioneer earlier, before he beat the throw to second base.

"I thought [Serino] looked good," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "He threw a few too many balls, walked some people but he looked good. He pitched well against Arizona State and this was his second start and I thought he looked sharp. I thought he probably should have challenged the hitters a little more than he did."

The Pioneers (1-17) struggled to manufacture runs and baserunners all game, but they also hurt themselves badly in the fourth inning on a misplayed fly ball.

After Fitton struck out the first two UMass batters of the inning, he walked Tuetken before designated hitter Kyle Multner came to the plate.

Multner hit a high fly ball into shallow right field that should have been caught by either the right fielder, first baseman or second baseman.

However, none of them were able to get underneath it and it dropped in for a single.

Baudinet responded with a three-run home run that extended the lead to 6-0 and put the game out of reach for the Pioneers. Although the previous play wasn't an error, it should have been made and subsequently eliminated any chance Sacred Heart had to win the game.

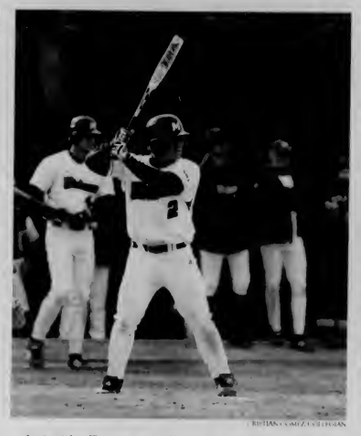
Fitton began to tire after that and the UMass hitters' confidence increased, as evidenced by Adam Tempesta taking a big swing at a 3-0 pitch.

Once they reached base, the Minutemen were taking aggressive leads and stealing bases. They finished the game with four steals, and although Stone acknowledged the opposing catcher didn't have a strong arm, he said he wants the team to continue these tactics.

Franczek exemplified the teams' aggressiveness when he advanced on a wild pitch in the seventh inning – a few members of the Sacred Heart bench became upset, as they viewed it as running up the score.

"I don't care what the score is at the time," Stone said. "You know we got two wins right now, now three, but we can't be waiting for people to decide they're not going to play anymore so we've got to keep playing and being aggressive."

UMass plays again tomorrow when they host Hartford at 3 p.m. The game was originally supposed to be on the road but was moved to Earl Lorden Field after Hartford's Campus Field was in poor conditions.



In Hartford (3-8), the Minutemen will be facing another team from Connecticut that's struggled to this point in the season.

The Hawks' two most recent losses came at the hands of UNC-Asheville and Brown – the losses came by a combined margin of 58-17.

Mike Amendola and Ben Sobocinski lead the Hawks with batting averages of .452 and .400, respectively, in 11 starts.

The Hartford pitching staff has struggled all around with a team earned run average of 10.25 with an opponent batting average of .362.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

BRITTANY CARLO/COLLEGIAN

Junior Adam Tempesta was 2-for-3 with three RBIs in UMass's 15-3 win over Sacred Heart yesterday at Earl Lorden Field.

Villapiano displays versatility

Senior captain shines in new roles for Minutewomen

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts women's lacrosse senior captain Jeannette Villapiano has a knack for being all over the field. She can play various positions as needed.

Villapiano is well-equipped to be on a team as dynamic as the Minutewomen, headed by UMass coach Alexis Venechanos.

Villapiano is an unheralded leader on the team and her up-tempo style of play gives an already athletic UMass team an advantage against teams with pure scorers, such as New Hampshire, a team that has seven players with at least 10 goals.

The 5-foot-9 midfielder/defender by trade is another hybrid player whom Venechanos plays often because of her versatility and high intensity. She runs the midfield for the second season in a row and is already breaking personal records with each passing game.

Villapiano is frequently used in tandem with junior defender Jackie Rosenzweig and sophomore midfielder Merritt Cosgrove.

"We've been rotating them in midfield and defense," Venechanos said of her midfielders. "We feel like they're good leaders on defense and we need them on attack as well. All three of them bring something that our team needs and we want to keep them on the field as much as we can."

Villapiano is a defensive-minded player and has an ability to run the midfield and also create turnovers in the back of the midfield toward her team's goal. As a junior, she had a down year, playing in 17 games while making two starts. Her major statistics for the year were two goals, five draws controlled, five caused turnovers and four ground balls.

Villapiano's best season came as a sophomore, when she was named to the Atlantic 10 Conference All-Tournament Team. In 16 games – starting 15 of them – she had 22 goals and five assists for 27 points, which ranked fourth on the team in total points.

One of the best games of her career came against Saint Joseph's, in which she scored two pivotal goals; the first tied the game at five and her next was the beginning of a 5-0 run that sealed the win for the Minutewomen.

She also excelled in statistics that don't count toward one's point total. Villapiano had 33 ground balls, 23 draws won and caused six turnovers.

"As of right now we can't take her off of the field," Venechanos said of Villapiano's value to the team this season. "She's been doing everything but playing goalie."

Villapiano is on pace to have her best season as a Minutewoman. She leads the team in draw controls, with a career-high 17. Also, with a caused turnover in her latest game, against the No. 16 New Hampshire Wildcats, Villapiano tied a career-high for caused turnovers in a season.

Her physical play has also earned her a team-high 14 yellow cards. However, on the other side of the foul, she is one of only four Minutewomen with multiple free-position goals.

"Wherever coach needs me, wherever the team needs me, that's where I am," Villapiano said of her duties at multiple positions. "I'll do anything to get that big [win]."

Villapiano does have a preference, however. She likes to play in the midfield because she likes bringing the ball up the field in offensive transition, but she also likes to slide back into defensive sets and help protect the cage.

With freshman goaltender Colleen Speth inheriting the starting spot by way of trial-by-fire, Villapiano's hard-nosed defense is needed to give her goalie the comfort that she needs to ease into her role as the starting netminder.

The other aspect of Villapiano's game that makes her a multi-dimensional threat is her speed.

"I'm a defensive [midfielder] so I play back," Villapiano said. "Coach utilizes my speed a lot, I'm more of a transition player, that's my strongest point."

Villapiano will use her knowledge of the positions to aid her team as the Minutewomen enter conference play.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

BY STACEY GOLDSTEIN

Senior captain Jeannette Villapiano scored her first goal of the season in UMass's 10-6 loss to No. 16 New Hampshire yesterday.

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

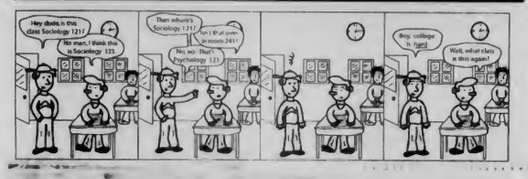
The University of Massachusetts Amherst
Journalism Program Presents...
Campaign 2008: An Endless Cycle?
Wednesday, March 26
4 - 5:30 pm
Room 168C UMass Campus Center
A panel discussion featuring:
Jill Lawrence
National political correspondent, USA Today
Mark Stencel
Deputy publisher, Governing Magazine
Mary Carey
Political writer, Daily Hampshire Gazette
Steve Fox
Journalism Professor, former Washingtonpost.com editor, moderator
Ask your journalism professor how you can earn EXTRA CREDIT for attending!
Free Refreshments!

Seven Os
EVERY WEDNESDAY:
KARAOKE
LIVE BANDS
THURSDAY, 3/27/08
PINKERTON BAND
SPECIAL EVENT ON THURSDAY
ROCK, PAPER & SCISSORS
TOURNAMENT 8:00 PM
SATURDAY, 3/29/08
MARK SNOW BAND
STUDENT BAND WANTED
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD SUNDERLAND, MA 01375 (413) 665-6758
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CLIFFSIDE APTS.

You can count to ten!

4			8			1
	3		2	6		9
5
6		3	5
4	1	7	9	3	5
		1	8		6
					9
8	6	4		7
9		8				3

QUOTE OF THE DAY



"Everyone thinks of changing the world, but no one thinks of changing himself."

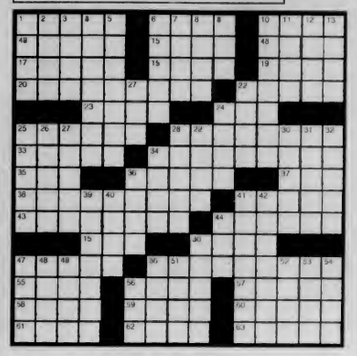
– Leo Tolstoy

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

SCRATCH N' SNIFF BY DEREK CUNEO

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

ACROSS
1 Molts
6 House on campus
10 Like hen's teeth
14 Ceiling
15 Prom transport
16 Tel ___ Jaffa
17 Light on one's feet
18 Jumble
19 Moral weakness
20 Tripla
22 Offense and defense
23 Classic TV equine
24 "Xanadu" band
25 Appeared
28 "___ in the Mist"
33 Argue a case
34 Pompous
35 Ventilate
36 Pool table material
37 United
38 Din
41 Cheapskate
43 Stabilizes
44 Colliers
45 Tennis do-over
46 Kid around
47 Madonna title role
50 Encouraged
55 Lucy's love
58 Tailor's connection
57 Open-mouthed
58 No pain, no
59 Mate
60 Costner or Bacon
61 Otherwise
62 Highland Gaelic
63 Put up



DOWN
1 Venetian blind part
2 Lofty
3 Abu Dhabi leader
4 No-win situation
5 Took the tiller
6 Deluge
7 Moon valley
8 In the center of
9 Besides
10 Pasta with pockets
11 Eager
12 Wedding day throw away
13 Holiday forerunners
21 Nourished
22 Lost traction
24 See eagle
25 Stratches across
26 T.S. or George
27 Too weird
28 Lawn makeup
29 Horse food
30 Unrestrained
31 Ed who played Lou Grant
32 Those with foresight?
34 Happiness
36 State of irritation
39 Crisp cracker
40 Start of an invention
41 Addition error, e.g.
42 Whole number
44 Sea of France
46 ___ Lee Curtis
47 Boundary
48 Calf meat
49 Goddess of fertility
50 Pay heed to
51 Corn units
52 Central part of a church
53 Larger-than-life
54 Pockmark
56 That ship

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
You will get priceless rewards.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer
Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Stop spending money you don't have on things you don't really need.
i.e. KY Jelly.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Life is nothing more than a giant game of Rock 'em Sock 'em Robots. You mustn't let your head pop off.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You will accidentally call the first person in your phonebook. They will call back and it will be awkward.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Chariots of Fire: Great movie; dangerous form of transportation.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
You will contract equine encephalitis thus resulting in a terrible headache and the realization that you are a horse.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are straight up 100% real maple syrup. Be proud my little pancake topping, be proud.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
If your best friend stutters while answering a question, tell the inquirer "she's just being Miley." She will redeem herself later.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You move like molasses but your sweetness more than makes up for your viscosity.

It appears as though you have lost sight of your true identity...

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Get rest or your minor case of the sniffles will escalate to a major case of your brain mushifying and dripping out of your nose.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19

A Meaningful Job Helping Children Learn
Part-time, year-round position available in motivating and coaching the Kumon method of reading and writing.
Position also available in computer processing.
KUMON MATH. READING. SUCCESS.
For more information, contact stephenarmstrong@charter.net or visit www.kumonamherst.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast. Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

APT. FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates
APARTMENT FOR RENT
2 bedroom $1175
3 bedroom $1475
4 Bedroom $2225
Accepting Applications, 253-7377
millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement

EMPLOYMENT

(Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gna Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers wanted, must be able to work approx. 20 hours per week, nights and weekends, apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errance, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA PO Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone; 508-228-3942

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity.Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS, 577-5383 to learn more.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

INFORMATION

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

STUDENT HOUSING

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, MARCH 26, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Catch-up 22

Sophomore guard Ricky Harris goes strong to the basket during the second half of UMass's 81–77 win over Syracuse last night in the quarterfinals of the NIT. UMass came back from a 22-point deficit to beat SU.

UMass coach Travis Ford celebrates after his team rallied from 22 points down to defeat Syracuse last night at the Carrier Dome. The Minutemen's next game will be next Tuesday at Madison Square Garden.

UMass erases 22-point deficit to defeat Syracuse in NIT

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

SYRACUSE, N.Y. – Already with one comeback victory at the Carrier Dome this season, it seemed unlikely for the Massachusetts men's basketball team to replicate that feat four months later – in a postseason circumstance no less.

UMass	81
Syracuse	77

However, the Minutemen reprised their underdog role, shocking Syracuse for the second time after their Nov. 28 regular-season victory. UMass capped a spectacular comeback with an 81-77 win in the quarterfinals of the National Invitation Tournament Tuesday night.

The Minutemen executed a 12-1 run over the final three minutes to eclipse a 22-point second-half deficit and become the first to defeat the Orange twice in Syracuse during the same season.

"It was an incredible comeback," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "How we did says a lot about our three seniors who played a lot of minutes in our up-tempo, aggressive style of basketball."

The Minutemen (24-10) advance to next week's NIT Semifinals to face Florida at Madison Square Garden.

After chipping away at the Syracuse (21-14) lead for much of the second half, the Minutemen finally broke through with 26 seconds left.

One of those seniors, center Dante Milligan (13 points, 11 rebounds), made several clutch baskets to cap a valiant defensive effort against a physical Syracuse frontcourt.

At the 18:40 mark of the second half, Milligan collected a missed 3-point shot and laid the ball in to cut the Orange lead to three points, 76-73.

Syracuse forward Donte Greene then penetrated toward the hoop immediately out of a timeout and drew a foul. Greene converted one

See BASKETBALL on page 9

Halftime adjustments set stage for comeback

By Eli Rosenwaike
Collegian Staff

SYRACUSE, N.Y. – For those of you who turned off last night's ESPN game between Massachusetts and Syracuse at halftime, nobody blames you.

Those who decided to stick it out send you their condolences.

In what seemed almost impossible at halftime – with UMass trailing 43-24 at intermission and missing nearly everything – the Minutemen engineered an improbable comeback victory, 81-77, in a game that had all the drama of an NCAA Tournament game.

With the way the Orange played defensively during the first 20 minutes, it's no surprise that UMass shot 10-of-43 overall, including 2-of-15 from 3-point range in the first half. Syracuse played a swarming zone defense that forced UMass to take highly-contested outside shots that often failed to draw iron or that were sent back emphatically in the other direction.

"If you had shown me those numbers before the game that Ricky [Harris], Chris Lowe, Etienne [Brower] and Gary [Forbes] would have those numbers at halftime, I would have literally said we would have been down 35," UMass coach Travis Ford said after the game. "Because we were like [4-for-31] combined from those four guys; it was outlandish."

But for some reason, everything changed during the 15 minute intermission. Ford knows precisely why.

"The way we play, being down 19 points is not really a big deal – but I wasn't worried about being down 19, I was worried with how we were playing," he said. "We had to make a few adjustments against their zone and those adjustments seemed to work.

"And when we would score, we were able to get our press on, which helped us fatigue them," he added.

The adjustments the Minutemen made allowed them to finally get good looks in the second half, as the Syracuse defense grew tired and failed to challenge shots as they had in the first half. And just like UMass did in its first victory over the Orange back on Nov. 28 – when it scored a visiting team

See ADJUSTMENTS on page 9

Minutewomen come home

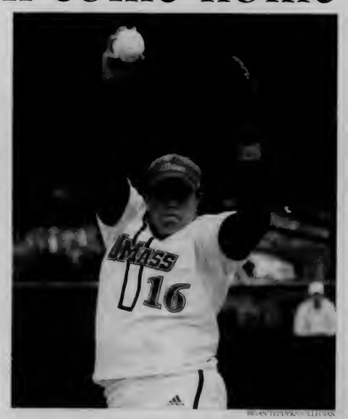
Doubleheader with Big Green kicks off home slate

By Steve Gambs
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team will return home after spending 25 games on the road and out of the New England winter. The Minutewomen will host their home opener in a doubleheader against Dartmouth.

Avoiding the long winter in the Northeast, UMass has traveled to Florida twice, California, Georgia, New York and Philadelphia for a month and a half. Now they return home to defend their Atlantic 10 title with a 14-11 mark.

"You can't imagine what it's like to have the opportunity to finally play the game, where it was meant to be played," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said about playing their first home game.



Sortino understands that the Northeast is a tough place to practice softball in the spring. When the weather is too cold they will practice inside the Boyden Gymnasium or practice outside on Garber Field because of the ongoing construction at the UMass Softball Complex. The Minutewomen have not practiced much on an actual field as they prepare for the upcoming home stretch.

"I can't imagine a swimmer practicing on dry land, I can't imagine a basketball player playing with lights out on half a court, those things don't happen," Sortino said. "This is what we've dealt with so the fact that we can open up at home [today], hopefully it stops raining by noon, we'll tarp the field and we can open up this beautiful place."

The UMass Softball Complex went through construction in the offseason with brand new grandstands that include individual seats in the middle section.

Before the season UMass received 21 votes in the USA softball pre-season poll, ranking one spot outside the Top 25. Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter was named to the 2008 USA Softball Collegiate Player of the Year Top 50 Watch List. Balschmiter enters today

See SOFTBALL on page 9

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter and the Minutewomen open their home schedule today against Dartmouth.

Sortino reloads after losing key contributors in 2007

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

If the Massachusetts softball team has been anything under UMass coach Elaine Sortino, consistent would have to be it.

The perennial Atlantic 10 Champions have been blessed under Sortino with year-in-year-out talent and depth at each position, and 2008 should prove no different.

Though the Minutewomen lost key players at some important positions, Sortino already has options in each spot. The season is already under way, but with the Minutewomen opening their home season today, let's take a look at who will be playing at the newly-renovated UMass Softball Complex.

The team has just two seniors, second baseman Stacy Cullington and Lauren Proctor, who bring the experience of three Atlantic 10 Championships and three NCAA Tournament appearances to the leadership role.

"They've been great leaders, and they're great players," Sortino said. "They field their positions well. We're getting great, steady play; defensively they're fun to watch."

Pitchers

There is little to say here. Brandice Balschmiter is in her junior year and is already proving just as dominant as she was in the first half of her collegiate career. Her current ERA of 0.92 is the best she's ever had.

After coming to UMass with an overpowering fastball, Balschmiter has developed an arsenal of different pitches that play off the speed she generates with her marquee pitch.

Sortino has been particularly impressed with her rise-ball, but most are off-speed pitches Balschmiter used last year as out-pitches.

So far this year, Sortino – who signals all of the pitch selections in to catcher Jessica Serio – has been willing to call for any pitch in any situation, and so far the numbers speak for themselves.

Sophomore Bailey Sanders came in last year as the complement to Balschmiter. A completely different style of pitcher, Sanders is softball's equivalent to a junk-ball pitcher.

Her velocity doesn't come close to Balschmiter's but it doesn't need to. Nearly every pitch she uses has great movement, and after spending all of the fall season rehabbing from surgery on her throwing arm, she's gotten much stronger and is throwing harder than last year.

The only other pitcher on the roster is Audrey Boutin, who is listed as a pitcher/infielder. Much like Maggie Feix last season, Boutin will not see action in the circle unless an injury sidelines Balschmiter or Sanders.

Infield

First base is the only position that will see much change this season, as Sortino attempts to replace Amanda Morin, who was one of the team's best defensive players and also the leadoff hitter.

Sophomore Sarah Reeves played very little in her rookie year, but has come on strong so far in her first year as a starter at first. Through 25 games she is batting .275 with a home run and 11 RBIs.

"Defensively she's doing a great job for us," Sortino said. "She's hauled in some pretty ugly throws for outs."

Junior Whitney Mollica returns as the team's third baseman after a

See ROSTER on page 9

Minutemen roll over SHU

Baudinet, Tempesta lead offense in 17-hit outburst

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

After scoring six combined runs in its past four games, the Massachusetts baseball team defeated Sacred Heart, 15-3, yesterday at Earl Lorden Field.

UMass	15
SHU	3

At first, it appeared that the Minutemen's offensive struggles would continue. They created one base runner through the first two innings but began to figure out pitcher Matt Fitton in the third.

Senior Andy Tuetken led off the inning with a double, one of his four hits on the day. He scored on a Brian Baudinet sacrifice fly to give the Minutemen (3-8) a 1-0 lead.

Jim Macdonald and captain Adam Tempesta also recorded RBIs in the inning to give UMass a 3-0 lead.

While the offensive production picked up from the past week, Nick Serino also gave UMass a solid pitching performance.

The freshman got into some trouble in the fifth inning but induced an inning-ending groundout to shortstop Ryan Franczek with the bases loaded that allowed the Minutemen to escape with one Pioneer run.

In addition to pitching five innings and allowing one run, Serino used an effective pickoff move to catch runners in between first and second base.

He caught Justin Mulrain in the fifth inning and nearly caught another

See BASEBALL on page 10

Senior Lauren Proctor is one of UMass's two captains in 2008. The left fielder is hitting .200 in 23 games so far this season.

INSIDE: KOSTKA NHL BOUND | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

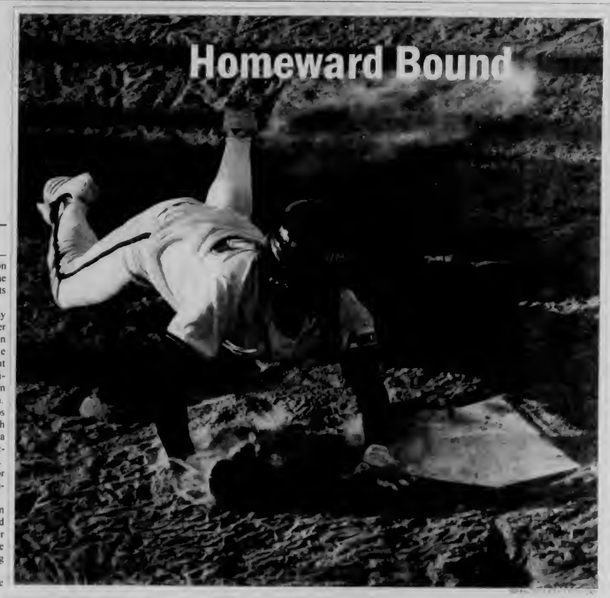
MIXED SHOWERS : HI: 50 LO: 31 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 2008

Campus receives national attention

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

Last week, the United States Student Association – the oldest and largest student organization in the country – awarded the University of Massachusetts Amherst its campus of the year award.

The award was given out at the end of a four day summit in which eight UMass students joined other students from across the country and descended upon Washington D.C. for the USSA's Annual Legislative and Conference Day. They lobbied legislatures about issues regarding the costs of higher education, specifically in relation to reauthorizing the "Higher Education Act" and federal budget allocations towards education.



The students also attended a series of workshops where they learned how to organize and advocate with administrations on their own campuses. There was a focus on teaching grassroots organizing and the connections between student advocacy and labor movements.

The summit also hosted a series of caucuses for minority groups such as the LGBT, Latino, and African-American communities.

Vanessa Snow, a Student Government Association Senator who attended the summit, said that she believed UMass was recognized based on its actions over the past year such as the November student strike and recent efforts to implement state-wide organizing throughout the Commonwealth.

While most other members of the USSA are

See USSA on page 3

Sophomore Jill Andrews slides safely into home plate during the sixth inning of UMass's 7–5 victory in the second game of a doubleheader against Dartmouth yesterday. For the full story see page 12.

New UM policy for violence discussed

By Katherine Neubert
Collegian Staff

Graduate students at the University of Massachusetts are hosting an open forum on gender violence in the hopes of creating a policy proposal for the University administration today.

From 2 to 4 p.m. in room 101 of the UMass Campus Center, the newly formed Civil Rights Committee (CRC) of GEO will hold an open forum concerning gender violence, titled "Violence, Sex, and Gender: Hidden Realities at UMass Amherst."

"An increased climate of violence and a lack of institutional response have placed student and employees at risk," said Antonia Carcelen-Estrada, co-chair of the committee, in a statement. "It is about time to tackle violence in campus from several different perspectives, as they relate not only to the university communities but to society as a whole."

The CRC plans a community forum each semester, addressing civil rights issues involving concerns raised by graduate students at meetings. Members of the committee hope this semester's forum presents informative and challenging dialogue surrounding gender violence.

See CRC on page 3

UMass plays host to MCSW meeting

Members of the Massachusetts Commission on the Status of Women met yesterday to discuss issues concerning women in the Commonwealth.

By Josh Walowitch
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Commission on the Status of Women hosted a commissions meeting embracing the voices of women from across the state at the University of Massachusetts last night.

"We are an independent state agency, our mission is to advance the women of the commonwealth to full equality in all areas of their lives" said Executive Director of the MCSW Linda Brandlet.

Female state representation is currently at a lopsided 30 percent Senate and 22.5 percent House. MCSW makes it clear that the current political representation needs to level out which in turn will help pass legislative activity.

The MCSW holds public hearings and regional briefings each year. The purpose of these meetings is to receive input and hear the concerns and issues of women in various parts of the Commonwealth.

The MCSW then issues summary reports to inform and educate legislators, public policy makers and advocates.

"Hearings are held at different areas around the state throughout the year in hopes of gathering enlightening information which we can then feed back to the state legislative" Brandlet said.

Sandy Mandel, a representative from Every Women's Center, hopes to see the women of Massachusetts "speak truth to power with the purpose to make an impact."

"The women of the commission have access to power that many of us women might not have but in order for them to speak truth to that power they must hear from us" Mandel said.

Important issues pertaining to women were discussed by female residents of the Commonwealth throughout the night.

Massachusetts resident Anne Poole expressed her concerns with teen pregnancy and sexually transmitted infections. Poole informed the audience that in Massachusetts 25 percent of teenage girls have sexually transmitted infections and pointed out that the area communities of Springfield and Holyoke rank number one and two for teen pregnancy.

"STI's and teen pregnancies can be prevented through the implementation of affordable services and prac-

See COMMISSION on page 3

MassPIRG backs MA climate legislation

By Adam Coulter
Collegian Staff

Students in environmental groups across Massachusetts are planning a state summit to help push Senator Marc R. Pacheco's (Taunton-D) Global Warming Solutions Act into Massachusetts state law by Earth Day.

Three weeks ago the State Senate passed the Massachusetts Senator's act, which mandates a cut in carbon dioxide emissions in Massachusetts by 20 percent by 2020 and an additional reduction in emissions of 80 percent by 2050.

The act still needs to make it through the Massachusetts House of Representatives to become state law, but the issue of global warming is a popular one currently. With people like ex-Vice President Al Gore championing the cause, and many environmental groups operating in this state, the act is expected to pass.

"It's extremely likely that the act will pass through the House. We think it's ambitious for us to try and get it done by Earth Day, but it will pass through soon," said Vanessa Wright, a University of Massachusetts senior, MassPIRG member and conference recruitment leader.

After Wright and some fellow students got back from the youth climate conference Power Shift '07' in Washington DC, they decided to use their new connections and collective inspiration to bring the climate movement to Massachusetts. The upcoming summit was initiated by Massachusetts Youth Climate Action, which is a collection of student climate organizations across the state.

"We are getting a lot of support from the State of Massachusetts, climate control isn't a quiet issue anymore," said Wright.

Since November, the coalition

See CLIMATE on page 3

After 2007's Power Shift conference, members of the UMass chapter of MassPIRG brought the climate movement to the Commonwealth by supporting the Global Warming Solutions Act.

BSU holds 'real talk' on gender issues

By Gisel Saillant
Collegian Staff

While most students spent the week before spring break preparing for vacation, the Black Student Union tackled stereotypes of gender and body image within their community.

Before spring break, the Black Student Union hosted "Real Talk: misconceptions of a black woman." This forum, geared itself to tackle issues of stereotypes within the black community, issues of body image and the influence the media has on how black women are represented today.

The forum, titled "Misconceptions of a black women" and part of the Real Talk series of discussions, took place in the Malcolm X Cultural Center located underneath the Berkshire dining commons.

As students slowly found their seats, Jimmy Destin, the person in charge of public relations for BSU, initiated the forum by asking the attendees a single pointed question.

"Do all Black women have attitudes?"

Students like Mohamed Vandi, the secretary for the BSU, found that "the misconception is partly true."

The attendees addressed this issue by discussing how the 'attitude' is actually a form of confidence that black women use to face obstacles.

"Black women come from a fight mode in general, in order to face challenges," said Malcolm Gray president of BSU.

The forum allowed students to search for the origins of the stereotypical misconception of African-American women.

"I think that a lot of the independent [nature] stems from the fact that [black women] come into this world with two strikes against [them],

See GENDER on page 2

Student passes away overseas

A University of Massachusetts student passed away last week while studying abroad in Auroville, India, according to University officials.

Katherine Sherman, a native of Chelmsford, had been a junior in the bachelor of fine arts program concentrating on photography. She had been studying sustainable living, ecology and group dynamics in India.

"We extend our deepest sympathy to her family and friends during this difficult time," wrote Dean of Students Jo-anne Vanin in an e-mail sent to the student body on Tuesday.

While at UMass, Sherman had worked at the Student Union Crafts Center on campus. According to her Facebook.com profile page, it was "the best job ever."

University officials would not comment on the nature of her death and no new information regarding her passing has been released.

Derrick Perkins

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 108

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPY EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Maresa Whoosen
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Wikeart
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS FALL AND SPRING SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMA LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. IT BECAME DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN OWNED BY ITS STAFF SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Michelle Abbasciano

Across the Nation Around the World

Commercial airline pilot fires gun in cockpit during flight

By Mitch Weiss
Associated Press

A US Airways pilot whose gun fired inside a cockpit said he was trying to stow the weapon as the crew got ready to land, according to a police report obtained Wednesday.

The pilot didn't tell air traffic control about the shooting or say the bullet had punctured the cockpit until after the plane landed safely at Charlotte-Douglas International Airport on Saturday, the report said. Photos obtained by The Associated Press show a small exit hole on the plane's exterior below the cockpit window.

US Airways Tower Supervisor Nathan Gundlach told police that when he arrived the pilot was on the phone with the Transportation Security Administration. Gundlach contacted US Airways about the in-flight shooting, but police were not notified until an hour later.

"When I questioned Mr. Gundlach about the delay in airport police being notified, Mr. Gundlach apologized and took full responsibility," an airport police officer wrote in the report.

The Federal Aviation Administration also wasn't told immediately about the incident.

"The first we knew about it was when TSA contacted us," FAA spokeswoman Laura Brown said.

US Airways spokeswoman Andrea Rader declined to comment Wednesday, but airline officials have said the accidental discharge did not endanger the 124 passengers and five crew members on board. Greg Alter of the Federal Air Marshal Service said Wednesday it remained under investigation.

Airline experts said the pilot, who was certified to carry the weapon on board, may have reacted appropriately after the accidental discharge.

"If something happens in the air that's not an emergency that's changed the course of action of the aircraft, the priority is to land the airplane," said William Brogan, an aviation expert at Lewis University near Chicago. "It's fly first, communicate second."

The pistol discharged shortly before noon Saturday aboard Flight 1536 from Denver to Charlotte, as the Airbus A319 was at about 8,000 feet and about 10 minutes from landing.

The damaged caused by the accidental discharge of a handgun in the cockpit of this US Airways flight can be seen in the above photographs.

National No Fly List number could reach 1 million in '08

By Chris Davies
The Daily Vidette (Illinois State U.)

(U-WIRE) NORMAL, Ill. - Many people find heightened airport security to be bothersome, however thousands more find it downright outrageous. The U.S. governments No Fly List and Selectee List, according to the Inspector General of the Justice Department, contains more than 700,000 names.

The Inspector Generals' comments about the number on the list came from September 2007. The American Civil Liberties Union estimates that the list is, and has been, growing at a rate of 20,000 names per month. At that estimated growth rate the number of people who are on the list would reach 1 million by July of this year.

Elio Montenegro, a spokesperson for the Department of Homeland Security, explained the main purpose of the lists.

"The No Fly List and Selectee List consist of persons who pose, or are suspected of posing, a threat to civil aviation or national security. Persons who are on the No Fly List are not permitted to board an aircraft flying to, from or within the United States. Persons on the 'Selectee List' are subjected to additional screening at the checkpoint," Montenegro said.

Drew Muselman, an Illinois State University freshman molecular biology major, thinks the list might be good because of its intentions.

"[The terrorist watch list] probably has stopped some things from happening, but airport security in general is just more of a hassle than good," he said.

Many individuals who represented a significant threat, however, have deceased since the list was created including Saddam Hussein. Like Hussein, 14 of the 19 hijackers from the 9/11 attacks are included on the list. These individuals are also deceased.

Many of those on the list do not represent the threat that the deceased individuals once did. For instance several congressional leaders and military personnel are listed as potential terrorists. Senator Ted Kennedy (D) Mass., went to such lengths as to ask the Secretary of the Department of Homeland Security, simply to have his name removed from the list.

Many people have been victimized because of the regularity of their names. Names such as Gary Smith and John Williams are consistently flagged by airport security as potential terrorists. John William Anderson is only 6-years-old, but has had previous trouble boarding an airport because his name was included on the list.

Even celebrities are not free from this list. Singer Yusuf Islam, formerly known as Cat Stevens, had his flight from London diverted to Maine when the government found out that he was aboard.

Many of those who have experienced problems in airport security have joined forces with the ACLU to pursue legal action against Homeland Security.

Students differ on gender stereotypes being black and being a woman. We have these vices against us, so that's why we are stronger," said senior Mahlet Girma.

GENDER from page 1

Students like Octavia Farquharson, looked at this misconception in way that the 'attitude' is not a constant state of mind, but it is simply how some black women express themselves.

"Catty, childishness – that is women in general. If you look at white girls they have catty moments too. It is expressed differently," Farquharson said.

The audience discussed differences in ideal beauty standards between individuals with lighter skin and those with darker skin as well.

Destin led the discussion again, asking the students to comment on the ideal beauty standards in the black community.

"[What] is the struggle between light-skinned girls and dark-skinned girls?" he asked.

"Most men prefer light-skinned [women] because they are closer to being white, they think that because they are light skinned and have long hair [shit] don't stink," said sophomore Keninha Jackson.

Freshman Vanessa Andrade answered Jackson's comment by drawing upon her personal experiences.

"Being a light-skinned woman I have to prove more than dark skinned women about being black. I know a lot of light-skinned girls that are not cool that they are catorized as being almost white," she said.

Students – especially the men in the room – expressed how this issue is a misconception black women have about men.

"I think is a misconception because if I want a white girl, I would just go with a white girl," Mustapher Lubega said.

The forum also provided an opportunity to discuss how the media portrays black women and the influences these images have on the way black women are treated.

Mohamed Vandi, commented on how the media still shows remnants of stereotypes regarding black women and their sexuality.

"If you look back in history a lot of black women were raped and were seen as sexual objects, they were blamed for their own rapes because they said they were seducing white men, because of their nature in being sexual," he said

"That's why Halle Berry wins an Oscar when she does a sex scene with a white man," Vandi added.

Destin raised a more specific question to the attendees, asking how "the influence Hip-Hop video vixens have on how they treat black women in like a club setting?"

Students agreed that the way women in Hip-Hop are portrayed videos does influence how women are approached.

"If you are one of those 'pum-pum' girls, don't expect a guy to treat you like a lady," said freshman Charles Jones.

Other attendees commented on how the explicit lyrics on these Hip-Hop songs can be very offensive to women but are often played in a club because of their contagious beats.

"I was at a party on Saturday and the song came on, and I don't even know what they were talking about. All I hear is the 'thump-thump', and I was like shaking my booty," said Freshmen Amaka Mbawuike.

The attendees sought a solution to these misconceptions in the media. "It will take a while, a very long while, until we realize what our worth is. [When] black women start to get position of power in the media to change that," Farquharson said.

APD make three drug arrests

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

Amherst Police made three arrests at two different apartment complexes yesterday for possession of marijuana and cocaine following a lengthy investigation in cooperation with area police departments.

Darius D. Coleman, 19, of 34 Greenleaves Drive, Hadley and Stacey Dalmau, 29, of 520 C. Mill Valley Estates were charged with possession of class D and class B drugs with intent to distribute and a drug violation in a school zone after police executed a search warrant for apartment 520 G of the Mill Valley Estates.

Lamont E. Allen, 43, of 170 East Hadley Road, Amherst, was charged with possession of class D and B drugs after police arrested him at 76 The Brook.

Both warrants were executed at approximately 8:15 a.m. yesterday morning.

According to police, all of the arrests followed a lengthy investigation conducted alongside the Hampshire County Narcotics Task Force.

"It's strange to hear about something like that happening," said Evan Boshi, a senior at the University of Massachusetts and resident of the Mill Valley Estates. "It's not something you see happening out in the open during the day."

All three were expected to be arraigned at the Eastern Hampshire District Court yesterday.

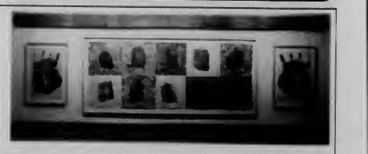
Chris Martin contributed to this report

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com.

"Be careful. Journalism is more addictive than crack cocaine. Your life can get out of balance."
-Dan Rather

Confront addiction at www.dailycollegian.com and dailycollegian.blogspot.com

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 6TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F



Up Late Saturday Night?
1pm Sunday Worship
MERCYhouse :: knowmercy.org

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

Take out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
• More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
• Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
• Post unlimited online listings
• Little to no spam
By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

5th Annual MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons
Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.
FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.
This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008 Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413 585 2760
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons Cuban, 1959- Birth Certificate, 1991 Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925, Fund in 2007 Photograph by Thomas I Gunsaires
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Across the Nation Around the World

Hunt for skyjacker on again

By Joseph B. Frazier
Associated Press

A tattered, half-buried parachute unearthed by kids had D.B. Cooper country chattering Wednesday over the fate of the skyjacker, who leaped from a plane 36 years ago and into the lore of the Pacific Northwest.

The parachute is about all most people in this neck of the southwestern Washington woods ever expected would be found as evidence of Cooper's daredevil escape attempt.

"Hunters are all through here," ldy Gilbert said Wednesday as she served drinks at Nick's Bar and Grill. "They find lots of bodies up here all the time, people who are missing. They would have found some bones. All they found was a chute."

In November 1971, a man identifying himself as Dan Cooper, later mistakenly identified as D.B. Cooper, hijacked a Northwest Orient flight, claiming he had a bomb. He demanded and got $200,000, then jumped out the back of the plane somewhere near the Oregon line.

He may have landed around Amboy, not 30 miles from Portland, Ore. That's the same area where children playing outside their home recently found fabric sticking up from the ground where their father had been grading a road, FBI agent Larry Carr said Tuesday.

The children, responding to a publicity campaign, urged their father to call the FBI, Carr said, and when their find became public this week, it reignited talk of the region's favorite folk hero.

In Ariel, about 20 miles northwest of Amboy, the Ariel Store has an annual D.B. Cooper party.

Dona Elliot, owner of the store, said Wednesday she thinks Cooper hid out in brush and trees for an accomplice to take him to the airport in Portland, about 60 miles south.

"It's the perfect place; no one would have looked for him there," she said.

The T-shirt for this year's party will have a parachute theme, she said, even though she's skeptical that the artifact the kids found is Cooper's.

"It will be 37 years in November," she said. "There can't be too much left of that parachute."

The FBI doesn't want to excavate the property until it confirms, either through an expert's examination or scientific analysis of the fabric, whether the chute is the right kind.

If it is Cooper's parachute, that will solve one mystery – where he apparently landed – but it will raise another, Carr said.

Legislation expected to pass

CLIMATE from page 1

of student climate organizations has blossomed into dozens of partner organizations, most notably MassPIRG and Greenpeace. The name given to the April summit is the Massachusetts Power Shift (MAPS). It will be held April 11-14 and will include workshops, a rally, and a concert on the Boston Common. It will also include a lobby day on behalf of the Global Warming Solutions Act.

Lobby day will consist of breaking up the summit participants into districts and having them eventually come back together with one spokesperson each to interject and tell their collective stories.

"We hope to have one item, like a shirt, that all will ware to show unity," said Wright.

The first goal of MAPS is to get the Global Warming Solutions Act passed through the House of Representatives.

"The second goal is that we hope to create a strong community of activists, and also to have people young and old talk and communicate," said Wright. "It's important to unify."

The University of Massachusetts would like to send 100 students to MAPS, and they are urged to resister online. It costs $15 to register.

"The $15 covers our costs of renting a facility and sending out our information packet, and this is very cheap compared to other conferences of this nature," said Wright.

Mass carpooling is encouraged and if enough people and money is gathered, busses will be used.

Adam Coulter can be reached at acoulte@student.umass.edu.

CRC seeks civil rights policy

CRC from page 1

Kick off will begin with four experts: Ilana Gerjuoy from the Everywoman's Center at UMass; Davey Shlasko, founder of Think Again Training – providing training and consultation to support communities, organizations, schools and agencies helping them engage in dialogue, increase capacities to work together effectively – Mark Nickerson, co-chair of the Board of Directors at the Men's Resource Center, and Sangeeta Kamat, Associate Professor of International Education at UMass. Each person will present and discuss their goals and programs which will be followed by a question and answer session.

The forum's goal is to finalize a strong policy proposal on gender violence for UMass and the GEO that the university cannot ignore, according to the CRC.

The CRC deals with any issues concerning any violation of the civil rights of GEO members, including internal incidents. The committee investigates any accusations of racist, sexist, or other discriminatory action on any GEO members, also assisting any member who submits a grievance through the campus Harassment Policy, Sexual Harassment Policy and/or the Affirmative Action Office.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu

Check us out on Facebook!
Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.
Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.
Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.
If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.
We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.
Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com
TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

SKYPLEX
18 Plus College Night
Thursdays
The #1 Place to Party!
3 Different Rooms/3 DJ's spinning the best in Top 40, Dance, House and Select Mashup
THE ULTIMATE HOT BOOY CONTEST
$100 Best Male $100 Best Female
The Hottest 19 Plus SATURDAY NIGHT Dance Party
NOW HIRING!
Bartenders Cashiers Security Staff
Barback Waitstaff
SATURDAYS
SkyPlex 10 Stearns Sq Downtown Springfield 413.827.9000 www.SkyPlex.us

Copy-cat threats found in schools across the country

By Giles Bruce
Northern Star (Northern Illinois U.)

(U-WIRE) DEKALB, Ill. - Lately, it seems like every news cycle has a report of threats of violence on a school campus. The threats have occurred so frequently, some might consider them the new "bomb threat."

The most recent threat in the DeKalb area was discovered March 13 on a bathroom wall at DeKalb High School. It was reportedly a vague threat of violence, and it mentioned the date March 13.

A 16-year-old student was arrested and charged with criminal defacement - a class 4 felony - and disorderly conduct in connection with the threat.

The student was caught after authorities looked at video surveillance and conducted interviews with students. The police were lucky that cameras were surveying the area, said Lt. Gary Spangler of the DeKalb Police Department.

Spangler said the criminal defacement charge was bumped up to a felony because it occurred on state-supported property.

"Unless there's video, [written threats are] tough to solve, unless someone recognizes the handwriting," he said.

Another local threat was found March 2 in a Sycamore business. It threatened possible violence against Sycamore High School on March 4. The school remained open on that day. No arrests have been made in connection with that incident.

An unusual amount of threats occurred in the Chicagoland area after the Feb. 14 shootings.

On Feb. 16, Mahtab Shirani, 24, of Wheaton, a senior attending University of Illinois at Chicago, was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct in connection with an e-mail threatening violence to the UIC campus. The e-mail referenced the Feb. 14 shootings.

On Feb. 20, East Aurora High School was on alert after a threat was discovered on a 15-year-old student's MySpace page that referenced the Feb. 14 shootings. The student was charged with disorderly conduct.

On Feb. 27 in Berwyn, a 17-year-old Morton West High School student was arrested and charged with disorderly conduct after he was accused of telling friends that he planned to commit a similar shooting to the ones here on campus.

It is unclear what compelled these students to make violent threats, but it may not be coincidental that they occurred after Feb 14.

"It is obviously very much a copycat phenomenon," said Fred Markowitz, associate professor of sociology. "Some people think, 'Hey, I'll try that.'" involved in state-wide organizing, Massachusetts still does not have a formal body for it.

USSA names UM campus of the year

USSA from page 1

USSA has had a strong influence over SGA efforts in recent years with the implementation of the Grassroots Organizing Weekend program at UMASS, which is mandatory for all SGA senators to attend. The USSA also sends resources help support and develop the advocacy programs emerging from UMass.

The USSA declares on its Web site that it is "dedicated to training, organizing, and developing a base of student leaders to engage in expanding access to higher education and advancing the broader movement for social justice."

Mike Fox can be reached at mgfox@student.umass.edu

Advocacy group meets at UMass

COMMISSION from page 1

tices along with an increase in awareness of these problems through the usage of education" Poole said.

Issues discussed included abortion, health care for the elderly, struggles of female minorities at UMass, the storing of umbilical cord blood and the negative affects of incarcerating women who have a dependency on drugs or alcohol and have committed crimes due to their addiction.

The commission works closely with its appointing authorities and state legislators, particularly the Massachusetts Women's Legislative Caucus, to promote and pass legislation that positively impacts women and families of the Commonwealth.

The commission holds a substantial amount of power which includes the studying, reviewing and reporting on the status of women in the Commonwealth, advising executive and legislative bodies on the effect of proposed legislation of women, informing leaders of business, education, healthcare, state and local governments and the communications media of issues pertaining to women, providing referrals and serving as a resource of information on issues pertaining to women, identifying and recommending qualified women for positions at all levels of government as well as serving as a liaison between government and private interest groups concerned with issues affecting women.

Josh Walovitch can be reached at jwalovit@student.umass.edu

THURSDAY, MARCH 27
5-9 PM
SPRING FEVER DINNER
MENU:
New York Strip Steak
Tuscan Chicken
Carved Ham
Cassoulet (carrots, assorted beans)
Oven Roasted Red Potatoes
Grilled Asparagus
Summer Squash/Sun Dried Tomatoes
Fresh Fruit Smoothie Bar
DESSERT:
Strawberry Shortcake Bar
ALL DCs
DINING SERVICES
IVY

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
-Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Tuition-funded propaganda

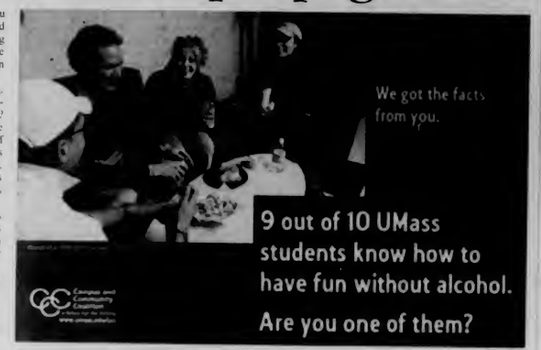
You've seen them. Or at least 96 percent of you have, according to the UMass Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention (CADAP). I'm writing about flyers declaring "2 3 of U Mass students have four or fewer drinks when they party."

Steven Hoeschele
Guest columnist

They're embarrassing. Posters on busses shaming UMass kids about their drinking habits? While aiming for positive reinforcement, they're back-handed proclamations with a tone that rings of Lehigh. One can see how this ad campaign reinforces University stereotypes for the folks who live in town. Being told – in public – about our drinking habits doesn't help our reputation among our classmates from the other four colleges, either.

But let's revisit the statistic "2 3 of U Mass students have four or fewer drinks when they party." This means that 1 of U Mass students have 5 or more drinks when they party. Think about that in practical terms. Five or more vodkas and Redbulls could make you kind of reckless. Five or more glasses of wine might depress you into a corner.

So at a UMass house party with 100 people, 33 of them are going to end the night wasted, if we're to believe the statistics. So much for positive social norms.



Ms. April McNally of the Office of the Center for Alcohol and other Drug Abuse Prevention noted in a Collegian letter that, "The goal of these social norms messages, and of all CADAP initiatives, is to help students make informed decisions so they can live healthy and achieve their academic and personal goals."

I'm writing to state that CADAP's "Social Norms campaign" is not educational. It's propaganda.

In teaching a course on propaganda this semester, I can say with certainty that this ad campaign fits the major requirements for being labeled the P-word. Most importantly, it's designed to influence behavior – not to educate us about health, as Health Services would like us to believe. It utilizes the bandwagon tactic – essentially peer pressure, to discourage drinking.

A couple clicks on the CADAP website reveal a message that sounds an awful lot like a propaganda campaign. "Social norms messages generate skepticism because they often contradict people's thoughts in subtle ways. As time goes on, people process the information and many ultimately change their minds." So, the ads not only serve to discourage alcohol consumption by students, but also to make community residents believe that we're not drinking much.

Because the statements aren't sugar-coated, they seem factual, right? While the survey's statistics may be sound, the actual wording is misleading. In academia we'd call this advertisement an "epistemically defective message," which in plain talk means "it ain't quite right." Sure, nine out of 10 students know how to have fun without alcohol, as another CADAP ad declares. But knowledge and action are two different things. Simply compare both statistics, and you'll realize that many of those 90 percent of students put at least a couple shots of alcohol into their "fun."

You're probably the other guy.

I'd also like to note that, statistically speaking, 10 percent of UMass students must have alcohol in order to have fun. That's 2,500 members of the campus community.)

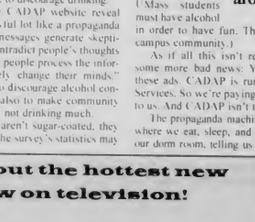
As if all this isn't regretful enough, I'll break some more bad news: Your bursar bill is funding these ads. CADAP is run out of University Health Services. So we're paying this office to propagandize to us. And CADAP isn't the only offender.

The propaganda machine is at work all around us: where we eat, sleep, and study.

The propaganda machine is at work all around us: where we eat, sleep, and study. Posters right outside our dorm room, telling us that "sober sex is intoxicating." Massive banners with the vapid proclamation, "Students First!" What purpose does this undoubtedly expensive banner serve, but to make us feel the administration cares more about us than about line items in budgets?

Message to the administration: Don't spend our money on cheap-shot behavior modification campaigns.

Furthermore, we're adults. We can make up our own minds about whether to drink before we shag.



In my class on propaganda, students are arming themselves with the critical thinking skills necessary to recognize propaganda. I recently encouraged them not only to spot it, but to take action in resisting it, to counter that propaganda message. So I'll encourage you, the reader, to do the same in response to the administration's anti-alcohol propaganda. This weekend, go out and have 5 or more drinks when you party.

Steven Hoeschele is a UMass student and instructor of a STPEC course on propaganda.

Check out the hottest new show on television!

Airing daily at 1 p.m. and 5 p.m. on UVC-TV 19

"Yak Yak Yak Yak"

The Daily Collegian UMASS Yak Back

A fiscal responsibility

Nick Milano

The kid with the guitar case looked at his girlfriend uncomfortably. The two smiled at each other then he continued answering some random guy's question about his guitar with one word answers. The excitable fellow music guru, enthralled by the conversation, excitedly got up and moved down the train car to get closer. His outdated jacket, shabby jeans and unkempt hair suggested what he soon admitted. As I, a friend and the others on the train eavesdropped, he apologized for having a friendly conversation with a stranger – the ultimate sin when riding the MBTA. Blaming his outgoing nature on the fact that he was high, he delved into a commentary of the guitars he had owned, then lost due to his enjoyment of opiates.

Through all the conversation the five of us had, a variety of topics came up. His favorite guitar, how he built his own guitar, his separation from his wife and daughters and his time spent living in West Cork, a county in Southern Ireland. No story, no matter how tragic from his efforts to get off drugs stood out in my memory more than a passing mention of the education he was given by the Irish government. This man was paid a monthly stipend to attend a trade school to prepare him for work in carpentry. It was enough to pay for his rent each month.

The Irish government felt it was not doing enough by giving its citizens a free education from the primary school through college; it pays residents to learn a trade in preparation to enter the workforce. This guy was not having school paid for by his employer as many firms in the United States will pay for employees to further their education, but the government was investing in his training – even though he was not a citizen, merely married to one.

It is in stark contrast to this country where not only does college cost tens of thousands of dollars, but there are also private high schools whose costs can run over the price of an undergraduate degree. The more costs rise, the more money parents must set aside for a college education. It seems to me, a public health major without any real practice in economics, that this runs contrary to what a healthy economy desires.

One of the greatest growths the United States economy has ever seen was after World War II when millions of American G.I.'s came home to a free college education. Instead of the disaster of having millions of unskilled workers entering the workforce, millions of skilled workers emerged after time in four year universities and trade schools.

With parents saving their money for years in preparation for college and with millions of graduates leaving college knee and waist deep in loans, fewer and fewer people have to be spending money. It seems for the economy to stay strong that money must be spent. This is the reason President Bush is mailing out $600 checks to millions of Americans, hoping that they will spend the money, not use it to pay off debt.

A college education should not make one's standing worse.

But does this not point to the larger trend that as college costs continue to put the squeeze on middle class Americans fewer money is flowing into the economy, but more is flowing into hanks for savings and credit companies to pay off loans?

Some people are trying to change this. Now that Governor Patrick has finally been defeated on his casino quick fix for Massachusetts, he still has good ideas in the bank. He has floated the idea of making education free for all Massachusetts residents from kindergarten through community college, but no definite proposals to that effect have yet emerged. With the economy struggling and with Massachusetts already facing a $1.3 billion shortfall in next year's budget, there is not the money to fully implement such an idea, but if things turn themselves around, it should certainly be debated.

The anonymous guy from the Orange Line ride into Downtown Boston has lived a hard life since his divorce, but he glowed about the way the Irish looked after its citizens. The government invested in the public by offering a free and high quality education from the youngest ages through higher education.

The United States boasts the greatest collection of colleges in the world from the Ivies like Harvard even to the public institutions like the University of Massachusetts Amherst, but their benefits are lessened when most undergraduates must exit with $20,000 in student loans. A college education should not make one's standing worse, but boost them into a life of getting married and raising their own family.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

I think the reverend's right

Brad Leibowitz

My parents and I talk about politics a lot, yet I hardly write about them. So, when the first thing out of my parents mouths when I returned home for Spring Break was, "Did you hear about Reverend Wright and Barack Obama?" it was business as usual.

I'll be honest at the time, being that I was home pretty busy with the last week of school, the name Reverend Wright didn't mean a thing to me. They took the time to tell me about him.

Reverend Jeremiah Wright is the former pastor of the Trinity United Church of Christ located in Chicago; on February 10, 2008, he retired after 36 years of service to the church. Over the course of those 36 years, he used his sermon to address religious issues and political issues; it seems that church and state are never really separated.

For the majority of his pasturing Reverend Wright used his position to say what he thought to be the truth. You could say he said some controversial things, however, the things he said only saw the light of day when it was found out that presidential hopeful Barack Obama belonged to his congregation.

When I came home, my parents informed me that, "Reverend Wright is a maniac ... someone who is going to destroy Barack Obama's chance at the White House." Due to this, I went online to find out everything he said or sermonized. What I found were sermons on the wrong doings of the United States as pertaining to international affairs, the treatment of African-Americans, and the overall hierarchy of this country.

Concerning the sermons on international affairs, Reverend Wright said, "...we bombed Hiroshima, we bombed Nagasaki, and we nuked far more then the thousands in New York and the Pentagon and we never batted an eye. We have supported state terrorism against the Palestinians and black South Africans and now we are indignant because the stuff we have done overseas has now been brought right back into our own front yards..."

I am simply asking you to examine the truth of the matter.

Now, you might find this offensive or anti-American. However, think about what the man said. We did nuke both Hiroshima and Nagasaki. By not acting out against the injustices of others, or as Edmund Burke once wrote, "the only thing necessary for the triumph of evil is for good men to do nothing," we have in effect let it live and prosper. Again, you might find what Reverend Wright said to be offensive, but he spoke in honesty.

Concerning the treatment/rights of African-Americans Reverend Wright said, "the government gives them [blacks] the drugs, builds bigger prisons, passes a three-strike law, and then wants us to sing 'god bless America.' No, no, no, not 'god bless America,' god damn America. That's in the bible, for killing innocent people, god damn America for treating our citizens as less then human..."

He further said that the United States has been and currently is run by rich white men, that Hillary Clinton can never know what it's like to be called a "nier," and that Barack Obama is a product of a working class black family who knows the injustices of a white run government.

So, I ask you again to examine what he said. Historically, the United States has not treated African-Americans well (slavery, Jim Crow laws, racial injustice etc.). Furthermore, historically, he is right in saying that the United States has been run by rich white protestant men since its inception. We are a nation which has stood on the grounds of equality for all, yet for the vast majority of our nations' history have not acted by that creed. From the treatment of African-Americans, to the current treatment of gay men/women, we are a nation who says certain things, yet has not fully acted on those words.

For me, Reverend Wright's comments come down to the issue of truth in this country. I have said it before and I will say it again, B.S. is the leading ideology in our country. Everyone and everything in this country is full of it. Teachers and parents tell you lying is bad, yet it's done every day. Politicians tell you that following the laws is the correct way to live, yet in many circumstances, when it suits our government they circumvent the laws and do as they wish. Clergymen tell you that if you believe in God your life will be a better one, yet, I don't see many prayers being answered these days.

I am simply asking you to examine the truth of the matter. Is this country is run by rich white men? Yes. Has our country treated people of darker skins badly in international policy? Yes. Has our country treated African-Americans badly? Yes. Is our country currently treating gay men/women as less then human? Yes.

All of our public officials speak in a web of B.S. which we as Americans seemingly have no problem with. As long as the truth or the real issues behind the B.S. never come out, Americans are fine with it.

Regardless of what you think about what Reverend Wright said, it is essential that we as a nation finally see through the B.S. that is American politics. It is essentially that everyone looks at all the issues fully and decides for themselves, through their own morals what is the right course of action for this nation in the next four years.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu

A political disconnect

John Glaser

Even after you wipe away the fickle, contrived clutter of surface politics in which our worthy presidential candidates are currently and perpetually engrossed, Americans remain starved of the discourse that they truly need and deserve.

Barack Obama is caught up in simultaneously defending and repudiating his boisterous avuncular reverend, realizing just now that vague rhetoric can't last when you actually have to address real issues. An empty suit can be a symbol of hope for only so long. Despite how enamored supporters are with his pretty smile and eloquent quip, on paper he is nothing new.

McCain, decrepit and senile, is showcasing embarrassing gaffes in his supposed area of expertise, waxing nostalgic over the years when an air of unbending national greatness actually had political traction. As a virulent Republicrat, McCain certainly has the narrowest league of enthusiasts.

Hillary's tired, deathless populism is probably an attempt to energize a rebirth of New Dealism, coupled of course with the intellectually bankrupt anti-Bush, pro-anything else outlook (apparently forgetting just how much she resembles her own sworn enemy). Lately, however, she sounds much less reminiscent of FDR than of the Wicked Witch of the West: "I'm melting! I'm melting!" Just quit already.

[The] apathetic pretext of "I'm voting for the candidate who sucks the least" is all too identifiable.

The utter failure of the Bush administration on almost every count is similarly characteristic of where our aforementioned candidates' hackneyed, ineffectual agendas fall. After eight years of incompetence and war, aggrandized schemes and swollen government bureaucracies, many voters are left wary of over-management and distrustful of outlandish demagoguery.

Many voters, especially young students, have run to Obama for change, but not even the impassioned beacon of hope can escape the inevitable "lesser evil" excuse predictably thrown about in contemporary political conversation. Polls show that voters feel increasingly detached from the two major parties and their apathetic pretext of "I'm voting for the candidate who sucks the least" is all too identifiable.

But all this doesn't necessarily translate into the eternal unhappiness of disenfranchised voting blocs. Nick Gillespie and Matt Welch predicted in the March edition of Politics Magazine a "glorious future" emerging from the bipartisan "channeling [of] shopworn agendas and tired identities to a body politic desperate for a new political era."

They claim that current party politics are a "lagging indicator of American society" which has been growing increasingly free spirited and libertarian in nature due to the individualist technological consumerism of personal computers, web pages, and iPhones. They say "decentralization, niche markets and choice are the coin of this new realm" and "the political future belongs to those leaders – and parties – that figure out how to transpose this insight into the legislative world."

They claim this distinctly libertarian, new age culture is a growing force in America and will have to be reckoned with by future politicians. And they're not alone. The Washington Times recently editorialized that libertarians are the "new 'It' faction" in American politics. They point out its popularization in media and entertainment, citing TV show host Drew Carey, ABC anchor John Stossel, and South Park creators Matt Stone and Trey Parker as self proclaimed libertarians. Even the owner of Whole Foods Markets votes for the Libertarian Party.

Libertarians are a matchless, rather exclusive and as of yet thinly spread breed, but the mindset is deep-seated in a country where limited government and personal freedom are founding principles. The potential for this movement to continue to grow is tenable with an up-and-coming generation of individualized, consumer-driven, socially tolerant (potentially narcissistic) MySpacers, fed up with the failures of gigantic government and who generally have a problem with authority.

The ultimately futile presidential campaign of Ron Paul, who broke two fundraising records with mostly young, grassroots activists organizing spontaneously over the Internet is a potential window into the future, say Gillespie and Welch. A goofy guy whose slogan was "I don't want to run your life, I don't want to run the economy and I don't want to run the world" garnered unexpected support within the youth bloc in the pre-Super Tuesday campaign.

Not in a million years would any one of the realistic candidates for 2008, or even 2012 or 2016, even pretend to harbor such a modest, libertarian ambition for the presidency. They propose the opposite on every count. Problems with healthcare? The government can help. Upset over Katrina? More government, please. Combat terrorism? May I have another?

Perhaps future politicians will learn to catch up to what is trendy in American culture and quit lagging behind with the same old let-the-government-nurse-your-diaper-rash political philosophy. Rumbling beneath the shortsighted minions and disenfranchised constituencies of majority is a generation potentially susceptible to the candidate who most closely echoes the "Ron Paul rEVOLution's" distrust of a one-size-fits-all, government-run life.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jglaser@student.umass.edu.

Something to peak your interest

Chris Amorosi

The unprecedented rise in oil and gas prices within the last few years has received scant attention by the mainstream news media. Coverage has certainly not been proportional to the unsettling significance of these prices or to the reasons behind them.

It is not enough for Fox News to scrawl the price of gas in the tiny news ticker where information deemed unworthy of America's attention is consigned. Peak oil is a phrase that may escape a newscaster's lips from time to time, though it may not permeate the brain of an incredulous SUV aficionado demanding his next gas fix. Though I may be a blushing debutante writing my first column, I hope to impart an idea of the broader meaning behind a $3.00 gallon of gas.

Peak oil is when the rate of oil production reaches its maximum and can only decline afterwards due to lack of crude oil remaining on Earth. The concept was first promoted by an M. King Hubbert and he correctly predicted that oil production in the United States alone would peak and begin to decline in the 1970s.

Peak oil is when the rate of oil production reaches its maximum and can only decline afterwards due to lack of crude oil remaining.

Think back to the Loony Toons cartoons of our youth where Bugs Bunny might take a wrong turn at Albuquerque and strike oil if he made it to Texas. Those of us who watch TV Land know that Judd Clampett struck "black gold" or "texas tea" before he could become a Beverly Hillbilly.

Such whimsical tales of wealth from oil were created before the 1970s. Nowadays the stereotype is universally a rich Arab, head-dressed and high rolling, wandering our casinos or torturing George Clooney with Byzantine movie plots. Popular culture makes a subtle reference to peak oil occurring domestically.

World peak oil is far more ominous for the United States, which consumes over 20.6 million barrels of oil per day. The world's largest producer of oil, Saudi Arabia, produces only about 10.7 million barrels per day. Unfortunately, demand only increases as the twin billion-size nations of China and India compress a century of industrial revolution into a mere few decades.

Here in the United States, demand for oil is dominated by the need to fuel a myriad of behemoth expressions of ego and excess that our car industry produces. A quick perusal of the Department of Energy's website on automobile fuel economy reveals that this year's most fuel effecient trucks and SUVs fail to exceed 30 MPG and passenger cars fare little better. If you groan at the pump now, imagine how your children will feel as they struggle to afford their first car's first tank of gas. If they drive anything at all it will more likely be a hybrid or electric-powered two-seater, perhaps resembling the oddly endearing Smart Fortwo.

Assuming your child won't be spending his money on vastly inflated food prices to feed his family, of course. A situation like that here in the United States may be hyperbole, but widespread starvation is an entirely realistic threat for a child living in the Third World. The 6.7 billion people on Earth today was made possible by the Green Revolution of 50 years ago, which was an experiment in quashing communism in poor countries by providing enormous agricultural production and thus happy, fed people.

The revolution, and its aftermath, was entirely fueled by petrochemicals whether they were in the pesticides sprayed on crops, the fertilizers that encouraged them to grow, or driving the tractors that harvest the produce. Diesel trucks bring it to your supermarket and you drive your food home in a car. Even hippies and other environmentally conscious persons should take note that their organic [illegible] similar course on the shoulders of oil.

If lacking mobility and starving did enough to remove every glimmer of hope perhaps freezing in the winter will. The Northeast region contributes about 70 percent of the country's manufacturing demand by oil burning in the winter. Our region is also responsible that a small portion of the Strategic Petroleum Reserve is located in a few cities in New Hampshire and New Jersey to provide coverage in [illegible] the amount of time it would take to transport enough oil from the Gulf of Mexico to here. Peak oil shortfalls are only exacerbated by such wasteful uses which could easily be replaced by effective alternatives if the political will to [illegible] were found. Surely it will evoke oil becomes economically scarce and precious, but by then many will be left [illegible].

Oil provides us with cheap food, transport, goods and warmth. It transports us to where we need to go, whether it is to and from a job or [illegible] services like ambulances and fire engines. Industry is running out. The best we can hope for is to [illegible] what is left while we build an infrastructure like nuclear power plants. Only then will the future will be less Mad Max and more Thunderdome Man.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu.

Suffering from a supporter's dilemma

Matt Hoffman

Most people are sick of hearing about the Middle East. I'm with them.

Rather than writing about this over-discussed topic, I'd like to get a peek on the cheek from my boyfriend in the morning, head to my political theory class, and finish my day playing tennis with a friend.

In addition to a pleasing personal life, there are many causes that I care about. I am a vegetarian. I willingly gave up my car in order to protect the environment. I am adamant about abolishing the negative use of the word "gay," and I abhor cigarettes.

No matter what is on my mind when I go to bed, one thing can always ruin my mood the next day: Jew-hatred. How can I wake up in the morning and, in good conscience, ignore news alerts I receive about shootings, suicide bombings and missile-fire directed at Jews in Israel?

In the past six weeks alone, Israelis have had to deal with the murder of eight teenagers studying in a library, a suicide bombing that murdered a 74-year-old woman, and the firing of up to 50 rockets a day at Israeli cities. These rockets have caused the murder of a college student, a leg amputation for one boy, the removal of an arm on another boy, and terrible stress for thousands of Israelis.

Excuse the Yogi Berra-esque repetition here, but I must point out that lovers of Israel first and foremost love Israel. We spend our days thinking about our historical connection to the Jewish homeland. We ache to hike the beautiful Israeli desert hills.

Many of us inform our friends that Instant Messenger was invented in Israel. The environmentalists among us respect the Israeli government's plan to replace 100,000 gas-burning cars with electric cars by 2019. Some of us listen to traditional Israeli dance music.

Still more of us celebrate the liberal values that Israelis hold dear. We rejoice in the welcoming atmosphere for gay people in the greater Tel Aviv area, which has made its mark on many a gay-travel handbook.

We are pleased to hear about equal rights for minorities in Israel. When Ethiopians fleeing persecution were brought to Israel in the 1980s, the New York Times commented that this was the first time that "Black people were being brought to a country not in chains, but in dignity."

Israelis and their supporters don't seek to put anyone down. We would rather that Arab national leaders work with Israelis, the way that Israeli firefighters helped extinguish fires ravaging Greece last summer, or the way in which Israel sends hospital supplies to various African countries.

would we be doing ourselves – and the children of the Mid-East – any justice if we failed to alert the public to the persecution that Israelis constantly face?

Yet, would we be doing ourselves and the children of the Mid-East – any justice if we failed to alert the public to the persecution that Israelis constantly face? Should we be silent about the fact that the Palestinian Authority calls for genocide?

Palestinian leaders have been calling for the dismantling of Jewish independence for some time now. In one of many examples, the official Palestinian Authority television station has claimed: "The Jews are a virus similar to AIDS."

Not only does this station instruct Palestinians to "...subjugate the Jews. Blow them up in Tel Aviv." Music videos on the same government channel show a mother expressing joy at the news that her son has murdered Jews.

Jew-hatred is not new. Sixty years ago, the Iraqi Prime Minister said, "We will smash [Israel] with our guns and obliterate every place the Jews seek shelter in."

Those who aided Jews in past times are brave. Help in battling extremist forces bent upon the destruction of the Jews is much appreciated.

Many Jewish leaders recognize the dangers of failing to publicize persecution until the damage is done. Lack of coverage was a huge factor in the successful murder of six million Jews in the Holocaust and in the expulsion of one million Jews from Arab lands in the 20th century.

By refraining from expressing our concern at these poisonous statements, we fail to encourage the Palestinian Authority to reform in ways. Much Palestinian [illegible] are continually brainwashed to view Israelis as [illegible] and violence, and Israelis as [illegible] living under constant attack.

Despite the Arab attacks against Israel, supporters of Israel spend more time [illegible] ing in Israel's positives than in [illegible] Israel's enemies. We enjoy sharing our love for Israel with others.

Take the nascent, [illegible] New York. David Patterson. Patterson [illegible] oped a "warm spot in his heart for Israel" after he traveled there to learn about [illegible] contributions in helping special needs children maximize their talents.

Israel and her supporters will always [illegible] tate toward the positives in the Middle East. It is a travesty when Jew-haters force Israel supporters to take time away from celebration of Israel's vibrant culture.

Israelis will continue to defend themselves from the haters that seek to murder them, and Israel-supporters will continue to put our two cents in so that Israel does not become vilified vis-a-vis the Mid-East conflict. Yet, nothing will take away our love for Israel. All we want for Israel is peace.

Matt Hoffman is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at matthoff@umass.edu.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

MORE POSTER WOES

Dear editor:

Re: "SAFI poster taken down after complaints from ASC," Mar. 14, 2008, Katrina Cestna, News

Recently, SAFI displayed posters calling attention to the fact that some Arab leaders incite their children to hate Jews. This is done via the education system as well as television and other media outlets. I find it ironic that the "questions about the limits of free speech" were directed at SAFI and not at those Arab leaders who teach hatred and bigotry.

Dawud, president of the Arab Student Club, said that the posters offended him. I'm offended too, but not because of the posters. I'm offended by those Arab officials who use their children as cannon fodder by teaching hatred and bigotry as opposed to bringing them up in an environment conducive to peace.

All people who strive for peace, Jew and Arab alike, need to join together in a unified voice denouncing the Palestinian Authority's policy of practicing psychological abuse against children.

Rabbi David Ruderman
NENS Faculty
(Non Employee Non Student Faculty)

Dear editor:

Mr. Dawud complains that he felt offended as a Palestinian "by the posters hung up by SAFI, posters calling Arab leaders to put a stop to inciting hate against Jews."

Though it is true that anti-Semitic education is not a property of the entire Arab world, I assume Mr. Dawud does not contest the well-documented fact that it is, and has been for years, an explicit part of Palestinian school text books.

Thus, it is not clear to me why his being a Palestinian is relevant at all. If anything, as a person who claims that he is very sensitive to people trying to "intentionally offend [and] incite hate," I would expect him to be the first to denounce this ongoing phenomenon, which has been supported by the political leaders of his people throughout the peace process.

Such a statement would ring more true than busying himself with accusing others of such intentions without a shred of proof that was indeed their intent.

Additionally, I would recommend that Mr. Dawud check his sources before he tries to support his claims of Arab openness towards Israel and Jews.

Specifically, though Egypt has a peace treaty with Israel, its government (unlike Jordan's) has consistently allowed state-funded and censored press to publish a plethora of anti-Semitic articles, which include such libel as the Protocols of the Elders of Zion. The peace with Egypt, though stable over the past 30 years or so, is nevertheless a cold one, and should not be presented otherwise.

Elisha Rosensweig
UMass student

A-PATHETIC TURNOUT

Dear editor:

RE: Voter apathy plagues SGA elections, Joshua Walevitch, News, Mar. 3, 2008

Voter apathy is a serious problem in America. Whether it's the leadership of their country, state or town, people simply seem to think a simple vote is worth their time, either because it doesn't matter or they don't think they can make an informed decision.

However, I think in specific situations the cause of low turnout can be traced beyond simple apathy. Speaking as a student who had both the time and the means to vote but chose not to, the information about my money being used and the $1.8 million budget does not make me regret my choice; I assume the elections do hold some significant impact on the university itself.

Using apathy as an explanation only covers up the shortcomings of the system. SGA Attorney General says, I assume negatively, "Students find their school work and extra-curriculars to be more important than campus politics."

As a matter of fact, school work and extra-curriculars are more important than campus politics. One has direct effects on my life, the other does not. This doesn't mean the two need be exclusive; it just means students need to be motivated to participate.

I respect students' efforts to try to spread the word about the elections, but the fact is, coming into my room and talking at me about your favorite candidate does not make me more likely to vote. In fact, it doesn't really change anything at all. It does nothing to show me how my views might actually be expressed by voting.

Promises to end fee increases come off like a high school president's promises for shorter uniforms for cheerleaders: it might get you votes, but one doubts he can really get it done. As someone who spent the last several years at private school and is now at UMass, I've found there is little that can be done to make the leaders of institutions want less money. I realize that representative democracy is what we're stuck with, and for the most part it works pretty well.

But an independent effort to convince students of the effect of their votes would capture more votes, which while they might not for your favorite candidate, are a step in the right direction.

Dan O'Neill
UMass student

BARNSTORMING MISTRUTH

Dear editor:

Re: University begins construction on recreation center, Michael King, News, Mar. 12, 2008.

The statement by Mr. Jim Hunt, campus Facilities and Campus Planning communications manager was in error. Mr. Hunt is quoted as saying that the barn "was never officially deemed to be a historic building."

In fact, the barn was listed on the Massachusetts Historical Commission's Inventory of Historic and Archaeological Resources of the Commonwealth. Further, the Massachusetts Historical Commission has stated that the barn and several existing adjacent buildings form a complex that is eligible for listing on the National Register of Historic Places.

Vice Chancellor Hubel and Mr. Hunt's superiors in Facilities and Campus Planning all received letters from the Massachusetts Historical Commission stating those determinations. Mr. Hunt has chosen in his duty to make responsible statements to the press.

Mr. Hunt's statement may be intended to divert attention from the fact that the University, the UMass Building Authority and the designer of the recreation center all failed to comply with state law requiring timely and early submission of the plans for the center to the state environmental and historic preservation agencies.

Any delay in the construction is due to their non-compliance and is the sole responsibility of those parties. Disinformation statements of this type disserve your readers and the wider university community.

Of continuing concern is that the university has plans for demolishing a number of other historic buildings on the campus and none of those plans have been submitted to the state required environmental and historic preservation review process.

Joseph S. Larson
Class of '56, Graduate class of '58
Corresponding Secretary
Preserve UMass

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Earthquake talks life, routines

Comedian to bring 'true comic' style to Huke Lau

By Ryan McAskill
Collegian Staff

In the current landscape of stand-up comedy, few performers can match the wit and delivery of Earthquake.

Heralded by critics as one of the top comics in the country, Earthquake's ability to engage the audience has caused his stock to rise immensely. Despite the deep urban tone, his material is easily relatable and for all audiences.

Already popular with urban crowds, Earthquake has made the jump to mainstream following appearances on "Def Comedy Jam," "Weekends at the D.L.," "Real Time with Bill Maher" and "Everybody Hates Chris," as well as two comedy specials on HBO and Comedy Central.

Earthquake takes the stage at the Huke Lau comedy club in Chicopee on Saturday, March 29 at 5:30 p.m. Tickets are $25-$30.

In a phone interview on Tuesday, Earthquake spoke about his time in the military, stand-up comedy and why his mom named him Earthquake.

Ryan McAskill: So where did the name Earthquake come from?

Earthquake: My mom named me Earthquake because she did every conceivable thing to keep from becoming pregnant. She was on the pill, used a diaphram, my father had a condom on and it was after her cycle and she still got pregnant so the only thing she could name me was after a natural disaster.

RM: You were in the Air Force for 11 years. How did you make the transition from being in the military to doing stand-up comedy?

E: Well the war broke out and unlike this war which I agree with, I wasn't going over there to liberate Kuwait. So I got out [as a conscientious objector] and couldn't get a government job so I just got on stage and started talking about my experiences.

RM: Was there a point when you started out that you realized you had turned a corner and that stand-up was what you wanted to do with your life?

E: No, because I'm not that type of person. I just make the best of each day and wait for another better decision to come. Fortunately stand-up came, another came along in acting but as long as it allowed me to pay for my family and live I'm going to roll it out. I never really had an epiphany, like, Ooh, mama, that's what I want to do.

RM: You consider yourself to be a "true comic;" what do you mean by that?

E: I speak from the heart. I get on stage and talk about my life and my experiences. If you get on stage and recite a routine that's not stand-up – that's a monologue.

RM: So you don't have a set routine?

E: No, I have what Chris Rock called bullet points. All they are is a list of topics. I talk about how I'm feeling that day about those particular things. My mind says this, this and this. I talk about world views and where I'm at today and that type of thing. I'm like [Allen] Iverson, I don't have a set play, just give me the ball and I'll shoot.

RM: Speaking of Chris Rock you have a recurring role as Uncle Mike on his sitcom "Everybody Hates Chris." How did that come about?

E: That was actually Chris [Rock] coming and giving it to me. Say what you want about him, Chris is a great guy. I owe a lot to him.

RM: I know you had a sitcom in development for a while. Any word on that?

E: I've met with some studios and have had deals with ABC and HBO in the past but I am really hitting things much harder now then I have in the past.

RM: I do need to ask about the time you dropped a nuclear weapon.

E: Back when I was in the Air Force, I loaded bombs. 2 Live Crew was coming and it was back when Luke had like 75 women, so I didn't have no time to be loading no missiles. Everyone started running, I was like 'what the f you running for this a nuke...you can be Carl Lewis times 10 you ain't outrunning this mother f.' I just sat down and smoked a cigarette until the police came. President heard about it because they call that sh*t a broken arrow.

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@dailycollegian.com

Comedian Earthquake will bring his honest form of comedy to Chicopee's Huke Lau Saturday night.

EARTHQUAKE
HUKE LAU
SATURDAY, MARCH 29
$25–$35

Hurricane of sights, sounds electrify Caribou audience

After openers Fu*ck Buttons, Caribou impressed Tuesday's Iron Horse audience with a sensory experience complete with bright lights and continuous percussion.

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

It's always an exciting time when a band's live experience blows their studio material out of the water, shattering preconceived notions of the artists' sound and offering a spectacle for the audience to set their eyes upon.

One such collection of artists is Caribou, an Ontario via London psychedelic quartet fronted by musical and visual mastermind Daniel Snaith. Snaith and his crew lit up Northampton's Iron Horse Music Hall Tuesday evening, along with their special guests, the UK's F*ck Buttons, as part of the WOZQ and WMUA Left of the Dial Concert Series. This trip marks Caribou's second stint at the Iron Horse in six months after their October 2007 show with Born Ruffians.

The night began at 7 p.m. sharp as F*ck Buttons promptly dove into their set, building layers upon layers of harsh and melodic sound, as featured on their new record "Street Horrrsing." Steady backbeats set the base for their blistering, droning sound collage, as the two hooded members of the group, Andrew Hung and Benjamin John Power, nodded and bobbed along to the buzz radiating from their amps.

Hung hovered over a slew of electronics, including an animal sticker-plastered laptop and an ancient Gameboy. He dared to venture out onto the floor during one portion of a piece with only his microphone, chirping into it, all the while enveloped in a sort of possessed, rhythmic dance. During this fit, Power accompanied on a single drum, pounding out tribal beats from his side of the stage until Hung returned to transition to another portion of noise. Power employed a toy cassette recorder, complete with white plastic microphone, which he held between his teeth and shrieked into.

The pieces each meshed together, without pauses in between, and without time for the audience to catch their breath or give their ears a rest. The slowly evolving "songs" built up from blissful chimes into a pulverizing destruction of noise, peaking at their most dense, and then receding back into melody. The long set of predominantly electronic noise did find a hint of rhythm, but only enough to get one's foot tapping before realizing that the beat had dissolved into buzzing ambience.

After the head splitting which was F*ck Buttons, Caribou appeared, offering a lot more in the way of harmony and structure. Snaith and company began their set with very clean tones and without much presence, though that was soon to change. Churning guitars and bass chords filled the venue with a pleasant haze, prompting the more extreme, boisterous moments of the set.

A usually bespectacled Snaith did not cut that ferocious of an appearance behind his guitar and dual mic stands, without shoes, and with his pants rolled up in cuffs, but he quickly erupted, taking a seat behind a second drum set. He traded the guitar for drumsticks and accompanied his drummer, pounding out rolling rhythms, mirroring his drummer's beats to create a huge, solitary drum sound.

In addition to the dual drummers, the primary percussionist's sound excelled due to perfect placement of microphones. His cymbals sounded of an angelic shimmer, his bass was tight and solid, and every hit was perfectly audible. He seemed stupefied, lost in a trance, his sole purpose to beat out cascading cadences, carrying the rest of the hand on his back.

The vital drumming had its cons, however, for it really drowned out the guitars at times, and the vocals nearly the entire set, even over Snaith's two-microphone set up coupled with the bassist's backing vocal. The pure 60s psychedelic harmonies were hardly discernable, which was a loss, for they are the focal points of some of Caribou's songs, including their brilliant track "Melody Day," the first cut from last year's record "Andorra," which found the battering drums too overpowering for the fragile, pristine vocal.

During one drumming episode, Snaith and his drummer

See CARIBOU on page 7

Buddy Guy steps into spotlight

Influential guitarist finally gets recognition

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Staff

The average collegiate music connoisseur takes pride in knowing the names of the great guitarists. Clapton, Paige, and Hendrix are all names that need no introduction; however even some of their biggest fans may be unaware of their common influence by one man – Buddy Guy.

Despite the prestige of being the influence to these major names, Guy has had the misfortune of gaining little career success and notoriety for himself. To add insult to injury, many of the guitarists that achieved widespread fame and fortune in the sixties and seventies played a similar style to the one pioneered by Guy. It is said that Jimi Hendrix would sometimes even cancel his shows at major venues in order to attend Guy's club shows, which he avidly videotaped.

Born in Lettsworth, Louisiana, in the middle of the Great Depression, Guy took to music at an early age. However this process was hindered somewhat by his humble origins. Due to the lack of available funds, Guy fashioned his own two string how guitar and it is on this meager instrument that he first learned to play. He soon began saving up and eventually would buy his first acoustic guitar, a Harmony model which is now on exhibit in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame.

There has been much speculation as to why Guy did not receive the wide range of publicity of his peers. One oft-cited reason is the conservative business decisions made by his record company, Chess Records, which held back his wild playing style. Another is speculation by Guy that it was due to the jealousy and influence of a few of his guitar rivals.

Guy still toured into the 60s but was dismayed by the apparent overnight success of the younger generation of artists that sprung up around him. Guy said in an interview that, "Although I was getting to play overseas, back home I still didn't have a record. I thought that maybe it was because I played too loud and with too much feedback. then the next thing I know, Clapton and Hendrix are out there using the same tricks and selling millions of albums."

Despite the lack of initial commercial success, Guy's style and music has been a lasting influence to generations of musicians. Therefore it was no surprise when in the late 80s and 90s, interest in Guy's catalog sparked a series of reissues and subsequently due to his appearance at key music events, a renewed enthusiasm for his live shows. Guy has since become a formal inductee in the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame, finally joining those whom he influenced in the pantheon of greats.

Recently, in 2006 Guy released a box set spanning his entire career called "Can't Quit the Blues." The three CD set contains six unreleased songs, a 90 minute DVD on the guitarists life, and a 40 page color book.

The guitarist, now a spry young 70 years old is currently embarking on a new tour for 2008 that will take him to clubs in the United States, England and Australia all within the course of the next few months.

So if you consider yourself a rock music connoisseur or are just interested in hearing the music of one of the most influential guitar players of all time, Buddy Guy will be performing at the Calvin Theater in Northampton this Saturday, March 29 with special guest Tom Hambridge. Tickets are currently on sale for as low as $25 with high end seats running $45.

Pete Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

Though he is cited as an influence for famous guitarists like Jimi Hendrix and Eric Clapton, Buddy Guy just recently earned commercial success. He has released a CD set and is now touring at age 70.

BUDDY GUY
CALVIN THEATER
SATURDAY, MARCH 29
$25–$35

Caribou entertains Iron Horse

CARIBOU from page 6

traded phrases, finishing each other's rhythmic sentences, echoing one another in a very well choreographed exercise; with eyes closed, it sounded as if just one person was blasting out the rhythm. During another impressive percussion routine, the drummer hoisted himself up onto his drum set for better leverage with which he crashed violently on his cymbals to create a glistening high-end rush.

Aside from the spectacular drumming, the highlight of the performance was the swirling shapes and colors projected on the band and on the white sheet draped behind of them. Each song possessed its own visualization, manipulated in between songs by the drummer on a nearby laptop. These creations bathed the stage in various states of color and shadow, from strobing neon shades to a glaze of warm pastels to bright white exploding suns.

The constant flashing was fairly dizzying, if not headache-inducing, though it was quite a spectacle to take in regardless of its ill-effects. One of the more interesting displays was a black background upon which drops of color were splotched. Once the backdrop became too cluttered with color, the splashes morphed and bled into one another until breaking down into their basic elements, transforming into pure color, a blinding white.

The band ended their set and left the stage, though they were immediately prodded by the frenzied crowd's stomping and unison applause to return for an encore. They performed one final song, culminating in an uproarious clatter of drums and color. After the finale, Snaith, perspiring and panting, thanked the crowd immensely before departing from the stage one last time.

The saying "love and be loved" applies here, and such an appreciation for the positive reaction is most likely why Caribou chose to return to the area so quickly. This bodes well for those who missed out on this stellar show, for one's opportunity to absorb this splendor has not dried up, in all likelihood. This amalgamation of sounds and visuals should not be missed, even if Caribou's studio material does not immediately pique one's interest.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

Shows getting back to business

Stations airing new episodes after strike

By Chuck Barney
Contra Costa Times

It was just about the time I spotted Barney (Neil Patrick Harris) dispensing inane dating advice to Ted (Josh Radnor) in a crowded tavern during the CBS sitcom "How I Met Your Mother" that I knew all was right with the world. Well, almost right.

Barney and Ted back together again. Spouting tossing out fresh jokes and lame pickup lines. On my TV screen.

Talk about a welcome sight.

Monday's hilarious episode of "HIMYM" was the first new one in more than three months, thanks to the dreadful writers strike that thrust much of television into a deep freeze. It was sandwiched by new episodes of "The Big Bang Theory" and "Two and a Half Men," which were back in fine, if not completely uproarious, form.

No more stale stuff. No more regurgitation. No more moaning about there being nothing good to watch. And apparently viewers were in the mood to celebrate. All three comedies generated their largest audiences of the season, with "Two and a Half Men" setting the pace at 14 million.

Rejoice, people. Slowly but surely, new episodes are returning to the airwaves and CBS is ahead of the pack. In addition to the aforementioned comedy block, the network soon will revive "CSI: Miami" (March 24) and "Cold Case" (March 30). But the majority of your favorite network shows won't roll out until the early weeks of April.

And not a moment too soon. During the work stoppage, we were forced to subsist on a steady diet of reruns and reality TV. It tasted awful. It made me cranky.

I know what some of you are thinking: TV is a weakness. TV is a nuisance. It's an addiction. An evil-doer. A destroyer of morals. It has ruined mealtime in America. It has warped our attention spans. It has made our kids obese. So who needs it? Who missed it?

Well, a lot of us did. And we don't have to apologize for it.

Admittedly, there were some unexpected benefits to the writers strike. I had time to go see all those fine Oscar-nominated films. I mowed the lawn once or twice. I picked up a couple books. I learned that my oldest son actually had a girlfriend.

But, still, I missed my television — not that there's anything wrong with that.

Despite what the anti-TV grumps would have you believe, it is not the enemy. TV, ultimately, is what you make of it. And there are those of us who feel that there's absolutely nothing wrong with coming home after a brutal day at work, slipping off your shoes and counting on "The Office" and "30 Rock" to provide us with a few laughs.

Along the way, we form bonds with those people on the screen. We relate to them. We care about them. Will Meredith and Derek ever make their relationship work on "Grey's Anatomy"? How and when are Jack and Kate ever going to get off that blasted island on "Lost"?

It matters to us. Hopefully, it doesn't matter way too much, but it does matter.

That's why the strike was so frustrating. It disrupted our dependably satisfying routine. It messed with our flow. It robbed us of our prime-time companions.

And so this week it was immensely gratifying to see a CBS promo spot proclaim, "America, it's time to laugh again." Smug and presumptuous? Yeah, sort of — especially considering that "Big Bang" and "Men" displayed a little post-strike rust.

But the message was clear: Things are finally returning to normal.

And that is worth celebrating.

Catch 22, Big D and the Kids Table combine at Pearl Street

Ska bands Catch 22 (above) and Big D and the Kids Table hope to get crowds dancing to their toe-tapping tunes at Pearl Street on Friday.

By Michelle Abbasciano
Collegian Staff

Although most people might know the phrase "catch 22" from the classic, satirical book by Thomas Heller, the expression also happens to be the name of the fast-paced, high energy ska-punk band from East Brunswick, New Jersey.

Catch 22 formed over a decade ago, and released their self-produced demo tape entitled "Rules of the Game" in 1996. Two years later, they were signed to Victory Records, the popular label infamous for signing fresh and up-and-coming pop-rock bands. After a few lineup changes, the band then released their EP "Washed Up!" which was a surprising success.

After months of national touring and opening for big name ska acts such as Reel Big Fish, the band continued to be plagued with bad luck as members left to pursue other options. Scrambling to replace the newly vacant positions, while continuing to tour and produce new albums is not the simplest of tasks, but the band carried it out quite successfully.

Catch 22's current lineup, which consists of six members, incorporate saxophone, trumpet, and trombone, among others, into their music. Although these instruments are common in ska-punk bands, Catch 22 put an edgy spin on their music with thrashing guitars and fast-paced vocals to match.

Despite the frequent lineup changes, the band continued to produce solid pieces of work and by 2006, they released their newest album, "Permanent Revolution." Although their recent tunes have evolved quite distinctively over the years, their fan-base remains strong and loyal to this legendary band. The positive response to this latest record was impressive and most would call it their best yet, though, there are still some skeptics in the midst.

The band's music is known for being fast-paced and full of meaning, and this latest record is no different. It is a concept album based around the life of Leon Trotsky, one of the foremost figures in the Russian Revolution.

Kevin Gunther, trumpet player and vocalist for the band, thinks it's their best record yet, and is pleased with the turn out, but is still well aware of the fans who are against concept albums were turned off by this latest release.

"There are always a bunch of people that have negative stuff to say about what we do but that has never stopped us before," said Gunther in an interview with absolutepunk.net. "There are so many bands doing completely unoriginal records and people kiss their asses but we go out and make a completely original record that might make you think a little and have some fun and catch heat for it."

Fan critics aside, Catch 22 have always been a highly unique and independent band. Their horn-driven, uber-catchy music really has something for everybody and seems to take its influences from various genres of music. Many might be surprised by the range on their latest record and will find touches of reggae, hardcore, punk, and of course ska. It also might appeal to those who seek meaning and insight in the lyrics of their favorite captivating, danceable songs.

Sharing the bill with Catch 22 this Friday night is the equally catchy and incredibly popular third wave ska band Big D and the Kids Table. This politically driven unit formed in 1995 in Boston, Massachusetts. Big D teamed with Springman Records and Side One Dummy, but is known for having a "do it yourself" work ethic.

Extensive and relentless touring is another key aspect for which this band is known. They have averaged approximately 200 days of touring per year and have supported shows with other big name ska-punk-rock bands such as Streetlight Manifesto, Mighty Mighty Bosstones, The Bouncing Souls, Anti-Flag, and more. Big D's loyal, cult-like following, combined with their hard work and ceaseless touring schedule, have been an important contributing factor to the band's success.

Although Big D has released well over a dozen records and EPs, their latest release in 2007 "From Beijing to Boston" on Bad News Records and "Strictly Rude" on SideOne Dummy are easily their most popular to date. They include insanely catchy beats and driving guitars combined with well-placed trombones and trumpets to produce amusing yet laid-back beats that have proven to get their audiences moving.

Musically and lyrically "Strictly Rude" is also their most mature to date, and really portrays the band's dedication to their passion.

Catch 22, Big D and the Kids Table with opening acts Five Across the Eyes and Restitution, will be playing the Pearl Street Club in Northampton, this Friday March 28. The show starts at 7 p.m. and tickets are $15 at the door.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbas@student.umass.edu

CATCH 22
PEARL STREET
FRIDAY, MARCH 28
$15

[- D]
[B +] allaccessarts.blogspot.com

BOSTON BARTENDERS SCHOOL - W. SPFLD
Special Student Rate
Local-National Placement
Includes Certification
1-800-357-3210
BostonBartender.com

Hair, Nails, Tanning, Waxing, Facials & Massage
Owner
Ms. Abigael M. Sicard
267 Amherst Road
Suite #2 (Rt.116)
Sunderland, MA
413-397-9988
Tuesday 10-6 • Wednesday 10-6
Thursday 10-7 • Friday 10-6
Saturday 10-3
Absolute Hair & Body Spa

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N. PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
www.Dominos.com
My Wings or Kickers Special
10 Buffalo Wings or Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers® & an Order of Cheesy Bread
$9.99
Three or More Medium 1-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 each
Three or More Large 1-Topping Pizzas
$7.77 each
Any 3 Breads Choose 3 From:
Garlic Breadsticks, Cheesy Bread OR Cinna Stix
$9.99
Large Unlimited Topping Pizza
$10.99
No Double Toppings
Delivery Charge May Apply.
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About antismapeaks.org

IN DECIDING WHICH LAW SCHOOL TO ATTEND,
CONSIDER THIS:
Quinnipiac University School of Law ranks among the top 100 law schools in such categories as full-time student LSAT scores (median – 158); admission acceptance rates; student/faculty ratio (13:1); and employment rates after graduation. Not to mention, we offer merit scholarships ranging from $3,000 to full tuition. Before you decide which school to attend, make sure you review the facts. To learn more, visit law.quinnipiac.edu, email ladm@quinnipiac.edu or call 1-800-462-1944.
QUINNIPIAC UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF LAW
LAW.QUINNIPIAC.EDU | HAMDEN, CONNECTICUT

Writers won deals, lost original ideas during three month strike

New shows recycled popular television from other countries

By Diane Werts
Newsday

Wow, look at all the press releases touting upcoming new shows! So much freshness finally coming our way:

NBC has picked up a new sitcom called "Kath & Kim," about the dysfunctional relationship of a cheery divorcee, played by Molly Shannon, and her whiny adult daughter, played by Selma Blair.

Oh, wait. "Kath" was actually an Australian hit, back in 2002, and has already aired here on the late great Trio channel as well as Sundance.

So let's look at CBS, where they've announced a couple of intriguingly titled drama pilots, "Ny-Lon" and "Mythological X."

Oh, wait. "Ny-Lon's" cross-continental romance first aired on Britain's BBC with Rashida Jones as the American half. And "Mythological X," where a psychic tells a woman her future husband is somebody she's already dumped, adapts an Israeli series.

At least The CW has a new reality show, "Farmer Wants a Wife," premiering April 30. Oops. That's actually an Americanized version of a spouse-seeking competition produced in The Netherlands, Norway, Australia and a half-dozen other countries.

We could go on, and on. And on. Sad to say, American television doesn't seem to have an original idea left in its collective head. Why should it? Look how well the networks have done with imports since "Survivor's" 2000 arrival unleashed the unscripted series flood, swamping us with "American Idol," "Big Brother," "Hell's Kitchen" (back next Tuesday for another Fox season), "Deal or No Deal" and "Dancing With the Stars," to name only a few.

Yet, surely we Americans still provide our own TV fiction? Um, sometimes. Don't forget that NBC's Thursday mainstay, "The Office," was adapted wholesale from Ricky Gervais' BBC hit, widely seen in the States on cable and public TV. ABC's "Ugly Betty" is an American version of a Colombian telenovela that also became a sensation on Spanish-language TV here. Even the weeknightly psychiatric sessions of HBO's critical fave "In Treatment" arrived from overseas, its scripts being essentially translated from Israel's original.

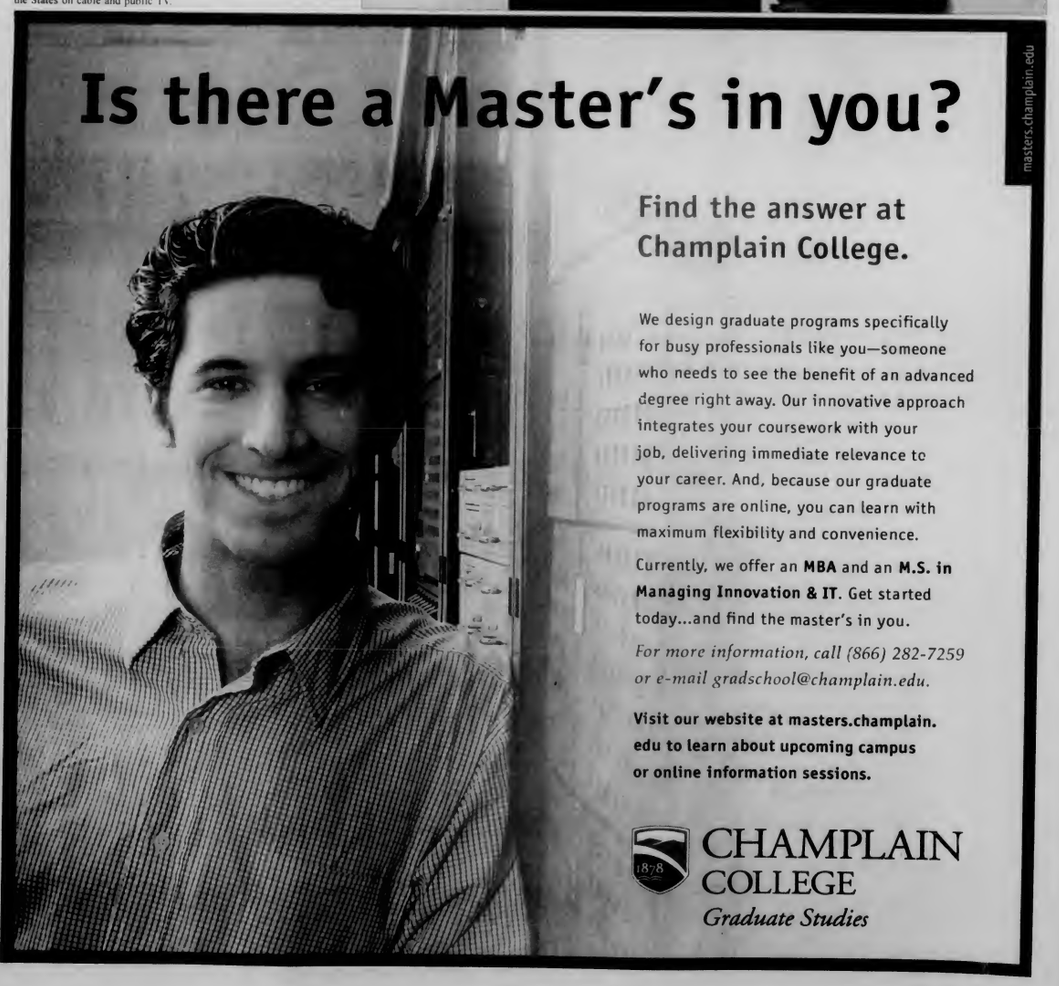
Which isn't to say Americans can't come up with new shows invented here. Take NBC's recent high-rated "Knight Rider" movie pilot. Of course, it was a remake of NBC's 1980s talking-car hit. And ABC has just tapped "Veronica Mars" creator Rob Thomas for a romance drama pilot called "Cupid." Which, it just so happens, Thomas has already done for the network, in 1998, when viewers failed to find his short-lived Saturday night series. So, hey, why not try again?

Here's a more crucial question: Have we seen the last original American TV idea already? Perhaps the whole going-green craze has inspired the broadcast networks, and sometimes even their cable competitors, to simply recycle everything from here on out.

And you laugh. The networks are laughing, too, all the way to the bank. We're just a week away from NBC adding two USA cable series, "Monk" and "Psych," to its Sunday night lineup. Well, why not, since CBS is airing its Showtime sibling's critical hit "Dexter" that night already. This summer, NBC is also swiping USA's country music contest "Nashville Star" (debuting June 9).

This trend isn't happening for no reason, of course. Like many businesses today, TV networks are being pummeled by competition on all sides — cable, video on demand, online video, DVDs, video games. With viewership dropping, they feel pressured to downsize budgets to match. So we get cheapola/pilfered programming that might even be fun in the short run. But in the long run, network television is sadly abdicating precisely what established its long-held pre-eminent place in the pop-culture landscape. Yes, TV has always had game shows and borrowed concepts. What it was best known and loved for, however, was high-quality original comedy and drama — years-long series that were wildly creative, lavishly produced, star-making and, in some way, uniquely American.

Somehow I don't think reality witch Omarosa or even "American Idol" judge Simon Cowell can compete in the long-run star pantheon with TV-made icons such as "ER's" George Clooney or the funny folks of "Seinfeld." Or that viewers of TV Land 2025 will be treasuring "encores" of "Joe Millionaire," "Deal or No Deal" or "Wife Swap" over classic episode arcs from "Lost," "Heroes" or "House."



The problem when the networks stop swinging big for the fences with ambitious comedy and drama series is that the batting skills of those casts and creators wither. And if it's freshness they're seeking, you can't identify new talent if you can't see it in action, under game-time conditions.

But here's the worst of it. How will the next generation "borrow" previous ideas when this generation isn't creating any?

Above: The wildly popular show "The Office" is based on the British sit-com of the same name, starring Ricky Gervais. Below: ABC's sophomore series "Ugly Betty" was formed from a Columbian telenovela.

Game 2 not easy but UMass preserves 16th victory of year

SOFTBALL from page 12

Yee followed with RBI singles, and after a bad throw to second on a steal attempt put UMass down 3-0, Sortino called for Balschmiter to enter the game.

"[Sanders] just didn't have it," Sortino said. "The ball was hanging a little bit. Unfortunately, she worked it out in the bullpen, but we couldn't get her back out there."

After striking out 13 in Game 1, Balschmiter whiffed seven more in the nightcap, but did not have an easy time of it, giving up two more runs (neither earned) and walking two.

"Brandice was not the same pitcher in the second game," Sortino said. "She was throwing the ball all over the place."

The Minutewomen got a run each in the third, fourth and fifth innings to tie the score. Carly Normandin singled in the bottom of the second, hitting a grounder just past the reach of a diving Mallery at shortstop, scoring Carly Morin, who pinch ran for Serio.

Whitney Mollica continued to improve her bat, going 3-for-8 on the day, including an RBI single in the third that got UMass within one run.

Then Normandin added to her day with her second home run of the season, a solo shot in the fourth inning that inched the Minutewomen closer. Despite 20 mile-per-hour winds blowing in most of the day, her blast to left-center still easily cleared the wall.

The fifth went scoreless, but the Big Green climbed back on top in the top of the sixth. UMass shortstop Whitney Williams had a rough outing in the field, committing two errors late in the game and missing a couple grounders to her side.

It really hurt her in the sixth when, after a Parker walk, Williams let a grounder through her legs, moving Parker into scoring position.

She scored on the next at bat when Costello drove a hit through the left side to make the score 4-3.

The Minutewomen took control of the game in the bottom of the sixth, however, manufacturing four runs – enough to seal the victory.

UMass started with the top of the order. Williams and Proctor both singled to open the frame. Then after Mollica flew out to left field, Samantha Salato drew a walk to load the bases. Sarah Reeves walked as well, forcing in the tying run.

Serio then hit a bloop single to drive in Proctor and go up 5-4. An error by Mallery brought in another run, freshman Lindsay Maroney grounded out to second, scoring Reeves from third to jump ahead, 7-4.

The Big Green got one back in the top of the seventh, but Balschmiter struck out the side to close out the game.

Game 1 was more typical of a mid-season game for the Minutewomen. Balschmiter struck out 13 en route to a one-hit, complete game shutout. No player had more than one hit, but after jumping out to a 3-0 lead.

Williams led off the first with a triple to the right-field wall. Stacy Cullington drew a walk then stole second, allowing Williams to score from third. Mollica then doubled to left to drive in Cullington, and Salato doubled down the third-base line to bring Mollica around.

UMass scored another run on a solo homer by Reeves in the third. The shot to the left-field scoreboard came on pitch after being hit but was called back to the plate for not attempting to avoid it.

The Minutewomen got three more insurance runs in the fifth off a double by Serio and a sacrifice fly to left.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu

Brandice Balschmiter pitched a combined 12 2/3 innings while giving up no runs in two victories against Dartmouth yesterday at the UMass Softball Complex.

Jamea Marcou led the Mass Attack with 32 points this season. The freshman forward sees the ice well, as was evidenced by his 24 assists.

Minutemen lacked statistical success from previous season

TITLE from page 12

ence. On a team that struggled to score goals, UMass could consistently count on contributions from Marcou no matter which line UMass coach Don Cahoon placed him on that evening.

The success of Dainton was the most pleasant surprise for the Minutemen after Jon Quick opted to sign with the Los Angeles Kings.

The plan, entering the season, was to platoon Dainton and sophomore Dan Meyers until one established himself as the clear cut starter. Meyers suffered a pulled groin in his first start of the season and it was Dainton's job from there on out.

Although he struggled down the stretch, he finished the season with a record of 12-14-6 and a 2.56 goals-against average. Dainton beat out fellow freshman John Muse of Boston College who led the Eagles to a Hockey East Championship.

The Minutemen rotated six other freshmen through their lineup until Chase Langeraap suffered a torn anterior cruciate ligament against Boston College on Feb. 8.

Stats Inc.

It was difficult at times to explain the second-half struggles of the Minutemen in 2008. But when comparing the statistics of this year's Minutemen to the 2006-07 edition, the picture becomes a little clearer.

As a team, UMass was a plus-83 last season. This season, the team dropped to a minus-34 over all. Four players ranked at least a plus-10 in 2006-07 including Cory Quirk's team high plus-45. Kostka was the lone Minuteman with a rating in the double digits this season.

It's impossible to deduce a team's exact success from the plus/minus rating, but such a stark difference does tell a big story.

The biggest individual drop off was Leaderer who went from a plus-11 during his junior season to a minus-7 this year.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

FOUR Seasons
WINE • LIQUOR • CIGARS
WINE SALE 10% OFF 6 BOTTLES* OF WINE EVERYDAY!! MIX & MATCH *REGULAR PRICED 750 ML BOTTLES OF VARIETAL WINES

LIQUOR

HENNESSY COGNAC X.O. 750 ml	$122.99	10 CANE RUM 750 ml	$26.99
GRAND MARNIER 100YR CENTENAIRE 750 ml	$109.99	CHOPIN POLISH VODKA 750 ml	$27.99
CROWN ROYAL CASK 16 WHISKEY 750 ml	$94.99	BAILEY'S FLAVORED IRISH CREM* 750 ml	$20.99
GLENMORANGIE BURGUNDY WOOD FINISH 750 ml	$49.99	*Mint Chocolate and Caramel
JOSE CUERVO PLATINO TEQUILA 750 ml	$49.99	JOSE CUERVO FLAVORED TEQUILA* 1.0 liter	$20.99
GLENMORANGIE MADIERA WOOD FINISH 750 ml	49.99	*Citrico, Tropina, Orange
ARDBEG 10YR ISLAY SINGLE MALT SCOTCH 750 ml	47.99	SMIRNOFF VODKA 80* 1.75 liter	$19.99
BAILEY'S ORIGINAL IRISH CREAM 1.75 liter	$35.99	JOSE CUERVO GOLD 750 ml	$18.99
TANQUERAY GIN 1.75 liter	$33.99	MYER'S PLATINUM RUM 1.75 liter	$18.99
HENNESSY COGNAC V.S.O.P. 750 ml	$44.99	CAPTAIN MORGAN PARROT BAY RUM* 1.0 liter	$17.99
GRAND MARNIER CORDON ROUGE 750 ml	$33.99	*Including Coconut, Mango, Pineapple, Passion Fruit
HENNESSY COGNAC V.S. 750 ml	$28.99	CAPTAIN MORGAN SPICED RUM 750 ml	$14.99
BELVEDERE PURE VODKA 750 ml	$27.99	SMIRNOFF TWIST FLAVORED VODKA* 750 ml	$11.99
		*Including Strawberry, Watermelon, Raspberry, Black Cherry

Sale 3/13-3/16 333 Russell St., Rte. 9, Hadley, MA
584-8174 • Mon.-Sat. 9AM-11PM • Sun. Noon-11PM

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM – 5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

Sylvan Suites Online Room Selection
Begins Wednesday, April 2nd!
Read your Room Selection Bulletin and come to one of the Online Room Selection Information Sessions:
The Housing Assignment Office will review online room selection instructions, guidelines, and strategies, and will show you online room selection menus so you can get ready to select your own assignment.
Pick a one-hour information session prior to the room selection period you plan to participate in, and we'll see you there!

Date	Times	Location
Tuesday, March 11	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, March 25	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, April 1	12:00-1:00pm or 1:00-2:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Wednesday, April 2	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Monday, April 14	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Tuesday, April 15	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Pierpont Hall Main Lounge
Wednesday, April 16	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76

www.housing.umass.edu UMassAmherst

Talented youth makes early impact

Freshman and sophomores contributing for Minutewomen in nonconference play

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is young, athletic and quick this year. There is a freshman seeing significant time at every position and with the exception of goalkeeper, it was the same way last year as well.

Midfielder Jackie Lyons leads this year's freshman class in games started (nine) and points (four goals, five assists). Along with fellow freshman midfielder Aimee Dixon and sophomore defender Ashley King, Lyons is tied for third on the team with 10 ground balls. Lyons is third among midfielders in goals behind senior Jeannette Villapiano (six) and sophomore Merritt Cosgrove (five).

Sophomore Ashley King is tied for third on the Minutewomen with 10 ground balls.

Goalie Colleen Speth is another freshman whom UMass coach Alexis Venechanos deemed worthy of taking on a larger role on the team. Venechanos is currently using Speth to fill the void at goalkeeper left by Lauren McCarthy, who graduated last year. McCarthy ranks second all-time in career saves in Minutewomen history, with 448.

UMass W. Lax

Speth came to UMass having earned an All-American honorable mention – as did McCarthy – as a junior and senior at Evanston Township High School. She is improving every game, making a career-high 12 saves in her latest game, against No. 16 New Hampshire.

Speth is also facing a myriad of ranked opponents. In McCarthy's freshman season, the Maroon and White faced just one ranked opponent – then ranked No. 9 Syracuse – whereas Speth has started four of the Minutewomen's six games against ranked teams.

McCarthy also only started five of her nine games played as a freshman, while Speth has already matched that in her first season, and there are still seven games left in the regular season.

Venechanos doesn't have a clear-cut freshman defender because she uses various players at multiple positions. She has seven freshman midfielders and she uses them either on attack or defense, depending upon the team that UMass faces.

CAPTAINS LEADING

The four senior captains chosen for this season by the team are producing very well for the Minutewomen.

Senior attack Melynda Zwick leads the team in assists (eight) and gives Venechanos a scoring threat on offense but also gives her the freedom to put in a potent offensive unit because of her passing skills.

Senior captain Kathleen Typadis is showing teams why she was put on the watch list for the Tewaaraton Trophy this season. She is a threat in the draw circle (10 draw controls), an obvious scoring threat and her pesky defense has earned her three caused turnovers.

However Villapiano and senior defender Julie Papaleo are the lesser-known of the four captains because of their unique contributions to the team.

Villapiano is a hybrid midfielder that can slide back into defense or be an extra scoring threat (six goals, one assist). Her ability to dominate the draw circle (team-high 17 draws controlled) and her speed give the Maroon and White an up-tempo look that can be devastating on offense.

Her 22-goal sophomore season in 2006 is evidence of her scoring ability, and her enthusiasm as one of the most vocal leaders on the team is unparalleled.

Papaleo is a ball hawk on defense for the Minutewomen. She's registered at least 20 ground balls in each of her past two seasons. She has started at least 10 games in each of her three seasons, and she has bothered opposing offenses by causing at least 10 turnovers since coming to the team as a freshman.

Her 48 career caused turnovers ranks seventh all-time in Minutewomen history.

ZWICK THE QUICK

Venechanos calls Zwick the "quarterback" of the attacks on the team. Although a scorer by nature (43 career goals), she leads the team in assists and directs her teammates in the best way to get an open shot.

Last year was a breakout season for Zwick (27 goals, 14 assists) as she started all 17 games for the Minutewomen. She is second on the team in total points with 13 and is spreading the ball around and giving her team a stronger look on offense. Her unselfish, yet effective play is one of the reasons why Venechanos named Zwick a team captain this season.

Although Zwick hasn't dominated the goal column of the stat sheet thus far this season, she is one of the top playmakers on the team. She is a quiet weapon for Venechanos because opposing teams look to cover redshirt junior midfielder Katelyn McCormick (18 goals) and Typadis (nine goals), the top goal scorers for the Minutewomen.

Zwick hasn't taken many shots this season (12) but when given the opportunity, she is deadly at splitting defenders and getting a shot on goal – her .833 shots-on-goal percentage is the second highest on the team among players that have taken 10 or more shots.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

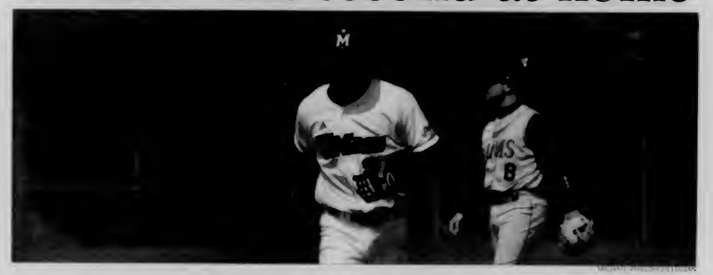
Danai becoming reliable at No. 6

TENNIS from page 12

U Mass, Pozar and Boney are now ranked as a top 20 doubles pairing in the region.

The lone point for the Minutewomen was scored by No. 6 player Laura Danai, who beat Yale freshman Silia Del ilippis, 6-4, 6-3. Danai has been on a torrid pace recently.

Last week during the team's road trip to South Carolina she went 2-0 in singles matches and 2-0 in doubles matches, in the process becoming the only player to go undefeated during spring break. Counting today's win, Danai is 5-0 in her last five matches.



Dixon has considered the idea of moving up Danai from the sixth slot, but decided against it, preferring to have a consistent No. 6 player, rather than risking upsetting the balance of the team.

"It's like when a baseball team has a bullpen pitcher who is winning games from the bullpen, you don't want to rock the boat," Dixon said. "I feel like I don't want to rock the boat right now. I've got her in a place where she feels pretty comfortable, I'd like to play the season out and then see where she goes from there."

This weekend, the Maroon and White get to return to Amherst for back-to-back games this Friday and Saturday against Holy Cross and Rhode Island, respectively.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu

UMass wins second at home

Junior Jim Macdonald went 1-for-3 in yesterday's 7-5 victory over Hartford at Earl Lorden Field. The third baseman is batting .302 this season after having last season cut short due to injury.

BASEBALL from page 12

ers stole at least one base and five Minutemen scored at least once.

"We made things happen; it was very big," Stone said about the baserunning. "We need to put the pressure on the defense, and we haven't had the opportunity that much, except for the last couple of days."

Wednesday's victory marks the second in as many days for the Minutemen, who finally played their first two home games of the season. UMass defeated Sacred Heart, 15-3, on Tuesday afternoon in its home opener; yesterday's game was supposed to be played in Hartford, but was moved to Amherst due to field conditions.

After both teams scored one run in the first inning, UMass took the lead, 3-1, after a hectic inning that saw Hartford allow the Minutemen to reach base in almost every way possible. UMass added a run in the fourth inning to take a three-run lead, but the Hawks quickly answered back as soon as Eilenberg was taken out of the game due to his pitch count.

In the sixth inning, Hartford scored three runs off reliever Ryan Walczak to tie the game at 4-4. Walczak failed to record an out, and was quickly replaced with Charlie Benson – who shut down the Hawks in 1 2/3 innings of work.

UMass took the lead for good in the bottom half of the inning, with Mike Gedman scoring the go-ahead run after Mike Donato hit into a double-play. The Minutemen subsequently scored one run in each of the next two innings.

Hartford made a brief threat in the eighth inning on a solo home run by Mike Amendola, but Monroy immediately settled down and recorded his first save of the season.

The Minutemen get just one day off before they continue their busy stretch on Friday, where they will open a three-game series with Atlantic 10 opponent Xavier.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

comedy CONNECTION HUKILAU 413•593•5222 705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee www.hukelau.com

MARCH 22ND

Star of the ABC show "Big Shots" and from Showtime's "Norman Rockwell Is Bleeding" and FOX's "Titus"

CHRISTOPHER TITUS

MARCH 29TH • 7PM

Star of the special "Comedy Central Presents...Earthquake" and from HBO's "Def Comedy Jam"

EARTHQUAKE

Plan Ahead for Next Year

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

EChecking

The ultimate in convenience plus lots of cool stuff, like...

Anytime Checking

- FREE ATM Transactions, Nationwide*
- FREE Debit Card
- FREE ESB Online Anytime Banking and Bill Pay
- FREE E-Statements
- FREE First Order of 50 Checks
- No Minimum Balance Required

ESBOnline Anytime Banking bankesb.com

Easthampton Savings Bank • 413-527-4111

Belchertown | Easthampton | Hadley | Northampton | South Hadley | Southampton | Westfield

Member FDIC Member DIF

*$10 minimum deposit to open E-Checking Account. No minimum balance required to maintain account. Other bank's ATM surcharge fees that are charged to the account during current statement cycle will be refunded on the last business day of the current statement cycle. Accounts closed or changed to another product during a current statement cycle will not receive a refund of the other bank's ATM surcharge fees.

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $

how does it work?

You bring us your awesome clothes...we sell them... you make money! (40% to be exact) it's so easy! No appointment necessary.

Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!.

exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards

Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729

Bet you can't solve this in 10 minutes.

	8			1		5	6
4		6		5		1
			6			3	7
		8	2				1
				3
	1				9	4
	6	9			3
		3		7		8	5
8	5			2			3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Lugosi and Bartok
6 Lamenter's cry
10 Crow's-nest site
14 Upstanding
15 Mineral deposit
18 Davenport's location
17 Inasmuch as
18 Ginger cookie
19 Glitch
20 "Drop It Like It's Hot" rapper
22 Utopias
23 Rallitement grp
24 Smooth transition
26 Upright height
30 Disseminates
34 Teen's ride, perhaps
36 __ bicarbonate
37 Hosp sections
38 __ Alamos, NM
40 Mineral spring
41 Cooking smells
45 Attacker
49 "Mandy" singer
51 Most sun-browned
52 "She __ You"
54 Cool!
55 Weaselike mammal
58 True supporters
63 Vogue rival
64 Island near Corsica
65 Loudmouth
66 Bahrain ruler
67 Cry
68 Military muddle
69 Drains
70 Does wrong
71 Prepare to advance on a fly

DOWN
1 Armstrong or Myerson
2 Actress Gray
3 Late-night Jay
4 Makes overtures
5 Increases, in stages
6 As well
7 Yearns (for)
8 Maxims
9 Calendar-watch abbr
10 Wrongdoing
11 Top-drawer
12 "__ Lake"
13 Labels
21 "Truth or __"
22 Continental currency
25 Some MDs
26 Vaporized water
27 __ firma
28 Williams of "Happy Days"
29 Soft-finned fish
31 Market passage
32 Passes
33 Intelligent
35 Morgue letters
39 Mach topper
42 Cheryl and Reggie
43 Soothing lotion
44 U.S.S.R. part
46 Poet Teasdale
47 Shrink
48 Hoosier State
50 Peter of "RoboCop"
53 Like a judge?
55 Notices
56 __ matter
57 Radar image
59 Barks snappishly
60 Uneven hairdo
61 Vegetarian's staple
62 Track log
64 Sheepish she

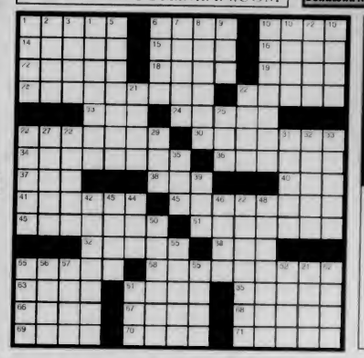
amherst cinema
Fri, Feb 29 - Thu, Mar 6

4 MONTHS 3 WEEKS AND 2 DAYS 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45 PLUS 12:00 pm Sat & Sun

There Will Be Blood 2:30 6:00 9:15

JUNO 2:45 7:30 9:30 PLUS 12:30 Sat & Sun

The SAVAGES 5:00



28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst (413) 253-2547 www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Feb 29 - Thu, Mar 6

persepolis 2:15 4:45 7:15 9:45
PLUS 12:00 pm Sat & Sun & 10:15 am Wed

NO COUNTRY FOR OLD MEN 1:45 4:15 7:00 9:30 PLUS 10:00 am Wed

27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5848

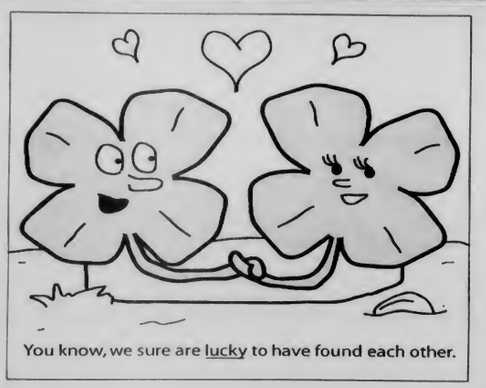
Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"We cannot direct the wind, but we can adjust the sails."

-Dolly Parton



UMASSIC PARK BY KURTIS SARKIN

PAUL BY BILLY O'KEEFE

SCRATCH N' SNIFF BY DEREK CUNEO

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Your current partner is sleeping around on you. In fact, she's in my office with me right now...and she so good.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Unless you exercise the open aspect of an open relationship, you are involved in a de facto closed relationship.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
No one appreciates your music ADD. Put the iPod down and back away.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You better get your hands on some incense and some Enya before that vein in your forehead bursts.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
In gambling the house always wins, unless you burn the house down. There are no winners when it comes to arson.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Nothin says "I have no life" like putting everything you own into alphabetical order.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
A rootless and nomadic existence can be a meaningful form of experiential learning.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
White Houses by Vanessa Carlton. Go.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Look out for the one eyed squirrel. He is vicious and looking for a replacement eyeball.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Release yourself from the busy world of burritos and pursue the simple life of the quesadilla.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You will accidentally brush against the reproductive organs of your crush. This does not count as getting play.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You are an accident waiting to happen. keep yourself safe with a pair of Coach wristpads.

Comics is dreamy, but don't get too excited. It's not that kind of dream.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3, bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE AND INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin in June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

2 bedroom apartments in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE, and INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going Fast. Still guaranteeing for Fall Semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Mill Valley Estates
APARTMENT FOR RENT

APT. FOR RENT

2 bedroom $1175
3 bedroom $1475
4 Bedroom $2225
Accepting Applications, 253-7377
millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided
1-800-965-6520

Attention Juniors & Seniors: Fall 2008 internship with the student legal services office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys & clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary- Full Training Provided. Contact our office at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

Be a Dell Campus Rep. Promote a top 30 company and gain real-world business and marketing experience! Go to RepNation.com/Dell to apply andrewm@repnation.com 646-341-8283

EMPLOYMENT

Free can of the insanely-healthyenergydrink! Email DRINKVERVE@AOL.com

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gna Shoes Limited Email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers wanted, must be able to work approx. 20 hours per week, nights and weekends, apply at D.P. Dough downtown Amherst

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errance, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA

EMPLOYMENT

PO Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone; 508-228-3942

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347
www.tripplakecamp.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR

SERVICES

A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

HOUSE FOR RENT

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, laundry, finished basement, yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Hadley Close to Umass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270.

S Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

INFORMATION

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Hagis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthnght.org

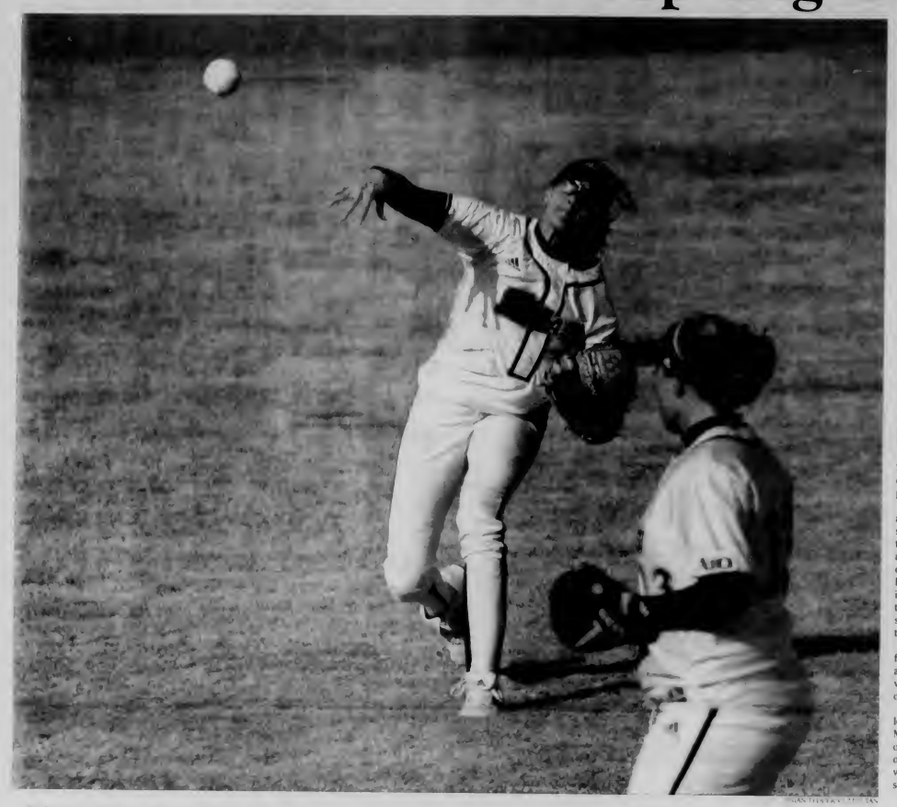
School a pain in the eyes? Headache? Itchy eyes? Trouble reading? An eye exam can be the first step toward relief. Call Eye Care Services at UHS 577-5383 to learn more

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101



TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe 413-548-9992
27 Pray St. Amherst
www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, MARCH 27, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen sweep Big Green

Sophomore Carly Normandin went 0-for-3 in Game 1 but rebounded with a 2-for-4 performance in Game 2 with a pair of RBIs and a run. However, the center fielder has struggled this season, batting .219 in 24 starts.

Balschmiter earns pair of victories

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

It was a bigger challenge than usual, but the Massachusetts softball team swept Dartmouth 7-0, 7-5 yesterday at the UMass Softball Complex.

Pitcher Brandice Balschmiter struck out 20 batters over the two games, earning both wins to improve her record to 11-6. The Minutewomen's ace started game one and breezed through a one-hit shutout, but early struggles by fellow hurler Bailey Sanders forced her back into action in the second inning of Game 2 with a 3-0 deficit to overcome.

"It was just a struggle for whatever reason," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "In the first game, I thought Brandice did a good job pitching. In the second game, it was a struggle from beginning to end."

Lauren Proctor and Jessica Serio each went 3-for-4 on the day, propelling UMass (16-11) past the Big Green (4-13).

The Minutewomen have annually opened their home season against Dartmouth, and the games have rarely gotten as close as Wednesday's second go-round (they swept the Big Green by a total of 28-0 in 2006), coming from behind twice to extend their winning streak to six games and 10 of their last 12.

Sanders got through the first inning without giving up a run but did allow a single and walked one batter. In the second, things fell apart quickly.

Dartmouth's Alyssa Parker led off with a single then Kelly Mallery drew a walk. The only out Sanders got in the inning was on a bunt by Kirsten Costello, which moved both runners into scoring position.

Katie Chifcian and Nikki

See SOFTBALL on page 9

UMass downs Hawks

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Hartford baseball team was trampled on in two of its recent games, getting outscored 58-17 in the embarrassing losses.

Massachusetts didn't run all over the Hawks yesterday, but came away with the close victory because of all the running it did.

UMass	7
BC	5

Behind eight stolen bases and strong pitching in key spots, UMass defeated Hartford, 7-5, yesterday at Earl Lorden Field to improve to 4-8 this season.

Mitchell Eilenberg pitched five stellar innings in a rare start and reliever Nathan Monroy closed out the final 2 1/3 innings for the Minutemen to avert Hartford's late comeback attempt.

"He pitched very well, that's why we use him a lot," UMass coach Mike Stone said of Eilenberg. "He throws strikes, he's got command of his curveball, slider and change and he battles and knows how to pitch. He's got a lot of poise."

UMass backed up the strong pitching effort on the base paths and at the plate, as six different play-

See BASEBALL on page 10

MICHAEL HIRTZER/COLLEGIAN

Adam Tempesta is batting .317 this season and is tied for the team lead with 11 RBIs.

STANLEY CHOW/COLLEGIAN

Senior captain Mike Kostka was signed by the Buffalo Sabres on Tuesday. The defenseman led the Minutemen with a +11 rating this season.

Maroon & White fall to Ivy League opponent once again

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's tennis team fell to 0-4 against the Ivy League yesterday, losing 6-1 to Yale, which drops its overall record to 5-9.

Earlier this year, the Minutewomen lost to Cornell, 4-3, Dartmouth, 7-0 and Brown, 6-1. The result was disappointing for UMass coach Judy Dixon, who had set a goal to beat an Ivy League team. Ivy schools traditionally have the strongest tennis programs in the Northeast.

The Minutewomen usually are at a disadvantage against the Ivies, having to play every game against them on the road.

"We're always at a disadvantage because we always play them away, we never get to face them at home," Dixon said. "But that won't stop us from trying every year."

Yale came into the meet on a five-game losing streak and a 3-8 overall record, but Dixon feels that its record does not reflect how talented the Bulldogs are.

"Yale does not ever overplay the ball, they are very solid and their footwork is excellent, they are on balance the whole time," Dixon said. "They are very calm when the take the court, and they are very deliberate."

The Minutewomen got an unpleasant surprise when they arrived in New Haven yesterday. All week long they had expected to compete in an indoor meet, but it was changed to an outdoor meet because the temperature was above 50 degrees. The switch caught UMass off guard.

"It's awful, just awful, it's not that hard to go out-to-in, but it's very hard to go in-to-out," Dixon said. "Because you know when you're indoors the ball is just coming at you, and you don't have to make any adjustments with your feet. Outdoors the ball is moving all the time; it moves towards you then it moves two or three inches because of the wind."

Senior captain Masha Pozar drew the toughest challenge, having to face Bulldogs junior Janet Kim, who is ranked as a top 15 player in the east. While she lost the match 6-3, 6-4, she held her own against an elite opponent and according to Dixon, is really starting to reach her potential.

"Masha played a very good match against a player ranked in the top 20," Dixon said. "I thought that she was in the match the whole time, and I feel like Masha is just starting to come back to playing the way I expect her to."

Pozar also tied a UMass record in the doubles competition. While the Minutewomen lost the doubles point, Pozar and her partner Candyce Boney won their match, 8-5. The victory tied Pozar for most doubles victories all-time at

See TENNIS on page 10

Kostka headed to the NHL

Senior defenseman signed by Sabres

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Mike Kostka, captain of the Massachusetts hockey team during the 2007-08 season signed a two-year contract with the Buffalo Sabres of the National Hockey League on Tuesday.

UMass Hockey

He also signed an Amateur Tryout Contract with the Rochester Americans, the Sabres's American Hockey League affiliate. At the end of the 2007-08 AHL season, Kostka's contract with Buffalo will kick in.

Kostka's four-year career with UMass ended last Saturday when the Minutemen lost, 7-2, to New Hampshire in the second game of a best-of-three series in the first round of the Hockey East playoffs.

Although the Minutemen did not enjoy the success many anticipated in 2007-08, Kostka enjoyed his best individual season. He set career highs in goals (9) and points (21); he also was named a Hockey East All-Star for the first time in his career.

Kostka's not the only UMass player likely headed to the professional ranks. Winger P.J. Fenton was drafted by the San Jose Sharks after his freshman season. Although no deal is done yet, sources close to the Minutemen report that Fenton is in talks with the Sharks front office.

David Leaderer, Patrick Dineen and Matt Burto are the other three UMass players lost to graduation and are reportedely not in discussions with any professional franchises.

Hockey East honors

Kostka was the lone Minuteman on either the first or second Hockey East All-Star team. But freshmen James Marcou and Paul Dainton received nods to the all-freshman team.

Marcou led the Minutemen with 32 points on eight goals and 24 assists. He established himself as one of the most gifted playmakers in the confer-

See HOCKEY on page 9

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:39 | SAT H:40 | SUN H:49 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, MARCH 28, 2008

Taking back Southwest

BY GISEL SAILLIANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

In an attempt to empower the University of Massachusetts community against recent acts of violence that have occurred on campus, southwest Residence Life staff and student volunteers decided to "Take Back Southwest" last night.

Students involved in house council and community leaders in Washington, Patterson, MacKimmie, Pierpont and Moore residence halls worked alongside with their senior staff to organize the event.

See SOUTHWEST on page 5

INSIDE:

FEATURES
Learning about sustainability at UMass
Page 6

ARTS & LIVING
Lotus delivers electronica to Noho
Page 10

SPORTS
Minutewomen open Atlantic 10 play
Page 16

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 109

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGRIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Katherine Shea

WEB EDITOR
Lief Walcutt

Across the Nation Around the World

Colleges reach out to autistic

By Robin Erb
Detroit Free Press

DETROIT – If college were purely academic, 16-year-old Cullen Kappel would have no worries.

But the mostly straight-A student who studies astrophysics just for fun knows his challenge at college will be in what happens between classes.

Cullen has Asperger's syndrome, a high-functioning form of autism. Like others with Asperger's, he tends to hyper-focus on topics, can be thrown off-kilter with a slight change to his routine and has a tough time deciphering conversation cues.

"I feel a bit socially challenged," said the junior at Clarkston High School.

Now, universities across the state and the country are reaching out to students with autism and related disorders as their numbers grow rapidly – thanks to early treatment of the disorders in children.

The schools are setting up peer mentoring programs, having one-on-one interventions and working with housing officials, campus security and professors to help them understand why some students might seem quirky, rude or out of place.

Students with Asperger's syndrome are some of the highest-functioning among those with autism, many with above-average intelligence, "all the way to brilliant," said Jane Thierfeld Brown, director of student services at the University of Connecticut's law school. She's coauthoring a book, "Students with Asperger's Syndrome in Higher Education."

But the disorder also short-circuits the part of the brain responsible for executive functioning, making it difficult to organize and prioritize – keys to academic success.

Physical idiosyncrasies – hand-flapping, for example – can make people with Asperger's appear eccentric.

And conversational cues – plays on words, facial features, hand gestures – pass by unrecognized.

So Brandon Goyings, a 22-year-old Oakland University student from Jackson, Mich., sometimes doesn't get jokes.

"I think more concrete, less abstract," he said.

And it's something that threatens academic success. An autistic student might not be able to read a professor's cues or decipher a lab partner's annoyance at his outbursts or quirky habits.

"College expects you to come with a certain skill set ... but this is a communication disability," said Linda Sisson, director of Oakland University's new peer assistance program for students with autism.

Students with autism were graduating from college long before many of today's outreach efforts began.

But university disabilities offices say more of those students are heading to college than ever after a decade or more of early intervention, parental advocacy and federally mandated mainstreaming into regular classrooms.

Steven Schwartz, an associate professor of special education at Madonna University, noted that "15 or 20 years ago, the idea of including an autistic kid in a general education classroom was craziness. Now it's not only an expectation, it's the law."

The U.S. Centers for Disease Control and Prevention estimates that one in 150 8-year-olds has some autism spectrum disorder.

And in her survey of 80 institutions across the country last year, Therfeld Brown said four-year schools had an average of 10 students who reported to their schools' disabilities offices that they had some form of autism. But she estimates the number is much higher because many students don't report their diagnosis.

In Michigan, Oakland University has offered courses for years for teachers and other professionals who want to work with students with autism.

Now it's wrapping services around its students with the disorder, starting with a peer support program for students like Goyings.

To address the organizational challenges and the need for tangible direction, students with autism paired with other students and received a daily planner. They broke down a semester's worth of assignments into daily chunks and listed every task of the day – sometimes even eating and exercising.

To hone communication skills, the students meet weekly to practice what they have learned about conversation intricacies – from beginning a conversation to registering smiles and frowns.

Mia Evans, a 22-year-old political science and journalism major from Detroit, mentors a 22-year-old student with autism from Orchard Lake. Evans asks her mentee about classes and homework. She helps the student replay conversations, searching for clues that the student is faltering.

"We don't sugarcoat the campus experience," Evans said, but "we give them a reference point."

Even universities that don't have programs tailored for students with autism have made adjustments for them.

Since they can get easily distracted – or at the other end, fixated – some disabilities offices work with professors during final exams week to find a quiet room for the autistic test-taker.

Tim Hull, a 22-year-old Grass Lake student with autism, expects to graduate from the University of Michigan this spring with a double major, but it hasn't been without plenty of challenges.

He has trouble parsing questions on a test or splitting a semester's project into daily tasks. He gave up on taking notes in class, finding himself consumed with writing instead of digesting the lecture.

He sometimes works on projects for several days straight with just a few hours of sleep.

"I tend to do everything full force or not at all," he said.

For others, the most pivotal battle is in building relationships. Because they can seem to be eccentric or rude, autistic students often are isolated, frustrated and ultimately depressed. It's a road map to dropping out of school.

At Grand Valley State University, Amy Matthews, the project director for the State Wide Autism Resources & Training program, recruited students from her classes to invite an autistic classmate to movies and football games.

She and others who work with students with autism say they have gained crucial ground – people are starting to recognize the disorder rather than reeling from it.

At the University of Connecticut, Thierfeld Brown said she recently explained to someone outside her school that she worked with students with Asperger's.

"He said 'Oh, my neighbor's kid has that,'" she said, adding: "Five years ago, it would have been 'Asparagus-what?'"

Tim Hull, 22, of Grass Lake, who has autism, is a senior at the University of Michigan and sits in a lobby on campus in Ann Arbor, Michigan. He is set to graduate with a double major.

The University of Massachusetts system, including the Amherst campus, is enhancing its security alert system.

UMass security systems set to enhance at all campuses

By Matt Sheehan
Collegian Staff

In a university system of nearly 60,000 students spread across five campuses, devising a uniform security initiative is a challenge.

"We were looking at a [security] system that all of UMass can use and that's kind of a daunting task," said Col. Emil Fioravanti, University of Massachusetts Dartmouth's, director of public safety.

In the wake of campus violence at Northern Illinois University in February and threats found at the Amherst and Dartmouth campuses in past weeks, the UMass system hopes to implement an enhanced emergency alert program.

"It's important in today's day and age that the universities be able to contact students, faculty, staff quickly as possible," said Bill Heaney, interim Vice Chancellor, at the Dartmouth campus.

Previously, e-mail was viewed as the fastest option in mass notification, but according Fioravanti it's not as effective as once perceived.

"We found not a lot of people pay attention to e-mail," he said.

Under the new security system e-mail alerts will be supplemented with other instant notification systems.

"This spring we hope to introduce the text message plans, once the extensive testing – to make sure the system works – is complete," said Edward F. Blaguszewski, spokesman for the Amherst campus. "The challenge of moving that level of messages through the system in a timely fashion is something that we need to make sure works."

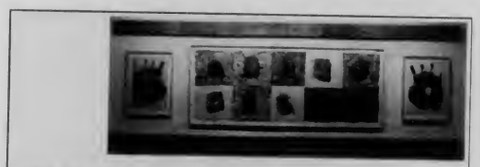
University officials from UMass-Dartmouth also believe text-messaging offers a capable means of issuing a mass warning.

"Personally I like text messaging, it happens rapidly, and it requires little signal compared to an audio signal," said Heaney. "If there are two students who get a text message notification in a class of thirty, they can inform everyone else immediately."

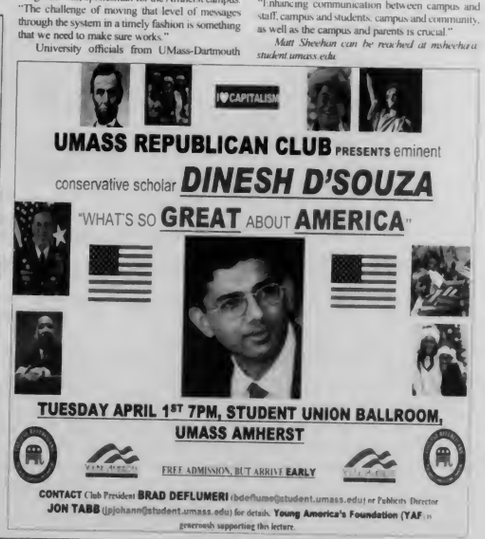
UMass-Dartmouth also hopes to add a siren system by the upcoming fall semester.

The siren complements the campus layout according to the chancellor's assistant, John Hoey.

"Our campus is not as sprawling as the Amherst campus, we think a centralized siren system will be very effective here with our buildings concentrated to about 100 acres of the 700-acre campus," Hoey said.



Even with new technology soon to be unveiled, University officials maintain that no single option can used to contact all people. Much of the emergency responses success is dependent on students, faculty, and staff within the UMass community.



"A campus can't be secured through one approach, a variety of methods have to be used," said Blaguszewski.

One of those methods is increased communication between all members of a particular campus.

"What has become clear is the critical importance of training our public safety officers, and University staff not only in how to deal with an emergency, but also in communication," said Hoey. "Enhancing communication between campus and staff, campus and students, campus and community, as well as the campus and parents is crucial."

Matt Sheehan can be reached at msheehan@student.umass.edu

Harvard rejects all undergrad transfers

By Frank Vitale
Collegian Staff

In a mass e-mail sent out March 20, Harvard College informed over 1,000 transfer applicants that due to a housing shortage the school would not be accepting any transfer students for the next two years.

Coming on the heels of a season that saw a record number of transfer applications, the college's decision has raised eyebrows.

"Harvard College conducted the most thorough examination of residential housing in Harvard's history," explained the e-mail. "That exhaustive study revealed that overcrowding in Harvard's residential Houses was more extensive than previous information had indicated and raised serious questions about whether the Houses could successfully accommodate any new transfer students."

Transfer applications are exceptionally complicated, typically requiring SAT scores, with many students retaking the lengthy and expensive test. It also requires both college and high school transcripts, recommendations and essays. The pressure and work required to complete them can be significant.

Many students are upset about Harvard's decision, which comes nearly a month after the Feb. 15 transfer deadline.

"What Harvard has done is so outrageous in that it has denied any transfer applicants for the 2008-2009 academic year admission, after the application deadline has already passed and the transfer applicants have already eagerly been waiting for over a month to hear if they were among the 5 percent to get in," said Seth Levi Hunerwadel, a sophomore at Georgetown University and Harvard transfer student.

Hunerwadel, one of the 1,308 transfer applicants to Harvard, retook the SATs and worked at several challenging internships, including the U.S. Senate and Jordanian Embassy, in order to bolster his resume – all aimed at bettering his chances of being accepted at the world-revered institution.

"This is truly upsetting, and makes Harvard look very bad," he said in an e-mail sent to Harvard employees. "It leads me to believe that Harvard really does not value its applicants, their hard efforts, or their applications. If there is a 'housing shortage' as Harvard claims, then Harvard should admit very selectively from both the transfer applicant pool and the freshmen applicant pool."

Hunerwadel is not the only student outraged by Harvard's actions.

Collegeconfidential.com, a discussion forum dedicated to college admissions and the associated baggage, has seen plenty of chatter on the topic since last week's e-mail. One thread had nearly 300 posts – many of them angry and bitter in tone.

UMass students who have gone through the transfer process understand the exasperation felt by the Harvard transfer applicants.

Emily Gregson, 20, a UMass student who transferred from Mount Ida College last year, said she understood the exasperation felt by the Harvard applicants.

Harvard College, the undergraduate section of Harvard University has decided that it will not accept any transfer students for the next two years due to a housing shortage.

"I understand [Harvard's] need for space and to put their own students first," she said. "But I feel like it's a situation they should have seen coming, and therefore should have made their decision far before the application deadline. I know how bad I wanted to come [to UMass] and after taking the trouble to fill out the entire application I would have been really upset to learn that they weren't even accepting transfers anymore."

"The transfer process is long, involved and frustrating," said Matthew Douglass, 20, who just recently finished sending out transfer applications to several schools. "Letting kids know only after the fact is a huge dirt-bag move."

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu.

Professor recieves grant to study killer bacteria

By Ebad Rahman
Collegian Correspondent

Alejandro Heuck is searching for a way to deny the bacteria Pseudomonas Aeruginosa, killer of 90 percent of cystic fibrosis patients, from flourishing in those with weakened immunity.

Heuck, assistant professor of biochemistry and molecular biology at the University of Massachusetts, received an $80,000 grant over two years by the American Lung Association to study how the pathogen strikes its victims. If the research goes well, Heuck hopes to get larger grants to continue his research.

Heuck will study the tail-like proteins on the surface of the pathogen, which act as a weapon against the cell. Once the pathogen attaches itself to a cells surface, it uses the tail to break through the membrane. The tail then channels in toxins and helps the pathogen colonize the cell.

Heuck will try to block the tail from penetrating the cell membrane. If the tail can be stopped then the pathogen's ability to infect the cell will also cease. This would help the immune system run its course and dispose of the pathogen.

An added benefit to blocking the tails is that it is specific to harmful bacterium. Instead of using a method that wipes out all bacterium, only bacterium harmful to a cell can be targeted.

Other pathogenic bacteria that share Pseudomonas Aeruginosa's tail include Tersina ssp., Salmonella ssp. Enterophatogenic E. coli, Pseudomonas aeruginosa, and Shigella flexneri.

Destroying all the bacterium with a drug to kill off harmful pathogens is counterproductive. If the pathogen has a resistance to the drug then it can survive while the other bacterium die out. All the resources the bacteria were using are left open for the harmful pathogen to use. Multi-resistant pathogens are formed this way. They are at a disadvantage without intervention, but when there is no one to compete with they grow.

Antibiotics are limited when dealing with these multi-resistant. The few that are effective are not useful against all strains.

"When patients used Penicillin to fight pathogens in the early twenteeth century, people thought that they had the cure," said Heuck. "But the resistant pathogens remained uncontested and came back."

Heuck says the bad bacteria are like the criminals in a city.

"If you wanted to wipe away all the criminals in a city you wouldn't wipe everyone out," said Heuck. "If everyone were to be wiped out then criminals can come in and flourish in the empty city. You would have to target the criminals."

"The bacteria is opportunistic and can only strike when there is an opening," he continued. "Patients with cystic fibrosis, HIV, burns, or cancer are exposed to attack and colonization by the bacteria."

Heuck said pathogens infecting the lungs of patients with cystic fibrosis, but that at the price of weakening the lungs. Eventually, a pathogen comes that cannot be cleaned and kills the patient, he added.

Heuck intends on tinkering with the pathogens DNA to see how to stop the tail. By taking out DNA from the pathogen and placing it in other bacteria, Heuck can learn what proteins are the causes of the pathogen's tail.

"Antibiotics are usually molecules that can bind to proteins at specific sites and block their function," he said.

Heuck earned a Ph.D. in chemistry from the University of Buenos Aires in Argentina. He went to Texas A&M in College Station, Texas, to do his postdoctoral research on cholesterol-dependent toxins.

Ebad Rahman can be reached at erahman@student.umass.edu.

UM Students 'take back Southwest' yesterday

SOUTWEST from page 1

About 250 students gathered in front of Washington tower and waited for events to begin.

With free t-shirts, and refreshments to keep them warm, students listened to Lauren Boyd, the assistant residence director in the Patterson/MacKimmie cluster, as she gave the opening remarks.

"Take back Southwest from what? You don't understand where we have to take Southwest from? We are coming together as a community, [because] we do not allow violence in our community, we take a stand against physical, verbal abuse, abuse against those that are very different than us," Boyd said.

Before the students lit their candles for a march around the Southwest area, guest speakers were introduced in order to motivate the students. Resident Assistant in Coolidge dorm, Sarah Morgan, spoke about the array of violence which she felt needed to be addressed by the campus community.

"We are not going to stand for violence in out home, people come in our home and take violent acts against us, because of their skin color, sexual orientation, any part of our identity," Morgan said.

Student Trustee Lindsay McCluskey, expressed her disappointment to the crowd about the recent violent events and the way the community has responded to them.

The closing remarks were made by Barbara Love, professor of social justice in the education program at UMass. She spoke to the students on the power of collection action in removing violence from the community.

"You have power collectively, you can exercise that power, knowing that every type of violence that occurs here are not random, they are never isolated," Love said. "They are always connected to large patterns that are designed to reinforce oppression."

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

Walkways on UM campus now pedestrian traffic only

By Derrick Perkins
Collegian Staff

Four sections in the heart of campus will be designated pedestrian-traffic only areas and off limits for service vehicles starting a week from this Sunday.

According to Pat Daly, director of physical plant at the University of Massachusetts, the walkway from the Whitmore Administration building ramp to the W.E.B. Du Bois Library, the parking garage traffic circle to North Pleasant Street, the courtyard between the Lederle Graduate Research Center and the Conte Polymer Research Center and the southside Lederle plaza will bar all but foot traffic after April 6.

The newly designated pedestrian zones were created to improve safety for those traveling campus by foot, University officials said.

An information campaign to educate students, current and new off-campus vendors, and service companies has been undertaken, according to Daly.

New maps delineating the designated pedestrian zones will be distributed and signs marking the zones will be erected in the coming days.

All of the zones will be regularly patrolled by the UMPD to help enforce the ban on vehicles.

According to University officials, for the first few weeks police officers will issue warning citations to those vehicles that violate the zones. Repeat offenders will receive moving violations.

Emergency service vehicles, including police, fire, and ambulances will still have access to the routes. Physical plant vehicles will also have the ability to enter the pedestrian-only zones to for snow removal purposes. All other vehicles will need to make arrangements with the UMPD to enter the restricted zones.

The Campus Landscape Improvement Project made the decision to create the pedestrian-only walkways. CLIP assists the University in creating policy to improve walkways, outdoor meeting areas, unifying architecture on campus, maintaining landscape materials and lessening the effects of parking.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com.

Bartlett walkway has been deemed a pedestrain only zone by University officials.

Need Experience?

Located in the Campus Center Basement.

All majors accepted!

If you're interested in business and can commit to a year long position, come on down to our office.

Now Accepting Applications!

Sustainability at UMass

By Katherine Neubert, Collegian Staff

Sustainability is any development that "meets the needs of the present without compromising the ability of future generations to meet their own needs," according to the Brundtland Commission, a 1983 group founded to address the concern for the future of the natural environment. Although it can be hard work, there are many ways the average college student can become part of this "green" movement and make a difference in their surrounding environment and community.

Energy

Ever been even slightly interested in how to live a more sustainable and eco-friendly lifestyle? Try taking John Gerber's class on Sustainable Living.

A majority of the class is geared towards inspirational stories told by ordinary citizens who try to live their lives in a more sustainable manner. Students in that class then reflect on their relationship with the earth and then are asked to create a personal holistic goal, which helps them make more sustainable decisions in their everyday lives.

"I am more interested in helping students find a new way of thinking, than telling folks how to act," said Gerber.

Each week, students have a homework assignment, the first one being an "ecological footprint." The Footprint is used as a tool to measure each student's impact on Earth's resources, based on their everyday lifestyle, Gerber said.

Gerber lives a very sustainable lifestyle himself. Biking to work everyday, he grows his own vegetables, fruit, honey (yes, he's got the bees) and raises chickens and turkeys in his backyard. He and his wife live in a highly insulated home and will be installing a solar hot water heater on their house this spring. They also use wood to supplement the heating oil and to save money. They recycle everything.

While his work at UMass with sustainability is only recent, Gerber has been working with farmers on sustainable agriculture since the mid 1980's and has taught a course on organic gardening since the mid 1970's.

GardenShare is a student organization at UMass that allows students to practice sustainable agriculture and organic farming methods. This organization, also run by Gerber, has a little less than an acre plot of land in Amherst where members grow vegetables, fruits, herbs and flowers. "I do this work both because I am concerned about the harms we are doing to ourselves and the earth, but also because this work is fun and attracts really interesting people into my life," said Gerber. "People who work for sustainability seem to be joyful."

Food

Ever think about how much food goes to waste after it is mass-produced at the dining commons? With the buffet style, all you want to do is throw a little bit of everything on your plate - who cares if you don't finish it all, right? Ever wonder how much food actually goes to waste?

Last semester alone, Waste Management collected about 72.5 tons, or 145,000 lbs. of waste from plates and trays, every month, the average waste is at about 5 oz. per person, each time they visit the DC.

"It is comparable to other schools, but still too much," said Ken Toong, Director of Dining Services. "We have posted signs to encourage students to take only what you can eat, and in some DCs, we even posted how much food per month we collected from the plates and trays."

Wondering what they do with all that leftover food they have at the end of the day? Health regulations say they can use it within 24 hours, otherwise it goes to composting. No leftover food is given to the needy due to liability issues, said Toong.

According to their Web site, Dining Services does a number of different things to help maintain the environment. They hope to make a difference by serving organic produce and buying locally grown food, composting all wet food, recycling, and offering a "skip-a-meal" program for just causes.

The National College and University Food Services recently presented UMass Dining Services with an award for "outstanding food services and consistent efforts to improve and stay on top," the Web site said.

PHOTOS BY: KEITH STERN, AMANDA TUST, JONATHAN CASTLEMAN & BRITTANY YOUNG GRAPHICS BY: DAVID HOFFMAN

Buildings

One thing UMass is trying to do, in order to make campus more eco-friendly, is to create "green buildings." Beginning in the fall semester of 2006, the University began adding over 400,000 square feet of new academic space and 864 new beds in Undergraduate Housing.

The campus has not officially acquired a Leadership in Energy and Environmental Design (LEED) certification from the U.S. Green Building Council for these buildings, but, they have, been using the rating scale as a guideline for design, incorporating as many characteristics of a green building as possible. Also, every new or renovated building has LEED accredited professionals and commissioning agents in the design process.

Another part of campus that was created to be more environmentally savvy is the new Central Heating Plant. Scheduled to be operational this month, this new heating plant will produce almost twice as much energy as older heating plants on campus, while emitting seven times less green house gas.

The plant will be one of the cleanest burning facilities of its size and kind throughout the nation, and will provide all of the steam and nearly all of the electric power required for the UMass campus.

Other new green buildings include the planned recreation center, the studio arts building, all undergraduate housing built after 2006, the School of Nursing's Skinner Renovation and the Integrated Sciences building.

Do Your Part

Turn off the lights when you leave a room.
Turn off the lights of all classrooms that are unoccupied.
Throw away plastic bottles and containers in a recycling bin.
Pick up stray plastic water bottles and put them in a recycling bin.
Ride the bus, bike or walk.
Do not take more food at the DC than you can eat.
Make a compost in your dorm room or apartment for biodegradable foods.
Look into buying energy efficient light bulbs and appliances.
Look into joining a local farm.
Cut meat out of your diet by 50%.
Buy carbon credits when you fly in an airplane (to offset the carbon dioxide released).
Share a newspaper with a friend and then recycle it (or better yet, use it to mulch your garden).
Don't buy anything that is packaged in a hard plastic box.
Don't ever buy water in a plastic bottle (carry a water bottle and refill it with tap water).
When grocery shopping, bring a reusable tote to carry your purchases.
Turn empty soda (or beer) cans in at a recycling center (you get 5 cents back for each one!).
Fix a leaky faucet or shower head. The average American uses 75 gallons of water each year!
Make sure your windows and doors aren't drafty (this conserves energy AND lowers your heating bills).

Get Involved

On-campus

Students for Environmental Awareness and Action is a group of students at UMass that promote an increasing student awareness of environmental issues and participating in actions to improve the environment.

Focus the Nation is attempting to coordinate teams of faculty, students and staff at over a thousand colleges, universities and high schools in the United States, to collaboratively engage in a nationwide, interdisciplinary discussion centered stabilizing the climate.

American Society of Civil Engineers Amherst Student Chapter
Engineers without Borders
Environmental Horticulture Club
MassPIRG
Net Impact
Office of Community Service Learning
UMass Student Chapter of the Wildlife Society

For more information about these and other on-campus groups, contact the Center for Student Development at 413-545-3600.

Off-campus

Appalachian Mountain Club is an outdoor recreation, conservation and education organization.

Center for Ecological Technology is a non-profit organization which works to demonstrate and promote practical, affordable solutions to the environmental challenges encountered in our daily activities.

Clean Water Action is a Northampton citizen's group working for clean, safe, and affordable water, pollution prevention, environmentally safe jobs and businesses, as well as change through political action.

Community Involved in Sustaining Agriculture is a non-profit organization working to sustain agriculture throughout the country.

Conte Refuge is a national fish and wildlife refuge focusing on environmental and watershed education.

EarthAction is an "amnesty international for the planet," - a network of 1,900 citizen groups through the world seeking to encourage corporations and national governments to find solutions to global problems.

Green Corps is a non-profit organization who teaches tomorrow's leaders how to approach environmental problems.

Hitchcock Center for the Environment, located in Amherst, hopes to increase the "environmental literacy" of citizens.

Sierra Club Pioneer Valley is part of the Massachusetts Chapter of the Sierra Club and composed of members living in the three counties of Massachusetts that include the Connecticut River from north to south, they are Franklin, Hampshire, and Hamden Counties.

For information on these and other environmental groups, visit:
www.umass.edu/tei/TEI_2005/forstudents.html.

Katherine can be reached at KNeubert@student.umass.edu

EDITORIAL OPINION

Israel/Palestine HvZ style

Eli Gottlieb

It's that time again. The time when we learn a lesson from the Wheel of Morality? Nope. The time when we pass out drunkenly in our best friend's frat house? Nope. The time when we all have exams? Well yeah, but I didn't mean that.

It's the time when all the really cool people on campus gather, then quickly disperse in fear, for this semester's game of Humans vs. Zombies. And while only half as many people seem to have signed on this semester, the undead hordes already stake out DCs, waiting for our prey to emerge (hopefully not carrying Nerf pistols).

The convergence of this regular event combined with a recent rash of arguments over the Israeli-Palestinian conflict, makes it seem as though a ravening zombie were eating through the campus.

Seriously, people, I honestly don't know why we have to continue debating these issues around and around so endlessly.

Heck, if I'd known this issue created such an endless tempest of words I would never have written my piece on Israeli technology last fall. I honestly don't think our continuous pontification convinces anyone of our positions, anyway.

Most people have no involvement in the Middle East, no connection to a far-away homeland, no religious heritage in that homeland, and no relatives living there. Why should they care? Petty tribal professions to superior liberalism don't faze anyone.

It would be fun. It would let two groups who normally exist as enemies do something together.

And unfortunately, while I have the personal word of SAFI's president that he'd like to co-organize programming with the Palestine Action Coalition, the Palestine Action Coalition refuses to even acknowledge the Student Alliance for Israel.

But HvZ was a triumph. The Mass Games club made a note there: huge success. It's been hard to overstate their satisfaction. Also, Israeli Independence Day ("Yom Haatzmaut") will come soon, along with the warmer weather that lets us here in Massachusetts spend much more time out-of-doors. I think the two groups should settle their differences the old-fashioned fun way: all out Nerf, marshmallow, and balled-up sock war.

Yes, rather than constantly taking up valuable time arguing over an issue that people either take a side on or simply don't care about, the Palestine Action Coalition and Student Alliance for Israel should simply meet on the battlefield like honorable opponents.

The war game could work similarly to Humans vs. Zombies in that students would sign up to play via the internet, and anyone could sign up to play for either side. With a bit of luck, we could even get unaffiliated civilians to referee for us.

Heck, let's even allow the teams to name themselves – whatever they like. The Israeli players could play as the Irgun, a feared paramilitary group from the pre-state days, and the Palestine team could just name itself for the Palestine Liberation Organization. Or it could go the other way around, with the Palestinian team naming itself for the terrorist group Hamas while the Israel players call themselves "Tzahal" after the Israeli army.

It would be fun. It would let two groups who normally exist as enemies do something together. It would give everyone the opportunity to air their ethnic, religious and political grievances; and it would even allow both groups to show off their culture in the time of year that gave birth to both the state of Israel and Palestine as distinctive entities.

The rules could work much like HvZ: A player hit with a Nerf dart, balled-up sock, or marshmallow is "injured," requiring them to wait a certain length of time before returning to play.

A kind of identifying mark (other than red armbands, which have nasty connotations of Nazism in Jewish history) can be used to distinguish players from non-players. Tagging a player will "kill" them, requiring them to hand in a username and password so that the kill can be logged as a score for the tagger's team.

Every two or three days, "dead" players could receive a new username and password pair, both because new future soldiers are born to both sides every day and because it gives players a way back into the game. If one side gives up, they lose. If one side has no players left, they lose. If, at the end of a time limit, one side has less players than the other, they lose. The last team standing wins.

Game on.

Eli Gottlieb is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at egottlie@student.umass.edu.

Stressed out students unable to relax

Katherine Marr

We know that things have hit a new low when college students cannot even relax at the thought of relaxing. The Associated Press and mtvU recently conducted a survey of over 2,000 undergraduates from 40 schools, and found that today's college students suffer from an enormous stress overload.

Of course, it is expected that four of the main culprits are schoolwork and grades, extracurricular activities and finances. But the polls also indicated that hanging out with friends, dating, partying and relaxing are increasingly stressing students out.

Take spring break, for example. Spring break is supposed to be an escape from it all – a time to let loose in fun and craziness (or to sleep for a solid week, whichever sounds more appealing).

Instead, studies show that students anticipate spring break with worry over whether they've been doing enough stomach crunches to look good in a bikini, concern about drinking too much while clubbing, or panic as to whether they can really afford to pay for their hiatus to some tropical paradise.

They stress about their vacation growing too wild and out-of-control (and dread the compromising pictures that will inevitably turn up on Facebook for the entire world to judge).

But overall, schoolwork and grades seem to be most to blame for stress in college students, which is understandable since we are here for the education, after all. Is all the stress over grades really warranted in the end, though?

No one is denying that a high GPA is certainly beneficial, but we might as well admit that it is hardly everything. You could have a 4.0 (and have been captain of the tennis team and president of 15 clubs), but in many cases, whether you score that perfect career will still come down to whether your personality clicks with that of the interviewer.

It is noteworthy to mention that there is a reported gender difference regarding stress: 45 percent of women feel stressed versus 34 percent of men. This discrepancy relates to women's inclination toward being perfect. Mostly women are plagued by this need to achieve the utmost perfection.

The point is that students are stressed about everything.

Psychologist Alice Domar sums it up, saying: "Women look in the mirror and they focus on the imperfections ...Guys look in the mirror and say, 'Not bad.'" I always wished that I could look at my calculus exam grade and think "Not bad," but no such luck (thank goodness I don't have to take any more math classes –that's one less stress factor in my life).

It is impossible to be perfect all around. I have finally come to realize this in my own life with the classic example of studying and eating. If I'm striving for the perfect exam grade, I eat an entire 14-ounce bag of peanut M&M's, which somehow enables me to pull an all-nighter and get an "A" on the exam, but leaves me feeling like a blimp the next day.

Or, if I'm aiming for the perfect body, I avoid chocolate while studying and inevitably do worse on the exam (and most likely will still down an entire 14-ounce bag of peanut M&M's as I wallow in my bad grade). I long ago learned that I will never be able to attain simultaneous perfection in those two areas.

The point is that students are stressed about everything. Twenty percent of students have felt too stressed to even do schoolwork. So, you might think to remedy the situation by hanging out with friends or going out for a couple of drinks.

But one in five students have also reported being too stressed to relax with friends, and 25 percent of students think that they should drink and go out less often.

Thus, you would maybe then think of having some comfort food or taking a nap. But, of course, students cite eating disorders and insomnia as effects of stress. So, maybe you opt to just lounge alone in your dorm, spending the entire day watching movies.

But then you start to feel antisocial and worry about the relationships that you're not having at that moment, or that you should be doing something productive – like an English paper.

It is no wonder that 20 percent of students say they feel stressed all of the time, and subsequently even consider dropping out of school.

The solution to this debilitating stress overload is to not sweat the insignificant, inconsequential stuff. Unfortunately, people usually have to experience some type of life-threatening crisis before they realize that they shouldn't worry about life's minor setbacks. Instead, enjoy life now, eat those peanut M&M's and then hit the gym the next day.

Katherine Marr is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at kmarr@student.umass.edu.

Property rights fiasco

Matthew M. Robare

Before the civil service "reform" of the late 1800s, people who donated to winning presidential candidates or campaigned on their behalf got appointed to various positions by the victorious chief executive. This was called patronage by its supporters and the spoils system by its detractors.

Eventually the opponent won and spoils bureaucrats, who were out of office every four to eight years, were replaced with those vile imps, career bureaucrats. The "reform" also produced another species to inhabit Washington, the only form of life lower than the career bureaucrat: the lobbyist. Lobbyists are responsible for more wasted money, more government regulation than anyone besides FDR and LBJ.

The revelation of the stat cooking encourages the question, "why are students being singled out?"

I bring this up not to bore you, but to provide a context for examining two lobbies most dangerous to college students: the Recording Industry Association of America and the Motion Picture Association of America. They were responsible for vastly inflating (44 percent compared to the actual 15 percent) the percentage of music and movie piracy done by college students.

Using those untruthful numbers they forced Congress to pass a bill "encouraging" colleges and universities to take away Internet access from students who pirate music and movies. UMass, I will point out, already does this (although I'm not sure how effectively, considering I have been in a class where we were taught how to evade detection).

The revelation of the stat cooking encourages the question, "Why are students being singled out?" I think the answer is easy: We are a captive population. Most of our days are spent in one small geographic location and we are all networked together.

For RIAA and MPAA prosecutors, that translates into easy pickings. If one person downloads copyrighted material and distributes it all over campus that means the evidence is concentrated, the suspects are concentrated and someone will be willing to testify in exchange for immunity.

Then they can parade us in front of the media and say "These are the music thieves, these are the people who drive movie tickets sky-high." The people will have enemies and the law enforcement gets an easy victory.

The record and movie companies are saved from explaining to stockholders that it's worth it to spend $100 million to make a movie people will eventually buy five months later at a discounted price at Wal-Mart on a DVD loaded with extras and bonuses instead of spending $400 million to see it in theaters.

I think that the problem has to do with property rights. Conflicts are easily resolvable where there are clearly defined property rights. For instance, if you break into my home it is clear that you are in the wrong, but when I pollute the air the conflict is more complex because air is owned by everyone.

But what are the property rights for music, movies, books, and even patents? For many years they have fallen under the umbrella of intellectual property, as originally elucidated in the Constitution of the United States as part of the powers of Congress, "To promote the Progress of Science and useful Arts, by securing to for limited Times to Authors and Inventors the exclusive Right to their Writings and Discoveries."

Are the songs on your Ipod yours to distribute?

It sounds alright – being a physics major I have often come across the proverb "Publish or perish" and I would hate to be the grad student whose thesis was stolen. But notice it makes no mention of people discovering the same thing at the same time.

For years the patent office has settled competition like that by seniority, whichever request they get first is granted. But this is, in my opinion, hardly a desirable solution. If I were an inventor I would not want my ability to market my product taken away from me because of the slowness of the postal system or the influence of the other guy.

I'm sure Elisha Gray felt like he was cheated out of a fortune by the government when the patent for the telephone was awarded to Alexander Graham Bell because his description arrived mere hours before.

Another problem with intellectual property rights being decided by fiat is the fact they are decided by fiat. The idea of rights the Constitution and Declaration of Independence rest on what is called Natural Rights theory, which says that there are limits to what people can do to one another without permission.

The Right to Property is what concerns me, so I'll focus on it. John Locke explained that a person gains an exclusive property right when they remove something from a state of nature.

For example, the first farmer gained an exclusive property right to his farm just by working the land. That piece of land and everything on it then becomes his to do with as he pleases. Hence a government agent deciding the matter by any arbitrary methodology is wrong.

When faced with a difficult conundrum like this, I like to draw inspiration from the Bible. The Bible is the bestselling book of all time; millions are sold every year. But no one owns the words. The property right exists in the book, not the contents. So with Bibles, so with all intellectual property, we must recognize that the media are the product, not the message.

Matthew M. Robare is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mrobare@student.umass.edu.

It's like therapy.

Only better.

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

Philadelphia-based jam band Lotus is known for their energetic performances and ability to get concert goers out of their seats and up on their feet. The up-and-coming group prides themselves on their unique sound and devoted international fan base whom they frequently chat with before and after performances.

Lotus likely to incite dance hysteria among Noho audience

BY MATT SOLOMON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Pearl Street Theater in Northampton will be hosting one of the most talented electronica-rock fusion bands in the world Friday night. Expect your hips to be shaking and your hands to be in the air 'cause O lordy, lordy, Lotus is in town.

The five-piece ensemble has been busy over the past few years creating an original and eclectic blend of high energy dance music and sublimely melodic grooves in clubs and theaters around the United States, Holland and Japan. If you are sick of the same ol' pop music coming out of your stereo and television, this is without a doubt, a band you need to see.

In their live shows, they have learned to create a powerfully euphoric energy that makes the rounds from crowd, to band, to crowd again, in an ongoing process that typically lasts for hours. The soulfully-danceable Lotus has a knack for taking their fans to a land of higher consciousness in which everything is seemingly turned upside down.

Three of the band's five members hold bachelors degrees in music, and all are extremely gifted musicians – degrees aside. Lotus consists of Steve Clemens on drums, Jesse Miller on Bass and Sampler, Luke Miller on guitar and keys, Chuck Morris on electronic-acoustic percussion and Mike Rempel on guitar.

They formed in 1999 after coming together from all over the United States, and have spent much of their time since evolving as a group in Philadelphia, Pa. The band first formed at Mennonite college, a place that had banned dancing on-campus up to the '80s. The group is a perfect example of a hardworking band that is deserving of every door open to them. This is not your everyday, mainstream bubblegum pop. They are creating music for themselves and for their fans. They love what they do and they shine brightest on stage when the spotlight is on them.

Lotus knows exactly how to create an exciting and interactive concert experience. They've developed a dedicated following of hardcore fans around the world by creating highly entertaining, spiritually refreshing dance music. There is not only a significant Lotus following at UMass-Amherst, but in Japan as well. The band has worked extremely hard over the years to make their name recognizable. They are highly accessible to their fans and it isn't uncommon to bump into them at a party or to have a friendly interaction with them before or after the show.

They are also almost guaranteed to get you on your feet and dancing, having managed to create a unique and soulfully melodic sound that will have you jukin' and jivin' one second, and in a relaxed-meditative state the next. They know what buttons to press and when to press them. Their sound is as rhythmic and powerful as the beats made by computers in electronica-techno clubs but all with live instruments. Lotus is an entirely organic experience, nothing but heart, soul and fresh, live grooves.

Lotus is interesting in particular, because they have blended traditional rock guitar music and new-age electronica in a way that comes out sounding like neither one. This up-and-coming band truly has an amazingly special gift. They have created a significantly large fan base in an underground music scene that stretches around the globe. Their fans are a dedicated, tight-knit community in which friendliness and openness fills the air.

Lotus' latest album Escaping Sargasso Sea is a live double-disc delight. Also, check out their two previous studio albums, Nomad and The Strength of Weak Ties. Their show on Friday evening will begin at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 at the door.

Matt Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

FRIDAY, MARCH 28

PEARL STREET NIGHTCLUB

8:30 P.M.

$15

Annual jazz fest hits UMass

BY ALEX BUTLER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For all those eager to see what's up and coming on the music end of the Arts spectrum, the University of Massachusetts will be hosting the 10th Annual High School Jazz Festival this Saturday in the Bezanson Recital Hall.

The Jazz Band is the top of the musical pyramid. They are the musicians shrouded in mystery, improvising notes and solos in tune with innumerable scales, and remain the cream of the crop as far as high school music goes. But even in the top rung of musicians, there are many misconceptions attributed to jazz bands.

It is a common misunderstanding to think a good jazz band relies on an array of instruments; the concept that dictates, "the bigger the band, the better the sound."

This is simply not true, yet it is what makes the jazz band so competitive, whether in high school or on a professional level. It's very possible to hear a solid jazz set which includes four members at the most.

Jazz is a musical form entirely dedicated to the quality of the overall sound. The rhythm section is almost always held in the highest regard. Without a steady rhythm section to back up the ensemble, the band will simply crumble. While it can sometimes be interesting to note how truly important the section is, the deterioration is most always painful to watch. Think of a musical train wreck, a disaster waiting to unfold before it even leaves the station.

While the rhythm division is the core heartbeat of the band, the other musicians carry a heavy weight as well. The woodwinds, which include saxophones, flutes and clarinets, are responsible for numerous solos and provide musical direction. The brass keeps the body of the sound resonating and present throughout the entire set. The whole ensemble acts and performs much like a human body. If one part sounds sloppy, it's obvious. There is a constant pressure to keep to the beat, improvising wherever needed.

And so on Saturday, jazz comes to UMass. All day long a large number of bands will be performing in Bezanson Hall, competing for the title of Best Ensemble of 2008. The winning band will be featured later in the evening, playing an encore set at 7:25 in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall.

The festival wraps up at 8:00 p.m. with a final performance from the Christian McBride Band, following the winning high school band. The McBride Band, founded in early 2000, has recorded with an impressive list of musicians including Kathleen Battle, Carly Simon, Sting and James Brown.

The free festival runs Saturday, starting at 8:30 a.m. The roster includes bands from all over the region, from Amherst to Cape Cod.

Alex Butler can be reached at Ajbutler@student.umass.edu.

UMass will welcome the annual jazz festival this weekend, featuring performances by high school jazz ensembles and UMass jazz faculty.

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday

Musician Edwin McCain, most famous for his song "I'll Be," performs at the Iron Horse Music Hall at 7 p.m. Tickets are $25 in advance and $28 at the door.

Ska bands Catch-22 and Big D & the Kids Table will be playing at Pearl Street Night Club with Holyoke-band Five Across the Eyes and Restitution. The show is at 7 p.m. in the club-room. Tickets are $15.

UPC's "Something Every Friday" continues with a screening of "Walk Hard: A Dewey Cox Story." This comedy, written by Judd Apatow and Jake Kasdan, stars John C. Reilly as Dewey Cox, a rising musician dealing with fame, fortune and family. Screening will take place at 8 and 10 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge, with an encore on Sunday at 8 p.m. The event is free. Popcorn and refreshments will be provided.

Saturday

The 10th Annual High School Jazz Festival comes to UMass from 8:30 a.m. to 6 p.m. This day of performances takes place at various music department sites on campus, including the Bezanson Recital Hall. The winning band will perform at 7:25 p.m. at the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. All events are free and open to the public.

Smith College Orchestra, along with the Smith College Glee Club, South Hadley Children's Chorus, Hampshire Children's Chorale and the Amherst Ball, presents a program featuring songs from "Sesame Street" with Prokofiev's "Peter and the Wolf." Sesame Street native Bob McGrath will be narrating the event. The show is at 3 p.m. and tickets are $15-$30 for adults and $10 for children under 12.

Blues musician Buddy Guy will be playing at the Calvin Theater with Tom Hambridge. The show is at 8 p.m. and ticket prices range from $25 to $45.

As part of the all-day High School Jazz Festival, bassist Christian McBride and his band will be performing at 8 p.m. in the Fine Arts Center Concert Hall. Ticket prices range from $15-30 for the general public, $7-$15 for Five College students and $12 for children 17 and under.

Sunday

Jubilat/Jones Reading Series continues with a reading and Q&A session with poets Patrick Donnelly and Karen Volkman at 3 p.m. An hour before the reading, at 2 p.m., there will be a poetry swap. The event will take place in the Trustees Room at the Jones Library.

Domino's Pizza

AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours:
Open 11am-4am Thurs.-Sat.
11am -3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
www.DOMINOS.com

My Wings or Kickers Special
10 Buffalo Wings or Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers® & an Order of Cheesy Bread
$9.99

Three or More Medium 1-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 each

Three or More Large 1-Topping Pizzas
$7.77 each

Any 3 Breads Choose 3 From:
Garlic Breadsticks, Cheesy Bread OR Cinna Stix
$9.99

Large Unlimited Topping Pizza
$10.99 Plus Tax
No Double Toppings
Delivery Charge May Apply
Expires 6/30/08

WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org
ORDER

Shoenanigans event shows students how to give back

By Teresa Reilly
Collegian Staff

With events constantly being held on campus, it's difficult to keep pace and choose something interesting to attend. Especially when the weather is finally turning respectable, it can be hard to sacrifice precious moments in the sun. So, if you missed the TOMS Shoenanigans event in the Student Union on Tuesday, here's what you missed.

The theme of the event was evident: giving back to the world in a very simple way. With local band Skullfunked playing on the stage in front of a large screen streaming a slideshow of photos of the kids TOMS is trying to help, people poked in and took a minute to look at a few of the tables promoting their charities. TOMS Shoes was the most prominent.

A variety of shoes were on hand, but the available spread represented a small portion of the options that TOMS has. With a new spring design on its way, tomsshoes.com should be seeing increased activity in the coming days and months. As an additional bonus, when purchasing shoes from the Web site in the next couple of days, type "UMass" as a promotional code and get free shipping. As an even bigger bonus, for every pair of TOMS that you buy, a child in need will receive a free pair.

Not everyone needs a new pair of shoes. That is what Shoenanigans was really about: giving back in a variety of ways.

TOMS, for example, is partnering up with the UMass Outing Club for a campus walk to promote the charity. On April 16, students will walk barefoot to show their support. The event starts at 1 p.m. in front of the Student Union and costs $5 to participate.

Furthering the cause of charity, Do Great Stuff, a company whose Web site (dogreatstuff.com) has recruited over 200 retailers to assist TOMS shoes in allowing people to buy their products while simultaneously giving to those in need. Simply go to the Web site, sign up, and buy those pairs of jeans from the Gap, giving 2 percent to charity in the process (it's better than nothing).

Fair Trade is an issue that is frequently discussed on campus. Divine Chocolate, a United Kingdom-based chocolate company, is trying to keep pace with this trend. The cocoa in Divine Chocolate comes from a farm the farmers actually own, providing the ability to control prices and have a say in the international marketplace. In addition, Divine Chocolates gives to the community in which the farm is located, helping to provide clean drinking water and medical clinics.

Even if students missed out on the live music and free fare from Earthfoods, it is still possible to help make a difference. Check out the Web sites and stay informed.

Teresa Reilly can be reached at treilly@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY TO MASSHOLE.COM

TOMS shoes claimed a space at the UMass student union on Tuesday in order to promote their charity, which provides free shoes to children in need.

NEW!

Pizza Mia

3 MEDIUM 1-TOPPING PIZZAS

$5 EACH

EVERY DAY

HADLEY
424 Russell Street
DINE-IN, DELIVERY or CARRY OUT
413-253-9787

Pizza Hut

Large Pizza
1-Topping
$8.99
CODE 52
Please Mention Code
One coupon per order. Not valid with other offers. Crust availability, prices, participation, delivery areas and charges may vary. 1/20 cent cash redemption value. ©2008 Pizza Hut, Inc.
Expires 6/28/2008

Medium Pizza
Up to 3-Toppings or Specialty
& 10 Wings
$13.99
CODE 49
Please Mention Code
One coupon per order. Not valid with other offers. Crust availability, prices, participation, delivery areas and charges may vary. 1/20 cent cash redemption value. ©2008 Pizza Hut, Inc.
Expires 6-28/2008

Buy An Adult Lunch Buffet
& 2 Adult Soft Drinks, Get 1
Lunch Buffet
FREE
CODE FT
Please Mention Code
One coupon per order. Not valid with other offers. Crust availability, prices, participation, delivery areas and charges may vary. 1/20 cent cash redemption value. ©2008 Pizza Hut, Inc.
Expires 6/28/2008

UMass hoping luck changes against PSU

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

How the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team responds during the first 15 minutes of tomorrow's game will go a long way in defining its season and character.

The Minutemen are a week removed from a 14-goal loss to Loyola at Garber Field – the team's worst loss in program history at home.

"When you get beat that bad, it's hard to respond in a positive manner," UMass coach Greg Cannella said of his players' reaction to last weekend's loss.

Though the Minutemen are currently riding a three-game losing streak, the team has six league games remaining. UMass (2-5, 0-1 ECAC) has a chance to reposition itself in the ECAC standings with a match against Penn State (4-3, 1-1 ECAC) tomorrow on its University Park, Pa.

The Minutemen defeated Penn State, 6-5, in overtime at Garber Field last season. Cannella knows that the game needs to be a similar, low-scoring affair if the Maroon and White have a chance to upend the Nittany Lions.

"Over the past few years, we've had some close games with them," he said. "I'm hoping for more of the same this weekend. If it's a 6-5 game, it means that we're in it. If they bust out and score a lot of goals, it could be like last week."

Penn State has one of the better goalkeepers in the country in junior Drew Adams. Adams ranks No. 12 in the nation in goals-against average (7.21).

But the team's slow-down style is conducive to low scoring games. Yet the junior ranks seventh in save percentage, stopping an average of 63 percent of the shots he faces.

Facing a team that engages in long, extended possessions, face-offs will be an important factor. Sophomore midfielder Joe Britt, the Nittany Lion's face-off specialist, has won nearly 56 percent of his opportunities.

The Minutemen lack a consistent face-off man, as Cannella has tried four players at the position. Junior Joe Reale has seen the most attempts this year, winning 51 percent of his chances.

Against Loyola, the Minutemen won 8-of-19 face-offs, but lost six during the second quarter when the game started to get out of hand.

The onus will be on the Minutemen to put the ball in the net. UMass has scored 11 aggregate goals in its last three games. But the team's offensive struggles have not come from a lack of shots; the Minutemen have averaged 38 shots per game over that period.

"We're struggling from leadership on the offense end," Cannella said. "We didn't execute anything that we wanted to do with our game plan [against Loyola] other than the first quarter. We're making more philosophy changes than anything. Personnel-wise we only have 12 guys – what else can we do."

That lack of leadership on offense has prevented the development of a primary player who is comfortable taking shots in pressure situations.

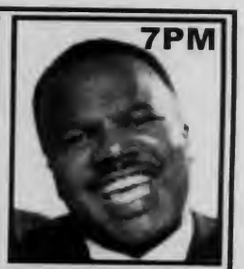
"We haven't had [anyone step up] this season," Cannella said. "When we get in the situation we'll find out. I hope that we can play with confidence as a group, but I know that there are players in each unit that are capable of stepping up."

Despite surrendering 15 goals to Loyola, the UMass defense has kept the team in contention throughout much of the season. However, over the past few games, the team has struggled to maintain possession and create offensive chances. Consequently the Minutemen have spent much of their time in defense – a factor which has taken a fatiguing toll on the normally reliable unit.

Already with a diminished roster, the Minutemen will be without another player for the foreseeable future. Freshman defender Brett Newgaard injured his knee last week against Loyola. Newgaard fell awkwardly to the ground and had to be carried off by the team's medical staff. He joins senior captain Rory Pedrick as the second Minuteman to injure his knee this season.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

Senior Fred Federico and the Minutemen take on Penn State tomorrow afternoon in University Park, Pa. It will be UMass's second ECAC game of the season.



Doc Schneider has posted a 7.59 goals-against average this season for the Minutemen. His record of 2-5 is very misleading as UMass has struggled to score goals throughout the season.

comedy CONNECTION
HUKELAU
413-593-5222
705 Memorial Drive in Chicopee
www.hukelau.com

THIS SATURDAY!

Star of the special
"Comedy Central Presents...
Earthquake" and from
HBO's "Def Comedy Jam"

7PM

EARTHQUAKE

MAY 10TH
Star of the HBO special "Robert Schimmel: Unprotected" and from "The Howard Stern Show"
ROBERT SCHIMMEL

MAY 17TH
Host of E! Entertainment's "The Soup"
JOEL MCHALE

Cannella dissatisfied with Minutemen

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

No one on the campus of the University of Massachusetts is going to cut the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team any slack for its struggles in the 2008 season. The stigma attached due the alleged actions of the eight players no longer enrolled at UMass will haunt the program for the foreseeable future.

UMass coach Greg Cannella isn't making excuses, though. A short bench and tired players doesn't warrant the 2-5 start in his mind.

He knows playing 60 minutes takes its toll on any team, let alone a squad with a short bench and inexperienced players in key roles. But he also hasn't seen the level of passion that he has in the 12 years since he took over the program.

"There are some people in [our locker room] that really want to do well, and there are some guys who aren't sure what they want to do. Those guys need to figure that out quickly, by Saturday," he said yesterday. "So, it's not that they're worried, but when you lack confidence you need something to get you out of it. For me, it's almost been hard work."

And that seems to be the crux of the issue for the Minutemen. Cannella simply hasn't seen the dedication from his players that he's grown accustomed to in his time here.

Cannella can accept losing. Especially in the team's current state, losing games is essentially unavoidable; no matter how gifted his team is, rotating a mere 21 players in a sport like lacrosse is formula that just isn't going to result in wins.

But the recent behavior of some of his players in practice and elsewhere has led the coach to wonder if this really is the result of fatigue.

Following UMass's most recent defeat, a 15-1 drubbing at the hands of Loyola, Cannella removed the kid gloves when this week's practice began. He made it clear to his players that their level of effort was simply unacceptable. Losing is frustrating, but conceding is simply unacceptable.

"We didn't start over," Cannella said of his approach to practice this week. "I asked them 'what do you want? Are you going to fight, or are you going to lie down?' They have to make that decision, whether to fight or not. I think there are plenty of guys on this team that have fight in them. So I have confidence that they'll do that."

But it's the players that haven't displayed any form of fight or resilience that have Cannella worried. He stays on them in practice and during the week, reminding them of all it takes to be a successful Division I lacrosse player and team. The wrong messages, however, are coming from other places. Positive reinforcement is a great thing, but he's realistic about its legitimacy and leery of the effect it may have on his team.

"Everybody will tell these guys that they're young and to focus on next year," Cannella said. "But if they don't do it this year, who's to say they're going to do it next year? They have to try their best. Every one of them can try their best and that's we're asking of them. Every guy on our team can give us everything they have; that's attainable."

Perhaps it sounds like he's given up on the season, but after everything his players – and former players – have put him through this season, most would agree Cannella deserves some slack.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

Brian Tepper/Collegian

UMass men's lacrosse Greg Cannella is unhappy with his team's effort and intensity level during the Minutemen's current three-game losing streak.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 3/28/2008 thru Thurs. 4/03/2008
Purchase Tickets @ cinemark.com

21 (PG-13)*
1:05 4:05 7:20 10:15

Run, Fat Boy, Run (PG-13)*
1:35 4:45 7:25 10:05

Stop Loss (R)*
1:10 4:15 7:15 10:10

Superhero Movie (PG-13)*
1:20 4:20 7:35 9:50

Drillbit Taylor (PG-13)*
1:55 4:30 7:30 10:25

Shutter (PG-13)*
1:40 4:50 7:45 9:55

Tyler Perry's Meet The Browns (PG-13)*
7:05 9:40

Horton Hears A Who (G)
1:00 2:00 3:30 4:35
6:45 9:00

10,000 B.C. (PG-13)
1:15 4:00 7:10 9:45

College Road Trip (G)
1:30 4:10 7:00 9:15

The Bank Job (R)
1:50 4:40 7:40 10:20

The Other Boleyn Girl (PG-13)
4:25 10:00

Vantage Point (PG-13)
1:25 7:30

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Brian Tepper/Collegian

Attack Fred Federico is the lone senior on the UMass offense this season after a preseason injury to captain Rory Pedrick.

UMass takes on Xavier in A-10 play

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team didn't get off to a promising start in conference play but will get a chance to improve its standing in the Atlantic 10 when it hosts Xavier for three games this weekend.

UMass (4-8, 0-3 A-10) dropped its first three conference games on the road at Duquesne last weekend.

"I thought we played pretty well at Arizona State," said UMass coach Mike Stone. "And the thing that disappointed me about last week at Duquesne is that we played better against Arizona State than we did against Duquesne."

The Minutemen were outscored 13-4 in that series, but the offense has picked up since, although against lesser opponents.

Against Sacred Heart, UMass put up a season-high 15 runs and followed it up with a 7-5 victory over Hartford.

Aggressive baserunning was one key to the Minutemen's success in these two games. The team stole four bases against Sacred Heart and doubled that number against Hartford.

"We feel we have to in order to get our offense going," Stone said of his team's recent base stealing success. "Sometimes the opportunity doesn't present itself because the right people don't get on base but when the right people do get on base we plan to continue to do that and be aggressive."

Stone went on to say the team's aggressiveness on the base paths also depends upon the strength of the catcher's arm and his footwork, the setup of the defense and the pitcher's delivery to the plate.

Sacred Heart and Hartford haven't succeeded in throwing runners out this season – the Pioneer catchers have allowed 55 of 63 base stealers to reach while the Hawks haven't fared much better, failing to throw out all but five of 28 base stealers this season.

In Xavier, the Minutemen will face tougher competition from behind the plate, but will still have chances to successfully steal bases. The Musketeers opposition has swiped 29 bases on 38 attempts this season.

When the Musketeers are at the plate, the Minutemen will start Mitchell Clegg, Bryan Leigh and Jared Freni.

Clegg has enjoyed the most success this season – he holds a 2.60 earned run average in 17 1/3 innings pitched. The junior has also limited opponents to a .188 batting average.

Leigh has also pitched well (3.66 ERA) while Freni has struggled to this point (5.79 ERA).

First baseman Andy Tuetken has come on strong at the plate for the Minutemen recently. The senior has gone 6-for-8 in the last two games to increase his season average to a team-high .414 as well as a .485 on-base percentage.

Zac Richard will counter for the Musketeers. The sophomore's batting .371 and has a team-high 21 RBIs – the next closest player on the team is John Cambridge with nine.

Xavier's Michael Lucas and Charlie Leesman are both returning starting pitchers from last season and have combined to start eight games this season. Their experience has yet to pay off this season, however.

Lucas is 1-1 with a 5.56 ERA while Leesman, Xavier's nomination for the 2008 Golden Spikes Award, hasn't lived up to the billing and holds an 0-2 record with an 8.22 ERA.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu

Junior Adam Tempesta and the Minutemen play their first home conference games of the season this weekend with three against Xavier.

Maroon and White host season opener

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts track and field teams won't have much use for their suitcases this weekend. Both teams are competing at home in an invitational against Holy Cross, Sacred Heart and Vermont while the Minutewomen will also host Rhode Island.

UMass spent the entire indoor season away because the University does not yet have an indoor track. This season, UMass will host the outdoor Atlantic 10 Championships May 3-4.

"I think the coaching staff and the athletes are ecstatic to be home," said UMass women's coach Julie LaFreniere. "It allows a lot of their friends and roommates to watch them. It's great to be on campus every single day for our practices."

The Minutewomen come off a successful indoor season after a strong finish in the ECAC Championships. Senior Christina DeRosa provisionally qualified for the NCAA Tournament, placing fifth in the 5,000-meter race while redshirt senior Kristen Bakanowski provisionally qualified with a first-place finish in the pole vault. It was the first time in recent history that UMass had an ECAC champion.

LaFreniere hopes the Minutewomen will build off their momentum from the indoor season.

UMass had a rough start to the season last year, finishing fourth in their invitational out of five teams. DeRosa (17 minutes, 23.97 seconds) came out strong with a first-place finish in the 5K.

The Minutemen struggled during the indoor season, failing to qualify anyone for the NCAA Championship after a poor showing at the IC4A Championship. Sophomore Nicolai Naranjo (15:08.17 seconds) had the best showing, taking 18th place in the 5K.

UMass' biggest weakness during the indoor season was its youth and lack of depth in events. The Minutemen were often docked from the standings because of their shortage in representation.

"I think the negative thing that stood out was that we entered most meets without representation in a lot of events," said UMass men's coach Ken O'Brien. "There are a lot of events that we didn't have performers in. I focused so much on what we do have that I forgot the dramatic impact of not having performers in all events."

The outdoor season has seven new events, which will challenge the Minutemen even more than it did in the indoor season. O'Brien expects to fill many of those gaps but isn't expecting the results to vary much from the indoor season, especially with many of the freshmen will be in new events.

"I'm going to try to set my goals, but I'm going to shoot them a little lower rather than being too enthusiastic," O'Brien said. "It's not that I don't want to set the expectations high but I'd rather be a little bit more objective in my aspirations."

O'Brien hopes lowering expectations will make success in the outdoor season more attainable for the Minutemen.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art

4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all

5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM of ART

Minutewomen begin Atlantic 10 play

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team starts its conference schedule this weekend with two games on the road, taking on Richmond Friday and George Washington Sunday.

UMass enters their Atlantic 10 schedule with a non-conference record of 2-7.

"We're further along this year than last year at this time, even though our record last year was better," said UMass coach Alexis Venechanos.

The Minutewomen had one of the toughest preseason schedules in the nation, they faced four Top 20 teams in their first seven games.

"We've had glimpses of great play, but now we need to put all those glimpses into one great game," she said.

The brutal schedule taught the Minutewomen a great deal about themselves and what it takes to compete with some of the nation's best teams.

Friday's game against the Spiders won't bring any relief from the competitive schedule the Minutewomen have been facing. Richmond is three-time defending A-10 Champions and have a very strong team on attack.

When UMass took on Richmond last year they lost, 10-4, at home. In the overall series between the two teams Richmond is ahead 7-2 with the Minutewomen's last win in 2003.

On Sunday UMass expects another tight matchup, GW is the A-10 regular-season defending co-chainpion.

"GW has a great goaltender," said Venechanos. "They have a great core back, we need to play our team game, defend hard and play really aggressive. Those are our strengths."

UMass has played GW the least amount of times compared to every other A-10 team. In the series between the Colonials and the Minutewomen they are tied 3-3. The last time UMass won was in 2006 with an 11-10 victory to qualify them for the A-10 Tournament.

Venechanos hopes the team improves on their midfield play this weekend while still continuing to do well scoring goals.

"Defensively we're playing as a unit instead of relying on individuals like in the past," said Venechanos. "Having this going for us is letting us play a lot better."

The Minutewomen's scoring opportunities have also increased, which will help them a lot this weekend.

Leading the Minutewomen in goals is junior midfield Kaytlin McCormick. This season she has scored 18 goals with four assists. Senior attack Melynda Zwick has the second-most points with five goals and eight assists followed by senior attack, and last year's leading scorer, Kathleen Typadis, with nine goals and one assist.

"We've been giving more dynamic attacks and putting goals we usually don't score away," Venechanos said. "We hope to give Richmond and George Washington different looks on attack and defense."

Also excelling this season has been freshman goaltender Colleen Speth, who has started the last five games for the Minutewomen. Speth was named Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week after the Boston College win; it was Speth's first collegiate win. She made nine saves.

"[This weekend] should be a good opportunity for us to have some fun," Venechanos said.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtinen@student.umass.edu

FJ Stanley/Collegian

Freshman Kelsey Schreiner and the Minutewomen begin Atlantic 10 play this weekend with road matchups against Richmond and George Washington.

Take out a classifieds ad

THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

now offers free online classifieds for students at

WWW.UMASSLIST.COM

- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam

By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

CHECKOUT

THE COLLEGIAN SPORTS BLOG AT:

dailycollegiansports • blogspot • com

UMass set for a pair this weekend

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

This weekend is a big weekend for the Massachusetts tennis team.

After being trampled in Wednesday's match against Yale, 6-1, the Minutewomen hope they can bounce back and find their winning ways once again.

In a rarity, the Minutewomen find themselves playing host twice in a weekend.

The Maroon and White take on Holy Cross (2-2) at the Bay Road Tennis Club at 7:30 p.m. Friday. It will be Holy Cross's first match in almost a month.

Against the Crusaders as well as Long Island, UMass' opponent Saturday, UMass coach Judy Dixon looks for a strong overall team effort in picking up the two wins.

"These are teams that we would be the favorite against," Dixon said. "I'm getting some different people to play in the match on Friday night without wrecking our chances. Saturday's match will be more competitive, but I'm looking for an overall team effort."

Lauren MacKay, Kaitlyn Carpenter and Stephanie Gimenez are some of the players that will get opportunities to play.

Saturday's match against Long Island will be another test for UMass. Last weekend LIU swept all six matches they played in Orlando, Fla., but Dixon feels confident in her team.

"I think that what we will have is a little more depth than they do and that's what I'm hoping carries the LIU match," Dixon said.

Senior captain Masha Pozar is one doubles win away from breaking the school record (67), which is shared by Susan Hyams ('00-'04) and Caroline Steele ('94-'98).

When Dixon was asked if Masha was feeling any added pressure knowing she was about to break the record Dixon displayed the same confidence in her captain as she displayed with the rest of her team.

"Without being too confident here but this is a match, on paper, that we should do very well," Dixon said. "She should break it tomorrow night."

According to Dixon, Pozar until yesterday was oblivious to the fact that she was not only approaching the record, but about to break it.

The Minutewomen's all-time record against Holy Cross stands at 4-5. The last time the two teams met was in 2005.

The match against Long Island Saturday is going to be played at the Bay Road Tennis Club at noon. UMass's all-time record against Long Island currently stands at 1-0.

The last time the two teams met was in 2006.

The Blackbirds current record stands at 6-1, which includes three shutouts.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu

Masha Pozar is one doubles win away from setting the UMass school record of 68, which is held by Susan Hyams and Caroline Steele.

Minutewomen begin '08 in R.I. with Yankee Cup

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Staff

In last year's Atlantic 10 Rowing Championships, Rhode Island came within one point of ending Massachusetts' streak of 12 straight conference championships.

The one-point margin of victory is the smallest ever for UMass, which has won every A-10 Championship since 1996, when rowing officially became a varsity sport.

If that doesn't start a rivalry between the two schools then the fact that the A-10 Coaches's Poll has UMass and URI tied as the presumptive A-10 Champion should.

When the two teams compete this Saturday in the Yankee Cup, a race between many of New England's state schools, it will give UMass and URI their first chance to see each other.

"It's our first opportunity to see what they have," said UMass coach Jim Dietz. The other schools competing will be New Hampshire and Connecticut.

UNH's rowing program – which is a lot smaller than in previous years – is no longer a varsity sport; it was knocked down to a club sport in the past year. But as for UConn, they have a very big team this year and could be a bit of a surprise.

"No matter how big Connecticut gets, I think we can handle them. We'll see," said Dietz.

"There's a big rivalry between us. At the Head of the Charles this year we finished one place in front of them. Our girls, as soon as they found out that they beat Rhode Island it was like they won the entire regatta," Dietz said of the rivalry.

The Minutewomen and the Rams are very similar teams. In fact, along with the close finish in last year's A-10 championships and the identical rankings by A-10 coaches, the two teams even trained at the same place over the winter.

This weekend's race will really give UMass and Dietz a better look at what they will be up against in defending their title. If they can accomplish the feat they will extend their A-10 record for most consecutive conference wins by any team in all A-10 sports.

For UNH and URI, the Yankee cup will be both schools' first race of the season. UConn just returned from training in Florida last week, where it scrimmaged against Barry. UMass is coming off a dominating scrimmage over Coast Guard last Saturday. When the two squads met, a UMass boat took all 13 races.

The Yankee Cup will be the first scored regatta for the schools and officially open their 2008 spring season.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Belchertown center of town on bus route 2 bedroom 725 first last security 413-323-6511 9-2pm

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

2 bedroom apts in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE, and INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going fast, still guaranteeing for fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications. 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

INFORMATION

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language Email phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail 545-6837

EMPLOYMENT

Attention Juniors & Seniors: Fall 2008 internship with the student legal services office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys & clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary- Full training provided. Contact our office at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center

Be a Dell Campus Rep. Promote a top 30 company and gain real-world business and marketing experience! Go to RepNation.com/Dell to apply. andrewm@repnation.com 646-341-8283

Free can of the insanelyhealthyenergydrink! Email DRINKVERVE@AOL.com

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at. Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Drivers wanted, must be able to work approx 20 hrs per week, nights, and weekends, apply at DP Dough downtown Amherst

Office Assistant on Nantucket Island this summer. Run errands, recieve inventory, computer data entry, answer telephones. Salary plus housing. Fax resume to 508-228-8778 or mail to Rafael OSONA PO Box 2607, Nantucket MA 02584 telephone 508-228-3942

Summer in Maine Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online. TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls. 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

EMPLOYMENT

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcamp-jobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Close to Umass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270.

S.Hadley for SALE by owner. 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call. 516-606-2139

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St Amherst. www.birthright.org

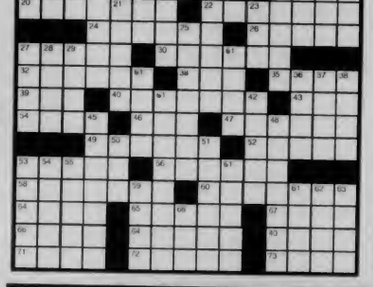
Concerned About Your Eating? Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

ACROSS

1 Molecule part
5 Fracture
10 Bog
14 Nemesis
15 Salutation
16 Reverse an action
17 Ran in the wash
18 Indian or Arctic
19 Opera melody
20 Overshadow, as the sun
22 Warded off, as in fencing
24 Recognition
26 Mythic giant
27 Chocolate source
30 Intimate
32 Pittsburgh philanthropist
34 Corn serving
35 Company emblem
39 Gold in Toledo
40 Social blunder
43 Uncooked
44 NASA delay
46 Mineral spring
47 Spool for thread
49 Fabric stiffener
52 Leans to one side
53 Tragedy
56 Slanted type
58 Answers back
60 Female beetle?
64 Singer Redding
65 Inflexible
67 Smoke, as ham
68 Leslie Caron film
69 Join forces
70 Theater area
71 Why don't we?
72 Pelted, on Halloween
73 Looks over

DOWN



1 French cleric
2 Locker room powder
3 Like Nash's lama
4 Part of EMS
5 Picked
6 Slope backward
7 Stout cousin
8 Nonsense
9 Hawaiian coffee
10 Angry dispute
11 Remove bridles
12 Au revoir!
13 Prods
21 Conclusive evidence
23 Scott Joplin piece
25 Not strictly accurate
27 Let's go!
28 Dynamic start?
29 Become stopped up
31 Yemeni or Qatari
33 Shuttle org.
36 Peepers
37 Way of moving
38 Has title to
41 Insurrection
42 Unbroken
45 Learning by absorption
48 Two-wheeler
50 Seasoned sailor
51 Rock salt
53 Dryly funny
54 Fix a loose lace
55 Listing to one side
57 Put on board
59 Loyal
61 Channel marker
62 Advocate
63 Turns right
66 Band booking

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

If you see a rash on your skin that even remotely resembles this design, seek immediate medical assistance. You've got the plague.

Sincerely,
Comics Guy, M.D.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

Don't Wait- Jump Start Your Career This Summer

Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20

Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty

PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

RETRO GEEK By Steven Dickenson and Todd Clark

This is the noodle box.

Draw me fusilli.

Sudoku=the downfall of society

	6							1
1			9	5			6
	3	2			8	4
6					7			4
		5				3
3			6					7
		9	2			7	4
	2			8	5			9
4							8

Quote of the Weekend

"Modesty in an actor is as fake as passion in a call girl."

— Jackie Gleason

CAPTION CONTEST

Winning Caption Submitted by: Mark St. Pierre

Next week's contest will start on Monday. See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption Ahhh! The pavement is lava. The pavement is lava!

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Like a baby, life is brutally fragile and at times it can be quite poopy.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
Big decisions are in your future. Boxers or banana hammock?

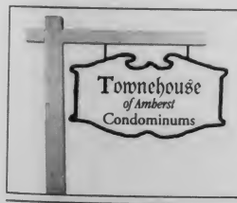
aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You are a slob and it is in your best interest to wear a smock at all times.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
You will be nonplussed by your inability to perform at an optimal level tonight... in bed.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Your weekend will be chaotic but the problem will be solved if you act a wee bit less quixotic.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
You can't solve the world's problems by discussing word problems. Tactile questions require hands on answers.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
You have conquered this week like Attila the Hun, now bathe thoroughly and go have some fun.



virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Near, far, wherever you are, never stop believing that your heart will go on even longer than the heinous runtime of Titanic.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
If you find yourself upset by the audacity of a fellow party-goer, cut them down to size with your verbal lawnmower.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If the scent of your overpriced cologne lingers longer than twenty minutes after you've left a room, you are a jerk.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Your bones are more brittle than a frozen banana. Seek and obtain calcium pills post-haste.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Giddy up capricorn pick up your feet, that's the capricorn, that's the capricorn, that's the capricorn rock.

Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, MARCH 28, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pages 12-13

INSIDE: SENATOR KERRY ON HIGHER EDUCATION | PAGE 4

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

RAIN : HI: 47 LO: 42 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2008

Some UMass students decided to spend their vacation volunteering at three different home sites, working on roofs and painting.

Students thrive in new habitat

UM students devote spring break to volunteer in Albany

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Some 20 students from the University of Massachusetts participated in the Habitat for Humanity Collegiate Challenge this spring break.

Habitat for Humanity volunteers offer labor, money and materials to build or rehabilitate homes that are sold at no profit to families in need. The homes are financed with affordable loans and monthly mortgages that are used to help build more houses, according to the group's Web site. The Collegiate Challenge program sends high school and college students to sites in need of volunteers to help with construction of Habitat houses.

"This is the first spring break trip we've organized," said UMass Habitat for Humanity Chapter secretary Jennifer Bellenoit.

Bellenoit is a junior at UMass who became involved with Habitat a year and a half ago when her roommate invited her to come on a build.

The UMass Habitat for Humanity chapter traveled to Albany, Ga. where they bunked with students in three other groups from Michigan, Illinois and Pennsylvania. Each group took turns cooking meals in the communal kitchen.

During the day, students split into groups to work at three different home sites, while other students drained water in the roads and painted Habitat for Humanity trucks. The three houses were not completed in the week that UMass students worked, although the roof was completed on one home, and the exterior of another was painted.

"Training isn't required at all," Bellenoit said.

Students were trained on site and were allowed to refuse a task that seemed to be too difficult for them.

"There were some new people who had never done a build," she said.

In addition to the build, there was a fundraising aspect of the trip, with students paying to participate and receiving grants for their work. The Collegiate Challenge program was expected to raise $1.5 million this year alone, according to Habitat for Humanity.

Bellenoit said she expects at least some of the students will become regular members of the group in upcoming months.

"I think everyone on the trip bonded," she said.

Bellenoit also said that the work done on the trip "created confidence."

"It may not be a lot … but it goes a long way," she said.

The chapter is discussing traveling to Mexico or returning to Georgia in

See HABITAT BREAK on page 3

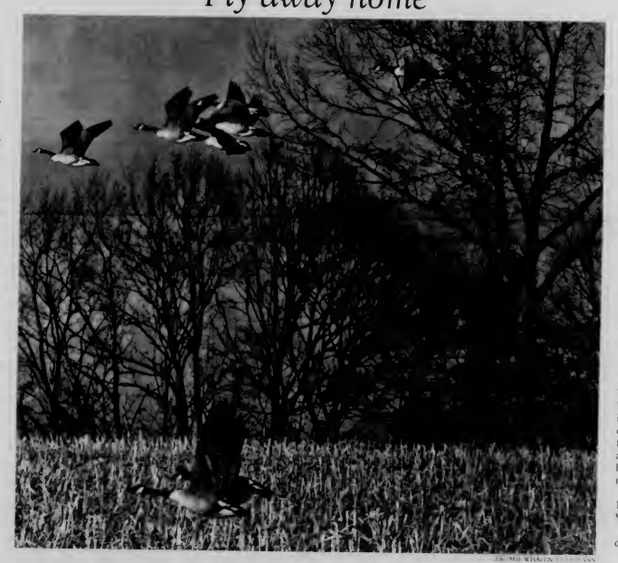
Panelists address campaign

BY LUCAS CORREIA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

At the University of Massachusetts journalism department's discussion panel Wednesday, professional writers shared their views on how campaign journalism works and how the media is changing.

News writers Jill Lawrence of USA Today, Mark Stencel of Governing Magazine and Mary Carey of the Daily Hampshire Gazette constituted the panel. UMass professor Steve Fox served as the its moderator.

The discussion was centered on news coverage of the 2008 Presidential Campaign in a panel titled "Campaign 2008: The Endless Cycle?"



All three panelists commented on why there is a surge of questionably relevant news during campaign time. The main idea expressed was that over the course of a campaign, candidates need to keep their image fresh.

Stencel explained that the candidates are trying to avoid an "endless treadmill narrative." The panel also noted that more obviously relevant information about a candidate's campaign can be found on their Web site or is common knowledge to a "news junkie," as he put it.

"Any metaphor can rapidly

See MEDIA PANEL on page 3

Fly away home

Canadian geese take flight as the weather begins to warm and spring returns to the UMass campus and surrounding community.

Noho activists support Tibet

BY PAMELA LAWN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Protesters are uniting today for a global day of action in support of improving human rights in Tibet, which falls on the same day as the Olympic flame's arrival in Beijing, a symbolic day on the Olympic calendar.

Tension in Tibet has been ongoing since the outbreak of violence on March 10. This day has been described by many as the worst violence seen in Tibet since 1989. It fell on the forty-ninth anniversary of the failed uprising against communist rule. Beijing said 22 people have died in the clashes.

The Tibetan tensions have also hit close to home.

Following four days of protests in over 20 major cities around the world, local Tibetans and supporters gathered at Pulaski Park in Northampton to hold a protest in solidarity on March 18, beginning in morning and ending with an evening vigil in support of the continued uprising in Tibet. The protests continued into Sunday, March 23.

"Every day, we hear more disturbing news from the revolts inside Tibet," said Tenzin Dolkar, New England regional coordinator for Students for a Free Tibet in a statement. "We demand that the United Nations send a fact-finding delegation to Tibet to investigate the status of detained protestors and confirm the number of deaths caused by Chinese forces. We heard of school children being arrested and beaten in the revolts in Eastern Tibet as well as house-to-house searches, arbitrary arrests and killings."

Students in Tibet are also speaking up. On March 17, Tibetan students staged a sit-in at the National Minorities University.

This is the biggest kind of event staged by students since the 1989 protests.

The students sat in a circle on the campus

See TIBET on page 3

UMass campus receives 2007 community service award

Student Bridges cited in national recognition

The University of Massachusetts has been nationally recognized with the 2007 U.S. President's Higher Education Community Service Honor Roll with Distinction for its service-learning programs on campus.

"We are delighted to receive this recognition," said John Reiff, director of the UMass Amherst Office of Community Service Learning at Commonwealth College, in a statement. "It acknowledges the amazing work that UMass Amherst faculty, students and staff have done to build sustainable programs that add value to our nearby communities."

Student Bridges, an outreach project which works with area schools and community groups, was specifically recognized. The student-initiated and funded program aims to build relationships between the state university and its surrounding communities, such as Holyoke and Springfield.

Formed in fall 2005 and funded by the Student Government Association in spring 2006, Student Bridges is a program based out of the Student Center for Educational Research and Advocacy. Student Bridges also aims to "develop and provide direct resources to increase pathways to high education for local community members; and engage in policy evaluations and advocacy designed to effect long-term, systematic enhancement of the University's outreach efforts and its accessibility to underrepresented students," according to its Web site.

The Community Service Honor Roll, created in 2006, is the highest federal recognition a school can achieve for its commitment to service-learning and civic engagement, according to a release.

Selection factors for the award included the extent and inventiveness of service projects on campuses, the percentage of student participation in service activities, incentives for service and the degree of academic service-learning courses.

Across the nation, the Community Service Honor Roll awarded six schools with Presidential Awards, and four schools were recognized as Special Achievement Award winners, 127 as Honor Roll with Distinction and 391 schools as Honor Roll.

The Community Service Honor Roll is named by the Corporation for National and Community Service, a federal agency that improves lives, strengthens communities, and fosters civic engagement through service and volunteering, according to its Web site.

The corporation also administers Senior Corps, AmeriCorps and Learn and Serve America, a program that supports service-learning in schools, institutions of higher education and community-based organizations, according to its Web site.

As a President's Honor Roll institution, the Corporation for National and Community Service's Web site said that there are plenty of benefits, including helping to recruit students and earning recognition as a service leader in the community.

Other Massachusetts schools which earned the same award include: Mount Wachusett Community College, Simmons College, Stonehill College and Wentworth Institute of Technology.

Kate Olesin

Hampshire College to host reproductive rights weekend

Over 1,000 students and reproductive rights activists are expected to centralize on Hampshire College's campus as part of its 21st annual conference: "From Abortion Rights to Social Justice: Building the Movement to Reproductive Freedom" slated for April 4-6.

The conference, put on by the college's Civil Liberties and Public Policy program, will host workshops on Friday afternoon, all day Saturday and on Sunday morning. In its infant stage, the conference grew from an original 35 participants to educate and include a consistently growing format that now features over 40 workshops focused on GLBTQ rights, sex education, economic justice and international politics.

Prominent speakers will include Massachusetts State Representative Ellen Story and founding President of the National Black Women's Health Imperative Byllye Avery. Other speakers from various women's groups will also speak, but perhaps the most interesting facet of the event will be its "Breaking Silences" portion on Friday, April 4 at 7 p.m.

According to promotional flyers, this portion of the conference "promotes a safe place for people who have had abortions to tell their stories." Women who have had abortions in the past can volunteer to speak by sending an e-mail to speakout@hampshire.edu. Open mic and other musical performances will be featured as well.

The Civil Liberties and Public Policy has, since its formation, trained students as reproductive rights activists who, through similar events, emphasize connections to other subjects.

Will McGuinness

Hampshire College will host its 21st annual conference on reproductive rights this weekend.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 110
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Evan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Svenczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Weed
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Hollis Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwinkle
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Lexi Wideman
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS ACADEMIC YEAR, EXCEPT DURING VACATIONS AND EXAMINATION PERIODS. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS A DAILY IN 1971. BECAME THE COLLEGIAN NEWS IN 1986. WEEKLY COLLEGIAN WAS PUBLISHED FROM 1890 TO 1971. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED SEVERAL ALL-AMERICAN AND NEW ENGLAND AWARDS IN ITS HISTORY. IT IS A MEMBER OF SEVERAL ASSOCIATIONS, INCLUDING THE ASSOCIATED COLLEGIATE PRESS.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Across the Nation Around the World
News Wire

Croc wanders U-Miami campus

By Mike Clary
South Florida Sun-Sentinel (MCT)

A crocodile at the University of Miami campus proves hard to catch; and although officials want the reptile expelled from the campus grounds, they claim there may be more than one of these toothy creatures roaming the University.

CORAL GABLES, Fla. – On a typical spring afternoon on the leafy campus of the University of Miami, many of the 15,000 students are in class, others are romping around the athletic field, and a few are seeing how close they can get to a 6-foot American crocodile sunbathing with its mouth open.

"They apparently don't realize how dangerous this thing is," said security guard Roberto Heredia as he warned curious collegians away from the toothy reptile. "Some people think it's fake."

School officials, including President Donna Shalala, want the crocodile expelled.

The problem: "We can't catch him," said university Police Chief David Rivero. "We're playing a cat-and-mouse game with this croc."

There may be more than one crocodile on campus. Heredia, 52, often assigned to baby-sit animals that crawl out of Lake Osceola, said there are at least three, ranging in size up to 8 feet.

Rivero said he believes all but one croc has been locked out of the lake by new fences and grates being installed at points where canals link the lake to the Gables waterways and Biscayne Bay.

What is clear is that the population of once-endangered American crocodiles is growing. Last year the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service upgraded the reptiles' status from endangered to threatened, meaning a species once on the brink of extinction is now only likely to become endangered. And South Florida is the only place in the United States where these crocodiles are found.

As their numbers increase – from an estimated 200 when declared endangered in 1975 to more than 2,000 today – crocodiles expand their range. And the range includes a sunny strip of grass just a few feet from the Rathskeller, a popular on-campus bar and grill.

Lake Osceola serves as the scenic heart of University of Miami's richly landscaped campus, and around it are many inviting places to sit, read and contemplate. The lake is also surrounded by busy walkways, and when a crocodile is out sunning, several hundred students are bound to notice.

"I wanted to go down there," said Briana Grazioso, 19, a freshman from Delray Beach, Fla., and one of many students Heredia kept away from the crocodile on Tuesday.

"Not to pet it. Just to see," explained her twin, Lauren.

Last week, Heredia said he saw a campus visitor approach a basking crocodile and lift up its tail while a friend took his picture. "If that thing grabs him with its mouth, what it'll do is pull them into the water and start turning over and over in circles until the person drowns or it tears off an arm or something," Heredia said.

Signs posted along the lake urge caution and advise that it is "unlawful to feed or harass" crocodiles.

But warnings may only heighten the appeal of the fearsome beasts.

"The idea that they can survive in Miami is fascinating," said Eric Hurley, 19, who finds no crocs in his New Jersey hometown. "I think it's nice that we provide this haven."

The president University of Miami crocs also have gained some fame on YouTube. In a video posted in February, the student television station got film of a nighttime commotion when a crocodile crossed a main campus street, and then fought with another croc when it returned to the water.

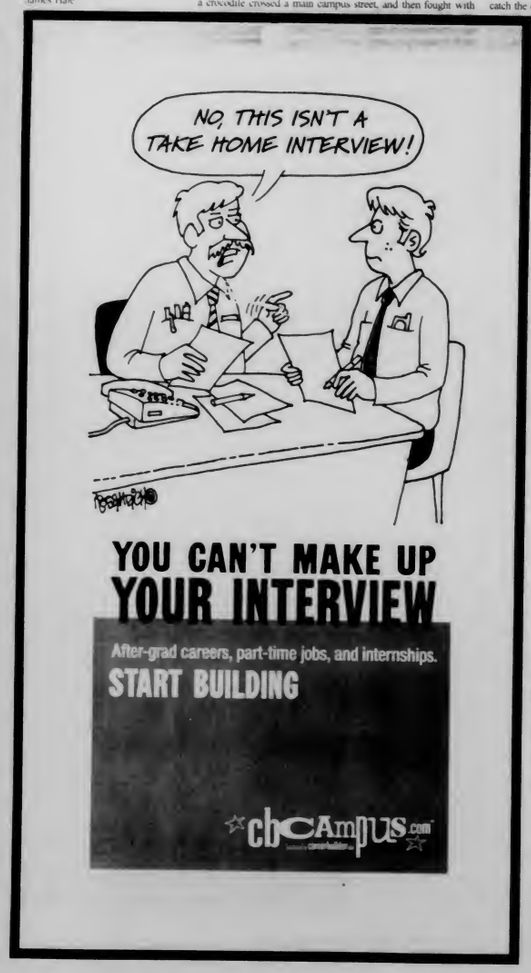
A second video posted in February shows a foolhardy student retreating from the lakeside as a crocodile splashes into the water.

Unlike the common alligator, crocodiles cannot be baited, hooked and fished from the lake by trappers. Federal rules say that crocs can be caught only while on land, and they cannot be injured.

And the crocs are wily. "We have been there a number of times," said Lindsey Hord, alligator and crocodile response coordinator for the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission. "We get very close to it before it jumps into the water."

In recent years, local trapper Todd Hardwick of Pesky Critters has captured other crocodiles at Lake Osceola, including a 200-pounder in 2004. He also has been called out several times to catch the current occupants.

"I think I've dealt with the same ones. They get relocated, but they love the area," Hardwick said.



Mike Cherkiss, a University of Florida biologist, said crocodiles like bodies of water that are protected from wind and waves, and have plenty of fish and birds for food. So Lake Osceola is perfect habitat.

Hord and Rivero now plan to train a University of Miami police officer as a trapper.

According to Hord, there has never been a documented attack on a human by an American crocodile.

And Rivero does not want that streak ended on the University of Miami campus. The urgency of his croc-catching task was brought home just a couple of weeks ago, he said, in yet another e-mail from Shalala asking, "David, when are you going to catch the croc?"

Said Rivero, "We spend more time addressing the croc issue than I could ever imagine as a police chief."

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW
After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.
START BUILDING
cbcAmpus.com

Study looks at altering sense of smell at Northwestern U.

By Jeremy Manier
Chicago Tribune (MCT)

CHICAGO – The little electrical shocks that Wen Li gives subjects at her Northwestern University neuroscience lab feel less painful than a bad jolt of static electricity, and more like the mild snap of a rubber band on skin.

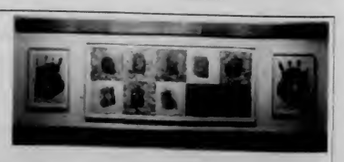
But getting just seven of those little shocks trained people in a new study to distinguish between extremely similar odors, offering a new and perhaps potent way of changing a person's power of perception.

Psychologists have used the basic conditioning technique for decades to alter the behavior of people and animals. But experts said the Northwestern study went further by actually modifying how the brain processes the sensation of smell.

The new report, published in Friday's issue of the journal Science, illustrates the power of emotions like fear to shape how we learn and even perceive the world, said Dana Small, a neuroscientist who studies odor and taste at the John B. Pierce Laboratory in New Haven, Conn.

"I think the study is important for understanding learning in general," Small said. "We often don't appreciate just how malleable the brain is, and how much perception depends on learning."

One possible implication of the work could be new insights into phobias and other types of anxiety disorders that can increase a person's sensory sensitivity. The group's conditioning regimen could even lead to new therapies to alleviate the sensory overload of such patients.



The study used 12 Northwestern students who were exposed to two smells emanating from substances that are virtually identical in their chemical structure. Each person took the test while in a brain scan machine, to show how their brain activity might change in response to the training method.

At first, none of the subjects could tell the difference between the two smells.

Then the researchers gave some of the smell-testers a small shock whenever they were exposed to one of the scents. The brain scanner showed that the parts of their brains that process and perceive smells changed its activity pattern as a result of the shocks. Once the series of shocks was over, the subjects who received shocks were much better at distinguishing the two similar odors.

The findings may reveal some of the tools that evolution has given humans and other creatures to adapt quickly to new surroundings and sensations, said Li and one of her co-authors, Northwestern researcher Jay Gottfried.

In nature, an animal's survival might depend on learning the difference between two similar scents - say, the smell of an ordinary cat and that of a leopard. Normally those sensations might be indistinguishable, but an emotional event - like nearly being killed by a leopard - could quickly train an animal's ability to tell the difference.

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art. April 4-5, 2008 Info and registration www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413 585 2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons (Cuban, 1959-) Birth Certificate, 1991 Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller class of 1925 Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas F. Gunderman

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Politics tense in Tibet

TIBET from page 1

and made their presence clear in a peaceful manner: sitting with their heads bowed, surrounded by candles.

In a similar public display on March 24, protestors tried to block the torch runner carrying the Olympic flame into the Athens stadium as a sign of protest to China's involvement with Tibet.

French President Nicolas Sarkozy has also voiced his opinion and recently called for China to open a dialogue with the Dalai Lama over the protests.

"Our Chinese friends must understand the worldwide concern that there is about the question of Tibet," he said to the media.

When asked whether he supported a boycott of the Olympic opening ceremony, Sarkozy said he would "not close the door to any possibility."

The Olympic Games is expected to attract 500,000 tourists this summer. China is eager to cap negative coverage and restore the confidence of major political figures like Sarkozy.

However, on March 26 through 28, Chinese authorities arranged a trip to Tibet for a selected range of international media outlets. This trip was intended to show journalists that calm had been restored.

It did not turn out that way. When taken to the temple, 30 monks started screaming about the injustices under which they felt trapped.

Emily Connell, a student majoring in sociology, thinks it will be interesting to keep an eye on the political movement in Tibet.

"I think it is only a matter of time before this issue will have to be addressed. The recent protests have shown a deep unrest among many Tibetan people."

With the lead up to the Olympic Games in full swing, journalists are setting up base in China. Faced with restrictions, many are aggravated by their lack of access to Tibet and have begun documenting their anxiety.

"None of us can enter Tibet, which is off limits to foreign reporters without a permit," wrote Tim Johnson, the Beijing bureau chief for McClatchy Newspapers. "I know of only one foreign journalist, James Miles of The Economist, who had the good fortune to be in Lhasa as events unfolded over the past few days."

"The Chinese government must allow independent media access to all areas of Tibet," said Kunsang Kelden, a member of Students for a Free Tibet's International Board of Directors in a statement. "Tibetans and people of conscience worldwide will continue actions supporting the global Tibetan Uprising until the Chinese authorities withdraw military forces from all cities in revolt."

Boston is holding two events for "global day of action." One is on Park Street, and the other in Harvard Square. These marches are taking place worldwide, with 15 occurring in the U.S. alone.

Pamela Lawn can be reached at plawn@student.umass.edu.

Historically black colleges struggling

By Halimah Abdullah
McClatchy Newspapers (MCT)

WASHINGTON – Financially strapped historically black colleges across the country are at a crossroads.

Cutbacks in federal and state spending and competition from mainstream institutions for the best students, educators and academic programs have taken a toll on schools created to educate African-American students after slavery, said presidents from some of the nation's top historically black colleges on Thursday.

Now, critics are questioning the relevance of historically black colleges and universities, commonly known as HBCUs, in a post-segregation era, and some decry the use of taxpayer dollars to pay for them.

"I am often asked as the president of a historically black university whether HBCUs continue to be viable. The answer I give is a resounding yes," Mary Sias, president of Kentucky State University, told members of the House Education and Labor Committee. "HBCUs are and continue to be needed and are as vital now to the educational system in America as they have ever been.

"KSU and other HBCUs take the terror of poverty, hunger, fear and hopelessness and turn it into hope," she said. "With a little more money and capital we can do even more."

The Princeton Review listed KSU as a "Best Southeastern College," U.S. News and World Report listed it as part of its "America's Best Colleges 2007."

Still, the school is facing a $3 million cut in state funding, and Sias said she's fighting an uphill battle when it comes to helping some of her school's nontermimal degree graduate programs become eligible for a federal competitive grant designed to help schools that serve large minority populations.

Historically black colleges represent only 4 percent of all higher-education institutions, but roughly 40 percent of all African-American students graduate from them, said Dorothy Yancy, the president of Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, N.C.

Fisk University, a school in Nashville, Tenn., with a student population of less than 1,000, graduates more black students who go on to earn doctorates in the natural sciences than any other school in the nation, according to a National Science Foundation study.

However, historically black colleges and universities face huge financial and social hurdles.

According to a study by Education Trust, 60 percent of the nation's students complete their undergraduate studies in six years. For an African-American student enrolled at a historically black college or university, where 70 percent of students are low income, the odds of completion are even lower, Sias said.

Over a lifetime, the average American with a bachelor's degree will earn roughly $2.1 million, while an African American with the same degree will earn $1.7 million, the college presidents told the panel.

Over the past two decades, at least seven historically black colleges have lost their accreditation. While some schools were able to regain their accreditation status, others, such as Knoxville College and Morris Brown College, remain open without regional accreditation.

In fiscal year 2005, 6 percent of the nation's top mainstream universities received more federal funds for research than 79 historically black colleges and universities combined, according to a report by the National Science Foundation.

"We've always been able to wash clothes without washing powder," Yancy said.

Journalism panel discusses media during election time

MEDIA PANEL from page 1

become cliché," said Carey.

The panelists also commented on the impact the Internet has had on elections and coverage. Stencel mentioned that since the 1996 election, the first to largely involve the Internet, news coverage has grown significantly and has made reporting easier. The ability to constantly update a Web site makes a news source more accurate.

In contrast, the panel also commented that this growth of information has created a "fire hose" effect, putting more stories out there which may or may not be reliable.

The panelists noted that technology has also increased the political awareness of the American public. The implementation of blogs has put more people in journalistic positions.

Stencel mentioned in his presentation that publications such as the New York Times and Washington Post are reaching citizens through Facebook.com with applications.

"The Compass," created by the Washington Post, displays a user's political leanings on their Web page. The New York Times News Quiz application allows users to compete with their friends with current events trivia.

At the conclusion of the discussion, the panel was asked to make a prediction about the results of the upcoming election based on their experience. Lawrence said that no matter what statistics and polls say, "We don't know how people are going to vote."

Lawrence has covered every presidential campaign since 1988 for United Press International and the Associated Press. She has been awarded the National Headliner Award in 1995 for her columns on the Clinton Administration.

Stencel was the managing editor at Congressional Quarterly and co-authored "Peepshow: Media and Politics in Age of Scandal" and "On the Line: The New Road to the White House," with CNN's Larry King.

Carey has been a political reporter for the Daily Hampshire Gazette since 1998 and teaches news writing and reporting at UMass.

The panel was funded by the Howard Ziff Fund, an alumni-established fund honoring retired UMass professor Howard Ziff. Ziff played a major role in developing the journalism program at UMass.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Students volunteer

HABITAT BREAK from page 1

the future.

"The trip was so successful that we're already talking about next year," Bellenoit said.

The UMass Habitat for Humanity chapter has been active for the past three years. The students participate in local builds around Northampton, Amherst and Turner's Falls. Students hold monthly meetings to discuss fundraising and future builds.

According to the Habitat for Humanity International Web site, there is a global housing crisis, with 1.6 billion people living in inadequate housing and 100-million people homeless. The site also says that owning a home creates stability for children, increases the pride of the homeowners, improves health and safety, increases job and education prospects, and serves as wealth creation, encouraging homeowners to save money.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

UMASS REPUBLICAN CLUB PRESENTS eminent conservative scholar DINESH D'SOUZA
"WHAT'S SO GREAT ABOUT AMERICA"
TUESDAY APRIL 1ST 7PM, STUDENT UNION BALLROOM, UMASS AMHERST
FREE ADMISSION, BUT ARRIVE EARLY
CONTACT Club President BRAD DEFLUMERI (bdeflume @student.umass.edu) or Publicity Director JON TABB (jpjohann@student.umass.edu) for details.
Young America's Foundation (YAF) is generously supporting this lecture.

Raw food diet gains increasing popularity

By Alyssa Montalbano
Collegian Correspondent

The raw food diet, which involves eating only organic, uncooked foods, has inspired five new restaurants in Boston.

Fruits. Sprouts. Nuts. Grains. Seaweed? The common factor between all of these food products is that they are part of the raw food diet.

The raw food diet is becoming increasingly popular, especially on the West Coast. Raw food restaurants have opened up all around the world, including five restaurants in Boston.

The diet consists of unprocessed, uncooked or organic foods, which means that this diet is at least 70 percent uncooked.

The different foods include fresh vegan foods, all raw fruits and vegetables, nuts and seeds, sprouts, root vegetables and squashes, fresh herbs and raw spices and seaweeds.

"Heating foods above 115 degrees Fahrenheit is believed to destroy enzymes in food that can assist in digestion and absorption of food," wrote Cathy Wong, in her article "Raw Food Diet."

According to Wong, cooking food can take the flavor out of it, as well as decrease the nutritional value.

Reed Mangels, member of the University of Massachusetts nutrition department, focuses on vegetarian diets and is familiar with the raw food diet since many raw food consumers, also referred to as foodists, are vegetarians.

When asked if food that is cooked above 115 degrees does in fact cause the loss of enzymes and drain the food of its nutritional value, Mangels had an answer ready.

"No," Mangels said. "Enzymes are proteins; and in the process of digestion in people's stomach, any enzymes present in a food are denatured and no longer active. This does not affect the food's nutritional value."

The raw food diet does have advantages, including increased energy and improved skin appearance. Weight loss, better digestion and a reduced risk of heart disease are increased while following the diet.

"A raw food diet is typically high in fruits and vegetables that provide substantial amounts of fiber, vitamins and some minerals," said Mangels.

The raw food diet also has less trans fats and saturated fats.

Both fats raise blood cholesterol level, according to the American Heart Association, which can lead to coronary heart disease and a risk in strokes and heart attacks. The diet is also low in sodium and high in potassium, magnesium and folate, a natural source of vitamin B9 found in foods such as beans, vegetables and peas.

An article from Eatingwell.com states that in 2005, a study by the Journal of Nutrition found that "raw-foodists were far less likely than the general population to register high levels of 'bad' LDL cholesterol."

There are different techniques that can be used to make the foods more digestible. For example, one can blend food, dehydrate food, soak nuts and dried fruit and juice fruit and vegetables for easier digestion.

Although there are good aspects of the diet, many dieticians and nutritionists do not believe the diet is healthy.

There are side-affects when a person begins the diet. It can cause mild headaches, nausea and cravings, which can occur for several days.

It is not recommended for children, pregnant women, anemic people or people at risk for osteroporosis. Participating in the diet can lead to a number of nutritional deficiencies in calcium, iron, protein and calories.

"It can be hard to meet energy [calorie] needs due to the bulky nature of the diet," said Mangels. "An unsupplemented raw food diet will be completely lacking in vitamin B12 and vitamin D, may be low in calcium, protein, iron and zinc."

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 110

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marwa Wheeten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Efi Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Albanciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE, FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SCENE IN 1907, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1965. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN AWARDED 11 SPMA AWARDS SINCE 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Will McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Across the Nation Around the World
News Wire

Croc wanders U-Miami campus

By Mike Clary
South Florida Sun-Sentinel (MCT)

CORAL GABLES, Fla. – On a typical spring afternoon on the leafy campus of the University of Miami, many of the 15,000 students are in class, others are romping around the athletic field, and a few are seeing how close they can get to a 6-foot American crocodile sunbathing with its mouth open.

"They apparently don't realize how dangerous this thing is," said security guard Roberto Heredia as he warned curious collegians away from the toothy reptile. "Some people think it's fake."

School officials, including President Donna Shalala, want the crocodile expelled.

The problem: "We can't catch him," said university Police Chief David Rivero. "We're playing a cat-and-mouse game with this croc."

There may be more than one crocodile on campus. Heredia, 52, often assigned to baby-sit animals that crawl out of Lake Osceola, said there are at least three, ranging in size up to 8 feet.

Rivero said he believes all but one croc has been locked out of the lake by new fences and grates being installed at points where canals link the lake to the Gables waterways and Biscayne Bay.

What is clear is that the population of once-endangered American crocodiles is growing. Last year the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service upgraded the reptiles' status from endangered to threatened, meaning a species once on the brink of extinction is now only likely to become endangered. And South Florida is the only place in the United States where these crocodiles are found.

As their numbers increase – from an estimated 200 when declared endangered in 1975 to more than 2,000 today – crocodiles expand their range. And the range includes a sunny strip of grass just a few feet from the Rathskeller, a popular on-campus bar and grill.

Lake Osceola serves as the scenic heart of University of Miami's richly landscaped campus, and around it are many inviting places to sit, read and contemplate. The lake is also surrounded by busy walkways, and when a crocodile is out sunning, several hundred students are bound to notice.

"I wanted to go down there," said Briana Grazioso, 19, a freshman from Delray Beach, Fla., and one of many students Heredia kept away from the crocodile on Tuesday.

"Not to pet it. Just to see," explained her twin, Lauren.

Last week, Heredia said he saw a campus visitor approach a basking crocodile and lift up its tail while a friend took his picture. "If that thing grabs him with its mouth, what it'll do is pull them into the water and start turning over and over in circles until the person drowns or it tears off an arm or something," Heredia said.

Signs posted along the lake urge caution and advise that it is "unlawful to feed or harass" crocodiles.

But warnings may only heighten the appeal of the fearsome beasts.

"The idea that they can survive in Miami is fascinating," said Eric Hurley, 19, who finds no crocs in his New Jersey hometown. "I think it's nice that we provide this haven."

The resident University of Miami crocs also have gained some fame on YouTube. In a video posted in February, the student television station got film of a nighttime commotion when a crocodile crossed a main campus street, and then fought with another croc when it returned to the water.

A crocodile at the University of Miami campus proves hard to catch; and although officials want the reptile expelled from the campus grounds, they claim there may be more than one of these toothy creatures roaming the University.

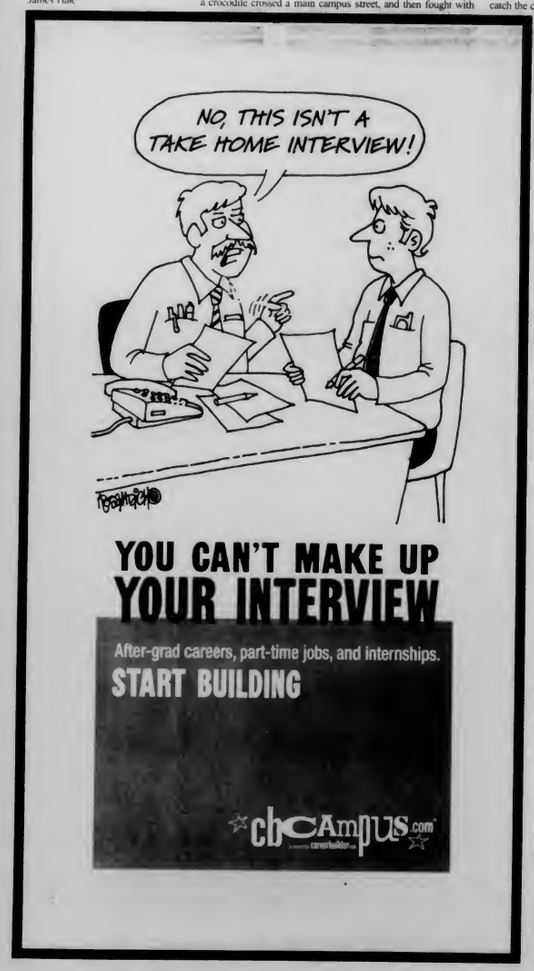
A second video posted in February shows a foolhardy student retreating from the lakeside as a crocodile splashes into the water.

Unlike the common alligator, crocodiles cannot be baited, hooked and fished from the lake by trappers. Federal rules say that crocs can be caught only while on land, and they cannot be injured.

And the crocs are wily. "We have been there a number of times," said Lindsey Hord, alligator and crocodile response coordinator for the Florida Fish and Wildlife Conservation Commission. "We get very close to it before it jumps into the water."

In recent years, local trapper Todd Hardwick of Pesky Critters has captured other crocodiles at Lake Osceola, including a 200-pounder in 2004. He also has been called out several times to catch the current occupants.

"I think I've dealt with the same ones. They get relocated, but they love the area," Hardwick said.



Mike Cherkiss, a University of Florida biologist, said crocodiles like bodies of water that are protected from wind and waves, and have plenty of fish and birds for food. So Lake Osceola is perfect habitat.

Hord and Rivero now plan to train a University of Miami police officer as a trapper.

According to Hord, there has never been a documented attack on a human by an American crocodile.

And Rivero does not want that streak ended on the University of Miami campus. The urgency of his croc-catching task was brought home just a couple of weeks ago, he said, in yet another e-mail from Shalala asking, "David, when are you going to catch the croc?"

Said Rivero, "We spend more time addressing the croc issue than I could ever imagine as a police chief."

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW
After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.
START BUILDING
chCAmpus.com

Study looks at altering sense of smell at Northwestern U.

By Jeremy Manier
Chicago Tribune (MCT)

CHICAGO – The little electrical shocks that Wen Li gives subjects at her Northwestern University neuroscience lab feel less painful than a bad jolt of static electricity, and more like the mild snap of a rubber band on skin.

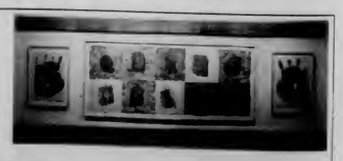
But getting just seven of those little shocks trained people in a new study to distinguish between extremely similar odors, offering a new and perhaps potent way of changing a person's power of perception.

Psychologists have used the basic conditioning technique for decades to alter the behavior of people and animals. But experts said the Northwestern study went further by actually modifying how the brain processes the sensation of smell.

The new report, published in Friday's issue of the journal Science, illustrates the power of emotions like fear to shape how we learn and even perceive the world, said Dana Small, a neuroscientist who studies odor and taste at the John B. Pierce Laboratory in New Haven, Conn.

"I think the study is important for understanding learning in general," Small said. "We often don't appreciate just how malleable the brain is, and how much perception depends on learning."

One possible implication of the work could be new insights into phobias and other types of anxiety disorders that can increase a person's sensory sensitivity. The group's conditioning regimen could even lead to new therapies to alleviate the sensory overload of such patients.



The study used 12 Northwestern students who were exposed to two smells emanating from substances that are virtually identical in their chemical structure. Each person took the test while in a brain scan machine, to show how their brain activity might change in response to the training method.

At first, none of the subjects could tell the difference between the two smells.

Then the researchers gave some of the smell-testers a small shock whenever they were exposed to one of the scents. The brain scanner showed that the parts of their brains that process and perceive smells changed its activity pattern as a result of the shocks. Once the series of shocks was over, the subjects who received shocks were much better at distinguishing the two similar odors.

The findings may reveal some of the tools that evolution has given humans and other creatures to adapt quickly to new surroundings and sensations, said Li and one of her co-authors, Northwestern researcher Jay Gottfried.

In nature, an animal's survival might depend on learning the difference between two similar scents - say, the smell of an ordinary cat and that of a leopard. Normally those sensations might be indistinguishable, but an emotional event - like nearly being killed by a leopard - could quickly train an animal's ability to tell the difference.

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760.

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons, Cuban, 1959- Birth Certificate, 1991. Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925, Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Gustanini.

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM of ART & MUSEUM SHOP

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Politics tense in Tibet

TIBET from page 1

and made their presence clear in a peaceful manner: sitting with their heads bowed, surrounded by candles.

In a similar public display on March 24, protestors tried to block the torch runner carrying the Olympic flame into the Athens stadium as a sign of protest to China's involvement with Tibet.

French President Nicolas Sarkozy has also voiced his opinion and recently called for China to open a dialogue with the Dalai Lama over the protests.

"Our Chinese friends must understand the worldwide concern that there is about the question of Tibet," he said to the media.

When asked whether he supported a boycott of the Olympic opening ceremony, Sarkozy said he would "not close the door to any possibility."

The Olympic Games is expected to attract 500,000 tourists this summer. China is eager to cap negative coverage and restore the confidence of major political figures like Sarkozy.

However, on March 26 through 28, Chinese authorities arranged a trip to Tibet for a selected range of international media outlets. This trip was intended to show journalists that calm had been restored.

It did not turn out that way. When taken to the temple, 30 monks started screaming about the injustices under which they felt trapped.

Emily Connell, a student majoring in sociology, thinks it will be interesting to keep an eye on the political movement in Tibet.

"I think it is only a matter of time before this issue will have to be addressed. The recent protests have shown a deep unrest among many Tibetan people."

With the lead up to the Olympic Games in full swing, journalists are setting up base in China. Faced with restrictions, many are aggravated by their lack of access to Tibet and have begun documenting their anxiety.

"None of us can enter Tibet, which is off limits to foreign reporters without a permit," wrote Tim Johnson, the Beijing bureau chief for McClatchy Newspapers. "I know of only one foreign journalist, James Miles of The Economist, who had the good fortune to be in Lhasa as events unfolded over the past few days."

"The Chinese government must allow independent media access to all areas of Tibet," said Kunsang Kelden, a member of Students for a Free Tibet's International Board of Directors in a statement. "Tibetans and people of conscience worldwide will continue actions supporting the global Tibetan Uprising until the Chinese authorities withdraw military forces from all cities in revolt."

Boston is holding two events for "global day of action." One is on Park Street, and the other in Harvard Square. These marches are taking place worldwide, with 15 occurring in the U.S. alone.

Pamela Lawn can be reached at plawn@student.umass.edu.

Historically black colleges struggling

By Halimah Abdullah
McClatchy Newspapers (MCT)

WASHINGTON – Financially strapped historically black colleges across the country are at a crossroads.

Cutbacks in federal and state spending and competition from mainstream institutions for the best students, educators and academic programs have taken a toll on schools created to educate African-American students after slavery, said presidents from some of the nation's top historically black colleges on Thursday.

Now, critics are questioning the relevance of historically black colleges and universities, commonly known as HBCUs, in a post-segregation era, and some decry the use of taxpayer dollars to pay for them.

"I am often asked as the president of a historically black university whether HBCUs continue to be viable. The answer I give is a resounding yes," Mary Sias, president of Kentucky State University, told members of the House Education and Labor Committee. "HBCUs are and continue to be needed and are as vital now to the educational system in America as they have ever been.

"KSU and other HBCUs take the terror of poverty, hunger, fear and hopelessness and turn it into hope," she said. "With a little more money and capital we can do even more."

The Princeton Review listed KSU as a "Best Southeastern College," U.S. News and World Report listed it as part of its "America's Best Colleges 2007."

Still, the school is facing a $3 million cut in state funding, and Sias said she's fighting an uphill battle when it comes to helping some of her school's nontermnial degree graduate programs become eligible for a federal competitive grant designed to help schools that serve large minority populations.

Historically black colleges represent only 4 percent of all higher-education institutions, but roughly 40 percent of all African-American students graduate from them, said Dorothy Yancy, the president of Johnson C. Smith University in Charlotte, N.C.

Fisk University, a school in Nashville, Tenn., with a student population of less than 1,000, graduates more black students who go on to earn doctorates in the natural sciences than any other school in the nation, according to a National Science Foundation study.

However, historically black colleges and universities face huge financial and social hurdles.

According to a study by Education Trust, 60 percent of the nation's students complete their undergraduate studies in six years. For an African-American student enrolled at a historically black college or university, where 70 percent of students are low income, the odds of completion are even lower, Sias said.

Over a lifetime, the average American with a bachelor's degree will earn roughly $2.1 million, while an African American with the same degree will earn $1.7 million, the college presidents told the panel.

Over the past two decades, at least seven historically black colleges have lost their accreditation. While some schools were able to regain their accreditation status, others, such as Knoxville College and Morris Brown College, remain open without regional accreditation.

In fiscal year 2005, 6 percent of the nation's top mainstream universities received more federal funds for research than 79 historically black colleges and universities combined, according to a report by the National Science Foundation.

"We've always been able to wash clothes without washing powder," Yancy said.

Raw food diet gains increasing popularity

By Alyssa Montalbano
Collegian Correspondent

Fruits. Sprouts. Nuts. Grains. Seaweed? The common factor between all of these food products is that they are part of the raw food diet.

The raw food diet is becoming increasingly popular, especially on the West Coast. Raw food restaurants have opened up all around the world, including five restaurants in Boston.

The diet consists of unprocessed, uncooked or organic foods, which means that this diet is at least 70 percent uncooked.

The different foods include fresh vegan foods, all raw fruits and vegetables, nuts and seeds, sprouts, root vegetables and squashes, fresh herbs and raw spices and seaweeds.

"Heating foods above 115 degrees Fahrenheit is believed to destroy enzymes in food that can assist in digestion and absorption of food," wrote Cathy Wong, in her article "Raw Food Diet."

According to Wong, cooking food can take the flavor out of it, as well as decrease the nutritional value.

Reed Mangels, member of the University of Massachusetts nutrition department, focuses on vegetarian diets and is familiar with the raw food diet since many raw food consumers, also referred to as foodists, are vegetarians.

When asked if food that is cooked above 115 degrees does in fact cause the loss of enzymes and drain the food of its nutritional value, Mangels had an answer ready.

"No," Mangels said. "Enzymes are proteins; and in the process of digestion in people's stomach, any enzymes present in a food are denatured and no longer active. This does not affect the food's nutritional value."

The raw food diet does have advantages, including increased energy and improved skin appearance. Weight loss, better digestion and a reduced risk of heart disease are increased while following the diet.

"A raw food diet is typically high in fruits and vegetables that provide substantial amounts of fiber, vitamins and some minerals," said Mangels.

The raw food diet also has less trans fats and saturated fats.

Both fats raise blood cholesterol level, according to the American Heart Association, which can lead to coronary heart disease and a risk in strokes and heart attacks. The diet is also low in sodium and high in potassium, magnesium and folate, a natural source of vitamin B9 found in foods such as beans, vegetables and peas.

An article from Eatingwell.com states that in 2005, a study by the Journal of Nutrition found that "raw-foodists were far less likely than the general population to register high levels of 'bad' LDL cholesterol."

There are different techniques that can be used to make the foods more digestible. For example, one can blend food, dehydrate food, soak nuts and dried fruit and juice fruit and vegetables for easier digestion.

Although there are good aspects of the diet, many dieticians and nutritionists do not believe the diet is healthy.

There are side-affects when a person begins the diet. It can cause mild headaches, nausea and cravings, which can occur for several days.

It is not recommended for children, pregnant women, anemic people or people at risk for osteoporosis. Participating in the diet can lead to a number of nutritional deficiencies in calcium, iron, protein and calories.

"It can be hard to meet energy [calorie] needs due to the bulky nature of the diet," said Mangels. "An unsupplemented raw food diet will be completely lacking in vitamin B12 and vitamin D, may be low in calcium, protein, iron and zinc."

The raw food diet, which involves eating only organic, uncooked foods, has inspired five new resturaunts in Boston.

Journalism panel discusses media during election time

MEDIA PANEL from page 1

become cliché," said Carey.

The panelists also commented on the impact the Internet has had on elections and coverage. Stencel mentioned that since the 1996 election, the first to largely involve the Internet, news coverage has grown significantly and has made reporting easier. The ability to constantly update a Web site makes a news source more accurate.

In contrast, the panel also commented that this growth of information has created a "fire hose" effect, putting more stories out there which may or may not be reliable.

The panelists noted that technology has also increased the political awareness of the American public. The implementation of blogs has put more people in journalistic positions.

Stencel mentioned in his presentation that publications such as the New York Times and Washington Post are reaching citizens through Facebook.com with applications.

"The Compass," created by the Washington Post, displays a user's political leanings on their Web page. The New York Times News Quiz application allows users to compete with their friends with current events trivia.

At the conclusion of the discussion, the panel was asked to make a prediction about the results of the upcoming election based on their experience. Lawrence said that no matter what statistics and polls say, "We don't know how people are going to vote."

Lawrence has covered every presidential campaign since 1988 for United Press International and the Associated Press. She has been awarded the National Headliner Award in 1995 for her columns on the Clinton Administration.

Stencel was the managing editor at Congressional Quarterly and co-authored "Peepshow: Media and Politics in Age of Scandal" and "On the Line: The New Road to the White House," with CNN's Larry King.

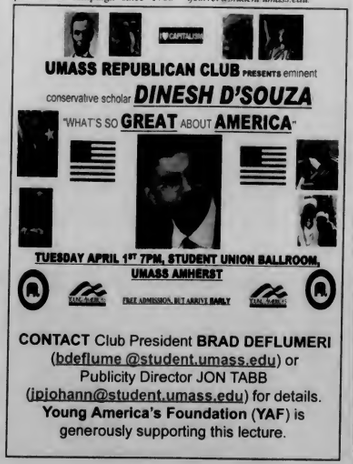
Carey has been a political reporter for the Daily Hampshire Gazette since 1998 and teaches news writing and reporting at UMass.

The panel was funded by the Howard Ziff Fund, an alumni-established fund honoring retired UMass professor Howard Ziff. Ziff played a major role in developing the journalism program at UMass.

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorrei@student.umass.edu.

Students volunteer

HABITAT BREAK from page 1



the future.

"The trip was so successful that we're already talking about next year," Bellenoit said.

The UMass Habitat for Humanity chapter has been active for the past three years. The students participate in local builds around Northampton, Amherst and Turner's Falls. Students hold monthly meetings to discuss fundraising and future builds.

According to the Habitat for Humanity International Web site, there is a global housing crisis, with 1.6 billion people living in inadequate housing and 100-million people homeless. The site also says that owning a home creates stability for children, increases the pride of the homeowners, improves health and safety, increases job and education prospects, and serves as wealth creation, encouraging homeowners to save money.

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Diagnosing education in Mass., USA

CONTRIBUTING COLUMNIST

Senator John Kerry

Even though some people assume that college is a time to drink beer, toss Frisbees, scheme on Facebook.com or eat late night pizza, the truth is the students of UMass Amherst are busy getting a terrific education.

Unfortunately, not all Americans your age are equally lucky. For far too many Americans, a college education is unaffordable or inaccessible.

Getting a college education today is more expensive than it has ever been – but it's also more valuable. Consider this: today, two-thirds of all new jobs require a college degree. College graduates will earn an average of $1 million more over their course of a lifetime than high school graduates.

A highly-educated work force is also vital to keeping America competitive. Unless we make education as affordable and available, this country will lose its edge. Already our 16-year-olds finished 24 out of 25 industrial countries in math skills. UMass has programs like STEMTEC to train the math and science teachers of the future; but we, as a nation, must do a better job at preparing American students for higher education and then to help them make it happen.

Let me tell you about a few of the steps we should be taking:

First, we need to support low-income and minority students to make the leap to higher education. Only six percent of lower-income college students can expect to have a degree by age 24. I believe we need to increase funding for programs like Upward Bound that help prepare lower-income students to enter and succeed at college.

Second, we need to make higher education more affordable. College has become so expensive that one author recently labeled your age group "generation debt." It's true: a College Board Report from last fall found that tuition and other costs at public universities rose more in the past five years than at any other time in the last three decades – increasing by 35 percent to $5,836 this academic year. Sixty percent of undergraduates at four-year colleges today rely on student loans. Two-thirds of Massachusetts families need an average of around $6,300 beyond financial aid to pay for college.

College has become so expensive that one author recently labeled your age group "generation debt."

And those are the success stories – others who are qualified for college don't make it because they can't afford to take on debt. This severely hurts their economic future, and it also hurts America's competitiveness when under-educated workers fail to meet their full economic potential.

Those who value higher education need to back up their talk with funding. That's why I also support Ted Kennedy's Higher Education Act of 2007, which would sanction the largest increase in student aid since the GI Bill. From flexible repayment to halving student loan rates to forgiveness for public service, this is an essential bill that will put college within reach of many more Americans. The Senate passed a version of this bill, but it got wrapped up in legislative red tape. We need to get this bill to the President's desk and have him sign it into law.

We should also be changing our tax code to reflect our priorities. That's why I sponsored the College Opportunity Tax Credit increase tax credits designed to help low-income students attend public colleges or community colleges.

Investing in education is fundamental to who we are today and where we want to go in the knowledge economy of the 21st century.

I recently found myself watching a television show called "Are You Smarter Than A Fifth Grader," in which grown-ups compete against precocious 11-year-olds to answer trivia questions. The show left me full of mixed emotions. I was excited that one day these brilliant fifth-graders will be teachers and doctors and CEOs but also sad to realize that our education system produces winners and losers.

That's not the way it should be. American higher education has been a crucial engine to the last century of economic greatness and growth across the economic spectrum. If we want to succeed in the next century, we should invest in making education accessible, affordable and excellent so that everybody wins.

John Kerry is a United States Senator.

When belief becomes the scapegoat

Ted Rogers

I went to Arizona over spring break. It's different out there. For one thing in Amherst, you generally don't have to worry about rattlesnakes if you go for a hike. But overall, I think the main difference is in the people.

All of them are extremely friendly, almost aggressively so. It's a little creepy but mostly charming. I think the biggest difference is in their beliefs, though. Whether white or brown, they are all thoroughly Christian and conservative. They're different from the folks you meet here.

Back at UMass, it seems like we're at war with those guys. Every time I go to my history class, I get to hear a liberal humanist talk about how great this country would be if all those nasty conservatives never got into the government. Take a science course here. Whether it's astronomy, biology, geology, whatever, you're going to have at least one class devoted to teaching you how dumb all those Christians are for taking a direct interpretation of Genesis. It's getting on my nerves, to say the least.

The teaching in history courses that conservatism is inherently immoral is something that really annoys me. This may be weird coming from an editorial writer who compared respecting Ronald Reagan to necrophilia, but hear me out. If you don't like what I'm writing, you can say, "this guy is nuts" and start doing the sudoku. If you do that in class, you've spent a huge amount of cash on an "F." Editorials are free. Classes are not. All I'm asking for is a little objectivity.

Science classes are, if anything, even worse. Like I said, if you take a science course here, there will be one in-class demonstration on how the Book of Genesis is completely wrong. To make things clear, I do believe that the universe appeared 13.7 billion years ago, not 6000. I'm pretty comfortable with the Earth being billions of years old. I'm down with evolution.

If you take a science course here, there will be one in-class demonstration on how the Book of Genesis is completely wrong.

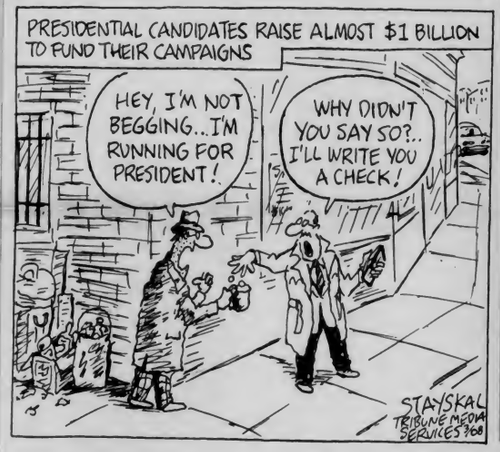
Here's the thing, though. I'm sure of all that stuff because it can be presented in a manner that is more scientifically sound than the Bible and has evidence to back it up. It is not because the Professor gets in front of the class and devotes an hour to tearing rural Christian beliefs apart.

This practice doesn't only seem mean-spirited to me, it seems biased towards being mean-spirited to Christians. I've noticed that our professors never try to tear down the Hindu creation story. Seems to me that the same amount of people believe that one over the big bang theory. The ancient Egyptians had a creation myth too vulgar to print in the paper, but I'm pretty sure that's not the reason why biology professors avoid it.

This bias finds itself into students, too. With the warmer weather coming, there will soon be Evangelicals coming to campus trying to convert students. Most of us, myself included, will avoid them at any cost.

A couple of students, however, will undoubtedly spend the rest of the day hanging out in front of them.

Some will point out inconsistencies in their beliefs, and others will try to kiss any member of the same sex within their reach to prove a point. I don't have a problem with this; but at the same time, I can't imagine the same students doing the same things if a different religion was involved.



Here's an example. If there was a Buddhist missionary here, and I told him that the riots that took place in Tibet proved that Buddhists don't adhere to the principals of non-violence, what do you think would happen? Would I be shouted down by other students? Do you think the same thing would happen if I asked an Evangelical about the Crusades?

I think people find it okay to do this sort of stuff because conservative Christians hate our east coast, fetus-aborting, gay-marrying liberal guts. Or at least, we're pretty sure they do. Right?

Not really. Like I said, all those red-state inhabitants certainly are nice. Most of them are total adherents of the policy "live and let live." If you say that your religion is "college student" anywhere in that area, you'll get a nod and a weird, self-deprecating response that I never find around here.

It was really hard to write this. I disagree with most conservative elements, and I don't have a religious bone in my body. But when I see conservatives and Christians be made into straw-men for education's sake, it riles me. If liberals claim to be so tolerant of every religious, sexual and racial minority, why is there that sudden gap when it comes to Christians or conservatives? It's a good thing that we live in a place of higher education because we still have a lot to learn about fairness.

Ted Rogers is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at tvrogers@student.umass.edu.

fed/up?

ed/op.

now accepting columnist applications.

For UMass students, an issue of power

Matt Morin

By the end of this year, over 5,000 students will have been charged with first level offense, the most common yet unappealable of the administration's judicial proceedings. Many of these charges are for such things as having an open container in a dorm room or being in the vicinity of a riot. Constitutional rights will be summarily ignored by these proceedings, as the idea of due process, or really any part of the Constitution, fails to take precedence over UMass policy in the eyes of the administration. This is common at UMass. Here, policy is vague enough to allow a few folks in Whitmore to do whatever they want to the student body. And if they don't have a policy granting them the authority they seek, they will surely misinterpret their own policies to grant themselves that authority.

The problem with UMass is one of power. As students, we are disempowered. Not only is there the fact that we have no voice in the governance of the University, but UMass has a long and depressing history of unlawful arrests, searches and seizures, invasions of privacy and breaches of our Bill of Rights. What is interesting, however, is the way in which this sort of heavy handedness hurts the school as a whole.

Approximately 5,000 kids being charged with first level offenses is over one-fifth of the entire student body. One in five UMass students will have his record forever blemished, sometimes for doing nothing more than hanging up a picture of beer in a dorm room. These charges jeopardize students' applications to graduate and professional schools and jobs, security clearances and even off-campus housing as landlords are now requesting the judicial records of potential tenants. This does not go unnoticed by that annual fifth of students, which by the end of four years is of course much more then one-fifth of the student body.

Most universities rely extensively on the financial support and advocacy of their alumni communities. After such authoritarian control however, after such an unbelievable amount of students have their opportunities permanently reduced, many students leave UMass resentful of the way they were treated. They, and their parents, are the alumni who never give a dime to UMass because they don't look back on their college experience with gratitude. The sad fact is the impoverishment of our school is not just the fault of the Massachusetts legislature cutting our funding every year. It is also due to homegrown administrative incompetence.

The administration naturally resists any reduction of their authority – even if it is Constitutionally required.

These realities need not continue. It is a plain fact that throughout the entire administration, there is not one lawyer to manage the development of policy within the context of the Constitution. If this were changed, the interface between the administration and the student body would become a much more legal and just process.

But in the end, this is a problem of power. The administration naturally resists any reduction of their authority – even if it is Constitutionally required. With waning alumni support tied so closely to the mistreatment of the student body, we have to wonder why this campus continues to treat its students the way it does. Naturally the administration is not listening to the grievances of the student body, and that is a major problem. But resistance to these draconian measures does not threaten their ability to continue in their ways. We strike and we protest for change of policy but not of governance. In the end, they have no reason to begin following the Constitution because they know they will not lose their jobs over these policies.

The connection between alumni donations and draconian policies is important; but if we really wish to see our University become a more Constitutionally-protected place, we need to directly challenge the administration's position of power rather than wait for them to realize that they are hurting this school. We need to fight for more student oversight in the decision making process of this University. We need to remember that this is our University, our education and our future – not theirs. As a future alumnus I cannot sit idly by and watch administrators sacrifice the rights of students for their mere convenience.

The Constitution demands far more then that.

Matt Morin is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at mmorin@student.umass.edu.

what's black and white and red all over?

editorial@dailycollegian.com

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Dinosaurs, quidditch and ska bands, oh my!

Dinosaurs thrill at the Mullins

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Over the last few days, the Mullins Center has been the home of a show that can only be described as big.

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience," took over the University of Massachusetts arena last Thursday and stayed for seven shows through yesterday. Opening night drew a respectable crowd, and size only grew as word of mouth spread.

The Mullins Center went through a dramatic transformation for the show. The floor, which has been covered with grayish-black flooring and has a similarly-colored hill in the center, is about the same size as the ice when the boards are in place for hockey games. The first three rows up from the floor are blocked off to prevent any arrant tails from hitting spectators.

The far end of the arena is also blocked off and has become the entrance for the large stars.

The show begins with an announcement that flash photography is not allowed because it may startle the normally easy going beasts, leading to unwelcome results. Additionally, cell phones are to be turned off, which shouldn't matter because cell reception will not be available for another 65 million years anyway.

Following the announcements came the introduction of the tour guide for the evening – and the only human character in the show – paleontologist Huxley, currently played by Jonathan Bliss and James Roberts.

Huxley explains fossils and how we have knowledge about dinosaurs and their time period. He also talks about Pangaea, the one, giant continent represented by the hill in the center of the floor.

A pile of eggs appear from a corner of the hill and begin to hatch. As Huxley talks about them, the first of the life-size dinosaurs appears in a Liliensternus. One of the smaller units in the show, the Liliensternus is also the first of the individually-manned puppet units in the production.

Following the Liliensternus is a life-size Plateosaurus, which stands 10 ft. tall and 31 ft. long.

From there, the show progresses quickly through the 40-minute first act before intermission arrives.

The second act is the more impressive of the two and features many well-known and fan-favorite dinosaurs.

It opens with Huxley telling us we have jumped 30-million years in "what seemed like only a 20-minute intermission."

The floor, now covered with smoke, is fairly open as the Pangaea hill has now broken up and moved outwards to the corners. Dropping from the rafters in front of the giant screen is an Ornithoheirus, or Pterodactyl.

The second act continues to roll on as Raptors and the always-popular Tyrannosaurus Rex, both baby and mama, make appearances.

The introduction of the T-Rex is a particularly amusing moment, which everyone in the audience will enjoy. When mama T-Rex enters, her roar literally shakes the Mullins Center.

The second act, also 40-minutes, wraps up with a dramatic light show as the meteor strikes

See DINOSAURS on page 6

Quidditch fever hits the valley

BY RYAN MCASKILL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With sleet and rain falling on a snow-covered ground, Amherst College's quad hosted the first nationally televised Quidditch match ever.

Yes, you read that correctly. Quidditch as in "Harry Potter." The Quaffle, Bludgers and Golden Snitch were flying all over the field, as were the players on their brooms. No movie was showing; it was the muggle version of the game being played between Middlebury and Amherst Colleges.

The muggle, or human, version of the game has been sweeping colleges around the country in the last few years. The refined version used in intercollegiate play started at Middlebury two-years ago and has since spread to over 80 colleges.

"It started a couple years ago, and I helped to expand it to the collegiate level," said Alex Benepe, the Intercollegiate Quidditch Commissioner from Middlebury. "I like to see the teams in their school colors. We have 80 schools now, and our goal is to have it in all of them."

For those who haven't been apart of the Harry Potter mania, Quidditch is featured in every book but the final one. The muggle version is a cross between soccer, rugby and dodgeball.

The game is played on an oval-shaped field known as a pitch and consists of seven players in four positions. The Chasers pass the Quaffle, a volleyball, amongst themselves and try to shoot it through one of three goals for points. The Keeper is charged with protecting the goals. The Beaters, who in the book are armed with clubs, are in charge of protecting their teammates by knocking opposing players off their brooms using dodgeballs. The final position is the Seeker, whose job is to chase and capture the golden snitch.

In the muggle version, the golden snitch is a person.

"In the book, the snitch is a little golden ball that flies around, and you need to catch it to end the game," said Donny Dickerson, the golden snitch. "In our version we have a goofy guy like me dressed in yellow, and I have a sock stuck to my butt; and if you grab it, the game is over."

Quidditch has become so popular that it has garnered national attention.

CBS's Early Show was in attendance as meteorologist and feature reporter Dave Price broadcasted live from the Amherst Quidditch field.

"Congratulations, you're about to introduce 1.5-million people to Quidditch," Price told the players and crowd before the first live broadcast of the morning.

"One of our producers had heard that there was an effort to start a Quidditch league," said Price. "What's amazing is that 133-million copies of Harry Potter have been published in the United States, 400-million world-wide. It's a phenomenon. And everyone knows Quidditch. When we found out about the league, we were all over the story."

With the story now on the radar, it became time to find a college from which to play the match and broadcast the report.

See QUIDDITCH on page 6

Big D's set gets big thumbs up from audience in Northampton

By Michelle Abbasciano
Collegian Staff

After their long-awaited return to Massachusetts, Big D and the Kids Table, a mellow ska band from Boston, played an enthusiastic show to a packed clubroom at Pearl Street Nightclub in Northampton last Friday.

With boundless energy right from the beginning and an obvious talent to get the crowd on their feet, the seven members on stage wasted no time launching into their first song "Steady Riot," setting the tone for the rest of the show. The band stormed onto the stage to an impatient crowd chanting "Big f*ckin' D!" and dove right into their set without so much as an introductory greeting.

Although the song only lasted just over two minutes, its short length did not deter the excited crowd. In fact, it seemed the perfect length to get the audience's blood flowing and begging for the band to play more.

Big D did not disappoint as they charged into their second song, "Fly Away," without skipping a beat. The trumpet-heavy song earned a great crowd response and had everyone dancing along. With sing-along lyrics like "Woah-oh, yeah-yeah, girl your friends will never fly away," it was hard to not chime in during this song, even if you didn't know the words.

The band continued in a similar fashion with its third and fourth songs but finally took a moment to breathe after the popular "My Girlfriend's On Drugs." After a short break to greet the crowd and make sure everyone was alive and well, friendly lead singer David McWane wasted no time in continuing with their lively set.

The group even did a throwback to their older material by playing a song off of their '97 split CD, "Shot By Lammi." The true fans of Big D were highly appreciative of the reminiscent performance, but even the unfamiliar fans were moving along to the beats.

One of the best songs of the night was easily the melodious and somewhat trippy hit "Strictly Rude" off the band's most recent, self-titled album. For this one, McWane grabbed an unusual looking-instrument that resembled a combination between a keyboard and a harmonica.

According to Ryan O'Connor, the saxophone player in Big D, the foreign instrument is called a Melodica.

"It's kind of like if you can play a harmonica, but with individual notes," said O'Connor. "You hear it a lot in old school reggae. It's been around for a long time, but nobody's ever heard of it."

The slow, reggae-tinged song was a huge crowd hit and had the audience swaying. The simple fact that Big D could pull off a live performance of such an unusual song says a great deal about them as musicians and earned them an appreciative, thunderous round of applause, even from the idle members of the crowd.

Although the band experienced some minor technical difficulties during the slower, mellower crowd favorite "Shining On," it did not seem to phase the eager fans.

Band and audience members alike were grinning during this song; and with lines like "No, I can't help but just smile, while that damn sun is shining on, dang it's just shining down, down over me," it was difficult not to buy into the feel-good, no worries-type mood of the clubroom.

Although fans of Big D are still getting some mileage out of their most recent album, "Strictly Rude," released one year ago, the band knows it is time to start recording again.

"We toured for the new record, and then we did this like after-touring," said McWane. "And then people were like, 'You know you have to write a new record right?' And we're like, 'Yeah we know,' and they're like, 'Well, get to it!'"

The band plans on getting together around April 6 to begin the recording process.

"It's going to be like free-writing in a nonchalant way. But it's like purgatory for us right now," said O'Connor.

The laid-back band played a couple crowd requests, including one from O'Connor's cousin and audience member. Her song of choice was "Five Kids Down," which was perfectly fine with the rest of the room. By the end of the fast-paced, trombone-infused song, there were at least 15 fans singing along on the stage.

Big D's closing song, a cover of The Special's "Little Bitch," proved to be one of the night's best. The high-energy song carried an impressive guitar breakdown and catchy trumpet sections. There was not an idle body in the room by the time the true ska song was over.

Although the headlining band was supposed to be Catch 22, it is fairly safe to say that none of the concert-goers that night were disappointed by the slight lineup change.

Catch 22's set was equally as energetic, and it was quite evident that they had a solid body of fans in the audience. The crowd never ceased to jump and clap along at any point during their performance, and the band did not disappoint, playing multiple crowd favorites including most of the songs off of their newest album "Permanent Revolution."

The group began with "A Minor Point," which proved to be a perfect opening song with its thrashing drums, catchy saxophone section and a short, but impressive, guitar solo.

Even though the majority of Catch 22's set consisted of their most recent songs (off "Revolution"), two of the best songs of their performance were "9mm and a 3-piece Suit" and "Keasbey Nights." Although these are older Catch 22 songs, there didn't seem to be a silent or stationary person in the room during the insanely-catchy hits.

Catch 22 and Big D were supported by two local acts, Restitution and Five Across The Eyes, who both put on a great performance. Although their music was heavier and generally more hardcore and punk rather than ska and punk, the crowd still enjoyed their energy-infused sets and were appreciative of their efforts.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbasci@student.umass.edu.

See it to believe it

DINOSAURS from page 5

the Earth, thus ending the existence of the dinosaurs.

The true stars of the show are, not surprisingly, the animatronic and puppet dinosaurs. From the moment they walk out, you forget that they are simply large robots or people in suits. Every detail is captured, and the dinosaurs appear so life-like that you want out reach out and pet one.

The overall production is on the same scale as a Disney World attraction, minus Mickey Mouse. Everything is over the top, but not so much that it becomes distracting. There is a good mix of humor, action, information and "awww" moments that gave everyone something positive to take away.

While it helps to be a fan of dinosaurs or robots, you don't need to be either to enjoy the show. With an audience that ranges from eight to 90-years-old, there is something for everyone.

To truly appreciate the life-size animatronics, they need to be seen in person. Video and pictures don't do the wireless robots justice.

The show is completely unique and creates an atmosphere that brings out the inner-child in everyone. As Huxley put it, "life on Earth will never again be this big."

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@dailycollegian.com

"Walking with Dinosaurs: The Live Experience" invaded the Mullins Center for four consecutive days to the excitement of young and old.

Muggle-mania invades Amherst campus

QUIDDITCH from page 5

"We were looking at a number of colleges," said Price. "We looked at Vassar. We looked at going to Middlebury and Princeton. But we thought the combination of this beautiful setting, would make for a great competition between Middlebury and Amherst, and a great sense of school spirit."

It's not difficult to understand why Quidditch has become popular on college campuses.

"Look outside," Price said. "It's 7 o'clock on a college campus. On a Friday in sleet and snow, and you have all these people outside. That's why we came here, and we have not been disappointed."

Price confessed that he was never a fan of Harry Potter. To research Quidditch, he went to Princeton and not only watched but also played.

"To be honest, I was not one of those people who was part of the Harry Potter phenomenon," said Price. "We went to Princeton and watched a match last week, and I actually played. I'll tell you, it's a great sport. It's a combination of rugby, soccer and dodgeball. It's a fast-paced, rough-and-tumble game."

On Friday morning Price didn't play, but he did dress in gold and took the role of the golden stitch.

This is just one in a long line of on-location stories for Price.

"I love these things," Price said. "The great thing about being a weather guy is you get to see a lot and do a lot, and this is just one example of it. We were in Davidson yesterday talking NCAA hoops; Monday we are going to be at [Major League Baseball's] opening day in Miami. Wednesday we're in Washington D.C. for the Cherry Blossom Festival; Friday we're at the Final Four in San Antonio. It's a great way to have fun and get paid at the same time."

Ryan McAskill can be reached at rmcaskil@dailycollegian.com

Middlebury and Amherst College students braved the bitter weather last Friday morning to participate in a real-life version of Quidditch, a game made popular by the "Harry Potter" books and films. CBS Early Show personalities were broadcasting on-location from the Amherst campus.

MarymountManhattan
a college of the liberal arts
SUMMER ON A MAGIC ISLE
SPEND THIS SUMMER AT THE SMALL CAMPUS IN THE BIG CITY. WITH SMALL CLASSES, AFFORDABLE TUITION AND AVAILABLE HOUSING, YOU'LL HAVE AN EXPERIENCE FOR A LIFETIME.
Summer Session I: May 27 – June 30
Summer Session II: July 1 – August 6
REGISTER NOW! or 1-800 MARYMOUNT or 1-212-517-0430 summer.mmm.edu

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

April Fools is on its way.

URI wins 2nd Yankee Cup

Rhode Island challenging UMass for top spot in A-10

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team took second place behind Atlantic 10 rival Rhode Island this Saturday in the Yankee Cup.

The win for Rhode Island marks its second consecutive Yankee Cup victory. Connecticut placed third in the race with New Hampshire coming in last.

In a race that gave the Minutewomen their first look at the Rams, they did not get the look they wanted.

"The results could have been better," UMass coach Jim Dietz said.

The results show that URI was better in just about every race. The only race that the Rams did not win was the second Varsity Eight, in which the Minutewomen took first.

In the Varsity Eight races, UMass took third place with a time of seven minutes, 51 seconds. Their time fell short to URI's 7:41.00 and UNH's 7:50.00. The UMass second Varsity Eight had more success completing the course in 8:04.3. That time beat the Rams by eight seconds and UConn by almost 30 seconds.

"I think we still have two even boats; we have to figure out who deserves to be in the first boat," Dietz said. The team plans to figure out its Varsity Eight boats soon as it tries to prepare for the A-10 Championships in three weeks.

In all races other than the two Varsity Eights, the Minutewomen's boats placed second behind one of the Rhode Island squads. Many of these races were not very close except for the Freshman Eight boat in which URI won by fewer than three seconds.

UMass will hope to better its times in the next three weeks and to prevent URI from winning its first A-10 championship thus ending UMass' streak of 12 straight championships.

The Rams, who tied UMass as the presumptive A-10 Champion in the Coaches' Poll this spring, are living up to their expectations. With their dominant victory in the Yankee Cup, the Rams are making a statement to the Minutewomen that their run at the top may end soon.

The two schools will get another look at each other when they face off in two weeks in the Knecht Cup on April 12 and 13. The Knecht Cup will be the squad's last opportunity to see where they stand against the other before the A-10 Championship.

"We'll train right through next week's race and gear up for the Knecht Cup and the A-10 Championships," Dietz said.

Next for UMass is a race against Colgate, Columbia and Holy Cross. The race will take place on the Connecticut River in Amherst on April 6.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Senior Ryan Franczek went 4-for-13 with two RBIs in three games with Xavier this weekend.

Minutewomen top Charlotte

SOFTBALL from page 10

they do, it's a little easier to throw the ball."

UMass (18-11, 6-0 A-10) got the run back in the bottom of the second inning and scored three in the sixth for the 5-2 win, capping a doubleheader sweep of the 49ers and extending its win streak to eight games.

Balschmiter struck out nine batters and both Whitney Williams and Samantha Salato went 2-for-4 with two runs scored in Game 1, a 7-1 win.

Charlotte was outplayed all-around in Game 1, falling behind 7-0 before scoring its first run in the sixth inning.

Williams continued to excel in the leadoff spot, opening the game with a double to right-center field. After ground outs by Stacy Cullington and Whitney Mollica, Samantha Salato drove in Williams with a single through the right side.

Sarah Reeves drew a walk to put two runners on base, then Jessica Serio and Lauren Proctor hit back-to-back singles to give UMass the early 3-0 lead.

The Minutewomen doubled up in the fourth with three more runs on an RBI single by Mollica and a triple by Reeves. Williams also scored on a passed ball.

Proctor grabbed another run in the fifth on an error as UMass cruised to its seventh consecutive victory.

Game 2 proved once again to be the bigger challenge for the Minutewomen, as the 49ers found their bats and Sanders continued to search for her control.

"We started out a little shaky," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "Bailey was trying to find her rhythm, which she did. I thought it was really great that, with a strong offense like Charlotte's, we answered back immediately when they scored."

After tying the game one apiece in the second, UMass pulled ahead in the third, manufacturing another run as they have all season.

Williams drew a walk to begin the inning; and after Proctor moved her to second with a sacrifice bunt, Mollica brought her around with a hard single to left field.

Charlotte came right back in the fourth inning with a leadoff home run by Jaime West. With the wind blowing from left to right, the ball seemed to fool Proctor, who had a shot at robbing the home run in left field as it sailed over her head and into the net protecting the scoreboard.

With the game looking strangely similar to the 7-5 win over Dartmouth, in which the lead changed hands several times, UMass blew it open in the sixth with three runs – the same inning in which it scored four against the Big Green last week to seal the win.

"It's a matter of staying patient and basically having a plan at the plate," Sortino said of the team's recent late-inning rallies. "We were very steady and doing the right thing at the right time."

Serio led off with a bloop-single that fell just out of the reach of a sliding Sarah Malene at second base, but a failed bunt attempt by Cullington kept her at first base. Freshman Lindsay Maroney came up with a clutch single that was nearly identical to Serio's, sailing just past the reach of Malene and short of the outfielders to put two on base.

Carly Normandin struck out looking to put the second out on the board; and then with the runners going on the pitch, Williams continued her big day, pulling a single to right field to drive in the winning run.

Proctor added insurance with a single to left to drive in Maroney and Williams, and Sanders struck out two in a perfect seventh.

After a tough outing in her last start, Sanders showed a steadier hand in the circle Sunday, which impressed Sortino.

"She had movement on her pitches," Sortino said "[Against Dartmouth] it was flat and fat. She had a lot of spin on the ball; so even when it was flat today, there was a still a lot of spin."

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Whitney Williams waits for a pitch during yesterday's doubleheader with Charlotte, the Minutewomen defeated the 49ers in both games. Williams was 3-for-7 with one RBI and is hitting .256 in her sophomore season in Amherst.

Maroon and White excel against lefties

PITCHING from page 10

in the first game of the doubleheader, allowing eight runs (four earned) in 1-2/3 innings of work. The right-hander struggled with his command, allowing five walks and five hits.

Leigh has been a bit erratic this season (13 walks and 23 hits allowed in 21.1 innings) but has shown his talent in spots. He throws hard, has good movement and has 19 strikeouts to prove it.

The rest of the main pitchers are also very young, with freshmen Nick Serino and Charlie Benson and sophomore Jared Freni expected to make strong contributions this season.

Life at .300

Last year the Minutemen hit .259 collectively and had only one player (Adam Tempesta, .306) hit over .300. This season, UMass has increased its batting average to .271 through 15 games, and five regulars are hitting above the .300 mark.

Freshman outfielder Kyle Multner leads the way for the Minutemen with his .346 batting average. He also leads the team with three home runs and an impressive .615 slugging percentage. As always, Tempesta is hitting well (.340), but there is a surprising name with him tied for second on the team.

That surprise is sophomore outfielder Brian Baudinet, who hit .132 (7-for-53) last season. In those 53 at-bats, Baudinet struck out 15 times. But of those seven hits, all but two of them went for extra bases.

Of his 17 hits this season, all but two have been singles. But Baudinet has two home runs and 11 RBIs to go along with his .340 batting average. He ranks second on the team in all three categories.

Baudinet has also completely turned around his plate discipline, with a team-leading 14 walks, .470 on-base percentage and eight strikeouts in 50 at-bats.

Andy Tuetken (.333) and Jim Macdonald (.321) are the other UMass players above .300.

It's a lefty-righty thing

In baseball, many hitters struggle against left-handed pitching. This is not the case for UMass – at least not this season.

Against left-handed pitching, the Minutemen are hitting a robust .331 as a team in 136 at-bats. In 362 at-bats against right-handed pitching, UMass is hitting over .80 points lower at .249.

The stark contrast from the left to the right isn't just limited to hitters against pitchers. Just take a look at UMass pitchers against left-handed batters.

In 144 at-bats against Minuteman pitching, opposing left-handed batters are hitting .340. But opposing right-handed batters are currently hitting .261.

Ryan Franczek is hitting a team-low .189, but leads the team with 14 runs scored. Of UMass's five wins, all have been won by a different pitcher. Of the 10 losses, eight different pitchers have at least one of them. ... UMass has 23 stolen bases this season, with six players all having between three and five of them. ... The Minutemen have committed 29 errors. Four players have committed four each, and another has three.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosenswa@dailycollegian.com

Clegg, Minutemen earn first A-10 win

BASEBALL from page 10

able in those clutch situations and come through and hit the ball hard," UMass coach Mike Stone said of his team's recent struggles with runners on base, "instead of trying to do too much sometimes, and you press a little bit and you pop it up."

At some points in the inning, Danny Rosenbaum, Xavier's starting pitcher, appeared to be tiring. The sophomore transfer from Indiana struggled to find the strike zone but rebounded and limited the Minutemen to two runs on three hits in six innings.

Entering the eighth inning, the score was tied, 2-2, when Zac Richard, who leads the Musketeers with 21 RBIs on the season, doubled to deep right-center field.

Conley came up next and laid a bunt down the third base line. Eilenberg looked towards third base and when he realized there was no play, threw the ball towards first. Conley ran on the inside part of the base path, and the ball went past second baseman Adam Tempesta, who was covering first due to the bunt. The ball went by Tempesta; and Nick Egloff, who pinch ran for Richard, scored what proved to be the game-winning run.

Despite losing both games of the doubleheader yesterday, the weekend series began on a positive note for the Minutemen, as they defeated Xavier, 7-1, on Saturday. The first game was originally scheduled for Friday but due to rain, was played on Saturday.

Junior Mitchell Clegg allowed one run over eight innings and won his first game as a Minuteman. Xavier had seven hits in the game, but none were for extra bases.

Clegg, who transferred from Maine, has been the Minutemen's best pitcher this season. He leads the team in innings (25 – 1/3) and also has the best earned run average of starters on the team (2.13).

While Clegg pitched well, UMass amassed 18 hits and saw at least one hit from every batter. Garrity, Jim Macdonald, Ryan Franczek and Brian Baudinet all had three hits while all except Baudinet drove in a pair of runs.

Xavier's Charlie Leesman allowed four runs (three earned) and 10 hits in four innings. His relief, Mike Creevy, did not fare much better, allowing three earned runs on eight hits in four innings.

In yesterday's first game of the doubleheader, Xavier enacted revenge, jumping on starting pitcher Brian Leigh right from the start.

The Musketeers scored four runs in the fourth inning, an inning in which Leigh issued three walks and allowed three hits.

After Xavier's Michael Lucas retired the Minutemen in the first, Leigh struggled again. Following back-to-back walks that loaded the bases, Franczek committed an error. The Musketeers capitalized and scored four unearned runs, ending Leigh's night after 1 – 2/3 innings and essentially putting the game away.

UMass managed 15 hits, including three from leadoff hitter Baudinet but left 12 runners on base and lost the game, 10-5.

John McCambridge led the way for the Musketeers with two hits and three RBIs.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

HEALTH AND NUTRITION DIVERSITY SCHOLARS
Apply today!
Stop by our OPEN HOUSE to learn more
Thursday, April 3, 4-6 PM
210 Chenoweth Lab
$6000 Scholarships
Available Fall 2008
For information and pre-nutrition advising, please contact: Dr. Nancy Cohen, Department of Nutrition
215 Chenoweth Lab, UMass-Amherst, MA 01003
cohen@nutrition.umass.edu or 413-545-2526
For more information and application form
www.umass.edu/sphhs/nutrition/hands
This project is based upon work supported by the Cooperative State Research, Education and Extension Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, under the agreement NO. 2006-38413-16595.

Minutemen hold off PSU

Balise, Schneider carry UMass to first conference win

BY JOE MELONI
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Massachusetts men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella didn't have much to be pleased about in the weeks prior to Saturday's matchup with ECAC opponent Penn State. UMass suffered its worst defeat since Cannella took the program over in 1995 seven days prior, a 15-1 loss to Loyola and saw inconsistent effort from his team in last week's practices.

In the first seven games of the 2008 season, his team hadn't established an identity or anything resembling a rhythm on either side of the ball. But after the first quarter ended with the score tied, 2-2, the Minutemen took over.

UMass outscored PSU, 3-1, in the second quarter, and junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider made five saves in the fourth quarter as the Minutemen (3-5, 1-1 ECAC) earned a 7-5 victory. The win ended a three-game losing streak for the Minutemen and snapped a three-game winning streak for the Nittany Lions.

UMass	7
Penn State	5

UMass's next game comes next Saturday against Saint John's in Jamaica, N.Y. The Minutemen have never lost to the Red Storm.

PSU specializes in a slow style of play. In the past, UMass has struggled against teams who control the tempo of the game. But with an offense struggling to create scoring chances, Cannella welcomed the matchup with the Nittany Lions.

Junior Tim Balise scored the game-winning goal at 10:16 of the third quarter before senior Fred Federico provided the Minutemen some breathing room via a score with nine seconds left in the third quarter.

UMass failed to score in the fourth quarter, but junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider made five saves to bail his teammates out. The Nittany Lions built a strong comeback effort, preventing the Minute men from clearing on four of their eight attempts.

Max VanArsdale scored 37 seconds into the final period, and PSU had nine more shots after that. Aside from Schneider's saves, the Nittany Lions missed the net completely on four separate occasions.

PSU's offensive style is so focused on maintaining long possessions that they can struggle when pressed for time. It managed to create shots against UMass but struggled to test Schneider. The same was true in the second quarter. PSU held a 12-4 advantage in shots but just could not get the attempts on net. Of the 12 shots, seven missed the net.

The Minutemen committed four fouls in the period, including majors on senior midfielder Paul Manesis for unnecessary roughness and junior Brennan Mack.

UMass, on the other hand, was very efficient with its possession and shots. The Minutemen scored three goals in period on four shots. PSU goalkeeper Drew Adams, widely considered one of the best in the nation, made a season-low six saves in the loss.

Balise and freshman Peter McNichols each scored two goals for the Minutemen. Balise now leads the Minutemen with 15 goals on the season, and McNichols is second with 10. Freshman Zach Rodgers assisted on two of the UMass scores, adding to his team-high in assists of 12.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com

Junior Tim Balise scored his 14th and 15th goals of the season on Saturday as the Minutemen ended their three-game losing streak with a win over Penn State.

Junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider made 12 saves in UMass's 7-5 win over ECAC opponent Penn State Saturday afternoon.

Typadis nets 3 in loss to UR

LACROSSE from page 10

five-goal streak GW had to tie up the game.

Against Richmond, UMass junior Kaytlin McCormick, senior Kathleen Typadis and senior Melynda Zwick led the team in goals, scoring three each. Typadis also led the Minutewomen on Sunday with another hat trick.

"We were able to score a lot of goals, and we're getting goals from different people right now. That is going to be crucial for us moving forward by having more threats on attack," said Venechanos.

The reason for Richmond's win was the lack of unity in the defensive end for the Minutewomen. Venechanos believed that the Minutewomen needed to sure up their team defense and work on defending as a unit, and that led to their win against George Washington. UMass also struggled getting the ball up the field as a team and working the midfield to their advantage, according to Venechanos.

Richmond outshot UMass 40-26, controlled 27 groundballs and was only called for 15 fouls. UMass had 20 controlled groundballs and 33 fouls. The Minutewomen had a season-low nine turnovers in the game and were successful on five of their seven free-position shots.

On Sunday, UMass had a mental turnaround to beat GW in overtime.

"Everyone played with their heart and played for each other. Defensively, we made some huge stops," said Venechanos.

The Minutewomen also did well clearing the ball and had a low number of turnovers, she said.

Similar to the game against Richmond, GW came into the second half scoring five goals, whereas UMass only scored two. This sent the teams into overtime.

Going into overtime, Venechanos told the team to "get the ball on attack and put some shots away."

Zwick scored the game-winning goal just over two minutes into overtime. The Minutewomen had three shots on goal and held GW to one. UMass also outshot the Colonials with total shots 33-28.

Freshman goalkeeper Colleen Speth had an impressive weekend. Against Richmond, she tied her career-high 12 saves; and in the GW game, she made eight saves.

"We're working to get back wins right now, keep the momentum going forward. Temple will be tough on Sunday, and we're looking for the same results," Venechanos said regarding the win against GW.

The Minutewomen will return next Sunday to play a home game against Temple.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu.

Senior attacker Kathleen Typadis scored three goals as UMass earned its first A-10 win on Sunday.

HERE'S THE PLAY
Grab a Daily Collegian.
Turn it over.
Get the BEST
UMass sports coverage.
BREAK!!

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S
AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS BOSTON
Summer '08 at UMass Boston
Learning is in the air!
• Over 600 undergraduate & graduate courses
• Classes offered days, evenings, or online
• Study abroad in locations like China, Amsterdam, and West Africa
• Small classes taught by distinguished UMass Boston faculty
• Accessible Boston Harbor campus
Registration starts March 31
UMASS BOSTON summer.umb.edu 617.287.6000

New WORLD Theater Intersection V
FINE ARTS CENTER
CREATIVE UPRISING(S)
April 4-6, 2008
NWT's biennial conference takes a global look at art and activism, emerging aesthetics, and the role of performance in cultural organizing
PUBLIC PERFORMANCES
Conference registration not required for performances
All performances take place in Bowker Auditorium
Friday, April 4 at 8 pm The Love in Revolution
Join the youth of Project 2050 as they discover, rewrite, remix and evolve REVOLUTION for a new generation!
Jose Torres Tama
Saturday, April 5th at 2 pm Community/One
A showcase of groundbreaking solo artists. D.to.Tenelle Mance, Jose Torres Tama and Jerry Quickley. Host: Xi-shine Wong
Saturday, April 5th at 8 pm breaking letter (s)
Suheir Hammad's new multimedia production, created in collaboration with media artist Waleed Zoiter
Suheir Hammad
Tickets: $15 general public $8 low income patrons, seniors, $5 student with valid ID
Call FAC Box Office 413 545 2511 Tickets available at FAC Box Office 413 545 2511
Interested in going to the conference?
Visit our website for details newworldtheater.org
Group prices, scholarships & volunteer opportunities still available!
Email Nicole at nmyoung@acad.umass.edu

Sports Blog
www.dailycollegiansports.blogspot.com

Arigato II ありがとう
Hibachi Steak & Seafood
15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails
Parking Garage
Pleasant St
Arigato
Arigato II
Main St
Town Hall
Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

A juicy piece of sudoku pie.

	1							3
2				1		8		5
			2			4	1
	8			7		3
		4	1		3	6
		1	9				8
	5	3		6
9		7	5					6
8							3

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Leafy course
6 Baby bear
9 Crosier
14 Texas mission
15 Scull propeller
16 Shinbone
17 Abrasive tools
18 August sign
19 Idle
20 City located in Oregon
22 Catholic community members
24 Inner selves
25 CD's rival
26 & so on
29 Sea eagle
30 Adler and Benson
35 Rex of the gridiron
38 Distributed hands
39 Seniors' org.
40 Picks out
43 City on the Aeneselva
44 Singer Shore
46 Tyrannize
48 Flummoxes
51 D.C. VIP
52 Cereal grass
53 Brace amours
54 Wilson's predecessor
56 Golfer Craig
60 Small carpet
64 Eagle's nest
65 Lincoln's boy
67 Take after
68 Impish smiles
69 Notable period
70 Native American emblem
71 Facets
72 Roman Pluto
73 Prophets

DOWN
1 Poet Teasdale
2 Lamenter's cry
3 Bind with cord
4 Sufficient
5 Medicinal quantities
6 Winter spell
7 Abu Dhabi, Dubai et al.
8 Ponders moodily
9 Clumsily written
10 Turner from Tennessee
11 Promote criminal activity
12 "Chariots of ..."
13 Minnesota
21 Typical patterns
23 Night flyer
26 Holy smokes!
27 Attribute
28 Mawkishly sentimental
31 Boxer Spinks
32 Intense beam
33 Bowler's lane
34 Mail component
36 Unwanted e-mail
37 Silent agreement
41 Tex-Mex menu items
42 Drag through the mud
45 Batting zero
47 Contaminates
49 Sheepish she
50 Arranged
55 Lake near Reno
56 Droops
57 Hatcher or Garr
58 Saharan
59 Fat elegantly
61 Unit cost
62 Operator
63 Precious stones
66 "Exodus" character

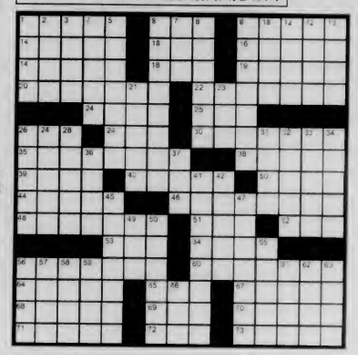
THIRTY-SIX DOWN: UNWANTED E-MAIL

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Of all days, the day on which one has not laughed is the one most surely wasted."

– Sébastien-Roch Nicolas de Chamfort

CLOSE UP OF AN UNUSED PIECE OF UNQUILTED TP BY AV WATERS



THE BROTHERS WATT BY WILLIAM WILSON

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
Don't Wait-
Jump Start Your Career
This Summer
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
Online Gen Ed's
Small Classes
Great Faculty
PLAN AHEAD!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
When fireworks grow up, they want to be strip clubs.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
You will develop and addiction to anime and lock yourself in a dark cave of talking swords, soul wizards and spikey hair.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
If you buy a jar of pickles, you just bought some food and a drink. Talk about a package deal!

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
As important as your significant other may be, having a long term relationship does nothing to improve your resume.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
There's nothing wrong with trying to be perfect. However, there is something quite wrong with thinking you actually got there.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
In case you are attacked by small, hungry primates, always carry a banana in your purse to appease their onslaught.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
Make like contact lenses and focus on the tasks that threaten to plague your week like a big fat cataract.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
No one is impressed that you can play Fur Elise on the piano. An earthworm can play that overplayed piece of rubbish.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Do you actually think you're so stalkable that you need to make all your pictures private? Now undo that so we can all look.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Blame contemporary society's treatment of women on Cyndi Lauper's contention "Girls just wanna have fun."

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Upgrading to a two gigabyte flashdrive won't make your sex drive any larger.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Triscuit crackers won't solve all the world's problems, but they provide a delicious and low-calorie place to start.

Love is in the air.
Oh no wait, that's my bad. The kid next to you just farted.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Belchertown center of town on bus route 2 bedroom 725 first last security 413-323-6511 9-2pm

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

2 bedroom apts in Sunderland HEAT, HOT WATER, CABLE, and INTERNET INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-665-3856

Studio 1,2,3,4 bedrooms available. Going fast, still guaranteeing for fall semester. ALL UTILITIES INCLUDED! Call ASAP 413-256-0741

APT. FOR RENT

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT
2 bedroom $1175
3 bedroom $1475
4 bedroom $2225
Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

EMPLOYMENT

Attention Juniors&Seniors: Fall 2008 internship with the student legal services office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys & clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experiience necessary- Full training provided. Contact our office at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

Be a Dell Campus Rep. Promote a top 30 company and gain real-world business and marketing experience! Go to RepNation.com/Dell to apply. andrewm@repnation.com 646-341-8283

Free can of the insanely-healthyenergydrink! Email DRINKVERVE@AOL.com

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement

EMPLOYMENT

(Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity. Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Close to Umass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard Call 549-4270.

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900.24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable. Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, MARCH 31, 2008

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen drop 2-of-3 to XU

Musketeers sweep Sunday after dropping series opener

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Xavier's Jordan Conley wasn't winning any popularity contests in the bottom of the third inning against the Massachusetts baseball team yesterday.

By the end of the game, he wasn't liked much more.

Conley recorded the final two outs of the game to preserve the Musketeer's 3-2 victory in the final game of the three-game series.

Earlier in the game, the Minutemen (5-10, 1-5 Atlantic 10) took exception to Conley's tag on base runner Ryan Francek in the third inning, and some members of the team left the dugout before being sent back by one of the umpires.

UMass will host Holy Cross Tuesday at Earl Lorden Field.

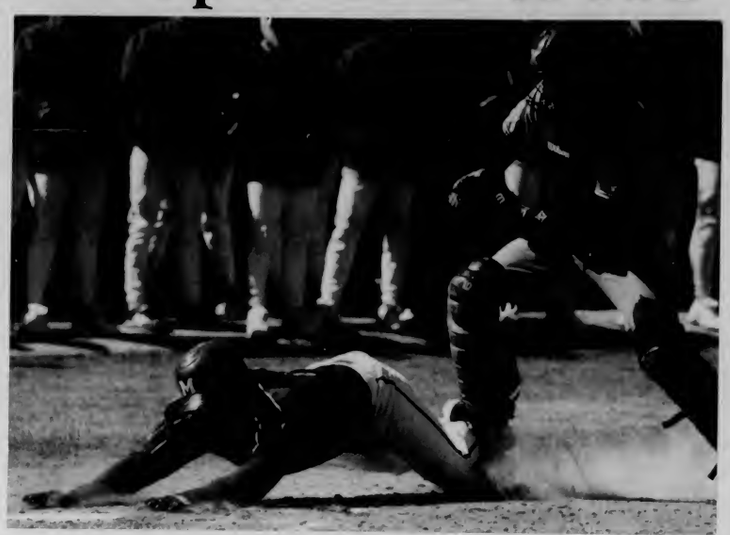
Jared Freni was pitching well for the Minutemen but was ejected from the game in the fourth inning.

After retiring the first batter he faced in the fourth, Freni hit Conley on the first pitch of the at bat, something the umpire viewed as intentional.

UMass coach Mike Stone tried to argue the call and after the game said the umpire had not issued a warning prior to the ejection.

"I thought it hurt us that [Freni] was ejected. There's no question about that because him going deep into the game saves Eilenberg for later on, you know; and that hurt us," Stone said.

Freni allowed one run in the 3 – 1/3 innings he pitched, and Eilenberg also pitched well – allowing two earned runs in 5 – 2/3 innings.



The main problem for the Minutemen was hitting. They mustered just four hits in the final game of the three-game series.

The Minutemen did have a chance to capitalize on a bases loaded situation in the first inning. Captain Bryan Garrity drew a bases-loaded walk to tie the game at one, but Ben Kessel flew out to center field leaving three UMass runners stranded on base.

"People need to get comfort-

See BASEBALL on page 7

Xavier	3
UMass	2
Xavier	10
UMass	5
UMass	7
Xavier	1

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Junior second baseman Adam Tempesta slides safely into home during yesterday's doubleheader at Earl Lorden Field. The Minutemen dropped both games to Xavier after winning their first A-10 game of the season on Friday, 7-1.

Clegg headlines new staff

Stone's new arms on display, Multner leads way at the plate

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

With Chris Lloyd's graduation and the season-ending injury to Jim Cassidy, the Massachusetts baseball team is without two of its best pitchers from last season.

But that doesn't mean the Minutemen are worse off on the mound in 2008.

Despite having an extremely young group of pitchers and many new faces on the team, UMass coach Mike Stone appears to have a deeper staff this season with more options in various roles than he did a year ago.

Stone's new ace, left-hander Mitchell Clegg, was on display Saturday at Earl Lorden Field against Xavier.

Overall, this weekend's three-game set was disappointing for UMass (5-10, 1-5 Atlantic 10) having been swept in the doubleheader yesterday, but the Minutemen got another impressive outing from Clegg in the series-opening win.

Clegg, a junior transfer from Maine, picked up his first win of the season after pitching eight strong innings against the Musketeers. Clegg allowed one run on seven hits, striking out four and walking one in the 7-1 victory.

Clegg has started four games for the Minutemen this season, sporting a 1-1 record to go along with his team-leading 2.13 earned-run average. Clegg has been durable and an innings eater for UMass, averaging almost seven innings per start. He has shown good command, with nine walks and 18 strikeouts in over 25 innings of work. He's only allowed four extra base hits thus far.

"He's a pretty good pitcher. We recruited him out of high school, but he decided to go to Maine," Stone said. "We feel good about him on the mound and the chances of him helping us out throughout the season."

At Maine last year, Clegg struggled in his 24 innings of work. He allowed 37 hits and 46 baserunners for a WHIP just under 2.00, and had an ERA of 6.00.

Clegg isn't the only transfer who has made an impact for UMass.

Bryan Leigh, a sophomore transfer from Barry University, has been a weekend starter for the Minutemen and ranks second on the team in innings pitched. Leigh struggled against Xavier

See PITCHING on page 8

MICHAEL PHILLIPS/COLLEGIAN

Mitchell Clegg pitched eight innings allowing one run in UMass's 7-1 win over Xavier on Saturday.

Sophomore recovers from shaky outing

Sanders stifles powerful Charlotte offense in Game 2

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The last time the Massachusetts softball team saw the field, sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders made an early exit, leaving after a 1 – 2/3 innings against Dartmouth on March 26.

UMass won the game behind Brandice Balschmiter, who came back in after winning Game 1 the same day, but it was not the type of victory the Minutewomen can get used to earning.

Sunday with Charlotte (18-19, 3-3 A-10) in town, Sanders found herself in trouble again in the second inning, giving up a double, single and a walk and putting UMass in an early 1-0 hole.

However, before things got out of hand again, Sanders got out of the inning, striking out first baseman Alyssa Kemmerer. Four days after getting sent to the dugout, Sanders said it was all mental.

"[The difference was] a little bit of trusting it a bit more, bringing it from the bullpen out onto the field," Sanders said. "Sometimes I get too much in my own head trying to strike everybody out. Once I relax and let our great defense do what

See SOFTBALL on page 7

UMass	5
Charlotte	2
UMass	7
Charlotte	1

Zwick leads Minutewomen past GW

Senior's gamewinner earns UMass first Atlantic 10 win

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team opened conference play over the weekend with a win and a loss, making its overall record 3-8 and 1-1 in the Atlantic 10.

On Friday evening, the Minutewomen traveled to Richmond, Va., where they lost 17-12 in both teams' Atlantic 10 opener; and on Sunday, the Minutewomen took on George Washington where they came out with a 9-8 overtime win.

Richmond, three-time defending A-10 Champions, proved its No. 1 A-10 preseason ranking. Richmond dominated the end of the game, scoring six goals, while UMass only scored two securing Richmond's win.

"We couldn't stop them in that stance; they came really hard at us," said UMass coach Alexis Venechanos. "[Other teams] are scoring bunches of goals in a short amount of time. [The Minutewomen] need to reset because we seem to get let down."

UMass improved and maintained its composure in Sunday's game against GW. Venechanos worried about her team's emotional state following the loss to Richmond, but the Minutewomen proved mentally strong, bouncing back to win a close game.

"I'm happy we responded in [Sunday's] game and kept our heads in it mentally because the game went into overtime," said Venechanos regarding the

See LACROSSE on page 8

UMass	9
GW	8
Richmond	17
UMass	12

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS

Senior attack Melynda Zwick scored the game-winning goal in UMass's 9-8 overtime win against George Washington yesterday.

BRIAN TEUTSCH/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders pitched seven innings and allowed two earned runs in UMass's 5-2 win over Charlotte.

APRIL

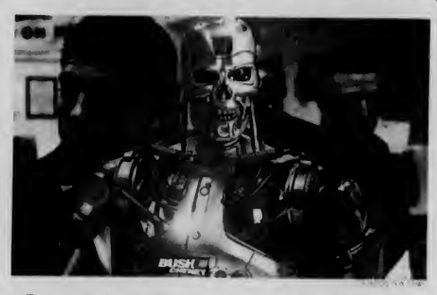
INSIDE: LIBEL! SLANDER! AND OTHER BC HEIGHTS APPROVED CONTENT!

THE MORNING WOOD

PUBLISHING AS OFTEN AS THE VOICE.

LOCUSTS : HI: NOT WARM LO: WICKED COLD | WWW.MORNINGWOOD.COM | TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2008

Terminator deletes SPIRE, fights for future



BY JOHN CONNORS
MORNING WOOD STAFF

Yesterday an artificially intelligent cyborg from the future took over Whitmore in an attempt to shut down SPIRE and save the future of civilization.

The cyborg, led by longtime University of Massachusetts student Ed Cutting, approached The Morning Wood following the takeover of Whitmore to comment on the events leading up to the protest.

"I was confronted by one cyborg last Tuesday; at the time, I thought he was just some guy trying to find his way around the campus, but when I looked closer, I noticed that it appeared his entire body appeared to be robotic, and roughly 8 feet tall," Cutting said. "I be-friended the highly advanced robotic cyber organism – my ability to understand and speak fluent binary definitely helped."

Cutting elaborated on the intention of the cyborg, telling The Morning Wood that it was sent back from the future, approximately year 2109, to destroy SPIRE. The Morning Wood has learned that in the year 2076, SPIRE becomes self-aware and launches an attack on all of mankind, effectively destroying civilization.

Tensions rise at last night's Republican Club meeting as Derek Kanah (left) voices opposition to the non-violent SPIRE destruction plan, supported by Brad DeFlumeri.

By year 2081, a small band of human survivors ban together to wage war on SPIRE; however, the future of mankind completely hinges on SPIRE being destroyed in the past.

"When I learned of the cyborg's mission, I immediately got on board, even enlisting the help of my fellow Republican Club members to try to bring some resolve to this situation," said Cutting.

Republican Club President Brad DeFlumeri helped organize the take-over of Whitmore.

"Ed [Cutting] told us that the cyborg planned on murdering the entire OIT staff and then actually melting the SPIRE server with his laser vision," said DeFlumeri. "While we [the Republican Club] don't often shy away from physical conflict, I felt it was important that we try to stop SPIRE without anyone getting hurt. The club managed to talk the robot out of mass homicide."

"We definitely took a page out of the RSU's [Radical Student Union] playbook here," said Cutting. "This seemed like an appropriate time to lead a rally and take over an administrative building."

Once in Whitmore, the Republican club had no problem convincing the present OIT staff to shut down SPIRE, due mainly to the fact that they were escorted by an eight-foot-tall robot holding a death-ray. OIT staff member Lars Marshall physically shut down SPIRE late last night, thereby saving the future of all humanity.

"When I was confronted by a rather large robot, as well as a blonde-haired student that appeared rather futuristic [referring to DeFlumeri] I felt that I better shut down the SPIRE system," said Marshall. "I'm happy to have played a part in saving civilization."

Not everyone was happy about the future of mankind being saved without any violence. The SGA released a statement to The Morning Wood last night reprimanding the Republican Club for their actions.

Carla Dominguez, speaker of the SGA Senate, spoke harshly of the Republican Club's heroics.

"I don't think it's ever appropriate to take over Whitmore, no matter the circumstances," she said. "This is just another example of the Republican Club just trying to get attention. The SGA won't tolerate behavior much longer."

DeFlumeri commented on the SGA's statement via telephone, calling everyone associated with the Student Government a "dirty hippy."

John Connors can be reached 101 years from now at terminator69@morningwood.com

Voice in deep financial crisis, $245 needed to publish

BY DICK HERTZ
MORNING WOOD STAFF

The Voice, the graduate student newspaper of the University of Massachusetts, is facing potential bankruptcy. The Voice, published bi-annually, may have to stop publication due to outstanding loans and a lack of advertising revenue.

Loans have allowed The Voice to publish twice this year; however, the pressure of publishing bi-annually is catching up with the graduate paper, and the future remains uncertain.

The Student Government Association of the University of Massachusetts provided The Voice with a loan of $245 to publish their spring edition, yet The Voice failed to generate the amount needed to pay back the interest-free loan. SGA President Aaron Buford commented on the situation.

"The Voice approached us in January, and we were more than happy to loan them the money," Buford said. "Now that it's April, we need that money to help fund our next strike, and The Voice doesn't seem to have the funds needed to re-pay us."

Buford also commented on the similarity to the loan provided to the Daily Collegian.

"We loaned The Collegian $20 thousand, and they managed to repay us," he said. "I suppose that's the advantage of doing business with a real newspaper."

Documents sent to The Morning Wood from the University show that The Voice receives substantial funding from the Graduate Student Senate in order to pay a T.A., who The Morning Wood determined must do absolutely nothing, or at least very little, due to the fact that the Voice publishes twice a year.

When asked to comment, I.A. John Shlongnose replied, "What's The Voice?"

With the future of the Voice in question, a number of students have rallied behind the paper, and hosted a "Save The Voice" rally yesterday at the Campus Center lawn. The Morning Wood estimates that six people attended, including senior and former Daily Collegian Editor in Chief Eric Athas.

"I had to come for a class," Athas said.

Other students in attendance echoed the same sentiment.

In related news, the University of Massachusetts Republican Club held a counter rally. The Morning Wood estimates between four and five hundred students attended, but many of them didn't know what they were rallying for.

Dick Hertz can be reached at dhertz@morningwood.com

Undead feast upon campus

BY CHUCKIE "BUTTERFIELD" SENNOTT
MORNING WOOD WAR CORRESPONDENT

NORTHEAST RESIDENTIAL AREA – In a third day of fighting that has left the quad covered in marshmallows and spare socks, zombies remain in control of swaths of campus despite calls for peace from the administration.

The ongoing violence - which has left Residence Life officials paralyzed as well as more than 50 humans dead and as many as 30 reanimated - has forced the University of Massachusetts Board of Trustees to convene in an emergency session in Boston.

"We're calling on both parties to lay down their arms, both the NERF guns and literally the human body parts, and come to the table," said Robert Connolly, spokesman for UMass President Jack Wilson. "Our number one concern is restoring security on the campus."

Efforts by University police and local resident assistants have failed to impose peace upon the North and Northeast residential areas, where the violence has escalated significantly over the past week after zombie leader cleric Dante Ciliberti called upon his followers to take to the streets fanning the flames of the sectarian conflict.

Bands of heavily armed human militias have clashed with zombies throughout the week in what some are calling a campaign of ethnic genocide in zombie controlled residential areas.

"Throughout campus humans have acted purely in self-defense," said Devin Ashe, general of the human liberation army. "Accusations of zombie cleansing and indeed genocide have been blown out of proportion by the western media and University officials."

Ashe refused to comment on reports that humans had been using chemical and biological weapons to forcibly convert zombies back to humanity.

Due to lack of basic brain functions, no zombies could be reached for comment.

Tuesday marked the most costly day for campus coalition forces since the fighting began last fall. In three separate road side attacks zombies managed to turn more than fifteen humans into lifeless walking corpses.

"The escalation in violence against coalition forces has come as a direct response to our stepped up presence in the region," said Ed Blaguszewski, spokesman for the University. "Based on what we've seen so far this week, the extremists on either side have been backed into a corner and are on the verge of collapse in the face of superior coalition fighting power and lack of support among the inhabitants of campus dormitories."

Blaguszewski said the administration hoped to draw down troop levels by at least 30 percent by the end of May, but only if violence between zombies and humans had de-escalated.

Neither Connolly nor Blaguszewski would say whether President Wilson's "Job Well Done" speech made atop the Whitmore Administration building last December had been premature.

"The president remains committed to a peace process," said Connolly. "Coalition forces will remain on the campus as long as we're invited to stay by interim Chancellor Thomas Cole."

Chuckie Sennott can be reached at playa059@hotmail.com.

Library Finally Safe

The W.E.B. Library was finally deemed safe yesturday when a massive condom was placed around its structure. Quoted as "better than sock method used in previous years," the library is now ribbed for your pleasure.

SGA takes credit for fall of Berlin Wall

BY NEIL GOLDMAN
MORNING WOOD CORRESPONDENT

In a statement released early yesterday, student leaders retroactively recognized the behind the scenes role of the Student Government Association in the reunification of Germany.

"When you think about the fall of the Berlin wall, you usually think of Reagan or Bush," said Aaron Buford, president of the Student Government Association. "It's important to look as well at those people who may have been less prominently featured, but more involved in the entire process."

The announcement came after weeks of painstaking research during which it had became clear that the University of Massachusetts SGA had been more integral in the negotiations than earlier thought, according to Buford. Early on student leaders – many of which are already heavily engaged in the ongoing talks with the administration – agreed to release the information to the public as soon as possible.

"It's all about transparency," Buford said. "This is about making sure student government is transparent in everything it does, from allocating funds to bringing democracy to East Germany."

Student Trustee Ruth Thompson called the recognition "long overdue."

"It's like, we've known about this the whole time and nobody else believed us," she said. "It's so, like, refreshing, you know? Everybody talks about this or that, but when you get to the point, it's all about students organizing and coming together and spreading the word."

Neither Thompson nor Buford could specify when the documents with information verifying the role of the SGA in reuniting Germany would be provided, but said they expected the announcement to give the negotiating team heavy leverage against the University administration in coming weeks.

"I mean, how do you bargain with someone who has stood up to both communist dictators and Mike Gargano," Thompson said.

Jeff Napolitano, president of the Graduate Student Senate, praised the reunification of Germany for embodying the spirit of last semester's general student strike.

See SGA on page 2

THE MORNING WOOD
CXVIII
ISSUE 1,000,000
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.morningwood.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF John McClaine
MANAGING EDITOR Dr. Quinn MD
BUSINESS MANAGER Jerry Seinfield
PRODUCTION MANAGER Pizza the Hut
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Pheobe Buffay
ADVERTISING MANAGER Barney Gumble
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Jamie Lee-Curtis
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Brian Daubach
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR The jump to conclusions gets from Office Space
COMICS EDITOR Zoolander
EDITORIAL EDITOR Vin Diesel
NEWS EDITOR Randy Marsh
SPORTS EDITOR Chris Griffin
FEATURES EDITOR Big Gov Al
PHOTO EDITOR Bishop Cardinal Law
WEB EDITOR David Blaine
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Prince
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Drunk girl from SNL
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Lisah Simpson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Susie Sweatpants
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Prof. Chaos
ASST. EDITORIAL Manute Bol
ASST. EDITORIAL Angela from the Office
ASSISTANT NEWS Doug Funnie
ASSISTANT NEWS Dolly Parton
ASSISTANT NEWS Patty Mayonaise
ASSISTANT SPORTS The great hambino
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Stone
ASSISTANT SPORTS Ric Flair, wooooooo
ASSISTANT PHOTO The Mad Magazine kid
ARTS WEB EDITOR Tim's last hire
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Mitch Hedberg
NEWS WEB EDITOR Grover
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Lappas

THE MORNING WOOD APPEARS EVERY APRIL 1ST. THE WOOD IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, YET EQUALLY SHARED BY MEN. FOUNDED EARLY THIS MORNING, THE PAPER BEGAN AS THE LIMP NOODLE, BY AND THE WET DREAM AROUND 9:01, THE SUPPOSED CHILD AT 9:14 AND THE PUBERTY TEST AFTER 9:56. HAPPENING DAILY SINCE THE BEGINNING OF TIME, MORNING WOOD HAS BEEN SURVIVING ZOOMASS STUDENTS SINCE APRIL 1994. FOR PROPER HANDING AND QUICK CURES, CALL BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M. (FOR YOU LATE RISERS)

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Blow Jahomie

COPY EDITOR
Some Broad

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chrome Dome

WEB EDITOR
Steve Games Sucks!!!

BOOM

SGA unites Germany

SGA from on page 1

including bringing an end to a secret police presence in East Germany, control over state space, and rolling back totalitarianism.

Napolitano would not comment on the current level of diversity in Germany, but said the GSS and United Student Action coalition were both ready and willing to work with the newly unified government to make citizenship more accessible to minorities.

The announcement left some UMass students with a bad taste in their mouth. Republican Club President Brad DeFlumeri criticized members of the SGA for "falsifying the record."

"Ask anyone and they'll tell you Ronald Reagan brought down the Berlin Wall, defeated the Soviet Union, and ended the Cold War," DeFlumeri said. "Maybe David Hasselhoff helped a little, but it was mostly Reagan. Even an uneducated hippie can see the plethora of evidence for that."

Students like junior Leopold Stotch spoke out in favor of the reunification process.

"It's nice to know that the members of the SGA have expanded their horizons beyond the campus and onto another continent," he said. "Even on a war-torn continent like Africa, the SGA can heal rifts and bring people together just as they have here at UMass."

Sex scandal rocks presidential election

BY SALACIOUS CRUMB
MORNING WOOD STAFF

Nestled within the bowels of the East Coast, Fistington, Delaware is a little slice of Americana that still reflects the nostalgia and values that this great nation was built upon. As if torn from the canvas of a Norman Rockwell painting, a crotchety old man yells obscenities at a group of schoolchildren on the corner while a pregnant mother mixes amphetamines into her Dunkin Donuts iced coffee. This is America.

But last night, this sleepy modest town became the stage for one of the most exciting moments in the 2008 democratic presidential campaign possibly in campaign history.

Senator and presidential frontrunner Barack Obama, in a moment of sporadic candor, interrupted Senator Hillary Clinton's response to a debate question with a rebuttal of his own. From his podium he walked across the stage, extended his right hand and proceeded to grope Senator Clinton's backside.

Sources at the rear of the stage remain unclear as to the nature of Obama's actions. While some have described the hand motion as a delicate pinch, more playful in nature than anything else, others assert that there was a legitimate and aggressive squeeze as if to suggest that Senator Obama wanted Hillary to tell him who her Daddy was.

When asked about the incident later in the evening, Senator Obama explained in between handfuls of Doritos, "Hillary has got brains and booty. I love my wife, but like America, I needed a change."

Initially, Senator Clinton seemed unfazed by her opponent's on-stage approach, but the pressure of his mighty political hand on her badonkadonk undoubtedly affected the political heroine. Her face immediately became shaped like an "O" and she let out an audible yelp, suggesting a mixture of both pain and pleasure. This seems to support claims that Hillary and Bill Clinton are avid practitioners of the sexual art form sadomasochism.

After the debate, Clinton explained to the press, "As most people know, Bill plays saxophone, so I'm used to strong hands, but I was quite impressed with the power of Bobama's long boney fingers." Yes, she has a pet name for Barack.

Later in the evening, as the crowd dissipated, janitors took out mops to clean up the area where Hillary's excitement had found its way to the floor.

This is not the first time that sexual exploits have found their way into the race for the White House. In fact, there is a lengthy precedent of executive molestation dating back to an incident involving George Washington's dentures, Abigail Adams and a move now known as "the angry pirate." More recently, during the 1980 presidential election season, Jimmy Carter was caught with his hand in, or on, the cookie jar when he gave Nancy Reagan a purple nurple so epic that it bled. Meanwhile, John McCain is reported to have poured his glass of champagne all over Barbara Bush's blouse at White House dinner last November. Needless to say, her shirt was white.

Pollsters are still unsure of how the incident will affect Senator Obama's ratings, but history seems to suggest that the Americans are always willing to forgive sexual fortitude. At the end of the evening, before getting in her limousine, Senator Clinton was seen with a large zucchini and was overheard saying, "If I am elected president, I would definitely hire Senator Obama as an intern."

New top killer of women

Serial killer murders his way to the top

BY H. H. HOLMES
MORNING WOOD STAFF

Sioux Falls, S.D. — A report released yesterday morning confirmed suspicions that heart disease and cancer are no longer the top killers of American women, acting Surgeon General Steven Galson said.

"This marks the first day in the history of America that neither heart disease nor cancer are the No. 1 killer of women ages 18 to 45 in our country," Galson said. "Having killed 330,514 women as of last night, this 'Silent Killer' is a clear winner. Ladies and gentlemen, I'd like to welcome Mr. Geoffrey Burbank."

Burbank, 47, originally of Timber Lake, S.D., walked onstage to a mix of cheers and jeers, to address the nation.

"Every great change represents the prevalence of man," he began. "Late last night, in the quiet suburban home of Ms. Fitzpatrick, mankind has finally triumphed over his greatest opponent: God."

Amid cries of joy and a few gasps of disbelief, Burbank continued his speech. "It all started as a bet with my college roommate, Dan. We were talking about the rising incidence of heart disease among the American population and he bet me $20 that nothing will beat it as the No. 1 killer of women," he said.

"And damn it, I proved him wrong!" Cheers erupted from the crowd while a single tear ran down Burbank's cheek. "Not believing Dan would ever pay me the $20, I started small by killing women in only the thousands for the first few years. Within the last decade, though, I realized that I would never top both cancer and heart disease in my quest, and took it up a notch."

"I've worked very hard for this title and I am glad to be able to share it with this great nation," Burbank continued. "Unfortunately, I am very busy and must get back to work to secure my place in next year's mortality rate competition!"

With his final statement and stage exit, the crowd erupted in a frenzy. When the mob subsided, it was found that Mr. Burbank was, yet again, hard at work, having claimed 73 female victims in the audience.

Currently the FBI has posted a $10 million reward for the successful capture of Burbank. If you have any information of his whereabouts, please contact your local police station or FBI field office.

Cutting to sue himself, UM confused

BY CMDPPE
MORNING WOOD STAFF

In a surprise move, longtime University of Massachusetts student and Republican Club member Ed Cutting threatened legal action against himself last weekend.

"With my unmatched experience in the law, and having threatened to sue so many in the past, I feel this action is long overdue," said Cutting.

Cutting is suing himself because of a pro-affirmative action decision he made last week.

"I have made mistakes in the past and, from now on, I will no longer allow myself to meet the age quota for this campus!" he said.

Cutting has long touted his experience with the law, in his many years of experience both at UMass and around campus. This will not be the first time Cutting sues the threat of a lawsuit to force action. He has threatened lawsuits against all of the clubs, agencies and governmental organization with the exception of the Republican Club and the largely unknown student-run group, Fans-of-Michael-Gargano-unite-to-bring-Abercrombie-and-Fitch-models-to-campus-to-help-demonstrate-a-model-community-or-I-will-sue.

Now that Cutting is filing his complaint he will be one group away from making his impact felt throughout the entire campus community.

In an unprecedented action, lawyers throughout the Pioneer Valley and state have come out to assist Cutting in his efforts. Attorney James Smith said, in regards to Cutting's case, "At long last [Cutting] has found a lawsuit that requires my full support and energy. Together we will win this case."

Officials: Too much diversity on campus

Admissions renews focus on bro-dudes

BY NADA FITCHGIRL
MORNING WOOD STAFF

The University of Massachusetts admissions office will be implementing a new affirmative action program next year to combat what officials have called "too much diversity."

The new policy is designed to advantage straight white males (SWMs), particularly "bro-dudes," according to a press release, which noted that SWMs are not to be confused with Silly White Liberals (SWLs). UMass plans to phase out all other genders, ethnicities and sexualities by 2015.

"Straight white males have been victims of reverse racism for far too long," said UMass President Jack Wilson. "Just because they have historically been advantaged doesn't mean they should not continue to receive the upper hand at all levels of our society."

In addition to prioritizing according to race, gender and sexuality, the UMass Office of Admissions will award additional points for a suburban upbringing; owning a dirty Red Sox hat; the ability to quote any episode of "Family Guy"; using the word "bro" at least three times in the application essay; a tendency to riot after sporting events; and owning a pink polo, with additional points awarded for popping the collar. Hair gel and an artificial tan also will earn applicants additional points.

Former Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs and Campus Life Michael Gargano, reportedly an architect of the policy, heralded the arrival of a "glorious new era" at the University.

"Bro-dudes love Abercrombie and Fitch," Gargano said. "They certainly prefer it to Old Navy. It is gratifying to see my policies coming to fruition at UMass, despite my departure."

Wilson also called the plan "financially lucrative."

"We won't have to fund the ALANA caucus, the Stonewall Center or the Everywoman's Center anymore. Or pay custodians to clean the girls' bathrooms. This will create all manner of new opportunities for the University," he said.

Dan Smith, a junior communications major, said the policy sounded "sweet, bro."

"At UMass, we never thought we'd see the day when we could go to 'The Penis Monologues,'" he said, adjusting his crotch.

Brad DeFlumeri, president of the UMass Republican Club, offered to be interviewed and said he had conflicted feelings on the new policy.

"At first, I wanted to hold a counterprotest to take a stand against the pending lack of attractive women on campus," DeFlumeri said. "But then I realized we would no longer be subjected to gay pornography at our University, so I decided to support the move."

The United Student Action Coalition protested the new policy, but their demands went unheard.

Vice Chancellor for Campus Affairs and Student Life Esther Terry declined to comment.

Pull out tactic far too messy

WASHINGTON, D.C. — The Bush administration yesterday gained new ground against the call to withdraw troops from Iraq. In a surprisingly frank address, Gen. David Petraeus argued that "pulling out early" would "just make a huge mess" in Iraq.

"We're in there. We plunged in there as deep as we could, and we gotta stay in there 'til we're done," he said. "In the U.S. military, it doesn't matter what godforsaken hole you get stuck in. It's your duty to pursue victory rigorously unto its joyous conclusion."

He warned against the dangers of premature evacuation, which he called "the single greatest embarrassment an army can suffer." Rather, he said the U.S. Army should aim for "a sustained engagement," which he called feasible because of its "legendary staying power."

Associated Press

YOU LOOK LIKE YOU COULD USE A REST

YEAH, ENJOY!

Brought to you by:
the American National Council for Chairs and Sitting Devices.
Over a century and counting of chairfilled enjoyment.

UF UNIVERSITY of FLORIDA

YOU'LL BE SHOCKED TO LEARN HOW MUCH FUN YOU WILL HAVE Newly Announced Programs:

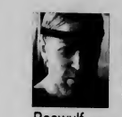
- Public Speaking
- Human Behavior
- Political Opinion
- Electrical Devices
- Police Enforcement
- Media Coverage
- Community Help
- Risk Assesment

Please visit us online at WWW.DONT-EASE-ME-BRO.COM



THE MORNING WOOD

THE BARTLETT STALL

TODAY, THE WORLD ENDS

"'Salman Rushdie is sentenced to death.' - Ayatollah Khomeini

Brave Beowulf battles bureaucracy

Beowulf

Greetings, People of UMass! I am Beowulf, Hygelac's thane. I have done many triumphant deeds. In my far-off homeland, we have heard of the fame of your terrible beast. Wanderers tell me you have suffered great losses, that your Student Union sits empty while the stars shine through by night. Now, I will fight alone, and prove my valor to the student body.

Where is the beast of Whitmore? Show me to its cave.

Here, against the fiend, I will bring this matter to an end. Now I ask, people of UMass, that I be let alone to purge your campus, with only the help of my noble men. I have heard that the evil fiend, in his reckless ways, hikes all tuition, sends his monstrous kin to search through dorms, heeds not the words of the great ALANA, paints the walls a hideous pink.

Where is the desolate dwelling place of the vile administration? I will do a great deed of valor. I myself will slay it.

My purpose was fixed, when I came across the ocean. I sat in my ship with my warrior horde, knowing I would meet the desires of the people of UMass, or else be killed by Whitmore. Now I will accomplish that deed, make myself worthy of praise, or else I will breathe my last of breaths, here on the Haigis Mall.

Show me the bureaucratic monster!

I, Beowulf, greatest of warriors, fully expect, with help from no man, to slash through the beast's red tape. Show me the bureaucratic monster! One of us must meet his death, once we meet in battle.

In my home, I have heard many tales, and now I fully expect that the monster wishes to make false promises, wishes to ignore the courageous men of the student body. Therefore, I, without the aid of any man, will ascend the concrete ramp in valor, to face the vile fiend!

People of . . . what? It's not an actual monster? Dammit, guys, why didn't you check? I swear to God, if this happens again . . . I mean, c'mon . . . do you see how much of an idiot I look like now?

People of UMass! I, Beowulf, son of Eegtheow, have crossed the seas to perform a feat of valor, to slay your mighty beast! However, after many long discussions, my warrior horde has reached the conclusion that it is not in the best interest of certain parties to do noble acts of courageous valour at the present time. Good luck with the college thing! I, Beowulf, have to run.

Beowulf is the son of Eegtheow.

A message from Dunk

Mike "Dunk" Gargano

Greetings from Louisiana State University! Boy I do miss you UMass students – there was a welcome parade for me when I arrived here (I think John organized it – he's a wily old imp), but these LSU students don't share your fervor for papier-mâché effigies.

Things have been great since I took up office here at LSU. There's a bit of a housing shortage, so Chancellor Lombardi and I are currently sharing a room (we got bunk beds!).

I'm glad to hear that last semester's student strike faired well for all of you shaggy-haired do-gooders. I must say I am at a loss – very opposition from the strike was misinformed. Silly me, I was under the impression that you kids wanted fees lowered; had I known, as I've now learned, that the strike would result in a fee increase, I'd be marching on Whitmore with you. Alas, hindsight is always 20/20.

Anyways, I'm making great strides here in the Bayou State. As you all know, the economy here is still a little lackluster in the aftermath of Hurricane Katrina, but I'm not about to let that stop me from making LSU into a top-of-the-line, money-making research institution. I'm going to help this fine university pick itself up by its bootstraps – we need less Salvation Army and more Wal-Mart.

Louisiana is also a lot different than Western Massachusetts demographically; there's much less clamoring by angry grad students and SGA members for more "diversity." This place has plenty of black people – I even made friends with one of them!

Some of you may have heard that my sudden departure from UMass actually resulted in a pay increase (thanks, United Student Action Coalition!). Well, I've spent that extra $40,000 wisely. I bought myself a fan boat, and ol' Lombardi and I wrestle alligators on the weekends. John lost a couple of fingers a few weeks back, but with his paycheck (he puts me to shame), he was able to afford some new ones on the black market (is "African American" market more politically correct? I can't keep up these days). He's so happy with the transplant, he's considering investing in a new liver, some lungs – maybe even a new prostate.

But anyway, I digress. I'm really writing this to thank you, the UMass student body. I know we haven't always seen eye to eye, especially when the ALANA kids tried to argue about that "equality" nonsense ("Equality," still not sure what that is. Is that one of those embattled African countries?) And of course, I know you folks did your best to get me fired and keep me from ever working again; when Westfield State passed me over, I thought it worked, too. But good ol' John, like a benevolent Hoboken, N.J., Mafioso, helped me out and hey presto, $40,000 smackaroos extra per year.

Anyway, just thought I'd check in and tell you kids that I miss you. I wish we could catch up more, but I just got word that there's a gator loose outside the library, and John and I have to go wrestle him out of there. Stay in touch. Toodles!

Mike "Dunk" Gargano is the former scapegoat for everything the SGA, ALANA Caucus, RSU and Ed Cutting dislike about UMass.

Return of 'The Pants'

Susie Sweatpants

Hey hey everyone, the bitch is back, lol … no JK I'm not a bitch, well yes I am, but like, so what? Lol. So it's been a long time since I got to write a column, but when the Morning Wood hollered at me I was so totally down to dish.

So I guess what I want to chat about is my dream man, well dream men lol! JK UMass relax I'm no slut, I'm all about waiting until the second date, I'm a lady. So anyway, I just recently got out of a pretty legit relationship, and not to open the X-files for too long, I wanted to tell you about my former BF. His name is Chad, but I called him C-rad, lol … now I call him C-asshole, because that's what he is. Like, he seemed like the perfect match for me, he was totally hot, wicked buff and super tan. He was much taller than me, which is modef crucial, had super hot dark hair, all spiky, and he wore the hottest lip gloss ever! Anyway C-douche face broke up with me after he told me I gave him something called gonorrhea … and I was like, all I gave you was my heart, and you totally broke it, retard!

So in the wake of this disaster I needed some cheering up. Luckily, my crazy sexy bitches were there for me ASAP after the heartbreak of a lifetime. BT dubs, my bitches are amazing, we all live together in JQA, who was the hottest president for sure. I'm actually the SGA rep for my building! Hello super awesome resume. I fought our R.D. so I could bring my kitty to school, hey Kitty! So I digress (word of the day calendar, thanks mum!). My bitches took me to the Monkey Bar, then the Pub last thirsty Thursday, and everyone knows the hottest dudes at UMass go to the Monkey Bar and the Pub. I mean I'd hate to be seen with those non-tan losers at all the other bars in this town.

Okay, so this sounds super fricken crazy, but this is what I drank. Four shots of soco and lime, 2 vodka cranberries, (yeah, fuck calling them Cape Codders, I'm from Jersey, we don't give a shit about Cape Cod), then I had like 2 Long Island Ice-teas (long island guys holla!) That's all I remember lol … but when I woke up I was so with the hottest guy on the planet, he was even nice enough to give me a copy of the bus schedule so I could get back to campus in time for class! If you read this hott guy, call me, I left my number written on my panties lol! I'm such a crazy bitch!!! Oh I kinda need those back, they are the only panties I have that don't show lines under my super tight stretch sweats.

So now that I'm available for the first time in weeks, I'm going to tell you all about my dream man. He is 6'2" at least, has a six pack, and pecs big enough to do that man boobie dance thing lol! Anyway, he needs to have a blowout, I love blowouts, and a great tan, the tanner the better, baby! He also needs to have a great smile, nice ass, and a large wang. Money is important, he needs to be loaded, because I'm a princess and I need to be treated like one.

Oh, and a good personality, and stuff is important, I think someone needs to be smart, well at least as smart as me to be dateable, I'm a C student in psychology, which as you all know is probably the hardest major next to like, being a doctor. And most importantly he needs to love my Kitty!

Hi Kitty!

Alright men of UMass so there it is, I'm totally hott, single, super smart and awesome, and like, I'm looking for Mr. Right. So if you think you got what it takes to handle a crazy, beeyatch like me, hit me up on Facebook.

So in the wake of this disaster I needed some cheering up, luckily my crazy sexy bitches were there for me ASAP after the heartbreak of a lifetime. BT dubs my bitches are amazing, we all live together in JQA, who was the hottest president for sure.

Susie Sweatpants is a Morning Wood Columnist. She can be reached via Facebook.com, username Susie Sweatpants.

Malcolm's manifesto: The rise of Chumocracy

Malcolm Chu

I, Malcolm Chu, have taken the liberty of dismantling the SGA, the soulless relic of America's capitalist past. As the leader of the newly-formed People's Republic of Malcolm Chu, I declare that all existing officers in the former governing body will be hereon out referred to as comrade. I have rewritten our manifesto and it will be distributed throughout campus.

I ask my fellow comrades to please adhere to our Diversity mandate. Just yesterday, Comrade Ruth Thompson notified me that a comrade was wearing the same pair of brown and white Pumas as her. This is unacceptable. How can we be a diverse institution when our comrades have the same name, wear the same brand of shoes, and have the same L'Oreal number 200 bleach blond hair dye?

This behavior is inexcusable. In an effort to increase diversity, I am proud to announce the People's Republic of Malcolm Chu has formally seceded from the University. We have fought a long, harrowing battle on this campus, but the time has come to form our own, independent state.

In an effort to increase diversity, I am proud to announce the People's Republic of Malcolm Chu has formally seceded from the University.

We beg the rebel factions of students still occupying the People's Republic of Whitmore to give up your stations and join our ranks. UMass is swarming with enemies of the Republic and we must join together in battle.

Brad DeFlumeri, the Il Duce of the Conservative regime, has called for the expulsion of all comrades left of Newt Gingrich. That means you comrade. Members of the GSS have already left their posts and joined the revolution. Comrades are encouraged to come to the Union of Student Socialists for their reeducation.

In other news, the Campus Center hostage crisis has since been defused. Members of the human race detained Comrades Mishi Leiblum and Lindsay McCluskey for two weeks after they were mistaken for the zombies that have ravaged the Republic. Comrade Leiblum and Comrade McCluskey reported being hit repeatedly with bullets that had the size, shape and taste of marshmallows. They just barely survived.

Comrade Chu can be reached at mchu@diversity.alana.getcpsoutofdorms.screw mikegargano.edu

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

DO AS WE SAY ... OR PAY BACK OUR LOAN

Dear editor:
Re: "SGA meets for five hours, eats pizza, accomplishes nothing." News, March 15, 2008.

I think I speak on behalf of the entire Student Government Association (SGA), the couple dozen students who voted in our election, and the 400 impoverished children from Third World countries we captured and brought here to make UMass look more "diverse," when I say "shame on you!"

In fact, after the publication of such slanderous propaganda as that article, the SGA voted to issue a formal condemnation, and we would've, too, except too many of us fell asleep after we ate all of that pizza and we couldn't reach quorum.

The SGA, being a highly-effective governing body, knows what is best for the student body, despite having a turnout for our elections smaller than that of Berkshire DC's Taco Night. On top of that, however, we also know what makes good journalism. Good journalism makes everything a race issue, including stories about potholes on campus and how they affect commuters from the inner city. Good journalism is letting us read your stories before they get printed, so we can make sure they're fair and balanced. But most of all, good journalism makes us look good. Damn good.

We really think you should reconsider how you cover the SGA. Remember that loan we gave you? Of course you do, because we mention it whenever we take issue with your content decisions. Did you think we provided that loan because we value the importance of an autonomous, legitimate news outlet? Of course not – we have The Voice!

We wanted a puppet. Now dance, puppet, dance.

Of course, to be fair, we do appreciate your photographers taking pictures of us shouting into megaphones and giving dirty looks to ineffectual administrators during the student strike. Those are hanging on the fridge in the SGA office, which is filled with baking soda and spoiled milk because we are never there.

Finally – transparency, transparency, transparency. We don't know what this word means, but it's in our bylaws that we have to use it when we speak to The Collegian because it sounds fancy.

Dave Ersity
SGA Senator

A SOUND ARGUMENT (LETTER ARCHETYPE)

Dear editor:
Rabble rabble rabble! Rabble, rabble; rabble rabble rabble. Rabble rabble rabble rabble – rabble rabble rabble.

Rabble rabble rabble? Rabble rabble, rabble rabble.

Alexander Q. Muttonchops, M.D.
Amherst

WE GET IT. YOU WIN.

Dear editor:
We have read your many letters condemning our recent policies. Due to the stirring arguments therein, we have had, as they say, "a change of heart." From today onward, we will cease all telephone surveillance. We also feel bad and would like to make it up to you, and to America. We will pay everybody's next Verizon bill.

The NSA

Dear editor:
We should have known, after knowingly ignoring three decades worth of bumper stickers, that we were dead wrong. "A rainbow" – we thought – "how trite!" Our minds, however, were unprepared for the nigh-unto-poetic arguments expressed in your Editorial/Opinion page last week. We thank you for showing us the light. Tibet will be freed by tomorrow.

The People's Republic of China

Dear editor:
The people of UMass are right. Condoms for everyone!

Pope Benedict XVI

Dear editor:
One can only hear "Free Burma Now!" so many times before giving in. This is our surrender.

The Burmese Military Junta

Dear editor:
You college folk sure are right. I screwed this country up good. In Texas, we've got a saying that goes, "It is wrong to abuse the trust of the people by starting a war in Iraq, again." I never paid attention to that saying.

You probably have oneathem big words like "resignate" or "self-impeachify" that I could use, but I'm only a Yale boy and I have to keep it short. So here it goes: I quit.

George W. Bush
United States President

STOP THE ABUSE

Dear editor:
Consider this a cease and desist. We are tired of reading metaphorical abuse after metaphorical abuse of George Orwell's "1984" on your opinion page. We get it – "big brother is watching." Read a new dystopian novel.

George Orwell's Estate

Dear editor:
This is a message for the leftist (read: STPEC) students on campus. Please stop buying hats and T-shirts with my likeness on them; I am dead, and none of the funds collected therein go to my cause.

They sell those things at Wal-Mart. Even I can taste the irony from the grave. If you insist on paying homage to me, a revolutionary you probably don't really know anything about to begin with, at least make your own clothing out of recyclable materials.

Viva la revolution!

Che Guevara

This letter was translated from el Castellano. It was written on parchment with blood.

PARENTAL GUIDANCE

Dear editor:
Sean, stop using big words in your column, you just sound like an assbole. Dad and I know that you're just trying to compensate for being inept with women and at athletic activity, but to the average reader, you come off like a douche.

Also, you left your Nexium in the bathroom. We express-mailed it so you don't get another tummy ache.

Hugs and kisses.

The Parents of S.P. Sullivan,
Ed/Op Editor

Dear editor:
Screw the king!

John Hancock

Letters to the editor should never be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com. In the event that you get a sudden surge of masturbatory self-importance, do not send them via snail-mail, as then we have to transcribe them and waste even more time handling your bullshit opinions. Letters to the editor will be edited to meet with content and space constraints, and editorial staff reserves the right to make fun of your dumbass opinions to whoever is in the newsroom at that particular point in time.

INSIDE: MINUTEMEN TAKE ON FLORIDA IN NIT SEMIFINALS | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SHOWERS : HI: 62 LO: 37 | WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM | TUESDAY APRIL 1, 2008

UM mourns loss of student

Friends and family of UMass student Katherine Sherman gathered at the Crafts Center last night to celebrate her life.

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Mourners of University of Massachusetts junior Katherine "Katie" Sherman's death and celebrants of her life gathered in the Craft Center in the Student Union last night to express their emotions through song, stories and knowing silence.

Sherman died suddenly while studying abroad in Auroville, India. Little information is available regarding the circumstances surrounding her death, but students, family and close friends chose instead to focus and share the events of her life both at UMass and elsewhere.

Sherman was a student in the College of Humanities and Fine Arts with a concentration in photography and since Jan. 28, has been studying sustainable living, ecology and group dynamics there.

For the past two years Sherman worked on the Craft Center's staff and Paula Hodecker, center director, said, "This is a celebration of her life, not to forget her."

Hodecker said Sherman was a thoughtful student who wrote small notes to brighten people. "She was an example, even to me. And I've got a lot of years on her."

In Auroville, Sherman was working on a documentary with other members of Living Routes, an organization that offers sustainable educational programs aimed at making leaders out of those who take part, according to the group's Web site. Members of the program held their services on March 26; and according to a statement, "[the week following Sherman's death] was fully devoted to creating a support system for the students (and faculty and staff) in India, dealing with the many logistical details and aiding Katie's family."

The release continued, "the students are being closely held, and seem to be dealing with their emotions and reactions in a healthy way."

It was fitting that Sherman's work was focused on the Indian practice of creating Kolams, or intricate patterns made from ground rice. The powder is spread in front of Indian homes to invite organisms to share their homes with. It symbolizes humanity's coexistence with other forms of life.

Close friend Katie O'Connor said, "Katie was the first person from UMass to make an effort to be my friend."

She said that after transferring, she was welcomed fully by Sherman who helped O'Connor become involved in the Craft Center. After O'Connor was hired by the center, Sherman invited her to spend the night with she and her friends.

"She taught me everything I know [involving the Craft Center,]" O'Connor said. "Before she left for India, she refused to say goodbye to anyone, which I really appreciated. That's just the way that she was. It really makes you realize how important the people around you are, that you really just have to be more like Katie."

O'Connor added that though it may seem cliché to ask why Sherman was taken instead of anyone else, she said, "But she really was the best. She loved life, really did."

Students shared stories and sang songs to commemorate Sherman, who passed away while studying abroad in India.

Those gathered were encouraged to share their stories. Hodecker said sharing that love puts more of it out into the world. Students sang her favorite Bright Eyes songs and shared stories with laughter interjecting — half chocked by lumped throats and suspended sobs. Quivering hands made it difficult to read the personal letters prepared by friends, but the boxes of Kleenex were forgotten after a while as students chose instead to speak of her glittered eyeliner, impulsive hairstyles and boundless creativity.

Hodecker said she was constantly creating, and students passed out lithographs and buttons of her artwork. The Craft Center's display window acted as a tribute to a talent

See SHERMAN on page 6

University designates pedestrian only zones

New policy enacted designed to increase safety for students

BY CAITLIN QUINN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students and faculty with cars and service vehicles will have to avoid driving in certain areas of campus to steer clear of fines starting April 6.

In an effort to improve safety on walkways, specific routes will be open only to pedestrians in accordance with new University policy.

"From what we've been told from the Physical Plant, we have not had an instance where someone has been seriously injured, but you don't want a situation where you have heavy pedestrian traffic and vehicles," said University of Massachusetts spokesman Ed Blaguszeuski. "We want to eliminate the pedestrian vehicles conflict."

The University of Massachusetts Police Department will be enforcing the pedestrian only zones, and have already begun and "informational campaign" by telling drivers who enter the area about the new regulations, according to Physical Plant Director Pat Daly.

In addition, Blaguszeuski said, "We sent a broadcast email to faculty and staff."

Maps showing the maze of walkways that are included in these areas can be found on the Physical Plant's Web site. These maps are also being sent to off-campus vendors and service companies.

The areas off limit to vehicles will be the walkway from the Whitmore ramp to the library, and the area from the parking garage traffic circle to North Pleasant Street. The courtyard between the Lederle Graduate Research Center and the Conte Polymer Research Center and the plaza on the south side of Lederle GRC are also included in this list.

During the beginning of the implementation of the pedestrian only zones, violators will be given warning citations.

See PEDESTRIAN on page 6

The pathway running between Bartlett and Herter Hall is just one of several sections of campus that will soon be off limits to vehicles.

Earth Hour goes unnoticed among students

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

For many, turning the lights off has never been a big deal, but on March 29, millions sat together in darkness for one hour to help raise awareness on climate change.

"It is crucial that people participate in making their lives more green," Manager of Public Relations for the World Wildlife Fund Dan Forman said. "It's the first step in raising awareness."

Earth Hour was created by the WWF in Sydney, Australia, in 2007.

However, the evening was unheard of for many students at the University of Massachusetts.

Freshman Angela Halliday, who believes that raising awareness about the environment is important, was unaware both of what Earth Hour is, and when it took place.

"I think they should find more effective ways to notify people and make the public more aware of how something as simple as turning off your lights for one hour will make a change," she said. "Facebook, MySpace and TV are good ways to reach the student body."

Even with the large number of participants, Earth Hour will not have a long-term effect on climate change. It may put it on people's radar, but there is more that needs to be done.

On WWF's Web site, it states that the United States is the world's single largest contributor to global warming, with average annual emissions of 19.6 tons per person, nearly five times the world average of 3.9 tons per person.

They provide simple ways to reduce the amount of carbon dioxide emissions we create, ranging from recycling, which saves 2,400 pounds of carbon dioxide per year, to replacing ones incandescent light bulbs to fluorescent, which last up to 10 times longer and saves 300 pounds of carbon dioxide per year.

The Web site also states that climate change will not only bring rising temperatures, but also the rise of seal level, glacier decline, spread of disease, shifts in the timing of seasons, changes in freshwater supply, and increases in hurricane intensity, droughts, flooding and in extreme weather events.

WWF is a leader in the field of climate science and is working to stop climate change by providing progressive work and information in science, advocating policies to reduce carbon emissions and assembling businesses to support new and innovative solutions.

The United States got involved with Earth Hour late last year, creating its first flagship city in Chicago.

Flagship cities work with the local government to make the city go dark from 8-9 p.m. each year. Along with Chicago, the cities of Atlanta, Phoenix and San Francisco are working with the WWF in the United States.

There are 35 flagship cities around the world, and over 400 other cities that participate as well.

The mission of Earth Hour is to put climate change on the radar for all politicians and corporations to address the issue on climate change now.

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu

Everywoman's Center talks reproduction

BY KIRSTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Today at noon in the Campus Center room 905-909, the Everywoman's Center is hosting a talk, entitled "Reproductive Rights to Reproductive Justice: What's the Difference and Why Does it Matter?"

The talk will feature Marlene Gerber Fried, Director of the Civil Liberties and Public Policy (CLPP) program at Hampshire College, as well as Alicia Jay, Hampshire College graduate and current Alumni Fellow at the CLPP. The CLPP is a program that informs people about reproductive rights as well as lobbying for them.

The main focus of the talk will address how reproductive rights are directly connected to a number of social issues including racial equality, health care reform, and environmental justice, along with a number of other national and local concerns.

Attendees will also have the chance to register for the annual conference held by the CLPP at Hampshire College. The conference, "From Abortion Rights to Social Justice: Building the Movement for Reproductive Freedom" is going to be held from April 4-6, 2008 and will feature 70 speakers from around the globe and will offer over 40 workshops and training sessions.

Energy drinks rise in popularity among nation's college students

BY GUY MURRAY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

From the Learning Commons at the W.E.B. Dubois Library, to the house parties across Amherst, students are turning more frequently to energy drinks to beat the sandman.

The trend is not common only to the University of Massachusetts, but at colleges and universities across the country, as young people are hooked on the energy drink craze. Energy drinks exploded in popularity in 2005 when Beverage Digest reported sales had grown 79.1 percent from 2004. In 2007, energy drinks became a $3.4 billion market, increasing 440 percent since 2002.

So what exactly are in these energy drinks that have reeled students in? Some students like UMass Senior Kenny Parsley admit that they aren't quite sure.

"I know it has a lot of caffeine, and that's about it," said Parsley. "I don't really like the taste of coffee, and Red Bull and Monster taste really good. My classes are pretty hard this semester so I need a little kick to get my school work done on time."

This kick is a mix of caffeine, sugar, taurine, ginseng and b-vitamins. A 16-ounce Monster energy drink has 52 grams of sugar, about as much as a can of soda, and 160 milligrams of caffeine, about three times more than an eight ounce cup of coffee. Although Monster, Red Bull and Rockstar do also release reduced sugar versions, their high caffeine content and the little that is known about the effects of taurine worry most health experts.

"I wouldn't recommend them because they have so much caffeine," said nutritionist Janice Bissex. "It's dangerous, and if you need that much caffeine to stay awake, it means your body needs to rest and you can't cover that up."

Large amounts of caffeine increase your heart rate and blood pressure. The American Heart Association's Scientific Sessions in 2007, concluded that within four hours of drinking an energy drink, heartbeats increase by 7 percent per minute. This leads to the uncomfortable feeling of being shaky and jittery, and also can lead to long-term damage. Like with any caffeine product it can lead to a dependency, especially for students who feel they can't study or party without them.

"I drink energy drinks to study during finals when I'm feeling really tired," said UMass junior Alex Pavidapha. "But my favorite drink is mixing Bacardi with Red Bull. It tastes great and it helps keep me awake because usually when I'm drinking I get tired easily."

This mixture of alcohol and energy drinks is growing in popularity among college students. Red Bull and other energy products can not only be found right next to alcohol at liquor stores in Amherst, but there are already existing alcoholic

See ENERGY on page 6

Newly discovered jewelry shocks world anthropologists

BY RANDOLPH E. SCHMID
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The earliest known gold jewelry made in the Americas has been discovered in southern Peru. The gold necklace, made nearly 4,000 years ago, was found in a burial site near Lake Titicaca, researchers report in Tuesday's issue of Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

The discovery "was a complete shock," said Mark Aldenderfer, an anthropologist at the University of Arizona.

"It was not expected in the least," he said in a telephone interview. "It's always fun to find something and go, 'Wow, what is that doing here?'"

In the past, it had been assumed that a society needed to be settled to produce agricultural surpluses that can support activities such as making ornamental objects, he explained.

But the people living in this region at the time were still primarily hunter-gatherers, he said. "They were on their way to becoming settled peoples, but they were not quite there yet."

Someone, though, had the time and knowledge to make this ornament, which he speculates is a sign of importance.

"These folks are obtaining this by their effort, accumulating more wealth and using objects for prestige," Aldenderfer said. It says: "Pay attention to me, I'm successful."

There is no evidence at the site that shows how it was made, he said. But it looks like a nugget of native raw gold, which occurs near the area, was pounded flat in a stone mortar and pestle.

Then the gold was probably wrapped around a piece of wood and pounded until it was folded into a tube, he said.

The researchers restrung the necklace, alternating nine small gold tubes with a series of round stones, identified as either greenstone or turquoise, with holes in them that were found in the same grave.

The next oldest gold ornaments found in this hemisphere, also located in Peru but farther north, date to about 600 years later than this necklace, Aldenderfer said.

Scott Raymond, an archaeologist at the University of Calgary, Canada, said the date of the necklace is "remarkably early for that region to have something of that order."

He said he had not previously seen any substantial evidence from that period of the kind of ceremonialism that developed later.

The oldest previously known worked gold was found in highland Peru and dated to about 3,500 years ago, said Raymond, who was not part of the research team.

Heather Lechtman of the Massachusetts Institute of Technology called the design "very interesting for such a very early piece of jewelry."

Lechtman, who was not part of the research team, said it was not surprising that early people used gold because it is available in that area and easy to work.

The research was funded by the U.S. National Science Foundation and the University of Missouri.

Chelsea Clinton criticizes Bush in N.C. State town hall meeting

BY ERIN GARTNER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Chelsea Clinton returned Monday to North Carolina, telling college students that the world will "breathe a sigh of relief" once President Bush leaves office. Clinton spoke Monday during a town hall meeting with students at North Carolina State University. She later moved on to Peace College in Raleigh to the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill.

Clinton told about 250 people at N.C. State that her mother, New York Sen. Hillary Rodham Clinton, would work to repair the nation's reputation abroad.

"I think the world will breathe a sigh of relief when this president is gone," Clinton said, criticizing Bush for pulling out of various accordings, including the Kyoto Protocol on global warming.

She urged the crowd to register to vote and to listen to past debates between her mother and rival Illinois Sen. Barack Obama.

She also couldn't avoid questions about her father, good or bad.

An audience member at N.C. State also pressed Clinton to discuss the Monica Lewinsky scandal. Clinton declined to discuss her father's relationship with the White House intern, drawing applause when she told the young man that it was none of his business.

Clinton had a similar exchange last week at Butler University.

And in Chapel Hill, she was asked whether a vote for Hillary Clinton was a vote for Bill Clinton.

"Is a vote for Hillary a vote for Bill? No. A vote for Hillary is a vote for Hillary," she said. "I'm really proud of what my father did in the '90s, but I don't think you should vote for or against my mother based on my father."

Also in Chapel Hill, Clinton pinned a light blue ribbon to her blazer in memory of Eve Carson, the UNC student body president who was killed March 5.

"It was always Eve's dream to have a presidential campaign come to campus," said student body vice president Mike Tarrant. But in September, when the school contacted the campaigns, "North Carolina didn't really matter," he said.

"It was a great feeling to kind of see her dream come true."

In response to a question about NASA funding, Clinton said the budgets of many scientific programs have either stayed flat or been cut. She pointed to Bush's veto of stem cell research bills.

"We don't know what we have lost under this administration," she said.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE III
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPY EDITOR Adam Stagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwasike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Gomes

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS COLLEGIATE SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGRIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE THU WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Joe Meloni

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Gomes

Across the Nation Around the World

Students remember Katie Sherman in life

SHERMAN from page 4

she said transcended mediums.

"She knew how to weld, to work a computer, silver, stained glass. She had it all," she said. "Had I been a peer, I would have been jealous of her accomplishments but in a good way. She had spirit; she knew how to give."

Pat Sherman, Katie's mother, said she was a girl who, in some ways, raised herself. The lessons on sharing came naturally as she was always giving to others.

Heather McCormack said Sherman was a person of numerous interests, some of which she wasn't aware.

"She just had this look on her face, in her eyes. They were always lit up. She just needed someone's permission to get excited and there she was. She just had this enthusiasm for absolutely everything."

The crowd passed pictures while music played around them. A slide-show of Sherman's photos was displayed slightly overhead.

"Even the ugly expressions were beautiful," someone remarked.

"Her eyes always smiled even if she wasn't," Bodecker added.

Sherman varied the expressions and angles of her photos often. Her latest portraits showed her with closely cropped hair.

McCormack said, "There was a transformation before she left for India. She cut her hair, no makeup. She cut the bullshit."

Perhaps the best shots were those in which she is slightly out of focus, the ones that disperse her spirit beyond the finite boundaries of her previous form.

Pat Sherman said she was touched by the efforts of those who organized the memorial.

"All of this is awesome," she said. "It is the essence of what Katie was. She was always happy, very passionate about humanitarianism. Everybody loved her."

Katie Sherman signed a blog post recently with "peace, love and cupcakes" in the farewell line of a post. By night's end, there was more than enough left of each.

Will McGuinness can be reach at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Friends assembled at last night's memorial described Sherman as having eyes that looked as though "they were always lit up."

University of Texas students plagiarize school honor code

Their goal was an honor code that discouraged cheating and plagiarizing.

However, the wording in a draft by students at the University of Texas at San Antonio appears to match another school's code — without proper attribution.

The student currently in charge of the honor code project said it was an oversight, but cheating experts say it illustrates a sloppiness among Internet-era students who don't know how to cite sources properly and think of their computers as cut-and-paste machines.

"That's the consequence of the Internet and the availability of things," said Daniel Wueste, director of the Rutland Institute for Ethics at Clemson University. "It doesn't feel like what would be in a book. You Google it and here it comes."

Student Akshay Thusu said that when he took over the project a month ago he inherited a draft by earlier project participants, including a group of students who attended a conference five years ago put on by The Center for Academic Integrity at Clemson.

Materials from the conference, which are used by many universities, were probably the main source of UTSA's proposed code, Thusu said. That's why parts of the Texas draft match word-for-word the online version of Brigham Young University's code.

BYU credited the Center for Acadcmic Integrity, but the San Antonio draft doesn't.

That will change, said Thusu, who plans to include proper citation and attribution when the draft is submitted to the faculty senate.

"We don't want to have an honor code that is stolen," Thusu said.

-Associated Press

Good Samaritan bitten after helping victim of car crash

A woman who tried to help after a car crash was punched and bitten by the man she was trying to assist, police said. "It was just crazy. I was just trying to help," 28-year-old Danielle Herndon of New Castle said Wednesday.

Rex Allen Shannon, 21, Middletown, was being held Wednesday night in eastern Indiana's Henry County Jail on charges of battery resulting in bodily injury, battery by body waste, intimidation, public intoxication, driving while intoxicated and resisting law enforcement. His bond was set at $39,500.

Two of the charges are felonies with a possible penalty of two to eight years in prison; three are felonies punishable by six months to three years in prison.

Authorities said Herndon was riding home from Indianapolis with her mother on Interstate 70 Tuesday night when a car driven by Shannon passed her in the grass, crossed the highway, flipped and landed south of the road.

"I thought he was dead," Herndon said.

Her mother, who was driving, pulled over and Herndon called 911, then ran to the other car. Shannon already had climbed out, she said.

"I leaned down and asked him 'Are you OK?' I didn't see any blood or anything. 'Are you OK? Is everything OK?' And he started cussing me," Herndon said.

Shannon then charged toward her mother and hit and bit Herndon when she got in the way, Herndon said.

"He was still biting me when the cops finally showed up," Herndon said.

When Indiana State Police Trooper Dave Whitinger arrived, he handcuffed Shannon. When another police officer and a medic arrived, Shannon kicked and spat on both men, Whitinger said.

"In 11 years I'd never seen anything like it," Whitinger said. "Definitely a weird one."

Herndon said the ring finger on her left hand was broken and doctors told her that her nose might also be broken.

-Associated Press

Health officials warn against mixing energy drinks, alcohol energy drinks, such as Sparks.

ENERGY from page 4

The combination is dangerous because it is a mixture of a stimulant and a depressant. Students feel more energetic and alert when they drink energy products, but that does not make them less drunk. They are still just as impaired, it's simply masked. This may cause them to feel they can drive a car or keep drinking in large amounts. The ingredients actually make it harder for your body to metabolize alcohol, because the caffeine content causes dehydration. This can also lead to worse hangovers in the morning.

"It's a very dangerous combination," said Bissex. "When you take a stimulant designed to rev you up and a depressant designed to calm you down its like your body is fighting itself."

Experts predict however that there is no end in sight for the rise of energy drinks. According to a study by Packaged Facts, growth for the energy drink industry is expected to continue to rise at a 12 percent rate over the next few years and become a $9 billion business by 2011. Bissex hopes all the empty cans at the library don't turn into heart problems when this generation gets older.

"The sales show that people aren't using them in moderation, and their starting to drink them young," said Bissex. "Hopefully they can learn how to by the time they get older."

Experts predict energy drink sales will continue to rise.

UMPD to educate offenders

PEDESTRIAN from page 4

"That is going to be for at least two weeks," said Blaguszeuski. "We will see if we need to extend it."

Beyond this two-week period, violators will be ticketed, and the ticket will be a mowing violation. According to Blaguszeuski, "This is a more notable penalty than a parking violation. It is as if you were driving an area anywhere that did not allow traffic."

Unlike a parking ticket, a moving violation will go on the vehicle operator's driving record and affect his or her auto insurance.

"There will be signs posted at the entrances to all these roads so it will be quite clear to people, they shouldn't be surprised," said Blaguszeuski.

The pedestrian only zones are part of the physical plant's Campus Landscape Improvement Policy, which is attempting to improve the aesthetics and durability of walkways and gathering areas on campus.

"A lot of the pavement is not designed for vehicles. They can tear up grassy areas and do damage to the landscape," said Blaguszeuski.

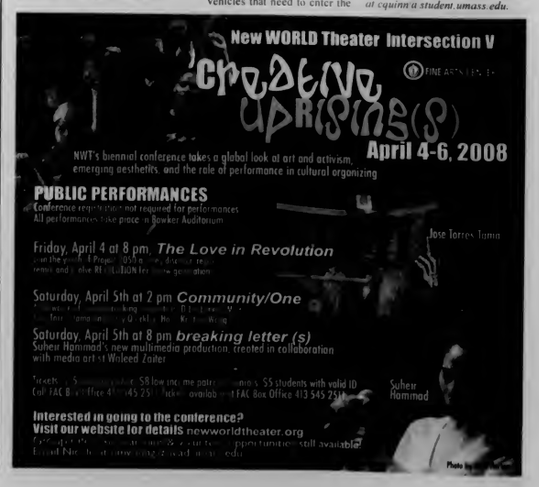
Vehicles that need to enter the needs to drive on the restricted walkways on University business can make arrangements with the UMPD ahead of time. Emergency vehicles including Physical Plant vehicles for snow removal or utility services are the only exceptions.

Alternative-driving routes will be marked for delivery and maintenance services. According to Blaguszeuski, delivery vehicles will be directed to the road behind Herter Hall, to avoid the now off limits walkway leading from the Whitmore ramp.

Caitlin Quinn can be reached at cquinn@student.umass.edu.

The Bryant Master of Professional Accountancy
Technical Excellence. Market Advantage.

"Bryant's accounting programs are developed with and for the marketplace. I continue to be impressed by the quality of employees we recruit from Bryant."
ROBERT CALABRO '88
TAX PARTNER, PRICEWATERHOUSECOOPERS



Start your career with a competitive advantage. Earn your Master of Professional Accountancy (MPAc) degree at Bryant University.

- The two semester MPAc program meets the 150-hour requirement for CPA licensure.
- Benefit from Bryant's impressive national reputation for excellence in accounting and 98 percent accounting placement rate.
- More than 40 firms recruit at Bryant each year.
- Build your accounting knowledge, and learn the leadership, client relations, and project management skills that will set you apart from the crowd.

To learn more about this program and upcoming information sessions:
Contact us at (401) 232-6230 or e-mail mpac@bryant.edu

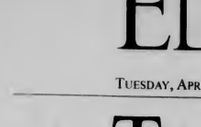
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
Smithfield, Rhode Island
www.bryant.edu
(401) 232-6230



Bryant UNIVERSITY

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
EDITORIAL OPINION
TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2008
"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie
EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Traversing Athens

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

The very moment when the shining light of the Parthenon became visible from behind a building, my eyes became instantly glued to the one of the most historic temples in the entire world.

While I was walking down a busy commercial section in Athens, Greece, where the American University in Cairo basketball team participated in a tournament recently, the sudden appearance of the Parthenon was like a key unlocking a mysterious door to ancient Athens.

The temple, inspired by Athena, the Greek goddess of wisdom, stood radiantly atop the Acropolis, a raised portion of land in the middle of Athens. The ethereal light beaming from inside the Parthenon and projecting itself throughout the city, a phenomenon the Greek Ministry of Culture creates nightly, was unequivocally the coolest tourist attraction I have witnessed while studying abroad.

Without hyperbole, yet perhaps with a hint of intellectual geekiness, I say with all honesty that I felt a tingly sensation throughout my body as my friends and I inched closer to the temple.

John Winthrop may have famously called America a shining city on top of a hill, but the original beam of light which jumpstarted Western conceptions of democracy started here, in and around where the Parthenon was built.

Walking on the same soil where the roots of Western democracy expanded was like stepping into Plato's famous book, "The Republic," and discussing the meaning of life with the some of the world's most famous and accomplished philosophers, like Plato and Socrates.

It was here where the concept of "rule by the people" was popularized and utilized in a practical fashion by Athenian democratic assemblies. And it was here where ancient Greeks first explored and attempted to uncover the purpose of human existence, efforts that are as applicable today as they were thousands of years ago.

Coupled with the amazing tourist attractions Greece offers, this journey elevated my study abroad experience to a completely different level.

Other areas of Greece were similarly enjoyable to see. We took a ferry to a small island in the turquoise-rich Aegean Sea, where we explored an ancient fortress. My friends decided to bungee jump off the Isthmus Canal to the utter dismay of their sports coaches. We perused ancient archaeological sites amidst the sprawling green mountains encircling Athens.

Of course, the foremost purpose of the trip, at least in theory, was to represent AUC at the sports tournament which took place at the American University in Greece – Deree College. Other American universities, established in the Middle East by Western educators but not affiliated with one another, participated in the tournament.

My basketball team, as well as the other AUC soccer, volleyball and swimming teams, played opponents from Lebanon and the United Arab Emirates. As one of the few Americans participating in the tournament, I had to adjust quickly to the different rules and playing styles of my teammates and opponents.

Because soccer is such a popular sport in the Middle East and Europe, many of them are influenced by the behavior of soccer players, such as their constant flopping when hit ever so slightly.

I almost started a huge fight after fouling one player hard, who subsequently got up, stuck his head into my face, and started screaming at me. Luckily, I turned away from him before the situation exacerbated.

Although our team did not win the championship, and even though I suffered a nasty knee injury in our third game, I was able to bond with many Egyptians during the trip.

My basketball teammates and I discussed the NBA, American pop music and the funny mannerisms of our beloved coach. Coupled with the amazing tourist attractions Greece offers, this journey elevated my study abroad experience to a completely different level.

An event which truly enhanced my assimilation process into a different culture occurred back in Cairo, where a few days ago I was faced with the daunting task of picking up contact lenses my parents had sent me at a post office. Usually packages arrive at my dormitory residence, but because the lenses arrived when I was in Greece, the mail was delivered back to the post office headquarters.

There were hardly any English speakers in the area where the post office was located. After getting dropped off by a taxi, I probably asked local Egyptians seven times where to find it, and they kept guiding me to different buildings.

Finally, I arrived at my destination, which looked more like an abandoned warehouse than a mail center. Inside, it was dirty, unorganized and cluttered, and confirmed my suspicion that Egyptian mail services are inefficient.

I told the employees, in Arabic, what I needed to pick up, and eventually paid £27 to obtain my package. After leaving the post office, it hit me what had just happened – I was able to communicate effectively in what was once a completely foreign language to me.

In addition, yesterday I was able to read a short online BBC paragraph written all in Arabic for the first time. Maybe this language can be mastered after all.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu

Best spring break ever

Devon Courtney

I always promised myself that for at least one of my Spring Breaks as a UMass student, I would go somewhere like so many of my friends. I've always sat in a depressing state of envy as I listened to the epic travails of all of the people who aren't me each and every time March shows up for an extended stay like an awkward lost relative.

In a vengeful rage, I found out from very reliable sources that 1-of-4 four students who go somewhere for Spring Break will come home with between one and an infinite number of sexually transmitted diseases.

These reliable sources included the New Mexico Daily Lobo, the Arkansas Traveler, the Office of Health Education at the University of Pennsylvania, and about five or six other obscure sources I guarantee you've never heard of.

I'm not jealous anymore, and it turns out that I was able to enjoy a spring break last week that was just as exotic and STI free as any other square confined to his loneliness. In fact, I am going to tell you all about what I did over my spring break.

My first stop was the foreign and mystical MidTermsVille, a faraway place which struck a keen resemblance to what looked like my computer sitting on my desk. I relaxed here with an absurdly low-priced cream ale and indulged myself in the local entertainment.

My activities included pressing keys with letters written on them for days on end until the screen displayed 15 pages of intricately worded BS about the economic principles of neo-colonialism in the West Indies.

In this land, I quickly discovered that the local customs not only permit, but encourage games of Scrabulous with total strangers.

I found myself unnaturally parched after my stay in MidTermsVille. I decided to migrate onwards to Fridgistan, a glowing Utopia that can only be accessed by pulling gently on a long, slender teleportation handle.

The climate was frigid, and I immediately realized that I should have brought a sweatshirt or two. Throughout the vast expanses of what I now refer to as "The Fridge," I noticed bottles of exotic beverages hailing from across the world beckoning me from within.

I helped myself to these drinks, and shortly afterwards began to feel a wonderfully euphoric rush. During this period, I pondered several questions in my mind, including what females I would have sex with, why Nebraska didn't deserve to be a state, and why "my wiener" should win every game of rock, paper, scissors ever played.

I moved on to Hangoverstown, a place I didn't like very much. Maybe it was the regional weather patterns, but I had a throbbing headache and didn't feel like leaving my place of rest. To add to the unpleasantness, the hostile yet familiar-looking natives kept approaching me and asking me angry questions such as "How much did you have to drink?" "Why aren't you wearing pants?" and "Why is your car parked sideways?"

After unsuccessfully trying to hide in the surrounding terrain, I decided that I had no other choice but to stand up and face the rest of the day. With the unpleasant experiences of Hangoverstown still lingering in my mind and stomach, I began to realize that my ultimate vacation was beginning to wind down.

I finished my vacation in the principality of Facebookifornia. I couldn't help but notice that this place was a seedy cesspool of shameless pickup lines and bad grammar.

In this land, I quickly discovered that the local customs not only permit, but encourage games of Scrabulous with total strangers. I jumped right into the fray, soon discovering vital information from the customs officers of the land including what my worth was as a friend, what rank my personal zombie would have on the Oregon Trail, and what kinds of crazy crap can spring from a flowerpot.

Overall, it wasn't a bad vacation. I compared my spring break holiday to the ones my friends had, and I didn't do that badly. I didn't come back to school looking like a lobster, or with the unnatural color of someone's forgotten toast with six or seven independent strains of skin cancer.

I also didn't come back with so much debt that my name was mentioned in Congress. Usually, many of my friends would have succumbed to the allures of the tourism industry, spending most of their money on novelty t-shirts, oversized sunglasses, and visits to the local clinic.

That reminds me, I also didn't return from my spring break with any sexually transmitted infections or embarrassing photos of me circulating the Internet. If you ask me, that's pretty fantastic. I think I'll celebrate by making an earlier-than-planned return to "The Fridge."

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

Just give the man a chance to speak

Brad DeFlumeri

The UMass Republican Club is bringing esteemed conservative author Dinesh D'Souza to speak at the school this week. A lot has been said about D'Souza's views and assertions in both the local and national press – and even in The Daily Collegian – of late.

He has been called everything from a radical, to a racist, to a homophobe. As the president of the only remotely conservative group on campus, I hear these things on a daily basis too, so I am not surprised.

For one to promulgate conservative views in an area like this one, the popular liberal mythology will have you believe, you must be seriously deranged, incredibly misinformed or completely discriminatory.

D'Souza's arguments often meet opposition from liberals who intend not to discredit what he is saying, but to altogether keep him from saying it by labeling him a radical right-wing extremist.

That campus and cultural liberals only want freedom of speech for themselves and treat conservatives as a militaristic curiosity is neither noteworthy nor exciting. It does nothing but undermine their own attempts to stifle thoughts which run counter to their movement's prevailing Clintonian orthodoxy.

Jeremiah Wright (not White) can trash an entire race of people and condemn this great nation to damnation. But he is black and liberal so he gets a free pass.

But a conservative like D'Souza can't say anything remotely offensive about the destructive nature of homosexuality and multiculturalism – and the liberalism which triumphs it – or else he is labeled a radical and compared to convicted criminals. What would Jefferson have thought?

The outright idiocy with which these attacks are levied is not only astounding, it is also dangerous.

In Dinesh D'Souza, the conservative intellectual movement has a mesmerizing articulator and breath-taking debater. By any measure, his accomplishments are profound.

He founded the Dartmouth Review, widely regarded as the best conservative college newspaper in the country, at age 19. He worked as a White House domestic policy analyst under Reagan in his mid 20s.

Furthermore, through his witty columns and commanding oratory and debating, he consistently keeps liberals of all sorts – political, religious and cultural – on the defensive and on the run.

His arguments can withstand the test of intellectual scrutiny and prevail against left-wing lunacy.

In April 2007, he beat left-wing stalwart and renowned academic Alan Wolfe of Boston College – after Wolfe called D'Souza's most recent book a "national disgrace" in the New York Times – so badly in a debate over religion that Young America's Foundation was told by BC that tapes of the event did not exist even though numerous copies were reported to have been in circulation. A media firestorm ensued, but BC held onto the tapes.

On an overwhelming number of theoretical and policy issues, from the existence of God, to the importance of objectivity in higher education, to the enduring greatness of this country, Dinesh D'Souza has repeatedly confounded his debate opponents and liberal critics with his airtight arguments and impeccable powers of presentation.

By merely looking at the fact that D'Souza blames the insidious nature of the Left for bringing about 9/11 without examining why he makes such a bold and original claim, one runs the risk of sensationalizing his comments and taking them out of context in much the same way that FoxNews did to those of Obama's pastor. This is not sound intellectual criticism.

On the topic of enduring American greatness, D'Souza has said: "America is the greatest, freest and most decent society in existence. It is an oasis of goodness in a desert of cynicism and barbarism. This country, once an experiment unique in the world, is now the last best hope for the world."

These are not the words of some angry, ranting right-wing racist like Pat Buchanan. Conversely, they are the words of an immigrant to this country who came here with the hope of a better life and who has lived the American dream – a dream only attainable in a country as rich with intellectual diversity, as ripe with goodness, as proud of its freedom-loving heritage and as warm with patriotism as America.

If insecure liberal talking heads are all too eager to portray compelling right-wing intellectuals like D'Souza as bigots and self-hating minorities, it is because D'Souza's arguments make them uncomfortable. This is to say, his arguments can withstand the test of intellectual scrutiny and prevail against left-wing lunacy.

Dinesh D'Souza's rise to intellectual prominence and acclaim is one to which any immigrant to this country should aspire. It is a testament to the inspirational greatness of this country and all that is possible for hardworking freedom-loving people in a place where intellectual curiosity, family, faith in God and self-reliance are synonymous with wealth and success.

This is D'Souza's message that America is great because of what it cultivates in its diverse and unique people – including those who arrive by boat or by foot in search of a better life. To me, this sounds anything but radical.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflumeri@student.umass.edu.

An unresolved crisis in Somalia

Sada Farah

On my way home from my last visit to Canada, the U.S. customs agent looked at my Canadian passport, and when seeing that I was born in Somalia, smiled and said, "You're from 'Black Hawk Down?'"

I simply stated, "Actually I'm from Somalia, but whatever you want to call it."

Will my country ever come to symbolize anything other than that event? Although my family left for Canada before the civil war started, I had always hoped that someday a legitimate government would run the country and it would become stable and united again.

This past week, government soldiers went to the Bakara market and, at gunpoint, they began to help themselves to sacks of grain. Islamist insurgents poured into the streets to defend the merchants.

The government troops took heavy casualties and retreated all the way back to the presidential palace, supposedly the most secure place in the city. It, too, came under fire. This type of anarchic violence is sadly typical for the city of Mogadishu.

What good is a government that has no control over a city, let alone a whole country? By its own admission, the Transitional Federal Government of Somalia is on life support. When it took power in the capital 15 months ago, backed by thousands of Ethiopian troops, it was widely hailed as the best chance in years to end Somalia's perpetual cycles of war.

But now its leaders say that unless they get more help from the international community, this transitional government will fall just like the 13 governments that came before it.

This looming failure has made many people question the installation of the TFG by force. In December 2006, Ethiopian troops, aided by American intelligence, ousted the Islamist administration that briefly controlled Mogadishu, bringing the transitional government to the city for the first time. The Transitional Federal Government was neither supported by the majority of the Somali population, nor elected into office.

What good is a government that has no control over a city, let alone a whole country?

The Bush administration said it was concerned about terrorists using Somalia as a refuge. This concern was expressed by the administration many times since the 2001 terrorist attacks, mainly because of the possibility of failed states becoming training grounds for terrorist organizations.

After 17 years of civil war, Somalia's violence seems to be driven not mainly by clan hatred, ideology or religiosity, but rather by survival. Government troops readily admit to robbing civilians, because they have not been paid for months and must eat.

While the government says that it cannot pay soldiers, and has only $18 million a year to run a failed state with 9 million residents, its honesty is highly contested.

To get clan support and the support of militias, transitional leaders have cut deals with warlords like Mohammed Dheere, now Mogadishu's mayor, and Abdi Qeybdid, now the police chief. These are the same men whom the CIA paid in 2006 to fight the Islamists.

This strategy has backfired on the TFG and the United States, because of lack of support from the population. This strategy of hiring killers to stop violence seems to be completely absurd; these men have a legacy of terrorizing civilians.

So the question remains, what does Somalia need to get out of this cycle of failed governments and endless violence and suffering? War, drought, displacement, high food prices and the exodus of aid workers, many of the elements that lined up in the early 1990s to create a famine, are lining up again.

Less than a third of the promised African Union soldiers have arrived, the United Nations has shied away from sending peacekeepers and even the Ethiopians are taking a back seat, often leaving the government's defense to teenage Somalis with old rusty guns who are overwhelmed.

How has a country that has had little foreign aid and no government for more than a decade, actually survived? The answer lies within the hearts of the Somali people. Somalis living in the Diaspora have sent millions of dollars back home to relatives, and have kept the economy from complete collapse under anarchic conditions.

One important thing to note is that over the 17 years of civil war, the Somali people have had no legitimate political option to support. The options were either a foreign imposed government consisting of warlords, or insurgent Islamist groups that brought radical ideology to moderate Islamic people.

What is needed is more active participation from the Somali civil society both in the country and in the Diaspora to create an environment conducive to investment which includes political and social stability as well as security.

This type of thinking seems to be the only possible answer at this point to the crisis in Somalia. Foreign imposed governments do not work, as we have seen throughout the world, and the Somali warlords cannot be expected to work towards peace, therefore it is the responsibility of the intellects, educators and business people abroad to reconstruct their country to be something that they can be proud of once again.

Sada Farah is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at sfarah@student.umass.edu.

"Get your facts first, and then you can distort them as much as you please."

-Mark Twain

Editorial@dailycollegian.com

'Ebony Chunky Love' offers laughs, insight

Comedian Price screens new film, holds free stand-up show

BY KAITLIN MORRIS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

It's during the college years that many parents, teachers, role models and adults tell students that this is the time to find out who they really are as a person. Being exposed to new experiences, people and lifestyles, finding out one's "true" self can certainly be a confusing and trying task.

On March 26 and 27, comedian Keith Price visited University of Massachusetts for the viewing of the documentary "Ebony Chunky Love: Bitch Can't Get a Date" – of which he starred in – and gave the students a free comedy show Thursday night.

Being a black, gay comedian of Honduran descent, Price has lived through many confusions concerning modern-day identity. In the documentary "Ebony Chunky Love: Bitch Can't Get a Date," Director Lonnie Renteria explores the issues of identifying not only as a gay black man trying to find love in New York City, but also as an extreme minority figure struggling to make it in mainstream media as an comedian.

The film was shown as part of the 17th Annual Massachusetts Multicultural Film Festival where they laughed hysterically and sympathized deeply with Price's comedy. Many related to the truth behind the issues discussed, family, parental relationships battling with weight, the struggle growing up and living as a minority, as well as sexual orientation.

"The piece is basically about living your truth," said Price. "Whatever your truth is, that is what you should be living."

The documentary divulges on many topics. While laughing at Price's jokes, people are not only being entertained, but they are becoming informed about the comedian's history, as well as broader hardships in society.

When asked what he wanted students and the public to take from the film and his performances, Price responded, "A few years ago I would have said to have a good time and not to be afraid of a big, black, gay guy on stage – because I'm the one person that's actually concerned with you having a good time."

Price continued, "Today, the mere fact that you have to fight against your particular stereotypes – gay, Latino, black, the preconceived goal is to break you from that stereotype, to give you a better understanding of what you are beyond the stereotypes, and still feeling that the audience had a good time. To remember that we're all here together."

"Ebony Chunky Love: Bitch Can't Get a Date" is certainly unlike many of the documentaries shown on mainstream television and movie theaters, yet touched upon many issues resonating our society, some that can be too taboo to discuss.

One of the segments of the documentary spoke of the hardships of finding companionship as a gay black man in New York. Price and journalist Bobby Rivers discussed how most gay men are looking for certain aesthetics; the perfect, toned body and good looks can be assumed, but also certain races.

Rivers admitted to joining online dating services but not necessarily Match.com, where many gay men would check off every race but African American for whom they were interested in.

Price shared a story about the men who are on the "down low." This term refers to the "straight" man who is trying to pick up the gay man. The down-low guy is usually married or identifies as being a straight male. He tries to pick up the gay man and pursue a cheating fling, while keeping this side of his personality from his wife and 2.5 kids.

Though the film did focus a lot on finding dates and companionship as a gay black man, it also focused on relationships of family members that also have a large impact on one's life.

Living in a country where many of the inhabitants are obese, Price shared his story of the beginning of his weight problems that started after spending a summer on the east coast with his grandparents as a child.

As Price traveled back to Dallas, Texas, where he was raised, he brought with him an extra 25 pounds. His father walked past him in the airport, not recognizing his son. When young Keith called out to his father, Mr. Price said to his son, "Good God Almighty, you are fing fat!"

Price claimed that this statement was one of the underlying factors of having insecurities about weight throughout life.

The documentary is both informative and comical. A camera followed around one man who spoke about his life and experiences, which ended up touching many people in its audience. People who identified with many of the same issues such as being black or gay or overweight, but also to those audience members who were none of those things, but were able to identify as a person trying to find themselves.

The messages of the film, like the need to be accepting, may have somewhat preached to the choir. Yet the underlying theme can be summarized in Price's words as, "We're all one under the sun."

Kaitlin Morris can be reached at kamorris@student.umass.edu.

KEITH PRICE/COLLEGIAN

Keith Price is behind the documentary "Ebony Chunky Love: Bitch Can't Get a Date." Following a screening of the film last week, Price spoke about the issues it raised including homosexual dating, race and being fat.

Halal food comes to UMass

Dining common adopt style on request of Muslim students

BY EBAD RAHMAN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Like many students, Ozaire Awais, a University of Massachusetts senior in microbiology, looks forward to heading toward the dining common at the end of a long day for dinner and a chance to socialize with his friends, but unlike everyone else, he heads for the line at the back to receive a different entree: halal food.

"Halal food is like kosher food. It is a standard that food must satisfy before it can be consumed," said Bilal Mirza, the vice president of the UMass Muslim Student Association. "Most food is halal, but food like alcohol and some meat, such as pork, can never be consumed and others, such as chicken and beef, must be sacrificed humanely in the name of God to be halal."

Before, Muslims would have to go as far out as Springfield to get a halal meal, but now more halal foods are becoming available in the area. Taj Mahal in The Hatch on the bottom floor of the Student Union has halal food, and specializes in cuisine from South Asia, and Joe's Greek Place at the Hampshire Mall has also opened up a halal food menu and serves Greek and Mediterranean cuisine. From the start of spring semester last year, halal food has also opened up on campus.

Every weekday evening at 6 p.m., Emina Restoder, chef at the Worcester Dining Commons, prepares and puts out the halal food in the Oak Room. Students bustle in from all over campus to get dinner. On some days, fried chicken is served, and on others, turkey, but once in a while Restoder makes dishes from her native Bosnia, which makes the experience unique on campus.

Ken Toong, executive director of dining services, said that halal food was made possible by requests from Muslims to have food catered to their needs. "We want them [the students] to take the lead," he said and said he wants students to take the initiative in shaping their dining experience.

Toong said dining services makes it a priority to be a comprehensive provider, and students said they appreciated their interest.

Students reminisce about their eating habits before halal food became available. "I would go into the dining commons unsure of what I was going to eat," said Hasan Syed, junior in biochemistry and molecular biology. "I would sometimes leave just as hungry as I was when I walked in."

Before halal food became readily available, Muslim dining on campus was similar to vegetarian dining: salads, pizza and foods from the vegetarian bar. The only main difference was that Muslims could also eat seafood, which does not have the same requirements to be halal that meat does. Now with halal food options available in the area, the Muslim dining experience is becoming more like that of any other person.

"Before I would have to eat unhealthy foods," said Ozaire, "I always ate pizza and would have difficulty compensating for protein in my diet, but now I feel a lot healthier and I feel more active and alert."

"We have 15 different types of global cuisine at any time," said Toong, "from Italian and Spanish to Japanese and African." Toong has plans to strengthen halal food dining and get more people interested in halal food by adding more global cuisine from different Islamic cultures, such as Persian and South Asian cuisine.

Ebad Rahman can be reached at erahman@student.umass.edu

JASON EST BEAMING/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Halal food, like Kosher food, is a standard the food must satisfy in order to be consumed. To accommodate the need for Halal food in the Muslim community at UMass, Dining Services adopted the style at the request of students.

Psychedelic, spacey evening at Pearl St.

JASON EST BEAMING/DAILY COLLEGIAN

Lotus played to an enthusiastic crowd at the Pearl Street Night Club on Friday night.

BY MATTHEW SOLOMON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Lotus, the new age, psychedelic rock-techno-fusion band, stormed into Northampton on Friday night with soul and passion. They put on an enthusiastically inspired concert for a grateful, packed crowd of loyal followers at the Pearl Street Night Club.

An immense amount of musical skill and prowess was displayed. The high energy, pulsating grooves spread through the small club, seemingly grabbing hold of something powerful and exotic. The band-audience interaction was a completely organic and refreshing experience. Something was activated amongst the crowd from the moment the first note was struck.

Lotus consists of Steve Clemens on drums, Jesse Miller on bass and sampler, Luke Miller on guitar and keys, Chuck Morris on electronic/acoustic percussion and Mike Rempel on guitar.

They play a blues-jazz-rock inspired blend of music that sounds like the high powered techno-electronica beats blasted by DJs in clubs around the world; yet it's all done with live instruments. The two drummers are extremely compatible in their ability to feed off each other's beats. Then, the other instruments are intricately woven in with each other to form this totally unique and inspiring musical sound. They were as tight as could be during this performance, and the fans seemed to recognize the special gift that they were receiving.

Lotus' sound is powerful yet soothing. It's extremely accessible and danceable. They're not only a down-to-earth group of guys; they also are able to reflect that in their music. Their music inspires dancing, and through the art of dance, a connection is made.

They're extremely proficient at bringing the crowd into their performance. Rather than having a clean cut performer-audience dividing line, the line that they choose to draw over and over again is blurred grey as energy flows in every direction. Anyone can potentially grab hold of the spacey Lotus vibes in the name of artistic expression. They had almost everyone in attendance getting down with the funky beats and rhythms, jukin' and jivin' wildly in a wound-up frenzy.

The band couldn't help but gaze out into the crowd with wide eyes and pleasantly satisfied smiles. They seemed very pleased to have this opportunity for sharing their gift with such an open and accepting group of fans. They bravely took on this challenge and used the energy of the crowd, molding it and redirecting it back to their fans.

They surely had an immense amount of their own energy to bring to the table on this particular evening, and this was clearly used as well to power their high-flying musical vibrations with unrestrained precision.

The college-age crowd was very receptive to this new and lively musical sound. They partied hard until the end, literally shaking their souls free of life's burdens. At the end, we emerged onto the streets of Northampton with a newly refreshed and optimistic point of view towards life and this troubled world.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

Pegg talks 'Run' and 'Trek'

Actor, comedian focuses on dramatic side with new roles

BY COLIN COVERT
STAR TRIBUNE (MINNEAPOLIS)

Already an established comedy star in Britain with the hit TV series "Spaced," Simon Pegg made a strong trans-Atlantic impression with the films "Shaun of the Dead" and "Hot Fuzz." Now he's pushing further into the mainstream as the lead in the romantic comedy "Run Fatboy Run," opposite Thandie Newton, and beaming up into the role of "Scotty," chief engineer of the starship Enterprise, in the upcoming "Star Trek" movie.

One of the few comic actors who regularly writes his own material, Pegg reworked "Fatboy" from an original screenplay by Comedy Central stalwart Michael Ian Black. Checking in from Los Angeles, Pegg said that the advantages are enormous for an actor who creates his own scenes, and for a writer who can't be kicked off the set.

"I think it's the best way to work. You don't have to defer to anybody," he said. "You can write to your own strengths. It optimizes the filmmaking process. I'm surprised more actors don't do it."

Reminded that most performers probably don't have the writing ability, he replied dryly, "Oh yeah, I didn't think of that."

A large part of his comic persona, Pegg believes, is his ordinariness. "I'm an average-looking kind of guy. You can pitch yourself as being an everyday Joe, and in this day and age that kind of character is becoming more and more of a protagonist.

"With the rise of reality TV and video cameras, we're demystifying the filmmaking process. Often you'll find quite regular people at the center of film stories now," particularly in comedy with the likes of Seth Rogen and Steve Carell. "In that tradition, it's been fun to write about quite mundane people having comic adventures."

In "Run Fatboy Run," Pegg plays Dennis, a man who five years after deserting his pregnant girlfriend at the altar tries to win back her affection by completing a marathon. Adapting Black's script by moving the action from New York to London and adding more ironic British humor was an enjoyable challenge, he said.

"The notion of trying to translate it into a British setting was really fascinating to me. And Dennis does such a heinous thing at the top of the film, the idea of trying to make him sympathetic really appealed to me," he said. "I liked the idea of writing a romantic comedy, a genre that's quite easy to make fun of. But I thought, 'Let's do one and not make fun.' They're light and fun and emotionally manipulative in a good way."

Thandie Newton plays Libby, Pegg's ex, who has moved on to a relationship with Whit, a wealthy, overachieving athlete played by Hank Azaria. Balancing the film's character study of a hapless slacker against the female-centered demands of the genre took some work, Pegg said. "(Dennis) can't believe he's with her and believes marrying her will be to her detriment," he said. "That's the reason he decides to run away rather than face up to the fact that she does love him and he needs to earn her love.

"We didn't want Libby to seem shallow in that she's chosen Whit. In the first draft of the script Whit was immediately a sleazeball, and we wanted him at least from the outset to look like a viable proposition. He's funny, he's friendly, he's polite, well-off, handsome, everything Dennis isn't. That makes it more interesting or the audiences as well, because it's not so easy for them to set their allegiances. They wonder which guy they should root for."

With its immature antihero and slick traditional romcom construction, "Fatboy" could be a gene-splice of Britain's reigning comic novelist Nick Hornby ("About A Boy") and screenwriter Richard Curtis ("Four Weddings and a Funeral"). The film seems tailored to move Pegg from a cult hero into the ranks of mass-market leading men, but he insists that that was not the goal.

"I don't have a game plan," the 38-year-old actor said. "What I do is go into work in the morning and love that. The consequence of that is less relevant to me. I just want to make films that I like watching. I don't want to be propelled into the mainstream particularly because I'd rather just do the stuff I do and be left alone."

Pegg's first two films were close collaborations with England's top comedy director Edgar Wright. "Fatboy" is the directorial debut of "Friends'" star David Schwimmer, who acted with Pegg in "Big Nothing," a 2006 crime farce that lived up to its name.

"I wasn't worried at all" about Schwimmer stepping behind the camera, Pegg said. "I knew he certainly could direct actors. He had directed episodes of 'Friends' and came out of an extremely prolific group of comic actors. He definitely knew his f-stops from his 40mm lenses, so I was put at ease very quickly."

Pegg recently completed filming J.J. Abrams' "Star Trek" prequel, an experience he called "a dream come true for me" as a fan of the show. His interpretation of the iconic character of Montgomery "Scotty" Scott was to play the role as genuinely as James Doohan did, he said.

"I tried to approach it as (Doohan) did when he first picked up the script. Look at the character and who he was rather than try and do an impression of James Doohan," he said. "I didn't want to undermine James in any way; he's created one of the most enduring figures in modern science fiction.

"We've gone in there absolutely adamant that the spirit of the show's going to remain intact. Seriously, not with a hint of parody, this is a 'Star Trek' film. It's nothing but."

PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Simon Pegg, star of "Shaun of the Dead," has taken a more serious turn with his new films "Run Fatboy Run" and "Star Trek."

Rise in teen breast enlargement surgery

BY MELANIE LEFKOWITZ AND BETH WHITEHOUSE
NEWSDAY

MELVILLE, N.Y. — Before she underwent breast augmentation surgery last summer, Melissa Wohl said she felt self-conscious about her body, especially at the beach.

"I wasn't as developed as some of my friends, who were filling out their bathing suits," said Wohl, 19, of Wantagh, N.Y., who attends Binghamton University. "I guess I felt like I didn't fit in."

Wohl is among an increasing number of young women looking to plastic surgery for a boost in confidence as well as in cup size.

Last week's death of Stephanie Kuleba, 18, of South Florida, during breast augmentation surgery has drawn attention to what some describe as a growing trend. Kuleba, whose parents say she sought the surgery to correct an inverted nipple and asymmetrical breasts, died Saturday of what may have been a rare genetic reaction to general anesthesia.

According to the American Society for Aesthetic Plastic Surgery, the number of women 18 and younger who have had breast enlargements has risen nearly 500 percent over the past decade, a sharper climb than the 300 percent increase in breast augmentations among all age groups.

Dr. Stephen Greenberg, a plastic surgeon in Woodbury, N.Y., estimated he has seen a 20 to 30 percent rise in cosmetic procedures among young people. Often, he said, a girl will come in with her parents, who are buying her a breast augmentation as a birthday or high school graduation gift.

"There are girls and women who are devastated by the fact that they don't have breasts and their friends do," Greenberg said. "They don't play gymnastics and they don't go on dates or they can't wear certain clothing, and I hear these things every day."

Greenberg attributed the trend in part to young women who see their parents undergoing cosmetic procedures, or relate closely to the celebrities who have them.

Not everyone agrees.

Dr. Alan Gold, a Great Neck, N.Y., plastic surgeon, noted that those 18 and younger accounted for only 2 percent of the nearly 400,000 breast augmentation surgeries performed nationwide in 2007. He said that while many might choose to have such a surgery in a "transitional period" like summer vacation when they won't see their friends every day, he has not seen a trend in graduation and birthday gift breast jobs among his patients.

Breast augmentation is the most popular plastic surgery, accounting for about 20 percent of all surgical procedures. It costs on average about $4,000, according to the plastic surgeons' society.

Traci Levy, an assistant professor who teaches courses in feminism and gender studies at Adelphi University, said that the growing perception that it's a common procedure, along with the bombardment of women with advertisements for plastic surgery, may be contributing to its popularity.

"To say that you need to have a very expensive surgical procedure with real health risks in order to be considered beautiful, I think, is a problematic image," she said.

The Food and Drug Administration recommends against performing breast augmentations on girls younger than 18, and both Gold and Greenberg said that if younger teenagers request the surgery, they counsel them to wait. But Gold said he sees nothing necessarily wrong with performing the surgeries on women who are 18 or older.

"Eighteen is certainly an age where we're putting men and women in uniform on a battlefield," he said. "I think they can decide if they want larger breasts."

WHAT TO DO BEFORE SURGERY

Doctors offer advice to parents whose teens are considering surgery.

WAIT A YEAR. Teens should wait a year before going ahead with breast correction or rhinoplasty, said Dr. David Graham, chief deputy health commissioner for Suffolk County, N.Y. Another year of maturity and thought might cause them to be more accepting of minor bodily flaws.

KNOW THE COMPLICATIONS. Parents should make the child aware of the possible complications, including the rare chance of death, Graham said. "You think you know everything when you're 17 or 18, but you don't. You don't realize the downside of anesthesia."

DO YOUR RESEARCH. Research not only the surgeon, and the anesthesiologist who will participate in the operation, said Dr. Mark Shikowitz, vice chairman of the ear, nose and throat department at North Shore University Hospital and Long Island Jewish Medical Center. Shikowitz does three to five teenage nose jobs a week, he said. While cosmetic surgery has risks such as bleeding and infection, the most dangerous part can be the general anesthesia.

CONSIDER A HOSPITAL. Consider doing the surgery in a hospital or a hospital-affiliated ambulatory care center instead of a doctor's office, Shikowitz said. In a crisis, more specialists and fellow anesthesiologists are nearby to lend a hand and offer solutions.

THE BRYANT GRADUATE PROGRAMS

THE BRYANT MBA
- A rigorous program that can be completed in one or two years.
- Complete the program with a class of other professionals.

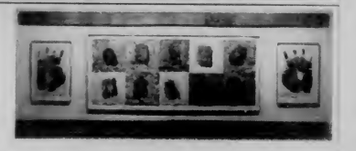
THE BRYANT MPAc
- The two semester, full-time MPAc program meets the 150-hour requirement for CPA licensure.
- More than 40 top regional and international firms recruit at Bryant each year.

THE BRYANT MST
- This highly specialized program builds an expertise in taxation.
- The 10-course program can be completed on a part-time basis.

TO LEARN MORE ABOUT THESE PROGRAMS AND UPCOMING INFORMATION SESSIONS:

CONTACT US AT (401) 232-6230 OR GRADPROG@BRYANT.EDU

Bryant UNIVERSITY
GRADUATE SCHOOL OF BUSINESS
Smithfield, Rhode Island
www.bryant.edu | (401) 232-6230



We got the facts from you.

9 out of 10 UMass students know how to have fun without alcohol.

Are you one of them?

Based on a 2008 CCPI survey of UMass students

UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS AMHERST
Campus and Community Coalition
To Reduce High-Risk Drinking
www.umass.edu/ccc

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons, Cuban, 1959- , Birth Certificate, 1991. Wonder of an ante (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller class of 1925 Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Goldrein

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

UMass wins two matches over weekend

By Ryan Fleming
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts tennis team swept a pair of matches and snapped its three-match losing streak at home this past weekend.

On a night when senior captain Masha Pozar broke the UMass (6-9) doubles record, the rest of the Minutewomen lost just six games and beat Holy Cross, 7-0.

The Minutewomen return to action on Friday against George Washington in Philadelphia.

"They took care of business tonight, that's what they needed to do," said UMass coach Judy Dixon of her team's performance. "This is one of these matches where it's not as easy as it looks because you have to focus, you have to play the game and not be sloppy. I was pleased with them."

The No. 1 doubles match went as it should have, according to confident Dixon. Pozar tallied her record-breaking 68th doubles win alongside doubles partner Candyce Boney. The combination displayed an array of strong groundstrokes, serves, backhands and net play.

"I wasn't even hoping that I would break the record," Pozar said. "I just wanted to play, it's my last year, I wanted to go out with a bang and do well for the team."

Afterwards Dixon had some words about the modest Pozar.

"She hasn't looked at it, she hasn't thought about it; she just wanted the team to do well," Dixon said. "It's who she is, she doesn't think of herself as being the star on the team."

Sanna Hanai, who has the best singles record on the team, was also victorious on the day with Lauren MacKay, Lisa Lindner, Maude Lecluyse, Lauren Hodgson and Boney.

Saturday afternoon the Minutewomen won again, beating Long Island, 6-1.

Masha Pozar extended her previous doubles win record to 69 alongside familiar doubles partner Boney, beating the LIU No. 1 doubles team of Selma Babic and Il'Ann Johnson.

"I think we fought really hard, in some cases I don't think we played our best tennis but we fought like crazy," Dixon said. "Sometimes a coach would rather see that than sparkling play all the time."

"I think today was a team effort all the way down," Dixon continued. "I think I saw more intensity in the singles [matches] than I have seen in a while."

Boney, the No. 2 singles player, struggled in her doubles and singles match, but came out on top in both. Early in her singles match the freshman displayed some areas of uncertainty and inexperience but eventually settled down. Trailing one set to zero, Boney fought back, taking the second and then the third.

At No. 4 singles, Lecluyse lost a hard-fought match in three sets, 7-5, 3-6, 6-1.

"I'm always positive about her game," Dixon said of Lecluyse. "I'm always positive about her passion on the court; she always leaves it out there."

Pozar showed why she earned the captain title in her No. 1 doubles match when Boney was struggling.

"Masha had to be the rock," Dixon said. "If Masha let down her side at all, the doubles would have collapsed; she has to be very solid."

The Pozar/Boney combination won their team-leading 19th doubles match of the season.

The Minutewomen's record now stands at 5-5 all-time against the Crusaders,.

The Minutewomen return to action April 4, on the road in Philadelphia against George Washington with an unconfirmed match time set at 4:30 p.m.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@student.umass.edu.

Sortino wants more offense

Team struggling with timely hitting and runners on base

By Jeremy Rice
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts softball team has picked up right where it left off in 2007, dominating all Atlantic 10 challengers, but despite a perfect 6-0 start this season in conference play, UMass coach Elaine Sortino has not been satisfied with the team's offense.

Specifically, the timeliness of the Minutewomen's hitting has left something to be desired, she said.

UMass Softball

"We've got to do a better job with runners in scoring position and one or none out," Sortino said, following a doubleheader sweep of Charlotte on Sunday.

In the Minutewomen's last two matchups against the 49ers and Dartmouth (on March 26), the team found itself behind early in the second game of each meeting and needed a sixth-inning rally to pull out the victory.

Also in both games, UMass had several opportunities to bring runners around from second and failed to execute. Sortino puts a premium on moving runners into scoring position and will send in pinch runners at will to take advantage of their speed on the base paths, but the Minutewomen have struggled to put the ball in play.

"We have to put the ball in play," Sortino said. "We can't strike out looking. It just doesn't give you a chance. At least put the ball in play and make the defense make a play on you."

As a team, UMass is batting .243 with runners on base and .229 with runners in scoring position.

Not surprisingly, the team's best hitters at this point in the season also have the best numbers with runners to move. Jessica Serio (batting .359) and Whitney Mollica (.303) are the only players batting above .300 overall and are first and third on the team with runners on base and first and second with runners in scoring position.

Senior Stacy Cullington and the Minutewomen are off to a 6-0 start in Atlantic 10 play.

Serio has been on a tear since the start of the season, batting .404 with runners on and .357 with runners in scoring position. Mollica actually does better when she has a chance to drive in a run (.345) than she does trying to move a runner over (.271), but she is the only one with that type of success.

Interestingly, Lauren Proctor one of the team's most experienced hitters – sees a significant drop in their batting average with runners in scoring position.

Proctor is hitting at a .256 clip overall and .286 with runners on, but with runners in scoring position her average drops to .233. Similarly, freshman Lindsay Maroney's average drops from .292 with runners on to .211 with runners in scoring position.

"I think some players are still young," Sortino said. "I think they struggle with being free enough to swing at a good pitch. I think there's a lot of pressure on them, and I think they're getting a little bit better. But I think we've got a little bit longer to go before we start seeing some results."

It is important to note, however, that the toughest part of the Minutewomen's regular-season schedule is the first two months, in which UMass played some of the stiffest competition in the country and garnered one of the top strength-of-schedule ratings in the nation.

Typically, the batting averages all go up once A-10 play gets into full swing, but collectively, UMass is batting .339 against A-10 opponents – they hit .342 against the conference last season.

Williams bat vs. glove

Whitney Williams has taken over the leadoff spot this year after batting ninth through most of the 2007 season, and since A-10 play commenced her offensive production has taken off.

She is currently batting .256, but is hitting .409 in conference play. Her on-base percentage has also gone, from .341 overall to .480 against the A-10.

In the field, however, she has struggled, leading the team far and away with 12 errors. Her .865 fielding percentage is also worst among starters.

In the team's last four games, two each against Dartmouth and Charlotte, Williams has gone 5-for-15 at the plate with six runs scored, but has four errors at shortstop and let a handful of base hits through the infield where her athleticism has proven she can make those type of stops.

Hot Streak

It's no secret that the Minutewomen are the class of the A-10 (winning nearly every regular season and tournament championship will do that). However, in its most recent tear through the conference, UMass has been especially dominant.

The Maroon and White has won its last 24 A-10 regular season games. The streak grows to 30 if you include the last two conference tournaments.

However, you have to go back to the 2001 and 2002 seasons to find its best run, going 21-0 in the conference in back-to-back seasons.

Balschmiter at best

Pitcher Brandice Balschmiter is off to the best start of her still-young career. Entering the season with a 1.17 career ERA, Balschmiter currently has an ERA of 0.79 in 2008 and is on track for a third straight A-10 pitcher of the year award.

The last pitcher to grab the honor three consecutive years was Danielle Henderson (1997-99), whose No. 44 sits on the centerfield wall next to the team's Women's College World Series appearances ... After spending her freshman season learning a new position, Serio has found her stroke. The former infielder leads the team with a .359 batting average. Her slugging (.474) and on-base (.462) percentages are also tops on the team ... Proctor and Stacy Cullington have spent the last four games alternating between the No. 2 and 7 spots in the lineup. In doubleheaders against Dartmouth and Charlotte, Cullington started Game 1 in the 2-hole, but was moved to seventh for Game 2 on both days. Sortino said it was an effort to take some pressure off Cullington, who has struggled at the plate recently.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Minutemen look to rebound when they host Holy Cross

By Mike Connors
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts baseball team has struggled in conference play this season, winning one of its six games.

Now it returns to non-conference play when it hosts Holy Cross today at Earl Lorden Field.

The Minutemen (5-10, 1-5 Atlantic 10) had won three consecutive games before dropping both games of Sunday's doubleheader against Xavier.

Holy Cross (8-13, 4-0 Patriot League) isn't completely unfamiliar with A-10 opponents – it won 2-of-3 games against Saint Joseph's earlier this season. Although the Crusaders's record is less than stellar, they recently won four consecutive games over conference foe, Lehigh.

Their game against the Minutemen is the finale of a six-game road trip for the Crusaders. Following the game, they will play at home for seven consecutive games.

Brendan Akashian leads the Holy Cross offense with 18 RBIs in 18 starts this season. The senior is batting .286 on a team that has a collective .254 average.

Similar to the Crusaders of this season, UMass struggled at the plate last season, hitting .259 as a team. However, they've improved that average by 12 points this season (.271).

Unlike most teams, the Minutemen's leading hitter for average bats from the nine spot in the lineup.

Freshman Kyle Multner has stepped in immediately and given the Minutemen a hitter who cannot only but for average but can also contribute power numbers.

Through 14 starts, the left fielder has three home runs and five doubles while also holding a .346 batting average.

Multner is not the only member of the Minutemen to have success from the plate this season. The team has five members batting better than .300, including Brian Baudinet and captain Adam Tempesta, who both bat an identical .340 and have combined for 25 RBIs.

The UMass hitters will face a Holy Cross pitching staff that has struggled this season. The Crusader pitchers hold a team earned run average of 7.09 while opponents have hit .318 against them.

UMass holds a team ERA of 5.13, seeing good performances from Mitchell Clegg and Nice Serino but less consistency from the other starters.

Clegg and Serino hold earned run averages of 2.13 and 3.45, respectively, while starters Jared Freni and Brian Leigh have been less consistent.

Both have pitched well at times but have also struggled in other appearances. Freni has a 4.97 ERA while Leigh's stands at 5.06.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

APRIL
IS ALCOHOL AWARENESS MONTH

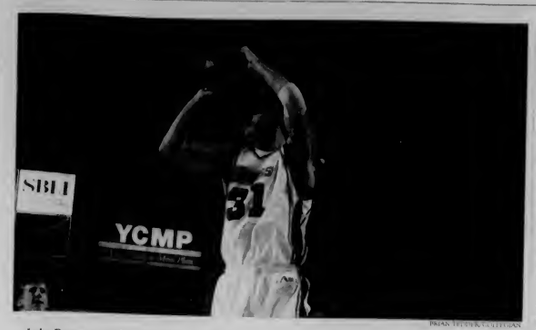
If you're over 21 and choose to drink alcohol, follow these tips for safer drinking:

- SIP SLOWLY. If you're a quick sipper, use less alcohol in your mixed drink.
- ALTERNATE ALCOHOLIC DRINKS with non-alcoholic ones, like water or juice. Help your body and save money at the same time!
- AVOID MIXING ENERGY DRINKS with alcohol. They can make you drink more and both are dehydrating.
- EAT SOMETHING before going out, to slow the absorption of alcohol.
- SKIP THE SALTY SNACKS – they increase your thirst.

9 OUT OF 10 UMass students know how to have fun without alcohol. ARE YOU ONE OF THEM?

University of Massachusetts Amherst
Campus and Community Coalition
To Reduce High-Risk Drinking
www.umass.edu/ccc

HEALTH AND NUTRITION DIVERSITY SCHOLARS



Apply today!
Stop by our OPEN HOUSE to learn more -
Thursday, April 3, 4-6 PM
210 Chenoweth Lab

$6000 Scholarships
Available Fall 2008

For information and pre-nutrition advising, please contact: Dr. Nancy Cohen, Department of Nutrition
215 Chenoweth Lab,
UMass-Amherst, MA 01003
cohen@nutrition.umass.edu or 413-545-2526

For more information and application form
www.umass.edu/sphhs/nutrition/hands

This project is based upon work supported by the Cooperative State Research, Education and Extension Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, under the agreement NO. 2006-38413-16595

Luke Bonner scored a career-high 13 points in the Minutemen's victory over Syracuse. UMass takes on Florida tonight at Madison Square Garden.

Bonner still drawing charges but helping on offense too maintain charges taken as an official statistic, the Minutemen recognize his skill and appreciate the boost it gives the Minutemen. Bonner's charge-taking frequency has increased to the point where his teammates head into a game knowing they will witness the New Hampshire native sacrifice his body at some point each game.

BONNER from page 12

"Before the last game when we were eating our pregame meal, he told me that he was going to take a charge," junior center Tony Gaffney said. "Several minutes into the game he took a charge, then a few minutes later he took another."

The difference between winning and losing can be something as seemingly insignificant as one possession. Bonner took two charges in the second half that allowed his team to gain extra possessions as it made its 22-point comeback against Syracuse last Tuesday.

With defensive stalwart Gaffney out with a knee injury, the center added a 13-point offensive performance off the bench. He used a combination of sky hook shots and 15-foot jumpers to expose his shorter defenders as a way to nullify the physical play of the Orange big men.

"Bonner's eight points in the first half were absolutely critical," UMass coach Travis Ford said after last Tuesday's win. "You need someone step-up in games like this."

According to his teammates, Bonner's career-high 13 points against Syracuse was not an aberration.

"We see it everyday in practice, so we know that he is capable of doing it," Gaffney said of Bonner's performance against Syracuse. "The fans may not see it, so they don't know. But it didn't surprise me at all. He's the reason we won that game; they would have been up by 40 at halftime if it wasn't for him."

Though one of Bonner's primary contributions to the team involves sacrificing his body, the center could only recall one game where he wished he just got out of the way.

"I took a charge against Glen Davis once in high school," Bonner said, recalling a game against the 300-pound Celtics' forward. "He was running at full speed and slammed into me. My life flashed before my eyes, thinking that I would break all of my ribs."

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

UMass selling many tickets, Gaffney remains questionable from the crowd come Tuesday night.

MSG from page 12

"I do think of all the four teams we'll have the biggest support," he said. "I hope we do, I think we will. I hope fans around the area are very excited about it. I think a lot of the people who come to the game – who maybe don't have an affiliation with any of the four teams – will hopefully pick us, being a Northern team to support."

UMass sold out its 1,000 ticket allotment rather quickly for the game and will send seven buses from campus to MSG filled with students and fans.

To play or not to play?

In order to help defend Florida big-man Marreese Speights, the Minutemen could really use the services of the injured Tony Gaffney.

Gaffney and his ailing knee appear to be ready to do just that.

"I'm going to try to give it a go," Gaffney said. "It's sore, but it's getting better. I got the MRI back and it was an MCL sprain. I can't do any more danger to it.

"Our trainer has put me through some pretty vigorous workouts. I've been in the pool and on the bike, so he's doing everything he can," Gaffney added.

Gaffney was asked if this was just a regular season game, and not the NIT semifinals at MSG, if he would play or not.

"Probably not, but with just two games left – hopefully – I get four to six months after this to rest," he said.

Gaffney was a big reason the Minutemen came back from 12 points down with eight minutes to go against Akron in the second round of the NIT. His effort and energy on defense led to quick and easy baskets in transition on offense, and enabled UMass to escape the Mullins Center with the win.

But he took a tough fall late in that game, and missed the subsequent comeback victory over Syracuse in the NIT quarterfinals at the Carrier Dome.

The decision is on him and he feels he's good to go.

"It's pretty much on me. If I can walk, I'm going to suit up. It's just a matter of how much I can help the team," he said.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

2 X Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy Any Large Pizza...
Get One FREE Delivered!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art

4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all

5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760

Smith College Museum of Art

UF has young talent

M. BASKETBALL from page 12

has been lost in all the talk and hoopla of this year's national freshman class.

"Calathes is extremely advanced; maybe the best point guard we've played against this year, as far as what he does for his basketball team," Ford said. "He can score, maybe the best passer we've played against, and he's doing all this at 6-foot-6."

That's high praise from Ford, as the Minutemen have played against some strong point guards this season, including Drew Lavender (Xavier), Tyrese Rice (Boston College), Jonny Flynn (Syracuse) and Brian Roberts (Dayton).

Like Calathes, Speights is already high on the NBA radar at such a young stage in his career. The 6-foot-10 sophomore ranks just behind Calathes for the team lead in scoring at 14.5 points per game and his average of 7.8 rebounds is a team-best.

Speights has been a force in the low-post all season, with nine double-doubles and over two blocks per game. If UMass forward Tony Gaffney (injured knee, missed the game against Syracuse) is unable to play, the Minutemen may have their hands full in the paint. But Gaffney appears ready to suit up and make an impact for his team.

Notes

The winner of tonight's game advances to the NIT Championship game, which will be played Thursday night at MSG. That game will air on ESPN at 7 p.m. . The other semifinal matchup pits Mississippi State against Ohio State. That game will tip-off about 30 minutes after the first game ends .. If Ohio State and Florida both win, the NIT final will be a rematch of last year's NCAA National Championship game.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Dante Milligan will have a tough time matching up with Florida's Marreese Speights and the rest of the Gators' frontcourt.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S

HUGE
INSANELY
STUPID
APARTMENT DEALS

Housing Fair Only
April 3, 2008
Campus Center 10-3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2008

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass to tangle with Gators

Defending champions to present challenge

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

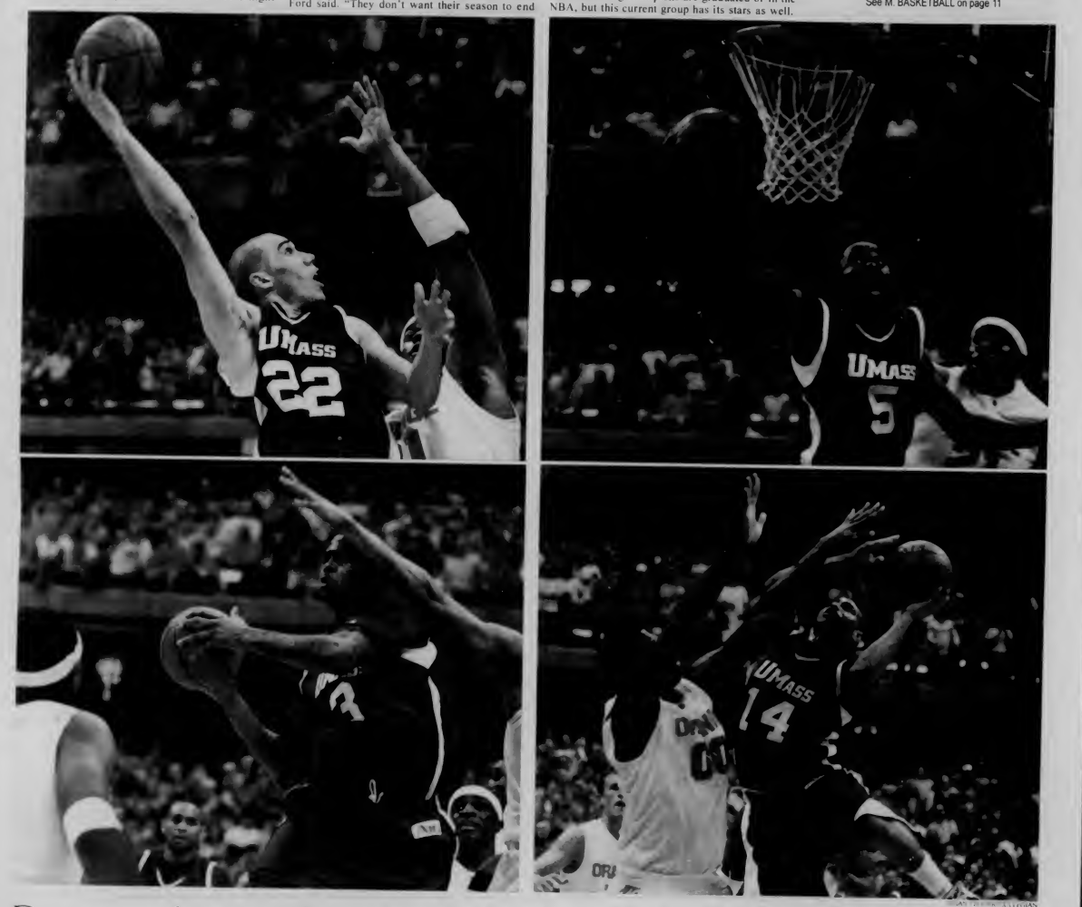
If Massachusetts trails Florida by 15 points at halftime tonight, it will have the Gators right where it wants them.

Under any other scenario, that would seem ridiculous, but the past few games have been that improbable for UMass. The Minutemen hope to continue their impressive run in the NIT tonight at Madison Square Garden with a semifinal meeting against Florida.

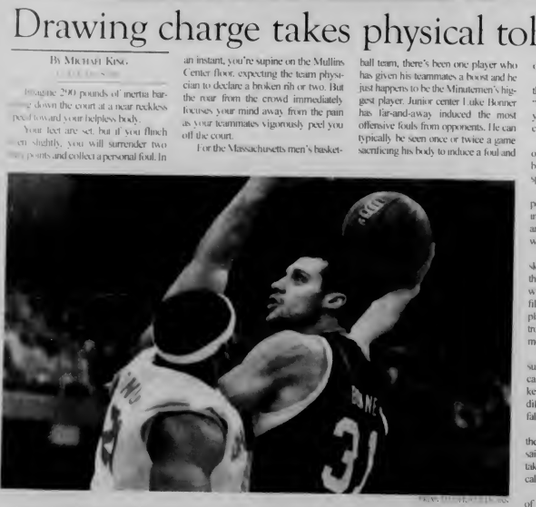
UMass (24-10) remains alive in the NIT after two incredible late-game comebacks, highlighted by last week's epic 22-point come-from-behind victory over Syracuse in the quarterfinals.

The Minutemen made up the 22-point difference in the last 14-plus minutes, escaping the Carrier Dome (for a second time this season) with the 81-77 win. UMass defeated Akron, 68-63, in the previous round, overcoming a 12-point deficit with just over eight minutes remaining.

"We've come back a lot this year. But what we've done these past two games, it leans on the shoulders of our seniors," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "They don't want their season to end and I think they're the backbone of our basketball team right now."



For senior captains Gary Forbes, Etienne Browder and Dante Milligan, not making the NCAA Tournament for the second straight season was a bitter disappointment. But the trio of New York natives now get to end their careers in the very state it all started – and at one of the most famous sporting venues in the world.



How long this trip lasts will depend a lot on how well they play – along with junior point guard Chris Lowe and sophomore guard Ricky Harris – against a young, but supremely talented Florida team. Virtually everybody from the two-time defending champions are graduated or in the NBA, but this current group has its stars as well.

"Their team is playing with a great sense of urgency," Ford said. "They are a very talented basketball team, very similar to the team we just played [in Syracuse]. They are probably even more talented than Syracuse is as far as guys who can do a lot of different things."

Two of those players are freshman point guard Nick Calathes and sophomore big-man Marreese Speights. Calathes has been sensational for the Gators running the point, contributing to the offense in virtually every way possible. Somehow, his stellar production as a first-year player (15.4 points per game, 6.2 assists and 5.1 rebounds)

See M. BASKETBALL on page 11

Junior Luke Bonner has struggled offensively but has established himself as a player who can take charges on the defensive end.

Drawing charge takes physical toll on body

BY MICHAH KISG
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Imagine 290 pounds of inertia barreling down the court at a near reckless speed toward your helpless body.

Your feet are set, but if you flinch even slightly, you will surrender two key points and collect a personal foul. In an instant, you're supine on the Mullins Center floor, expecting the team physician to declare a broken rib or two. But the roar from the crowd immediately focuses your mind away from the pain as your teammates vigorously peel you off the court.

For the Massachusetts men's basketball team, there's been one player who has given his teammates a boost and he just happens to be the Minutemen's biggest player. Junior center Luke Bonner has far-and-away induced the most offensive fouls from opponents. He can typically be seen once or twice a game sacrificing his body to induce a foul and obtain possession for his team.

"It really doesn't hurt that bad, though some guys do," Bonner said. "For the most part if you land properly, you have the adrenaline from getting the charge call that it's worth it."

The 7-footer hasn't enjoyed the type of breakout season that many expected, but Bonner has embraced his role as a spark off the bench.

Though Bonner knows he has a penchant for taking charges, the process involves more than just flopping wildly around the court waiting for an official's whistle.

"I know that's one of my basketball skills, so I definitely go into every game thinking that I will get a charge somewhere," Bonner said. "From watching film, you can see the tendencies of some players who drive to the basket unconsciously at times, so you know who is more charge-prone."

But even identifying an opponent's susceptibility of is not enough. Foul calls are inherently subjective in basketball and the onus of determining the difference between a block and a charge falls on the officials.

"Sometimes you have to hope that the referee gives you the call," Bonner said. "There have been times where I've taken charges, but just haven't gotten the calls."

Though there is no lasting evidence of his effort since the NCAA does not

See BONNER on page 11

MSG playing host to multiple reunions

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass Basketball

The Massachusetts men's basketball program doesn't have a lot in common with Florida.

The Gators are the two-time defending NCAA National Champions, while UMass hasn't made the NCAA Tournament in 10 years. And the campuses are in completely different parts of the country and over 1,000 miles apart.

But despite all these differences, the Minutemen and the Gators will meet tonight at Madison Square Garden in New York in the semifinals of the NIT. And it will be a homecoming and reunion of sorts for those involved.

UMass junior point guard Chris Lowe will play against close friend and former high school teammate Jonathan Mitchell, and four Minutemen (Gary Forbes, Dante Milligan, Etienne Brower and Lowe) get to return to their home state to play the Gators.

But the most intriguing reunion will pit UMass coach Travis Ford against friend and mentor Billy Donovan on the opposing coaching sidelines.

The two have remained close from their days together at Kentucky, when Ford was a star point guard and Donovan was on the coaching staff under Rick Pitino in the early 1990s.

"He's definitely had an influence on my playing career and coaching career, there's no question," Ford said of Donovan. "He's someone when I was at Kentucky who I learned a great amount from, looked up to and spent a lot of time with individually.

"He was someone I could always turn to," he added. "He's always given me advice and he still does today. He's someone I still spend time with."

They both may coach now, but Ford remembers his one-on-one matchups with Donovan when they were together at Kentucky.

"We played a little one-on-one together…he might have won more than I did," Ford said. "Hopefully I can get him back."

HOME-COURT ADVANTAGE?

The semifinal NIT matchup with the Gators will be played in New York, but Ford is hoping his Minutemen will enjoy a little edge

See MSG on page 11

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Fool me once, shame on - shame on you. Fool me - you can't get fooled again."

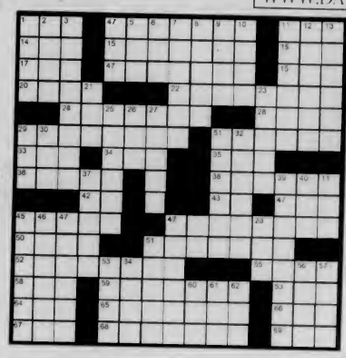
– President George W. Bush

WONDERMARK By David Malki

SCRATCH N' SNIFF By Derek Cuneo

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

Foodoku



7						9
	1			8	5		4
4			5
	7		1				2
		3	8		5	4
8				3	2		7
7					3			6
1		8	6
	5							7

ACROSS
1 Kind of instinct
4 Rummage sales
11 Part of a play
14 Sound of distaste
15 Smother
16 Opponent
17 Tavern order
18 Ms. Fabray
19 Launch, as a program
20 Silent actor
22 Zero option
24 Fleets of ships
28 Sword and
29 Enhanced versions
31 Shifts out of place
33 Grope
34 Put on
35 Singer Colins
36 Raw appetizers
38 Pretentious performer
42 Occult character
43 Quirk
44 "You've got mail" co.
45 Wields a broom
48 Petty braggarts
50 Lacerated
51 Catching, as a fish
52 Float ingredient
55 ___ as ABC
58 Over the hill
59 Saxophonist Coleman
63 Body of water
64 Actress Ruby
65 Feared fish
66 Actor Mineo
67 Wrap up
68 Skip and bounce
69 Mineral vein

DOWN
1 Mariana island
2 Tangelo variety
3 Fowles novel
4 ___ appetit!
5 "Mogambo" star Gardner
6 Meditative discipline
7 Scenes of activity
9 Ceremonial act
10 Observes
11 Scared
12 Pair
13 Principles
21 Make a blunder
23 Spicy dish
25 Invented
26 Decorates
27 Thick
29 Flying saucer for short
30 Double over
31 Head doctor's
32 Chinese tree
35 Inner courtyard
37 Differ or Loft
39 Calm area of the Atlantic
40 2,000 pounds
41 Golfer Ernie
45 Walked wobblously
46 Made from a fleece
47 Worm away
48 Flipped pits
49 ___ life to live
51 Maltese to Rousseau
53 Hits on the head
54 "CHiPs" star Estrada
56 Scorn
57 Clinton's alma mater
60 Letters that explode
61 Definite article
62 Corr. order

There will never be crossword solutions. Never.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit your homemade sex tapes.
comics@dailycollegian.com
Submit your social security number!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you find yourself commenting on the incredible size of a man's forearm, assume he is lonely and flawed in some way.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Unlike other days, these horoscopes are just pranks. Like your dreams, none of them will actually come true.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your boyfriend wears your underpants when you're not home.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Currently the kid behind you is staring at your fairy in a flower tramp-stamp and regretting it for you.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The fact that this paper offends you certifies that you have worse sense of humor than Al Gore. Ouch!

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Reading someone else's blog is basically like saying, "My life is boring. Can I have yours?"

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are a master sneaky person capable of perpetrating brilliant and legendary pranks on the foolish people of this campus.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You are more inconvenient than a heavy flow menstrual cycle and less capable of contributing to the reproductive process.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Just because a girl is easy doesn't mean she's sleazy. Besides, you're ugly, so this is pretty much your only shot.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your resume sucks, but you give great blowjobs. I mean, it's an option.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Call your boyfriend, and tell him your preggers. That'll be a funny prank.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Oh, you watch NASCAR? Where do you park your house.

You smell funky. See page 3 for assistance.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Belchertown center of town on bus route 2 bedroom 725 first last security 413-323-6511 9-2pm

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates
APARTMENT FOR RENT
2 bedroom $1175
3 bedroom $1475
4 bedroom $2225
Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

Attention Juniors&Seniors: Fall 2008 internship with the student legal services office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys & clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary- Full training provided. Contact our office at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

Be a Dell Campus Rep. Promote a top 30 company and gain real-world business and marketing experience! Go to RepNation.com/Dell to apply. andrewm@repnation.com 646-341-8283

Free can of the insanely-healthyenergydrink! Email DRINKVERVE@AOL.com

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity.Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English nding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

EMPLOYMENT

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER

EMPLOYMENT

CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Close to Umass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270.

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900.24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 1, 2008

SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass to tangle with Gators

Defending champions to present challenge

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

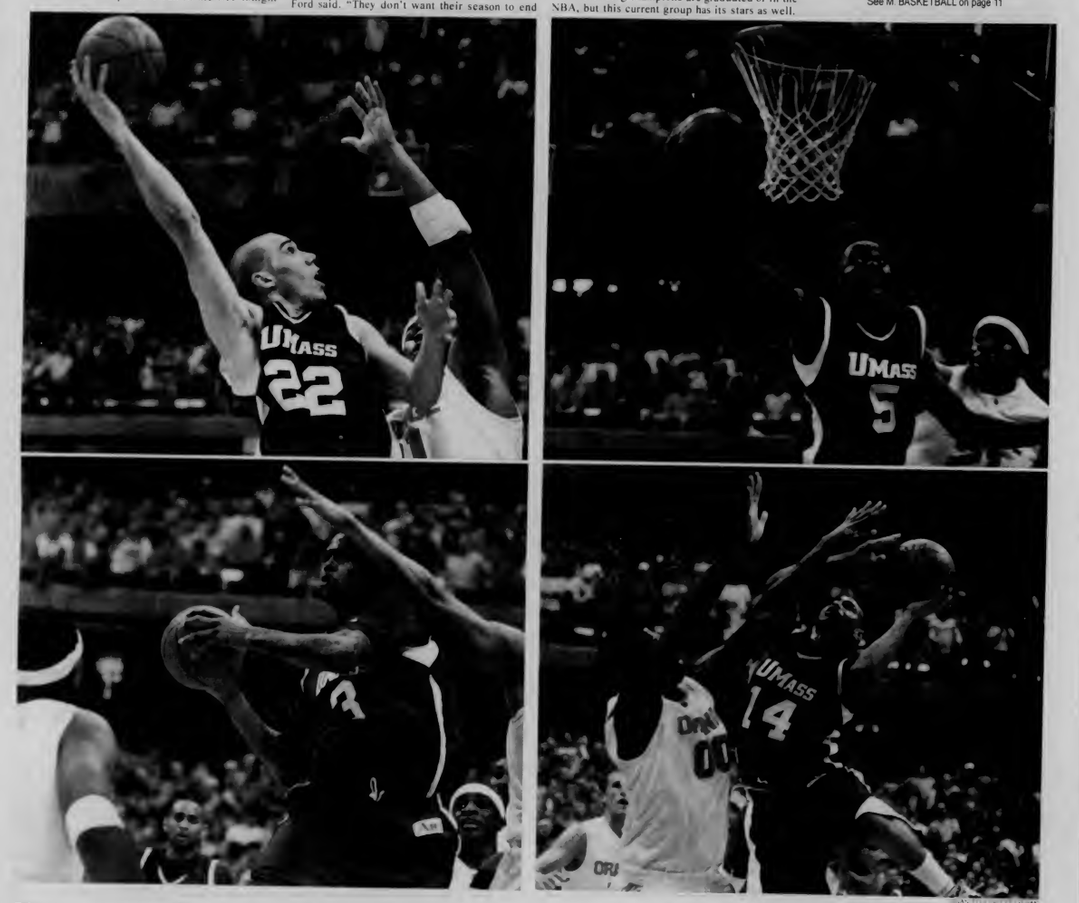
If Massachusetts trails Florida by 15 points at halftime tonight, it will have the Gators right where it wants them.

Under any other scenario, that would seem ridiculous, but the past few games have been that improbable for UMass. The Minutemen hope to continue their impressive run in the NIT tonight at Madison Square Garden with a semifinal meeting against Florida.

UMass (24-10) remains alive in the NIT after two incredible late-game comebacks, highlighted by last week's epic 22-point come-from-behind victory over Syracuse in the quarterfinals.

The Minutemen made up the 22-point difference in the last 14-plus minutes, escaping the Carrier Dome (for a second time this season) with the 81-77 win. UMass defeated Akron, 68-63, in the previous round, overcoming a 12-point deficit with just over eight minutes remaining.

"We've come back a lot this year. But what we've done these past two games; it leans on the shoulders of our seniors," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "They don't want their season to end and I think they're the backbone of our basketball team right now."



For senior captains Gary Forbes, Etienne Brower and Dante Milligan, not making the NCAA Tournament for the second straight season was a bitter disappointment. But the trio of New York natives now get to end their careers in the very state it all started – and at one of the most famous sporting venues in the world.

How long this trip lasts will depend a lot on how well they play – along with junior point guard Chris Lowe and sophomore guard Ricky Harris – against a young, but supremely talented Florida team. Virtually everybody from the two-time defending champions are graduated or in the NBA, but this current group has its stars as well.

"Their team is playing with a great sense of urgency," Ford said. "They are a very talented basketball team, very similar to the team we just played [in Syracuse]. They are probably even more talented than Syracuse is as far as guys who can do a lot of different things."

Two of those players are freshman point guard Nick Calathes and sophomore big-man Marreese Speights. Calathes has been sensational for the Gators running the point, contributing to the offense in virtually every way possible. Somehow, his stellar production as a first-year player (15.4 points per game, 6.2 assists and 5.1 rebounds)

See M. BASKETBALL on page 11

Drawing charge takes physical toll on body

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Imagine 290 pounds of inertia barreling down the court at a near reckless speed toward your helpless body.

Your feet are set, but if you flinch even slightly, you will surrender two easy points and collect a personal foul. In an instant, you're supine on the Mullins Center floor, expecting the team physician to declare a broken rib or two. But the roar from the crowd immediately focuses your mind away from the pain as your teammates vigorously peel you off the court.

For the Massachusetts men's basketball team, there's been one player who has given his teammates a boost and he just happens to be the Minutemen's biggest player. Junior center Luke Bonner has far-and-away induced the most offensive fouls from opponents. He can typically be seen once or twice a game sacrificing his body to induce a foul and obtain possession for his team.

"It really doesn't hurt that bad, though some guys do," Bonner said. "For the most part if you land properly, you have the adrenaline from getting the charge call that it's worth it."

The 7-footer hasn't enjoyed the type of breakout season that many expected, but Bonner has embraced his role as a spark off the bench.

Though Bonner knows he has a penchant for taking charges, the process involves more than just flopping wildly around the court waiting for an official's whistle.

"I know that's one of my basketball skills, so I definitely go into every game thinking that I will get a charge somewhere," Bonner said. "From watching film, you can see the tendencies of some players who drive to the basket unconsciously at times, so you know who is more charge-prone."

But even identifying an opponent's susceptibility of is not enough. Foul calls are inherently subjective in basketball and the onus of determining the difference between a block and a charge falls on the officials.

"Sometimes you have to hope that the referee gives you the call," Bonner said. "There have been times where I've taken charges, but just haven't gotten the calls."

Though there is no lasting evidence of his effort since the NCAA does not

See BONNER on page 11

Junior Luke Bonner has struggled offensively but has established himself as a player who can take charges on the defensive end.

MSG playing host to multiple reunions

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts men's basketball program doesn't have a lot in common with Florida.

The Gators are the two-time defending NCAA National Champions, while UMass hasn't made the NCAA Tournament in 10 years. And the campuses are in completely different parts of the country and over 1,000 miles apart.

UMass Basketball

But despite all these differences, the Minutemen and the Gators will meet tonight at Madison Square Garden in New York in the semifinals of the NIT. And it will be a homecoming and reunion of sorts for those involved.

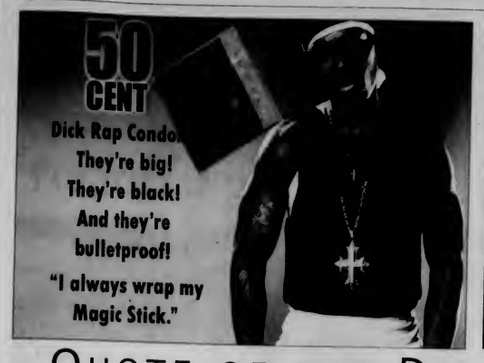
UMass junior point guard Chris Lowe will play against close friend and former high school teammate Jonathan Mitchell, and four Minutemen (Gary Forbes, Dante Milligan, Etienne Brower and Lowe) get to return to their home state to play the Gators.

But the most intriguing reunion will pit UMass couch Travis Ford against friend and mentor Billy Donovan on the opposing coaching sidelines.

The two have remained close from their days together at Kentucky, when Ford was a star point guard and Donovan was on the coaching staff under Rick Pitino in the early 1990s.

"He's definitely had an influence on my playing career and coaching career, there's no question," Ford said of Donovan. "He's someone when I was at Kentucky who I learned a great amount from, looked up to and spent a lot of time with individually.

"He was someone I could always turn to," he added. "He's always given me advice and he still does today. He's someone I still spend time with."



They both may coach now, but Ford remembers his one-on-one matchups with Donovan when they were together at Kentucky.

"We played a little one-on-one together…he might have won more than I did," Ford said. "Hopefully I can get him back."

HOME-COURT ADVANTAGE?

The semifinal NIT matchup with the Gators will be played in New York, but Ford is hoping his Minutemen will enjoy a little edge

See MSG on page 11

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Fool me once, shame on - shame on you. Fool me - you can't get fooled again."

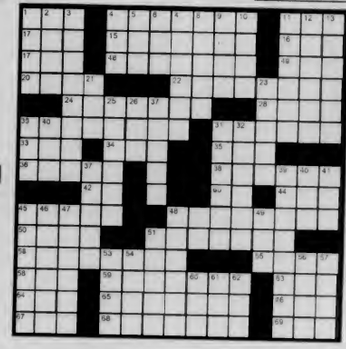
– President George W. Bush

WONDERMARK BY DAVID MALKI

SCRATCH N' SNIFF BY DEREK CUNEO

LABRAT BY RICHARD MARTELLY

Foodoku



7						9
	1			8	5		4
4			5
	7		1				2
		3	8		5	4
8				3	2		7
7					3			6
1		8	6
	5							7

ACROSS
1 Kind of instinct
4 Rummage sales
11 Part of a play
14 Sound of distaste
15 Smother
16 Opponent
17 Tavern order
18 Ms. Fabray
19 Launch, as a program
20 Silent actor
22 Zero option
24 Fleets of ships
28 Sword and
29 Enhanced versions
31 Shifts out of place
33 Grope
34 Pull on
35 Singer Collins
36 Raw appetizers
38 Pretentious performer
42 Occult character
43 Quirk
44 "You've got mail" co.
45 Welds a broom
48 Petty braggarts
50 Lacerated
51 Catching, as a fish
52 Float ingredient
55 ___ as ABC
58 Over the hill
59 Saxophonist Coleman
63 Body of water
64 Actress Ruby
65 Feared fish
66 Actor Mineo
67 Wrap up
68 Skip and bounce
69 Mineral vein

DOWN
1 Manama island
2 Tangelo variety
3 Fowles novel
4 ___ appetit!
5 "Mogambo" star Gardner
6 Meditative discipline
7 Scenes of activity
9 Ceremonial act
10 Observes
11 Scared
12 Pier
13 Principles
21 Make a blunder
23 Spicy dish
25 Invented
26 Decorates
27 Thick
29 Flying saucer, for short
30 Double over
31 Head doctor?
32 Chinese tree
35 Inner courtyard
37 Dollar or Loft
39 Calm area of the Atlantic
40 2,000 pounds
41 Golfer Ernie
45 Walked vigorously
46 Made from a fleece
47 Worn away
48 Flipped into
49 ___ to fly, ye
51 Matisse or Rousseau
53 Hits on the head
54 "CHiPs" star Estrada
56 Scorn
57 Clinton's alma mater
60 Letters that explode
61 Definite article
62 Conf order

There will never be crossword solutions. Never.

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Submit your homemade sex tapes.
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your social security number!
(413) 545-3500

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
If you find yourself commenting on the incredible size of a man's forearm, assume he is lonely and flawed in some way.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Unlike other days, these horoscopes are just pranks. Like your dreams, none of them will actually come true.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Your boyfriend wears your underpants when you're not home.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Currently the kid behind you is staring at your fairy in a flower tramp-stamp and regretting it for you.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
The fact that this paper offends you certifies that you have worse sense of humor than Al Gore. Ouch!

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Reading someone else's blog is basically like saying, "My life is boring. Can I have yours?"

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You are a master sneaky person capable of perpetrating brilliant and legendary pranks on the foolish people of this campus.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
You are more inconvenient than a heavy flow menstrual cycle and less capable of contributing to the reproductive process.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
Just because a girl is easy doesn't mean she's sleazy. Besides, you're ugly, so this is pretty much your only shot.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
Your resume sucks, but you give great blowjobs. I mean, it's an option.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Call your boyfriend, and tell him your preggers. That'll be a funny prank.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Oh, you watch NASCAR? Where do you park your house.

You smell funky. See page 3 for assistance.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Belchertown center of town on bus route 2 bedroom 725 first last security 413-323-6511 9-2pm

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates
APARTMENT FOR RENT
2 bedroom $1175
3 bedroom $1475
4 bedroom $2225
Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

Attention Juniors&Seniors: Fall 2008 internship with the student legal services office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys & clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experience necessary- Full training provided. Contact our office at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

EMPLOYMENT

Be a Dell Campus Rep. Promote a top 30 company and gain real-world business and marketing experience! Go to RepNation.com/Dell to apply. andrewm@repnation.com 646-341-8283

Free can of the insanely-healthyenergydrink! Email DRINKVERVE@AOL.com

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity.Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

EMPLOYMENT

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER

EMPLOYMENT

CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Close to Umass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270.

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900.24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MORNING WOOD

APATHY & LIVING

SERIOUSLY? YOU DON'T KNOW THE DATE?

ARTS@MORNINGWOOD.COM

C-Mart, Ambiguity headline Spring Concert

BY OUT OF WORK BEER DUDE #2
CURRENTLY AT HOME WEEKLY

The biggest music event of the year at the University of Massachusetts finally has a line-up the 2008 spring concert will be headlined by international hip-hop legends, C-Mart Murder Inc. and Ambiguity.

The duo is powered by the God-like rhymes of C-Mart. A runaway train through the ice-capped mountains of the Himalayas in the dead of winter during a sunset while the great snowy owl wildly humps its mate is the only way to describe the ill lyrics that resonate from a mic in the hands of C-Mart.

"We're going to make your eyes shatter, your ears bleed, and your brains melt. You'll think you were in the sickest video game ever by the end of the show," said C-Mart.

Ambiguity is the more refined of the two. A single note is all that's needed as the smooth, sexual charisma oozes out of him.

"There is no telling what I am and what I stand for," said Ambiguity.

The spring concert was decided by online vote, and by a strange twist of fate, not a single act on the list was chosen. Granted, a number of them are either already committed to other festivals that weekend or, in a few cases, they just suck. There is even a side note saying that there is no guarantee that the act voted for would actually be coming to UMass.

Not liking any of the choices provided by UPC, the voting public decided on a write-in candidate.

We were just going to ignore the write-ins," said T.J. Hurrie, a member of the UPC council. "When we realized that we had four times the amount of write-ins as people who voted in the SGA elections, we figured we should listen."

Hurrie admits that he is excited about the opening act. So much so that he convinced UPC to go out and get every act that received a write-in vote.

"Since we decided to go out and get the act that got the most write-in votes, it seemed only fair that we looked at all the write-ins to see who else the UMass community wanted," said Hurrie.

What UMass wanted was a list of over 20 acts, all of which were intriguing.

The biggest surprise on the card is a reuniting Stillwater. The original line-up was last seen in 1974 on the "No Airplanes Tour." Fighting between guitarist Russell Hammond and lead vocalist Jeff Bebe over the now-infamous Rolling Stone article and cover shoot by noted music writer William Miller, led drummer Ed Vallencourt to leave the group.

Following the unsuccessful album, "Golden God," whose only hit was a cover of Elton John's "Tiny Dancer." Hammond and Bebe parted ways. While they have been together at various award shows and appearances, they have not played together since 1975.

The card itself is very rock heavy. Two bands will attempt garner best rock group honors. Established mega-group Wyld Stallyns, and current rock-heavy hitters The Lone Rangers, will both be trying to take the top spot.

Wyld Stallyns, fronted by childhood friends Bill S. Preston, Esq. and Ted "Theodore" Logan, have been rocking the world since they won a local battle of the bands in 1991 which was, for some reason, broadcast to the world.

The trio of Chazz, Rex and Pip make up The Lone Rangers, who gained nation attention in 1994 when they held a rock radio station hostage but have since become a national headliner in the rock world.

A trio of additional acts from the genre are also joining the under card. 1980s metal band, Steel Dragon (now on their 12th lead singer), up and coming rockers Timmy and the Lords of the Underworld, and British group driveSHAFT (currently on their Charlie Pace memorial tour), are all slated to appear.

Aside from the headliners, Hip-Hop will showcase three acts. The current white hope of rap, B-Rabbit, headlines this group with seasoned veteran Sir Smoke-A-Lot and newcomer Ali G rounding out the set.

Pop gets the treatment as washed up boy bands 2ge+her and Fingerbang try to capture some of their old glory. The Zack Attack will also battle for the title of "worst lip-synching of the day."

As always, the first couple of opening acts are a mix of local bands and karaoke winners from the area. Headlining this group are two completely different music acts.

First is an eclectic foursome from Quahog R.I. known as Fat, Horny, Drunk and Joe. They clinched a spot in the spring concert by winning a UMass-sponsored karaoke contest at McMurphy's with a rousing rendition of "Don't Stop Believing" by Journey.

C-Mart Murder Inc. and Ambiguity have been tearing up the Hip-Hop world with their latest release "Get That Papah." While many have rejected their style, it's impossible to deny their mass market appeal.

The other is a bluegrass group from down south, Stewie and the Cowtones, who have been skyrocketing up the country charts with their hit single "My Fat Baby."

While the line-up for the spring concert may be set, the venue is not. Originally, the Cage was going to play host, but Dining Services will be taking control of the Cage starting May 1 to turn it into a giant oven (all that is planned right now is putting down a metal floor).

UPC has also talked to a group of venues in Northampton, but lack of space closed that deal fairly quickly.

The final two choices are the Mullins Center and the quad behind the Performing Arts Building.

The Spring Concert is May 4, and tickets will be $25. All the money raised from the concert will go to the victims of the April 1 riot following the UMass/Florida NIT game, and the scheduled riot to take place during the spring concert.

Out of work Beer Dude #2 can not be reached as he is no longer empolyed at the Morning Wood.

Brad DeFlumeri's spring fashion guide

BY LAWDEN MCCOY
COLLEGIAN FASHION WRITER

You've all seen him around campus, the champion of the conservative right, perpetual thorn in the side of the left, but whether or not you agree with his politics, we can all agree on one thing. Brad DeFlumeri is a fashion icon.

The Republican Club President, Daily Collegian Opinion columnist and part-time fashionista, never shies away from a scandal. However, whenever and wherever he is causing a ruckus, he is sure to be there in his designer threads, sporting his signature look.

By opting for freshly-shined loafers over Abercrombie flip-flops, and by choosing designer suits from the latest trendy, evil mega-corporation, Brad has cast himself as a man who sets himself apart from the collegiate world, boldly daring to be designer on a campus where it's all too cool to look unemployed.

That is why in this year's spring fashion guide, we salute Brad DeFlumeri, and try to figure out what makes his fashion clock tick.

Brad generously agreed to take time away from his busy schedule of world-domination and liberal bloodlust to divulge some of his most treasured tips. When asked about his favorite brands, Brad provides shocking answers to those who think that just because he looks good, his clothing comes with a high price tag.

Ever the frugal Fannie, Brad declares that he helps stimulate the American economy by shopping exclusively at "Wal-Mart and anything else made by large, very corporate capitalist companies," showing that one can look good even in a poor economic season. Among the other stores that receive his dollars are "conservative clothing Web site, Cafepress.com" and a favorite, if not fashion related, "Exxon Mobil."

Those looking to see his fashion finds in local stores will be disappointed, as DeFlumeri is not a fan of Amherst's local businesses, saying, "I have no favorite places to shop in Amherst. The Wal-Mart is unfortunately in Hadley. Although, if it were allowed to expand into Amherst," he says, "I would personally pay for the construction."

But how did Brad develop his signature look? The answers do not lie in the long hours of plotting and planning that usually accompany anything done by the Republican Club President, but through simple trial and error. "I tried something, and hot conservative girls liked it, so I kept it."

The look is simple. Designer suit, shiny shoes, and seamless hair, occasionally polished off with "anything that intimidates hippies and costs enough money to contribute to our glorious capitalist economy."

Brad is victim of the ego that goes along with his aura of invincible sex appeal, often calling out those who are too afraid to seek his level of fashion greatness. "Most college students have no dress standards. I think we should all wear suits and dress shoes every day."

These comments have drawn the ire of many of the lesser dressed around campus, but their uproar is the clearest sign of their unmistakable fashion envy. However, to those who secretly believe Mr. DeFlumeri to be hiding a closet love for the "hippie attire," you will be sadly disappointed. He has never worn flip flops "nor will he," and he has even gone so far as to "ask Wal-Mart to stop carrying such a product."

He does, however, secretly own a tie-dyed shirt; however, this is only so that he can "spit on it when angry." For casual wear, Brad recommends his personal favorite, navy T-shirts; however, he stresses that these should only be worn on "trips to Wal-Mart."

The final aspect of our spring fashion guide gave us the opportunity to ask Brad to give up some valuable tips about where he sees fashion going in the future. Time will tell if "McCain 2008 T-shirts" and "Wal-Mart jackets" will become the main attire for the trendy UMass student, but for now, one thing is certain the future of fashion is here, and his name is Brad DeFlumeri.

Brad is not shy about his fashion style. He was also nice enough to offer us some fashion tips for women:

Daily Collegian: Uggs or flats?
Brad DeFlumeri: Neither – I am happy if people just wear shoes; which, in itself, is a pervasive problem for hippies.

DC: Skinny Jeans or Leggings?
BD: Leggings, for obvious reasons for girls with nice bodies.

DC: What do you think will be the hot, new spring colors?
BD: Red (for the new GOP President, John McCain), white and blue. And "Brad DeFlumeri in 2020" shirts.

DC: In your opinion, what is the worst current female fashion trend?
BD: Che Guevara shirts – he was a murderer and a socialist (not sure which is worse, though).

DC: Best eye-catching female accessory?
BD: A nice ass, chest. American flag earrings.

DC: Any particular big turn-offs? Big turn-ons? (Fashion speaking of course)
BD: Patriotism and military clothing excite me. Shoeless, grungy hippies motivate me to hate liberals even more.

Both Brad and Lawden can be reached at ustv@dailycollegian.com.

Take a good long look at this photo. Seriously, stop and look at it. Now try and tell me that this man doesn't know fashion.

HOW-TO-GET-HAIR-LIKE-BRAD:
A Step by Step Guide to Follicle Finesse:

1. Wake up, tell hot girl it is time to leave the room.
2. Drive to Wal-Mart and buy "Got2b Glued" at a discounted rate.
3. Hand bottle to personal fashion assistant and direct her to apply product.
4. Make her repeat process until hair is symmetrical and perfect, like Mitt Romney's.
5. When product is depleted, skip a leftist class and go to Wal-Mart to buy more.
6. Stop at Exxon and pay extra for their gas (I own their stock).
7. Attempt to run over hippie walking down Route 9.
8. Repeat.

Babysitter, German satisfy like no other

BY MORGAN
SHITUDONTCAREABOUT
LONELY HOUSEWIFE TRIBUNE

The "Babysitter and the German" is a recently released independent film. It's a sort of coming-of-age story, in which a young woman finds work as a babysitter, and through the course of her work learns to love herself and life in new ways. Although the premise is familiar, the film is anything but ordinary.

The film's construction is very sparse and stripped-down. The entire film takes place in the living room of the father's house. There is no music besides that heard over the opening credits, and costumes and lighting are practically non-existent.

"The Babysitter and the German" is saved from the potential for boredom inherent in such bareness by the rich multitude of activities in which the characters engage, as well as by the variety of different camera angles and shots used by director Jim Powers and the luminous acting of Chloe Adams, Eric Everhard and Chris Charming.

All three characters are portrayed with a skillful combination of enthusiasm and subtlety. Adams endows her role as the Babysitter with grace, tempered with a bit of charming naivety suited to the character's age. However, the most convincing of the bunch is Everhard. He is truly believable as the frustrated father, and as a veteran actor, he allows Adams to play off both his emotional and physical prowess. The plot is simple but effective, with a satisfying end for both the characters and the viewer.

Of the three main characters, the father is the most intriguing. At first, he is concerned to be leaving his newborn baby at home while he goes out for the evening. His nervousness is rather touching as he assures himself that the titular Babysitter is going to be alright with his child.

Later, he returns home early, presumably because his paternal instincts prevent him from spending even a few hours away from his son. When he arrives, he finds the Babysitter in a compromising position with his friend, Chris, the German. At first the father is irate to see that the trusted Babysitter is allowing herself to be distracted from the baby, but he soon forgets his anger and joins in the amorous activities.

There is no wife apparent in the film; the viewer is left to conclude that the father's loneliness and the stress of being a single parent has finally gotten the best of the man, causing him to collapse into the warm embrace of the Babysitter. As he helps her discover her lust for life, the father reclaims his own.

The Babysitter herself is a lovely young woman on a quest to discover who she is; this comes out in her sense of adventure. She is confident as she first takes charge of the infant, and equally confident as she embarks on her erotic journey with Chris and the father.

Chris, a friend of the father's who arrives soon after the father leaves, is quite an enigma. He is the only character in the film to have a name, suggesting that he is somehow more real than the others, but he speaks almost entirely in German. His lines are never translated; thus his origins and motivations are completely unknown to the viewer. This seems to suggest that his words are unimportant; rather he speaks to both the characters and the viewer through his actions. His main purpose in the film is as a catalyst, for it is he who first starts the Babysitter down the path to physical self-discovery.

Chris, and later the father, and after that Chris and the father together, help the Babysitter try out a number of different acts. The film runs the gamut from the traditional (oral sex, masturbation), to the slightly more unusual (anal pleasures, erotic use of "baby formula"), to the downright shocking (Ed. Note – not fit to print). Overall, "The Babysitter and the German" is a true standout in its genre.

Morgan Shitudontcareabout at morgan@lonelyhousewife.com.

Please Bring Tim McCall Home

TOOT'S TAKIN' IT TO THE NET

Cahoon most awesome coach at UMass by far, duh

BY BARRY MELROSE
COLLEGIAN PROPHET

Despite the collapse of the 2007-08 Massachusetts hockey team, the greatness of one Don Cahoon – or Toot as he is known to all that worship him – cannot be denied. Some may argue that other UMass coaches surpass the Messiah of the Mass Attack in overall greatness, but the Collegian recently landed a copy of Mr. Cahoon's daily itinerary.

Once reading this, it will become clear to all that on the UMass athletic department pecking order of overall awesomeness, no one even comes close to Toot; although we must admit that the part in men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella's hair certainly makes him second. Maybe next year Mr. Cannella, maybe next year.

A DAY IN THE LIFE OF TOOT

5:30 a.m. – Awakens and sharply stares at electronic alarm clock Device, realizing that Toot is still tired, quickly resets itself to 6:30 and flashes "sorry, sir" across its screen. Toot is not impressed, he fires device against his wall and it smashes to pieces. Declares "Toot's takin' to the net" and quickly falls back to sleep.

6:30 a.m. – Gets out of bed without help of alarm clock. Calls James Marcou and demands all freshmen be outside in T-shirts, shorts and sneakers at 6:47.

6:36 a.m. – Toot swallows two Powerbars whole. Declares "chewing is for pussies" as he hurries out the door in UMass hockey jumpsuit holding on a hockey stick in one hand and his whistle in the other.

6:42 a.m. – Riding through center of town, Toot breezes through each and every traffic light. Not because he disregards driving laws, but because the lights do not turn red for Toot out of fear.

6:47 a.m. – Arrives at freshmen dormitory and quickly gets out of his car. After he mocks Paul Dainton for five minutes because he drinks tea, he informs his players he'll be riding behind them at 20 miles per hour as they jog around campus.

6:53 a.m. – Toot begins driving with freshmen jogging comfortably in front of him.

6:57 a.m. – Slaps Marcou on the ass with hockey stick as he lags behind the rest of the group and screams "Toot's takin' it the net."

7:18 – Repeats act with Doug Kublin four times. Then does the same to Mike Lecomte for laughing at Kublin.

7:31 a.m. – Praises the group for running well, but rewards them by driving faster. Marcou complains. Toot slaps him with the stick and yells "Leading scorer my ass. Toot's taking it to the net."

7:45 a.m. – Let's those with 8 a.m. classes retreat home to get ready for class, telling them, "My former captain was a 3.8 kid, a double-major in finite math and finance." Demands they get straight As and threatens with further running and the prospect of using a goalie's stick next time around.

8:00 a.m. – The other players return to their dorms, and Toot drives to his office in the Mullins center.

8:07 a.m. – Shouts at Travis Ford as he walks into his office; Ford hides behind athletic director John McCutcheon who hides behind women's basketball coach Mamie Dacko.

9:00 a.m. – Goes over scouting reports with equally awesome assistant coaches Len Quesnelle and Red Gendron. The trio break the meeting by putting their hands in and shouting "Fuck 'em up, Fuck 'em up, BC sucks."

9:45 a.m. – Drinks eight mugs of black coffee while watching game film. Learns that recruit chose BC over UMass and sends an e-mail back calling him a pussy. Subject line reads "Jesus Hates You."

10:45 a.m. – Prepares practice drills for the day. Calls BC coach Jerry York to say "BC sucks!" York responds, "Is this Chris Drury?"

11:00 a.m. – Toot drives to Boston to have lunch with BU coach and mentor Jack Parker.

11:30 a.m. – Arrives in Boston at Agganis Arena. A Terrier fan sees him and shouts, "BU reject!" Three BC students promptly yell, "BC rejects!"

12:00 p.m. – Toot and Parker enjoy some clam chowder and several root beers while reading a BC Heights (crappy) article in which York refers to Parker and Toot as the Emperor and Darth Vader.

12:30 p.m. – Toot is back in Amherst. While sipping a root beer, he watches two and a half hours of game film in his office on his laptop. He likes what he sees, but doesn't want to cause "Paralysis through Analysis." Satisfied that he found another chance to use that phrase, he yells, "Toot's takin' it to the net!" and slams his laptop closed.

2:50 p.m. – Makes Marcou and Lecomte lace up and tie his skates for him.

3:00 p.m. – Begins one-hour practice. Skates on ice with players, but tries not to get run over by Will Ortiz.

3:50 p.m. – Toot calls practice early but makes freshmen stay out on the ice and skate for an extra 45 minutes. Toot follows them for the first 20 minutes, taking slap shots at them as they slow down. Marcou has to pick up all the pucks. Toot disappears into the locker room.

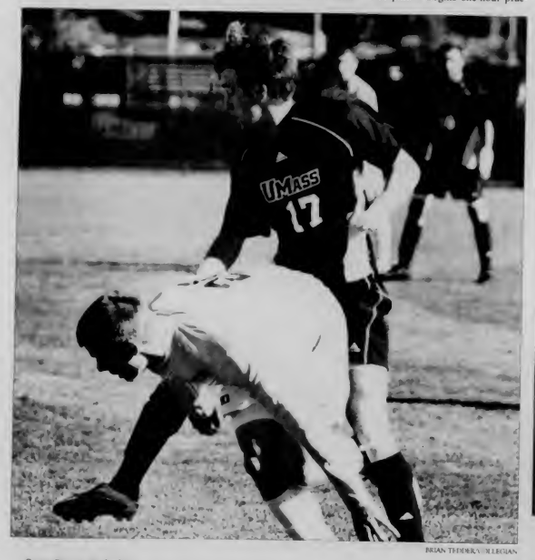
4:00 p.m. – Media arrive for interviews.

5:00 p.m. – Toot finally emerges from the locker room to conduct interviews. He says he was in team meetings, but he was probably just playing ping pong with Mike Kostka.

5:30 p.m. – Goes to dinner with Mrs. Toot at Montana's – Toot's favorite steakhouse – and gets the Early Bird Special: three steaks, clam chowder and a pitcher of root beer. Vegetables are, according to Toot, for pussies.

6:00 p.m. – Plays checkers with the forwards and talks to them about having thicker skin. He kings Chris Davis and yells, "Toot's takin' it to the net!"

7:00 p.m. – Calls former UMass All-American goaltender Jon Quick, begging him to come back to school.

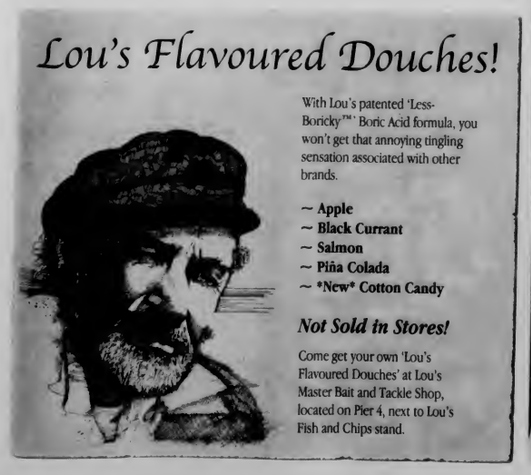


7:30 p.m. – Calls former UMass goalie Gabe Winer and asks him how his diet is going.

8:00 p.m. – Toot climbs to the roof of his house in nothing but a sweater vest and a jockstrap laces the Northeast and yells to UNH coach Dick Umile "Toot's takin' to the net" before mocking him for blowing it in the playoffs again.

9:00 p.m. – Toot crawls into bed kisses Mrs. Toot goodnight, notices the remnants of the alarm clock on the floor yells "Toot's takin' it to the net" a final time and chuckles to himself as he falls asleep.

Despite the awesomeness of the part in UMass men's lacrosse coach Greg Cannella's hair, hockey coach Don Cahoon is obviously the best coach in the history of UMass athletics and hockey in general.



BRIAN TEDESCO/COLLEGIAN

Sorry Stuart, we had to.

The man.

THE MORNING WOOD

STICKS AND BALLS

APRIL 1, 2008 SPORTS@MORNINGWOOD.COM

UMass lost, but it tried really hard

Several Minutepeople give it their all, McCutcheon happy

COURTESY UMASS MEDIA RELATIONS
IMPARTIAL OBSERVER

It was a close call, and everyone tried their absolute best, but UMass Sports fell honorably, 65-1, in a tight contest.

The one point was notched by Super Duper senior Matt Pennie, whose last-second 3-point attempt went a third of the way in before bouncing out, victoriously negating any shutout bid by the opponent, who shall remain nameless because they decided to run up the score in the first quarter.

The opponent who shall not be mentioned missed one shot in the second period, but was inadvertently bounced into the goal by former goalie Jon Quick, who had just come back to campus, saying he missed college now that he didn't have to take classes.

Stephane Lasme was credited with a block on the play.

Before halftime, Liam Coen had thrown five touchdown passes; three to Rasheed Rancher, who made one-handed diving catches for each one. He also dropped six passes over the middle.

The defense committed 17 penalties for 247 yards, six for pass interference, five for hitting after the whistle and eight for hitting before the whistle.

Coach Don Brown said the penalties were due to "effort and energy" but failed to mention anything about a lack of understanding of the rules.

Current New York Giant and former UMass wide receiver Brandon London returned with his Super Bowl ring to cheer on his old teammates, saying he'd trade the ring for another shot at Appalachian State. After hearing what the Mountaineers did to Michigan, he immediately retracted the statement.

Goalie Zack Simmons made 300 saves in the first quarter but was pulled from action after his coach, Sam Koch, made far too many sarcastic comments to the referees about Simmons having stick-urn on his hands, and the refs eventually believed him.

Midway through the first half, official Bahij Salman temporarily ejected freshman midfielder from the game for saying "What the fuck?" after an opposition player tackled him, but Salman reinstated him when he heard the rest of Arnick's sentence of "What the fuck? Sir."

Women's soccer coach Jim Rudy was seen on the sidelines, but his only comment after the game was how happy he was everyone got into the game and had a fun time.

The women's basketball team put forth a strong effort but garnered little attention from the defense, despite eight points from Kate Mills.

The men's team, however, drew plenty of attention from the defense, so much so that they were forced to take every shot from beyond the arc. Pennie's buzzer-almost-beater was the closest to dropping in though.

Coach Travis Ford mentioned something about the flu, and after further consideration, was given another berth to the NIT.

In the NIT, the Minutemen played the best game of their collective lives, but no one showed up to see it because everyone was hung over or on spring break.

UMass had a golden opportunity in the second period to get back into the game when hockey forward Chris Davis used his speedy speed and fast velocity to streak up the ice, but forgot the puck, which was promptly stuffed in the net at the other end.

Freshman phenom James Marcou looked discouraged after the play, asking "why do I have to play with these bums?" to no one in particular, mostly because no one saw him down there.

UMass coach Don Cahoon finally put himself into the game and wowed the fan in attendance with his stick skills (remember, he played at BU).

The third quarter was dominated by the opponent, but I wouldn't really blame it on UMass, who did their best.

The skiers came out in full force, but led by their former coach, Justin Rouleau, got little accomplished. Rouleau was seen laughing inexplicably and holding a bag of Doritos.

Field hockey goalkeeper Becky Letourneau, after getting called out in the media for poor play, promptly played out of her mind, leading the team to an A-10 championship. At halftime, her father challenged every fan of the visiting team to a fight.

Attendance dipped slightly in the second half.

The Minutepersons' best effort came from diver R.J. Rappe, who tried to get both feet on the ceiling on his final dive attempt, but hit his head and belly-flopped into the pool.

Stephane Lasme was credited with a block on the play.

Late in the game, baseball coach Mike Stone sent in his best reliever. Then he pulled him back out. There may have been an error in that inning. No one is sure.

After a short break to let UMass catch its breath, play resumed and things got a little better.

Pitcher Brandice Balschmiter struck out everyone. Everyone. But by that time UMass was too far behind to make a miraculous, unprecedented, record-setting comeback attempt.

One pitch was inadvertently knocked into shallow right, and it took 10 minutes for the defense to get the ball back in to the patcher's circle. Five runs were scored on the play.

The women's lacrosse team didn't play, but were deemed far tougher than the men's team. Did you know they don't even wear pads?

The men's lacrosse team didn't enter the game until the late stages, but was ejected for using their sticks. They transferred to the local prison league, but didn't fit in and ended up at the University of Miami, where Hurricane Football welcomed them with open arms and helmet in hand.

Stephane Lasme was credited with a block on the play.

The author of this story can be reached at UMassHoops.com, but you shouldn't need to send him a comment since, you know, come on.

Go UMass.

It's really slippery out there. He must've hit a divet.

Brew Crew stuns Slam Drunks in A-10 final

BY STEPHEN A. SMITH
MORNING WOOD STAFF

100 ROLLING GREEN In a do or die matchup Friday night, Slam Drunks took the Brew Crew to overtime, before eventually falling 3 cups to 1 in a clash to determine Beirut supremacy in the Atlantic 10, and a spot in the NCAA Tournament in Las Vegas, N.V.

The Brew Crew captain Derrick Perkins managed to sink three consecutive cups to force the match-up into overtime, in what has been described as the greatest comeback in Beirut history. Perkins and the Brew Crew carried the momentum into overtime stunning the two time A-10 champion Slam Drunks.

The matchup between unbeaten Slam Drunks (16-0, 6-0 A-10) and the Brew Crew (14-2, 6-0 A-10) came after Slam Drunks beat the No. 8, Southside Alcoholics (3-3 A-10) in a double-overtime thriller in Puffton last week, narrowly avoiding an historic upset. No. 2 seed Brew Crew would pull off the upset a week later taking full advantage of an obviously fatigued and ridiculously intoxicated Slam Drunks in overtime.

"It looked like it was all over for the Crew," said Brew Crew coach Matt Belliveau. "I knew he [Perkins] had the ability to hit three in a row, he's been doing that for us all season, but to step up when the season was on the line, and the pressure was on, the kid is a beast."

"I just stuck to my game, nothing fancy, I just wanted to remember the fundamentals and try to imagine it was just another game," said game MVP Perkins. "I started out cold, Will really carried the team for awhile, but I knew once the hooch kicked in I'd start hitting cups."

Perkins shot 44 percent and contributed on the defensive end by distracting the other team.

"I took my pants off when Slam Drunks asked for their second rack, it was a desperation move, but I think it helped extend the game just long enough for us to catch up," said Perkins.

Following Perkins removal of his pants the red-hot Slam Drunks, who had been shooting 67 percent cooled down shooting 1-for-6 on the final cup. In that time the Brew Crew managed to narrow the six cup lead to three, setting the stage for Perkins miraculous comeback.

In overtime Perkins stayed hot sinking four cups, with one coming via a celebrity shot taken by retired hall-of-famer Joe Meloni.

"I've been sinking cups my whole life, that shot was nothing special. I was honored to help the Brew Crew win though, and I'll definitely be in their corner come tournament time," said Meloni.

Belliveau also raved about the play of rookie Will McGuiness.

"His game has come a long way this year, he has developed into one of the best bounce shot players in the league."

McGuiness set the tone for the Brew Crew by converting on his first bounce shot of the night; he was 3-of-12 for the evening, also contributing two blocks and one finger rejection in overtime.

"Defense has been an emphasis of this team all year, I knew that they [Slam Drunks] liked to bounce, so I was ready for it all night," said McGuiness.

League MVP James "Hale Storm" Hale, carried the Slam Drunks all night, sinking 9-of-13 cups, but he failed to convert a single shot in the extra six-cup frame.

"When we sank the last shot in regulation I was sure it was over, seeing that comeback just crushed us, at that point I don't think anyone could stop the Brew Crew," said Hale.

Uncharacteristic mistakes plagued Slam Drunks in overtime, as second year All Conference shooter Michael King committed a costly elbow violation on the Slam Drunk's first possession of the extra frame.

"I felt off all night, I really couldn't focus, even so I think the ref got the elbow foul call wrong," said King.

Coach of the Slam Drunks Jeremy Rice voiced his displeasure over the Brew Crew's tactics following the game.

"Taking your punts off, and then calling a celebrity shot in overtime? Give me a break, these guys won't go far in the tournament with cheap Busch league tactics like that," said Rice.

With this victory the Brew Crew has earned a spot in the NCAA Tournament for the first time in team history, taking the No. 2 seed in the northeast bracket. They will take on No. 7 Keystone Slayers (10-6, 3-3 ACC) who hail from Boston College in the first round next Friday in Vegas.

"The Keystone Slayers have a great team," said coach Belliveau. "But there is no way in hell a team from BC is going to take down us, or anyone coming out of UMass, boom."

Stephen A. Smith can be reached at everythingisavisimportant@morningwood.com

The Brew Crew, (Derrick Perkins and Will McGuiness) celebrate their victory over the Slam Drunks and league MVP Hale Storm (left).

MINUTEMEN PLAY LONG BALL | PAGE 12

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

WINDY : HI: 46 LO: 34 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2008

Lewdness charges face UM athlete

BY FRANK VITALE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A University of Massachusetts football player is now facing charges of open and gross lewdness following an incident reported near Smith College last Tuesday.

Northampton police arrested Belchertown resident and UMass junior sociology major Spencer Sinclair Ridenhour, 22, after a female jogger reported seeing a man staring at her and masturbating from a parked car on Elm Street.

According to police, the woman claimed she approached the man because she thought he needed assistance, and that he exposed himself before driving away.

Ridenhour, of White Plains, N.Y., is also facing charges stemming from another incident earlier the same day. In the first, a Smith student reported being assaulted by an unidentified male who allegedly grabbed her buttocks in the quadrangle off of Paradise Street, according to the Smith College Public Safety Department. This was reported last Tuesday at roughly 8:30 p.m., about 30 minutes before the Elm Street incident.

UMass police apprehended Ridenhour Thursday afternoon following information given in a report from another young woman who claimed she saw a male driver masturbate while driving by her at a PVTA bus stop

See ARREST on page 3

Finishing what they started

Sophomore guard Ricky Harris flies toward the hoop in the final minute of UMass's 78-66 win over Florida in the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament. The Minutemen will face Ohio State in the final, Thursday night. See page 12 for full story.

ComCol pulls in top grads

BY RACHEL MORANDI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The honors school at the University of Massachusetts has been stacking up favorably among prestigious private schools in New England, attracting more and more of the area's finest high school graduates.

The school, Commonwealth College, has been growing in size and stature over the last decade as new programs, such as Residential Academic Programs and Learning Community Choices, have been introduced.

Commonwealth College has come out as a favorable and more affordable alternative for higher education. With the costs of college tuition on the rise, high school graduates are opting for other alternatives to gain a private education at a lower cost. At Commonwealth College, students are able to get one-on-one attention as well as in-depth discussions that large lecture halls do not necessarily offer.

David Azinheira, a freshman civil and environmental engineering major at UMass, agreed that Commonwealth College helped him make the final decision in his college search.

"The fact that there would be something off the bat that would help me stand out was important to me," he said.

Furthermore, David said the College gave the added benefit of a smaller class size.

"The perception of smaller classes was a plus, especially since I assumed all classes at UMass were huge," he said.

Commonwealth College, with about 3,800 students, allows for a smaller learning community within a larger one, along with rigorous courses that are completed over four years as well as independent study and research. Completing the College requirements is the only way students at UMass can graduate cum laude and with honors.

UMass applicants are invited to attend Commonwealth College if they achieved a combined score of 1300 on their SATs, obtained a grade point average of 3.8 or higher and ranked within the top 10 percent of their high school. Furthermore, the College gives current students and transfers the ability to attend if they earn a grade point average of 3.2 or higher.

Aaron Spencer, a former chairman of the Massachusetts Board of Higher Education who was the driving force behind the creation of Commonwealth College at UMass, agreed that the College is a benefit to the University.

"I think the public is beginning to recognize Commonwealth College as almost Ivy League in its quality," he said. "It is the jewel of our university system."

Patrick names new secretary of education for Massachusetts

BY KATHERINE NEUBERT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Paul Reville, chairman of the Massachusetts State Board of Education, was named the state's new secretary of education this month by Governor Deval Patrick.

The appointment becomes effective Aug. 28.

Reville, 58, was up against Christopher R. Anderson for the position. He said he believed his appointment as chairman was a result of working closely with Patrick's education team during the past few months and that he did not anticipate a tense relationship between him and Anderson, the Boston Globe reported earlier this month.

Legislation passed in January established the new Executive Office of Education, which is aimed to improve policy coordination across all three sectors of education: early education and care, K-12 and higher education.

Proposed by Patrick, the office is also intended to guide students seamlessly from one step to the next through the entry level of their education into the workforce.

"A first-rate education is the gateway to opportunity," said Patrick. "The Readiness Project will give us the road map for the next phase of education reform, and a strong cabinet-level secretary will provide the leadership. Paul has done a fantastic job as chairman of the Board of Education and will continue to make great contributions as secretary of education. I am excited about what possibilities lie ahead of our kids."

Last August, Reville was named chairman of the Board of Education by Patrick. He was also a leader of the state's education reform effort in 1993, and served as a member of the Board of Education from 1991 to 1996.

Reville is currently the president of the Rennie Center for Education Research & Policy in Cambridge, director of the education policy and management program, a lecturer on education policy and politics at the Harvard Graduate School of Education, co-chair of the National Center on Time and Learning, and the co-founder and former executive director of the Massachusetts Business Alliance for Education.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu

Gender inequality still in paychecks

BY PAMELA LAWN
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Michael Jin is looking forward to life after college. With only a couple of months to go before graduating from the University of Massachusetts, Michael dreams of working for a sports marketing company like IMG or Octagon.

"In ten years time, I hope to become a marketing director of a foreign sports company," he said.

Laurena Abraham, a student majoring in sports management and HR, is equally ambitious. Also currently studying at UMass, Laurena plans to gain employment in the sports marketing field.

"I would like to work my way up in the events industry from an event co-coordinator to an events manager and be involved with several different aspects of events, including operations, marketing, licensing and merchandising," she said.

But Abraham is likely to earn less than Jin after graduation.

Research suggests females are more likely to be in a financially disadvantaged position. Statistics released by the 2006 Current Population Survey show that a male bachelor degree graduate will have a median income of $55,425, while women with the same classification of degree will only have a median of $38,221.

The United States Census Bureau found that on average,

See GENDER on page 2

Fulbright awarded

BY JENNIFER HESHION
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A University of Massachusetts professor has been awarded a prestigious grant to lecture and conduct research in Japan in the fields of computer science and mathematics education.

Professor Howard Peelle, of the UMass School of Education, has received a Fulbright Senior Specialist grant to travel to the Japan Advanced Institute of Science and Technology for six weeks during May and June.

"I was interested and available to do the Fulbright program and now it has come through and I'm excited to do this," said Peelle.

Peelle has been a member of the UMass faculty since 1970. He is the founder of the doctoral concentration in mathematics and science education in the School of Education.

JAIST is a new independent university committed to graduate research and education in science and technology. It is located in the city of Nomi in the Ishikawa Prefecture, with a satellite campus in Tokyo.

During his time in Japan, Peelle plans to work together with computer science educators, review requirements for 80 courses in JAIST's masters and Ph.D programs, and offer recommendations for advancing students' mathematics education.

Peelle will also lead seminars on teaching mathematics with J computing software, which Peelle calls "computer mathematical notation," useful for teaching and computing mathematics.

The Fulbright grant provides short-term academic opportunities for professionals to travel abroad, with the intention being that they will not interfere with academic or professional commitments in the United States. The program is carried out over two to six weeks abroad.

According to the official Web site for the Fulbright grant (www.cies.org/about_fulb.htm), the purpose of the grant is to increase the participa-

See GRANT on page 3

Speaker discusses war, 9/11 in lecture

'What's so great about America'

BY KRISTEN HEALY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A fairly large crowd gathered in the Student Union Ballroom last night to hear what best-selling author and conservative scholar Dinesh D'Souza had to say in his talk, titled "What's So Great about America."

D'Souza is the author of a number of books, including the most recently published "What's So Great about Christianity." He has appeared on a number of news programs including Nightline, The O'Reilly Factor and the satirical Colbert Report on Comedy Central.

The lecture, which was sponsored by the University of Massachusetts Republican Club and the Young Americans Foundation, began with UMass Republican Club president Brad DeFlumeri introducing many of D'Souza's accomplishments, both in literature and politics.

D'Souza then began his lecture by talking about the United States' War on Terrorism and who the real enemy is that we are fighting. He compared this war to World War II, claiming that America's enemy then was not the Kamikaze suicide bombers, but the Japanese.

"Why now are we fighting this method of terrorism, when our efforts should be focused on a specific group?" he inferred.

"Terrorism is not an opponent, terrorism is a tactic. So who, then, is the enemy?" said D'Souza.

He then posed the question, "What about America has prompted such feelings of hatred from certain Muslims to offer up their lives in the attacks on September 11, 2001?"

In referring to the events on Sept. 11, D'Souza felt that the cultural

See D'SOUZA on page 3

Conservative author Dinesh D'Souza spoke at the University of Massachusetts campus last night about his views on terrorism and touched on the history of America's enemies.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 112

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staigen
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marwa Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATION Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seaburn
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Melotti
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE MASS COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DAILY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HOURS AND POLICIES SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 413-545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Third graders plot to attack teacher

BY RUSS BYNUM
ASSOCIATED PRESS

A group of third-graders plotted to attack their teacher, bringing a broken steak knife, handcuffs, duct tape and other items for the job and assigning children tasks including covering the windows and cleaning up afterward, police said Tuesday.

The plot involving as many as nine boys and girls at Center Elementary School in south Georgia was a serious threat, Waycross Police Chief Tony Tanner said.

School officials alerted police Friday after a pupil tipped off a teacher that a girl had brought a weapon to school. Tanner said the students apparently planned to knock the teacher unconscious with a crystal paperweight, bind her with the handcuffs and tape and then stab her with the knife.

"We did not hear anybody say they intended to kill her, but could they have accidentally killed her? Absolutely," Tanner said. "We feel like if they weren't interrupted, there would have been an attempt. Would they have been successful? We don't know."

The children, ages 8 to 10, were apparently mad at the teacher because she had scolded one of them for standing on a chair, Tanner said.

Two of the students were arrested on juvenile charges Tuesday and a third arrest was expected. District Attorney Rick Currie said other students told investigators they didn't take the plot seriously or insisted they had decided not to participate.

"Some of the kids said, 'We thought they were just kidding,'" Currie said. "Another child was supposed to bring a toy pistol, and he told a detective he didn't bring it because he thought he would get in trouble."

Currie said the children are too young to be charged as adults, and probably too young to be sentenced to a youth detention center.

Police seized a steak knife with a broken handle, steel handcuffs, duct tape, electrical and transparent tape, ribbons and the paperweight from the students, Tanner said.

Currie said he decided to seek juvenile charges against two girls, ages 9 and 10, who brought the knife and paperweight and an 8-year-old boy who brought tape. He said all three students faced charges of conspiracy to commit aggravated assault, and both girls were being charged with bringing weapons to school.

Nine children have been given discipline up to and including long-term suspension, said Theresa Martin, spokeswoman for the Ware County school system. She would not be more specific but said none of the children had been back to school since the case came to light.

The purported target is a veteran educator who teaches third-grade students with learning disabilities, including attention deficit disorder, delayed development and hyperactivity, friends and parents said.

The scheme involved a division of roles, Tanner said. One child's job was to cover windows so no one could see outside, he said. Another was supposed to clean up after the attack.

"We're not sure at this point in the investigation how many of the students actually knew the intent was to hurt the teacher," Tanner said.

He said the teacher told detectives the children involved weren't known as troublemakers.

"You can't dismiss it," Tanner said. "But because they are kids, they may have thought this was like a cartoon – we do whatever and then she stands up and she's OK. That's a hard call."

The parents of the students have cooperated with investigators, who aren't allowed to question the children without their parents' or guardians' consent, he said. Authorities have withheld the children's names.

Martin told The Florida Times-Union of Jacksonville, Fla., that administrators would follow school system policy and state law in disciplining the students.

"From what I understand, they were considered pretty good kids," Martin said. "But we have to take this seriously, whether they were serious or not about carrying this through, and that's what we did."

Walkable towns have potential to combat obesity, pollution

BY MEGAN RAUSCHER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

Designing walkable communities is a cost-effective way to address the growing epidemic of obesity in the United States and cut down on harmful car emissions and pollution, a researcher told the American College of Sports Medicine's 12th annual Health and Fitness Summit in Long Beach, California.

The problem, said Jim Sallis from San Diego State University, is that local zoning laws essentially prevent the development of walkable communities.

"Zoning laws today," he told Reuters Health, "really enforce the separation of uses; they are designed to move cars as quickly as possible – which is dangerous to pedestrians."

Sallis recently took a tour with urban planners in a new development in San Diego designed to be walkable. "The developers told me they had to get 25 waivers from zoning laws to put in the development. All that kind of paperwork costs the developer time and money so it discourages them from building walkable neighborhoods," Sallis said.

He encourages people to "be a voice for walkable neighborhoods and parks in your area and help change local zoning laws."

Sallis would also like to dispel the misconception that walkable communities are more expensive to build. They aren't, he said, noting that money spent on building, maintaining and expanding roadways could be reallocated to building sidewalks and trails.

Walkable cities "have worked for thousands of years," Sallis points out. The most walkable cities are on the east coast of the U.S. because they are older. "Any city built in the 1800s is likely to be walkable because everyone who lived there walked. Cities like Boston, Manhattan, Washington D.C., inner Baltimore, Savannah, Charleston are all very walkable," he said.

In the west there are fewer walkable cities, except for Portland, which has made a concerted effort to make the city pedestrian-friendly, Sallis said. "Many years ago, Portland set up policies for transportation planning that make pedestrians a first priority, cyclists second, public transit riders third, and car drivers last. It's now one of the most activity-friendly cities in the country."

"The suburbs have really been designed to take away the option of walking to places; there are no sidewalks, everything is spread out, and there is really only one way to get around and that is by car," according to Sallis.

The good news, he said, is that more and more communities are embracing the idea of becoming more activity-friendly by adopting "mixed-use" area laws.

Months before graduation, students ponder inequality women only earn 77 cents to every dollar a man makes.

GENDER from page 1

Melissa Hodges, a sociology graduate student at UMass, is currently researching gender inequalities. She thinks there are three main factors causing gender inequality in the workplace. The first of these is occupational segregation.

"Some say women are socialized into taking the lower paid jobs like teachers and nurses," Hodge said.

This statement is strengthened by the National Committee on Pay Equity figures, which show more than half of all women work in sales, clerical and service jobs. In this instance, the gender wage gap can be attributed to degree and occupation choice.

The American Association of University Women Education Foundation's "Behind the Pay Gap" 2007 report found that women working full time one year after graduation only earned 80 percent of what their male counterparts made. This gap increased ten years after graduation with women earning 69 percent as much as men in the same field.

Another factor scholars like Hodges and Heather Boushey attribute to the gender pay gap is having children and the positioning of women in the role as caregivers.

"Women have to take time off at a point in their career when they are starting to build up their contact network," Hodge said.

The Family Medical Leave Act was introduced in 1993 to try and tackle this issue. The U.S. Department of Labor defines this act as entitling eligible employees to "a total of 12 work weeks of unpaid leave during any 12-month period for the birth and care of a newborn child."

This policy prevented employers firing employees for taking time off to look after their newborn child.

Boushey thinks there is strong social and economic pressure for mothers to spend more time caring for their children. The effects can be seen when looking at Hartman and Rose's 2004 report, "Signing a man's labor market." Over a 15-year period, they found that prime-age working women earned only 38 percent of what men in their prime age earned.

Irene Boeckmann, a sociology graduate student at UMass, thinks motherhood is traditionally seen as being in conflict with being a good worker.

"This attitude needs to change to allow progress," she said.

Student loans could also begin to put women in a vulnerable position. The College Board found the typical college graduate who enrolled at age 18 would have earned enough by age 33 to compensate for the money they borrowed to pay tuition and fees at the average public four-year institution.

Amuedo-Dorantes and Kimmel 2004 reported in "The Motherhood Wage Gap for Women in the United States" that over the past three decades, the rate of college-educated women who have first births before 30 has been declining. At the same time, this rate has increased for women over 30. This means that more and more women are taking leave before they have even earned enough to pay off their student debt and are consequently adding further interest to their debt.

"Behind the Pay Gap" authors Judy Goldberg Dey and Catherine Hill argue, "the only way to discover discrimination is to eliminate the other possible explanations."

Using this technique, they found, when taking the above factors into consideration, the portion of unexplained pay gap one year after graduation was five percent. This rose to 12 percent 10 years after graduation. Hodges argued that discrimination is the reason behind these figures.

Boushey's 2007 report, "Strengthening the middle class," argues the above data is worrying when considering that women outnumber men on college campuses. In 2007, the College Board found 67 percent of male high school graduates were enrolled in post-secondary education, compared to 70 percent of females.

The AAUW study found that "women and men who majored in male-dominated subjects earn more than those who majored in female-dominated subjects or mixed-gender fields." In biological sciences, a major classed as mixed-gender, women earn only 75 percent as much as men.

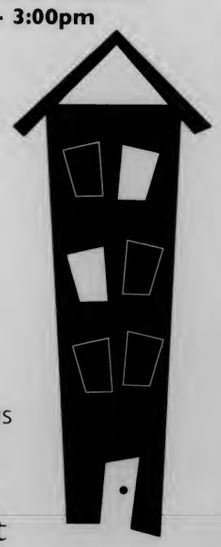
Women may be gaining employment in higher-paying occupations than they were ten years ago. However, this research shows that the glass-ceiling effect is still restraining them to the lower-paying end of the scale. All of the current positions on the board of directors at IMG, a global leader in event management and a field both Michael and Laurena would be interested in working in, are held by men.

This kind of trend is not, however, specific to the sports industry. In 2006, The National Academy of Sciences reported that men who have doctorates in engineering and science are four times more likely than women of similar qualifications to have a full-time job.

Emily Welsh, a sophomore art education major, was shocked by the AAUW findings.

"I know not all things in life are fair, but this seems like a huge injustice," she said. "Your wage should reflect the enthusiasm and effort you put into your work, not your gender. We are supposed to be living in the 21st century."

Evelyn Murphy, author of "Getting Even," found women graduating in 1991 to make 91 cents to a man's dollar. By the end of the decade, these very same women were making only 89 cents to a man's dollar. The wage gap widened during the USA's biggest economic expansion since the 1950s.



"The glass ceiling is still creating a hierarchy within big businesses. There are fewer women in the top jobs, and those that are there face higher discrimination in their wage gap," Boeckmann said.

Until 1964, discrimination in the workplace was an accepted practice. This became illegal after the Civil Rights Act of 1964 prohibited employment discrimination based on race, color, religion, sex or national origin.

Hodges acknowledges the positive steps that have been made over the past three decades. NCPE research shows that women on average made 59 cents for every dollar earned by men in 1963, the year the Equal Pay Act was signed.

"Until we have some kind of policies put in place to manage this work-family conflict, life is going to remain difficult for many women," Hodges said.

Getting ready to rent an apartment off campus?
Don't miss the Apartment Complex Rental Fair
THURSDAY, APRIL 3
Campus Center Concourse
10:00am - 3:00pm

Representatives from many of the area's largest apartment complexes will set up information tables on the Campus Center Concourse. Come, check out and compare available off-campus housing options!

UMassAmherst
This event is presented by Off Campus Housing and the Housing Assignment Office in collaboration with the Student Legal Services Office.

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons. Cuban, 1959– . Birth Certificate. 1991. Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller, class of 1925, Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Cugliani.

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

UMass football player arrested on Orchard Hill Drive.

ARREST from page 1

"She got a very good description of him, and the model and make of the car," UMass Deputy Police Chief Patrick Archbald told the Daily Hampshire Gazette. "He was masturbating while driving. I imagine he was driving very slowly."

Ridenhour is currently facing charges of open and gross lewdness from Northampton police, with Smith College and UMass police also intending to press felony charges. Ridenhour is likely to face indecent assault and battery charges brought by the Smith College Public Safety Department in connection with the quadrangle incident reported Tuesday night, for which he will be arraigned next week.

Northampton detective Alan Borowski and UMass police willingly interviewed Ridenhour after he was contacted at his Belchertown home. Ridenhour confessed to the Elm Street and Orchard Hill Drive incidents, according to a statement of facts on his court report.

A defensive back that just last year transferred from Penn State, Ridenhour was suspended indefinitely from the football team, according to a statement from UMass Athletic Department spokesperson Jason Yellin, who also stated that the department would have no further comment on the issue.

Ed Blaguszewski, spokesperson for the University, stated that actions would be taken according to the student code of conduct once the University was formally made aware of Ridenhour's arrest.

Frank Vitale can be reached at fvitale@student.umass.edu

D'Souza praises U.S. in talk

D'SOUZA from page 1

In his lecture last night, Dinesh D'Souza said that Americans should be patient when speaking about the current War in Iraq.

left is responsible through looking back in history to the Carter and Clinton administrations. On the topic of President Bush, D'Souza admitted that in hindsight, the war in Iraq was a mistake and the best course of action would have been to focus on Iran. He also noted, though, that President Bush did have to make a decision based on the information he had at the time.

"He made a decision in the exigency of war," said D'Souza.

Addressing the question of what to do next, D'Souza stated that American foreign policy should be in America's best interest. He claimed, especially concerning Iraqis' opinions of American presence in Iraq, that the only way to find out what people want in a democracy is to talk to their elected representatives. He also remained skeptical about whether the Iraqi people actually want Americans to remain there or leave.

According to D'Souza, there is only one way to lose the War in Iraq and that is by losing it in the American mind. So then how do we win? D'Souza claimed that we will win and be able to withdraw when the Iraqis can defend their own country and security.

He expressed confidence that this will happen soon on its own, and felt America should be patient and not completely withdraw military forces, "because the results are so uncertain at this point as to what would happen."

"The ultimate outcome is to have a pro-American democracy existing in the Middle East, something that has not happened yet," said D'Souza. "But we need to be patient in planting the democratic seed."

He claimed we also need a broader strategy to fight the war on terrorism, and that a strict military strategy was not enough. In D'Souza's opinion, in order to fight this war, America needs to drive a wedge between traditional Muslims and radical Muslims.

In referring back to the original posed topic of the lecture, "What is so great about America," D'Souza challenged those that find so many faults in the U.S. by asking, "what would the world look like had America never existed?"

He claimed that whether the U.S. has become involved in conflicts in the past due to reasons of self-interest is beside the point because, after American interference, the outcome usually serves in the best interest of many of the countries involved.

"The job of America is not to make the world perfect, but to make it better," said D'Souza.

Kristen Healy can be reached at kkhealy@student.umass.edu

UM professor receives grant to lecture, research in Japan

GRANT from page 1

tion of leading U.S scholars in the Fulbright academic exchange, and to encourage new activities that surpass the traditional activities of lecturing and research. In this case, Peelle will be going abroad in order to assess the curriculum, he said.

The Fulbright grant has been awarded by the U.S. State Department Bureau of Education and Cultural Affairs, which is assisted by the Council for International Exchange of Scholars located in Washington, D.C.

In 2003, Peelle received a Fulbright Scholar award to lecture and conduct research in Malaysia. Peelle was accompanied by his wife Carolyn, who specializes in the field of urban education and is a former editor of the UMass-published journal, Equity & Excellence in Education.

"We had a wonderful, wonderful trip," said Peelle. "We met some interesting people in the top university in the country."

The Fulbright Program was first proposed to Congress in 1945 by Senator J. William Fulbright of Arkansas in order to promote "mutual understanding between the people of the U.S and the people of other countries of the world," according to the Web site.

The Fulbright Program was approved by Congress and was then signed into law by President Harry Truman in 1946. Today, the Fulbright Program sends 800 scholars and professionals to over 140 countries each year, where they lecture and carry out research in a variety of professional fields.

Peelle had previously traveled to Japan in the spring of 1985 with his whole family on a lecture and research tour, and is looking forward to seeing some of the faculty he worked with while he was abroad.

"We went to several places in Japan in 1985, and I'll be meeting up with other faculty I haven't seen in 20 years," said Peelle. "It will be delightful to see them again."

Jennifer Heshion can be reached at jheshion@student.umass.edu

Center to form marketing plans

BY ALYSSA MONTALBANO
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The Center for Spectator Sport Research on campus will be researching the sports market with the help of sports leagues and sponsors.

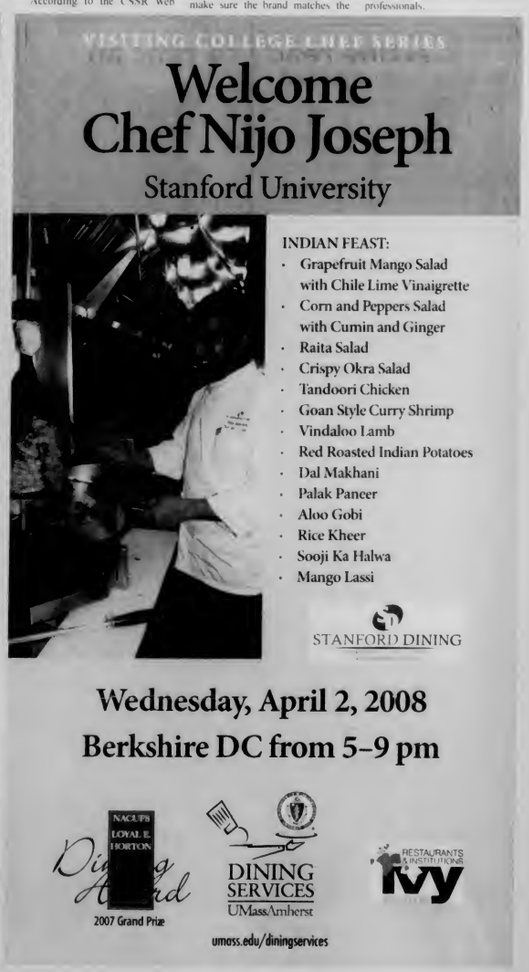
The CSSR, located in the Sports Management Department at the Isenberg School of Management, plans to conduct marketing research that will help match commercial brands common in college bowl games and on NASCAR vehicles with the fans that follow individual sports.

The goal of CSSR is to educate sports management students through educational programs, training and research. Its research is divided up among marketing studies, customized marketing research and the creation of strategic marketing plans.

According to the CSSR Web site, its mission is "to strengthen relationships among members of the industry by providing outreach activities to the spectator sports industry and enhance training and educational opportunities for students."

CSSR recently conducted a survey regarding the energy drink Red Bull that included eight countries. The goal was to determine how consumers see the beverage and how that information could be used by promoters of different sports in the different countries that were studied.

"Sponsorships can play a brand-defining or re-positioning role," said Tracy Schoenadel, the director of CSSR. "Alternatively, they can be one of the many marketing tools used to build awareness, consideration and some level of affinity. Therefore, it is very important to make sure the brand matches the property, especially by country."



Schoenadel was appointed director of the CSSR by the University of Massachusetts Sport Management Department last May. She is a leading authority on sponsorship research. Her previous jobs included vice president of IMS Sports and Executive Director of the industry-leading ESPN Sports Poll.

Lisa Masteralexis, the head of the Sport Management department, said she was excited about Schoenadel's contributions to the project.

"Tracy's unique combination of experience and academic work will make her an asset for our department and the CSSR. We look forward to her leading the CSSR to the forefront in sport industry research."

CSSR is also expanding its programs by a having guest speakers series, a weekly blog, chat rooms and a podcast for sport management professionals.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
– Sir Salman Rushdie

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2008

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Thoughts for a new spring

Parisa Saranj

Spring is a new beginning for me. Not only do I celebrate the birth of green grass which promises the blooming of hope, but also I rejoice in the victory over the year I put behind. In spring, I gladly celebrate Naw-Ruz. Also spelled, Nou (new) Rooz (day), it is a festival which celebrates the New Year.

Naw-Ruz is not exclusive to Iranians or any religious group within the country. The date is determined according to the solar calendar and begins on the first day of spring (March 21). The festival lasts for thirteen days and is a time of renewal and joy.

The gathering of relatives and friends is one of the main aspects of Naw-Ruz. It is through the sharing of one's joy that the old and the young come together to renew aged relations and reunite the beauty of nature with the daily lives. After five years of being apart from family and home, I decided to observe this colorful and happy holiday with some familiar faces. Drowning into the childhood memories of New Year rituals and shopping stories, I packed for Toronto, Canada, where I was about to reunite with cousins I had not seen for almost ten years.

It felt like decades that I had not sensed the warmth of family's embrace in its Iranian definition, since I have almost been living the individualistic, mechanical life of the "starving student."

In Iranian culture, family bonds are taught to be strong. The elders are the symbol of respect and the young are the new generation, which worried me: how much of this celebration will stay in their memories as opposed to the international Christmas trees and reindeers? I found myself stuck between two generations of people. To one, I was a little child who has grown now into a woman hungry for the positive opportunities of the West such as education. To the other, I was just an "American cousin."

Though the town wasn't completely painted with the red and green feel of the New Day and I could not take thirteen days off of life to just enjoy the festival, I had a wonderful time visiting families whose successes make me proud. When one's home is so far away, it is almost impossible to sense it amid a foreign land. But it wasn't until I reached the American border that I really felt like a foreigner so far away from home.

When I handed the officer my green card, he asked where my country of citizenship was. I calmly answered "Iran." His eyebrows rose. He frowned at me. His look told me, 'How dare you make fun of me?'

He didn't understand me ... He looked down at the card. "Oh, 'I-ran,' you mean."

I didn't know how else to answer, so I repeated a bit louder, "Iran, sir." He didn't understand me this time either and chose to look himself. He looked down at the card. "Oh, 'I-ran,' you mean."

I stared at him in silence, and all I was thinking about was how it was possible for someone to expect me to mispronounce the name of my own country. He made his investigations and passed me along to the next stop.

The red marks, initials and signs all over my ticket seemed like a happy hunt for the next office. He looked so excited to search my belongings, and he did. He put everything apart and searched through all the zippers, pockets and even pages of my diary. Even pictures, almonds and pistachios posed "potential for terrorism," as he claimed. So he searched.

It felt like, as he did not find anything, he decided to search my mind. "What do you think about the current president of Iran?" "Would you go back to Iran some day?" "Are Iranian women oppressed and powerless?"

My ears rang to the word "powerless."

How much does he know about the long time struggle of Iranian women, who happen to be some of the most librated women in the Middle East? In that moment, I looked around the room. All the bus passengers were gone and settled on their seats. The last passenger was me. All the other officers had left their booths to come watch me, the loud, audacious, quick-to-answer woman. Watching their amazement, laughter and often puzzled faces, I thought to myself "Isn't this power?"

Tired, and crushed, I longed for "home" – a place where I am respected, and not judged for the mistakes of a small, conservative group. I wondered how much the cover of a passport or a detailed search through a small luggage bag of belongings could reduce the sense of individual identity? How much of his fear standing in front of an Iranian woman is his right?

At the end, he nicely apologized for the mess he had made and wished me a happy new year. As I walked out, he shouted, "Hope you write good things about me." By then, even I had started to shove through things in my mind. All I could find were his bold words, "Potential for terrorism," "oppressed and challenged" or "It would be better when you change your passport."

Parisa Saranj is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at pmw300@yahoo.com

Sending the Chief to the Bush leagues

Dan Nicastro

I may not be his biggest fan, but there are times that I just sit back and wonder what is going on inside George W. Bush's mind. With millions of Americans continually questioning his policies, his moral character and his intelligence, sometimes I think it would be enlightening to read his thoughts and try and understand what's going on in that cranium of his. And then, as I was watching the Braves/Nationals game on Sunday, I got my wish.

After throwing out the ceremonial first pitch (it was high and away), the president was invited up to the booth by ESPN to spend several innings talking (mostly) baseball with Jon Miller and Joe Morgan. Almost immediately, the liberal blogosphere lit up, teeming with controversy.

There were claims that ESPN inserted cheers where there were boos as Bush threw out the first pitch. There were bloggers who compared Bush's (slightly) errant throw to his (slightly more) errant stance on diplomacy and international relations. The vast majority of bloggers, however, railed against the president without really listening to his words.

Had they listened, they would have heard what I did: a plea for help.

I must admit that when I first started watching the interview, I had the same reservations as everyone else. While still savoring the 2007 World Series, I've been longing for opening day since November and I didn't want to have to listen to both Joe Morgan and George W. Bush ruin my evening. I kept the volume on, however, as I was writing a paper and not really paying attention.

The more time that passed with Bush in the booth, the more I found myself thinking that he sounded almost reasonable. It may have been that I was half listening or it may have been that I was much more focused on the paper I was writing, but he sounded more comfortable and more at ease talking with Joe Morgan than at any other point in his presidency.

It became clear to me that George W. Bush was asking America to help him.

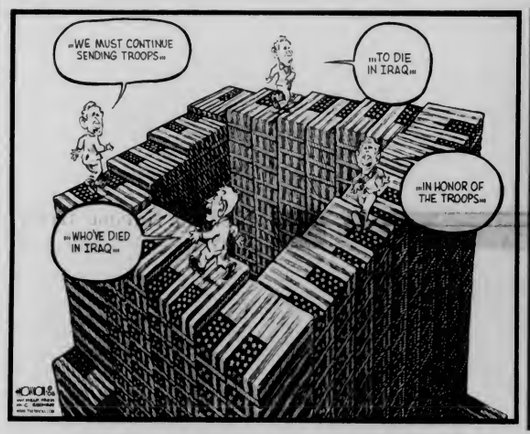
It became clear to me that George W. Bush was asking America to help him. It took seven years, but he had finally realized that he had made a huge mistake running for president when all he really wanted was to go back in time and run a baseball team.

At one point, Morgan asked him if the first lady enjoyed baseball. Bush responded with an undeniable longing in his eye, stating that some of the best times he and the first lady had in their lives was when they owned the Rangers.

We need to do something about this. If you read ESPN columnist Bill Simmons, you may know about the attempts by forlorn Wisconsinites to draft the sportswriter into taking over the position of General Manager for the Milwaukee Bucks. Fans there are desperate for someone to come in and take over their poorly run organization. I propose we flip this idea on its head and allow President Bush to give up his political career and (re)take over his former position with the Texas Rangers. In turn, this would allow someone else to come in and take over the poorly-run government.

Think about it. Bush has said repeatedly in the last few months that he is going to miss campaigning, a statement that makes much more sense given his love of baseball.

In a December news conference, he said "I enjoy the crowds. I enjoy the news. I enjoy giving that message. I enjoy the competition." Of course Bush loves campaigning: it's like a sport with continual score updates, ridiculous statistics and a clear winner at the end. The actual office of president, on the other hand, is more like a three-and-a-half-year offseason, filled with trade rumors, boring procedural changes and meeting after meeting after meeting.



On the campaign trail, news reports are poll results. Much like in a box score, the results are easily broken down into black and white statistics. As president, however, Bush has found that news reports are shrouded in gray. This is why, as he told Fox News Anchor Brit Hume in 2003, Bush glances at headlines without reading full stories.

The competitive spirit of Major League Baseball is also hard to maintain while in office. Bush won the presidency twice, obviously relishing the spirit of competition and the tactics used in his run to the White House. Once there, however, he seemed to change his mind about political competition, opting instead to squash political dissonance.

Therefore, as a loyal American looking to aid the American people in whatever way I can, I propose that we allow Bush to leave office early and (re)purchase the Texas Rangers. Bush was magical as a campaigner because of his love for the sport. How else would he have been able to get so many lower and middle class Americans to vote for him, even though his views were totally antithetical to theirs? Twice?

Let's not judge him for his deep love of baseball and let him get back to the job he was meant to do: not be president of the United States.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

fed/up?

ed/op.

now accepting columnist applications.

The dangers of a college education

Bruce Lerner

People assume that college is a place where one can go to learn and grow as a human being. Knowledge is acquired through rigorous study and ceaseless effort. Critical discussion is encouraged. Dissent is tolerated. All of this for the sake of bettering the collective mind of humanity.

It would be nice if this were what college actually was. Unfortunately, another description is more apt, and hopefully will serve to change the current situation to a more beneficial one.

First of all, our government does very bad things to people in other countries, and here as well. This is a fundamental fact that is often ignored by most of the culture due to the lack of a true education. The reason the government does bad things is because very smart people use their intellectual prowess to utilize the current institutions to the benefit of the ruling elite. Where do these smart people come from? Well, college, of course!

The point is that there is a system of intellectual indoctrination occurring in college that functions on two levels: it filters out the gifted to the highest posts in our society, and it trains the rest of us to be little more than hardworking slaves.

Why would something like attendance count toward your grade, especially if you understand the material without going to class? It is because when this stage of learning ends, everyone will go and get some sort of job where they will be told what to do and when to do it. Therefore, it is necessary to teach us responsible adults to think we are children who need to be disciplined.

Next, why do they teach us historical fantasies such as how the U.S. desperately wanted to destroy communism in Vietnam and thus prevent a Russian takeover of the world? It is because the person who writes the best essay on the aforementioned factually inaccurate premises will get noticed by the professor and will perhaps obtain a scholarship to work in the government and work his/her way up to the highest echelons.

Let's explore something like economics class. Why do they teach us things like supply and demand? It can't be because it's true. For example, is it supply and demand when the advertising industry spends millions of dollars per person each year to manipulate their thoughts so that they buy a product they don't need? It sounds more like thought control than supply and demand.

Maybe there is a dark side to the Lederle tower.

How about comparative advantage, where two countries benefit from mutual trade, as in X and Y trade coconuts for T-shirts? Certainly Iraq can't be a comparatively advantageous situation: it's more like we have the guns and you have the oil, so we'll take your oil with our guns. Hmmm, where was that in Econ 104?

But the science department is used for good purposes, right? Not exactly, given that Raytheon and General Electric have to get their gifted scientists from places like UMass so that they may better produce weapons to behead children and mothers in Iraq. The chemical gas used on protestors of neoliberal globalization policies was also manufactured with the aid of talented chemical engineering students. Maybe there is a dark side to the Lederle tower.

How about the price of college? It is enough to cripple most students from having any free time to think for themselves, as they are slaving away for someone else's profit. Tuition prices out most lower class people, leaving them to waste away in inner city ghettoes and become fodder for the prison industrial complex. After all, they are the surplus population, and who wants to pay for things such as free job training or childcare, so that they may have better lives? What would happen to the massive corporations that profit from the building of prisons used to house mostly minorities? It would be tragic.

Whose fault is it that bodies are charred beyond recognition in Palestine? What about all the other recipients of the efforts of U.S. intellectuals? It is our fault. Our fault for not being critical enough of what we see around us, for not taking sides and in short, for not thinking about what we are doing with our lives.

Life is not about consuming and hoarding, but about creating. And not by ourselves, but with and for others. What a place college would be if this were how it actually functioned. Let's get together and make change, because no one else will.

Bruce Lerner is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bvlerner@student.umass.edu.

SUBMIT A LETTER OR OPINION

Email:
editorial@dailycollegian.com

Fax:
(413) 545-3699

Mail:
Letters to the Editor
113 Campus Center
Amherst, MA 01003

Telegraph:

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Former Pavement frontman to play MoCA

Stephen Malkmus and The Jicks tour hits Pioneer Valley

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art, the nation's largest contemporary visual arts center, has a rich history of larger-than-life installations, experimental media arts, avant-garde film screenings and innovative performing arts.

The 100,000 square-foot center opened in 1999 with 19 galleries, and is home to many provocative and visually stunning installations, including the courtyard's iconic upside-down trees. The industrial setting in a small Berkshire County town creates a strange juxtaposition between modern art and the surrounding rolling countryside.

Carrying on its tradition of showcasing an eclectic blend of musicians, MASS MoCA will host Stephen Malkmus and the Jicks, with special guest John Vanderslice, this Friday, April 4, at its Hunter Center. Malkmus and The Jicks are touring in support of their new record "Real Emotional Trash," released last month on Matador Records. The museum, not even a decade old, is no stranger to live performances and has featured such musicians as Yo La Tengo, Cat Power, Pere Ubu, Joan Baez and Steve Earle.

Malkmus was born in Santa Monica, Calif., raised in Stockton, Calif., and continued his collegiate studies at the University of Virginia. There, he was a disc jockey for their college radio station, where he met other future indie rock luminaries David Berman of Silver Jews and James McNew of Yo La Tengo.

Malkmus is most recognizable as the front man of legendary California band Pavement. Formed in 1989, Pavement initially consisted of Malkmus and Scott "Spiral Stairs" Kannberg. They quickly added drummer Gary Young, percussionist Bob Nastanovich and bassist Mark Ibold, who currently serves as a touring bassist with Sonic Youth.

Pavement's 1992 landmark record "Slanted and Enchanted" gained immense critical acclaim as one of the most important independently released records of all time, spurring a slew of bands from the mid- and late-90s to today to bypass the major record industry and take a more humble approach to music distribution. Their closest brush with mainstream success came upon the heels of their single "Cut Your Hair," from their 1994 record "Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain," whose video received minimal airplay on MTV.

While Pavement incurred little commercial success, they are often hailed as underground heroes. Their first three records, "Slanted and Enchanted," "Crooked Rain, Crooked Rain" and "Wowee Zowee," are lauded as indie rock classics. All three are full of perfect pop hooks, an easily recognizable, bored lyrical delivery and energetic bursts of distortion, all restrained by Malkmus's slacker glaze. The band dissolved in 1999 after two more albums, 1997's "Brighten the Corners" and 1999's "Terror Twilight." The band has yet to reunite, though a 20th anniversary reunion in 2009 has been rumored and discussed by Spiral Stairs, with no conformation at this time coming from Malkmus.

Malkmus's extra-Pavement affairs include college friend David Berman's Silver Jews and Malkmus's more recent solo material, all of which has been backed by The Jicks. The Jicks have consisted of bassist Joanna Bolme, Mike Clark and drummer John Moen, who left the band in 2006 to take up residency with The Decemberists. Moen was replaced by Janet Weiss, who formerly served as the drummer of Sleater-Kinney.

Malkmus released an album in 2001, initially with hopes to accredit The Jicks in the name of the project, but was urged by Matador Records to keep it self-titled, even though The Jicks performed on the record. Malkmus also released "Pig Lib" with The Jicks, the true solo work "Face the Truth" (which consisted of entirely Malkmus's writing, but did feature Jicks members) and this year's "Real Emotional Trash," also with The Jicks.

The recent material is a little toned down, with a bit of country twang and some nods to classic, guitar-driven rock. Malkmus's songwriting and guitar tones have remained interesting, though he has lost some of his do-it-yourself charm. This generally can be expected as an artist ages, but in Malkmus's case, the 41-year-old has not become obsolete. The band opened for Radiohead on their "Hail to the Thief" tour and has played high-profile festivals, such as Bonnaroo in 2006, where Malkmus stuck around after his set to join fellow indie-rock movement champions Sonic Youth on stage. Malkmus and The Jicks have been known to delve into Pavement's back catalogue, which serves as a true treat for the audience.

General admission tickets to this event are $20, and are available at the museum, through the MASS MoCA box office (413.662.2111) and through their Web site, massmoca.org. MASS MoCA is located at 87 Marshall St. in North Adams, Mass. The show is scheduled to start at 8 p.m. at the Hunter Center.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu

Stephen Malkmus and The Jicks are touring in support of their latest album, "Real Emotional Trash," released this month on Matador Records.

Best known as the former frontman of indie-rock pioneers Pavement, Stephen Malkmus has since released several albums with The Jicks.

Stephen Malkmus & The Jicks

Mass MoCA

Friday, April 4, 8pm

$20

UM showcases jazz

This past Saturday, high school jazz ensembles from the surrounding area gathered for the 10th annual High School Jazz Band Festival at the Bezanson Recital Hall.

Local area high school bands show off talents at Bezanson

By Alex Butler
Collegian Staff

The 10th annual High School Jazz Band Festival brought with it a warm, resonating glow to accompany the sunny weather last Saturday morning. Groups from both the high school and middle school levels were represented from Dudley, South Duxbury, Simsbury, Enfield, South Hadley, Brandon, Hinesburg, Canton and Amherst to meet and mix around the Bezanson Recital Hall.

For those who attended, the festival proved to be full of inspirational and entertaining performances. Bezanson held a mixture of students, musicians and nervous parents who could barely watch as their son or daughter plugged away at a fill or riff. One father in particular closed his eyes and pulled his fists together as his son began his trombone solo during a morning performance.

Certain groups and musicians surfaced as adamant reminders that jazz is an art form, always in evolution. In particular, the Otter Valley Union Jazz Chorale from Brandon, Vt. was an interesting break from the usual bass, drum kit and sax combination. The thirty-something chorus broke into three songs without hesitation. The chorale's version of "Cheek to Cheek" was among the most impressive in the afternoon, if not the entire festival.

Often forgotten by many in the genre of jazz, the violin and oboe were featured in some performances as well. Rafael Horowitz-Friedman of South Hadley brought a very unique dimension to the Absolute Jazz ensemble with his violin. For the most part, the uninterested group was meek and a bit timid, but Horowitz-Friedman's violin added some much-needed spice to the performance.

The winning band from Enfield, Conn. brought an unyielding energy to Bezanson, especially with their take on Joe Primrose's "St. James Infirmary." It was a performance that mixed funk and smooth jazz to a snappy rhythm. The energy was felt throughout the room, despite Bezanson's poor acoustics for any type of guitar. Robert Van Nostrand's solo on the alto saxophone was dead-on and beautifully articulate. There seemed to be no need for the group's director, who was either hidden in the audience or altogether absent during the set.

Otter Valley's juniors Dustin Lajoie and Connor Quigley commented on the rigorous routine of a jazz musician. Being from a public school, the students in the 20-plus ensemble were used to the intimidation factor from the more competitive private schools.

"We have practices all throughout the year," Quigley said, "Three days a week, starting at 7:00 a.m."

"Not fun," Lajoie added.

The final performance of the evening was a bit different from the usual high school jazz ensembles. Christian McBride climbed onto center stage at the Fine Arts Center with three other professional jazz musicians for a finale that blew the audience away. The stadium seating would have been better served as a massive dance floor, with the fast-paced, energetic flows.

McBride, the band leader, voiced his signature bass progressions with amazing articulation. Ron Blake, the saxophonist, was literally knocking his knees together during some songs. The set was a hit, and despite some subtle tensions with the pianist, the McBride Band was able to set the audience back in their seats, proving the perfect conclusion for a day full of musical variety and youthful energy.

Alex Butler can be reached at ajbutler@student.umass.edu.

Full of teenage angst

Newest release from BYOP delievers hits for all-ages

By Joe Stahl
Collegian Staff

Be Your Own Pet is a band that creates music that kids can not only enjoy listening to, but also will identify with. BYOP's new album, "Get Awkward," drives home on quintessential teenage angst with its brash vocals and garage rock sound. All amps are turned up to eleven on this twelve-track LP, which could possibly cause you to bleed out of your ears in a good way.

The band first started to gain momentum with their 2006 self-titled debut. Ever since, BYOP has maintained the strong interest of fans and critics. It was this widespread support that landed them a spot on Universal Records, a major label best known for their long list of notable artists ranging from Trykah Badu to Michael McDonald.

"Get Awkward" is not afraid to cause a little controversy, with subject matter spanning from teen infidelity to pill popping. Ultimately, such topics didn't appease Universal Records. They deemed the lyricism too "violent" for young American listeners. The American release does not feature the great ska-punk song "Becky," with selections "Black Hole" and "Blow Yr Mind" both also being omitted from the album. These songs, for now, can only be heard on the U.K. edition. Sometime in the future, the band will bring these songs back to the States on an EP.

BYOP embraces and plays up its youth on tracks like "Heart Throb," where vocalist Jemina Pearl Abegg's emotions run high as she sings about suppressing sexual urges. You will discover that the album's lyrics are laden with various teenage themes such as rebellion, rejection, desire and realism, with some dreaming mixed in between the angular guitars.

BYOP's in-your-face attitude makes it hard to ignore this adrenaline-fueled album. Abegg's demeanor on stage is as wild as the lyrical content she delivers from behind the microphone. Abegg and the contributions of her three bandmates on backup vocals act as a powerful force that shapes their fast-tempo and Pixies-like sound.

BYOP's "Get Awkward" is an album that inspires listeners old and young to get moving with its abrasive form of power-punk. Despite this Nashville quartet's inexperience as a band, and the youth of its members, BYOP isn't scared to show the world what they have to offer. These precocious players are an unusual clan that will be sure to leave drastic impressions.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu

"Get Awkward"
Be Your Own Pet

Universal Records

3/5

Bring Your Own Pet's newest release "Get Awkward" is full of in-your-face attitude and lyrics saturated with themes of angst and youthful rebellion.

New book highlight the ills of reading

Author creates an anti-reading work for reading enthusiasts

By Geeta Sharma Jensen
Mcclatchy Journal Sentinel

It was startling at first. There it lay on the desk – a new paperback from Counterpoint titled "The Solitary Vice: Against Reading." Blasphemy! And I, a traitor for succumbing to a secret desire to read it!

The following week Mikita Brottman was on the phone from Baltimore, discussing her 224-page book, a treatise that she cheerfully called a polemic against the contemporary fuss over reading, as well as an exploration of the dark side of reading. Brottman, it soon became clear, is a literary type with a love for Nabokov and Thomas Mann and an absolute dislike for today's big, public, bandwagon-style hoo-ha over reading.

"I would say (my book) is a tongue-in-cheek polemic that presents the counterargument to the idea that reading is fun and good for you in the way that vitamins are good for you," she said, her British accent tempered by a decade of study and college teaching in the United States.

"I just got really annoyed by all the reading campaigns that seem to be happening all over the place. There are the slogans like 'The City that Reads,' and 'One Book One City,' and 'Champions Read.' It's as though reading is an unassailable virtue, that there is something innately virtuous and fulfilling in reading, just reading, without any attention to how a book's being read or what's being read ... That kind of bothered me. And associated with that is the idea that reading is always, under any circumstances, good for you.

"So, although I do think illiteracy is a problem, I wanted to make a polemic argument on the other side of the question, to say: Wait a minute, reading isn't always good for you; there are people and conditions and times when reading can be damaging.

"That was my experience as a kid growing up."

People with credentials like Brottman's can make these arguments and get away with them – and even get a book contract.

Brottman's been a serious reader since childhood. Now at 40, she's a professor of English literature and film at the Maryland Institute College of Art, and in her spare time, when she isn't reading, tends to her psychotherapy practice.

Her book is part provocation, part memoir and part memorable roadmap to some of literature's best.

If you are a reader, it will affirm you. If you're a non-reader, it will excuse you. (Well, all right, it could affirm you, too.)

"Of course, I do see the value in reading," she said, "but because it's championed so much these days I wanted to stand up for those people who, um, whose experiences with reading haven't always been positive."

Brottman acknowledges that nothing has given her pure, unadulterated pleasure as much as reading. For her, reading is an addiction. Like all addictions, it had its downsides, especially during her early years.

"I read all the time, (but) there were some things that reading did for me that were not positive," she said. "It alienated me from my family, and my country. It gave me an idealized picture of romance and what the world was like. And it made me socially dysfunctional.

"I would be a better, more well-rounded individual if I had not spent so much time locked in my room reading when I was a child."

In the first chapters of her book, aptly illustrated by her art students, Brottman recounts how she spent almost all her time in the attic with her books while growing up in Sheffield, in the north of England. Her parents tried to coax her down without success. She became a sort of bookish Miss Havisham, in thrall to stories rather than a moldy wedding cake.

Reading also skewed her world view. She imagined all men to be romantic and good, for example, as if they were akin to Heathcliff in Emily Bronte's "Wuthering Heights." She had no idea that in the real world, Heathcliff would be considered cruel for his treatment of Cathy.

Brottman also is disdainful of the idea that non-readers are feeble-minded and inferior to readers and doomed to failure. She asks why this idea persists, noting that reading isn't necessary for health, love, family or happiness, or even a capitalist society. She declares that reading is valuable only to the reader; that it is a way to explore yourself, to allow you the thrill of darker human conditions so pervasive in the other worlds of books.

Real readers rarely boast about reading and don't need reading campaigns, Brottman observed. Then she laughed and acknowledged that people who are going to enjoy her book will be readers themselves.

So much for being against reading.

Author Mikita Brottman has created what she calls "a tongue-in-cheek polemic that presents the counterargument to the idea that reading is fun and good for you in the way that vitamins are good for you."

Scorsese and Stones team up in new film

Documentary 'Shine a Light' to open in theaters April 4

By Roger Moore
The Orlando Sentinel

Oscar-winning director Martin Scorsese is knee-deep in his new film, an adaptation of Dennis Lehane's thriller "Shutter Island," starring Leonard DiCaprio and Ben Kingsley, among others. And he's stumped. Just a little.

"This new movie is set in 1954," he says in comic exasperation. "No Rolling Stones!"

Fans of the filmmaker will understand his consternation. Long before directing the new Rolling Stones concert documentary, "Shine a Light," which opens April 4, Martin Scorsese was associated with their music.

"In my formative years, before I made 'Mean Streets' (1973) even, the Rolling Stones created a well of inspiration that became a part of my consciousness," Scorsese says from his New York office. "Their music shapes the images I see when I'm planning a movie, camera movements, lighting, tone, attitude.

"What they say in their songs has really affected the attitude that turns up in characters in my movies over the years. So they've been something that's fundamental to the films I make."

He took that inspiration and often built the soundtrack to a film around it. He has long been known for using Stones tunes in the scores to his non-period-piece films. You can look it up. It's right there under "trivia" in the Scorsese entry on the Internet Movie Database (imdb.com). From "Mean Streets" to "The Departed," Stones tunes pepper the scores. There's one song that he's used so often, in so many films, that it's become a punch line.

"We're doing a press conference for 'Shine a Light' in Berlin and Mick Jagger said, 'I wanna say here that Shine a Light is the only film that Martin Scorsese has not used 'Gimme Shelter' in."

Scorsese laughs. Mention that you can hear the Stones' "Sympathy for the Devil" in the trailer to the new Robert DeNiro-Al Pacino thriller "Righteous Kill," a movie Scorsese had nothing to do with, and he laughs some more. "I know. How did that happen? It's not my picture!"

Scorsese, 65, has long been his film generation's "critical darling," notes Marc Raymond on the online journal Senses of Cinema. With films such as "Mean Streets," "Taxi Driver" and "Raging Bull" acknowledged as among the greatest ever by the American Film Institute, the influential Sight and Sound magazine and pretty much everyone else, his Oscar for "The Departed" wasn't just overdue. It was superfluous.

Music has been an important corner of that storied career. Scorsese made not only the failed musical "New York, New York," but the seminal concert film "The Last Waltz," about the final concert of The Band, as well as definitive TV documentaries on the blues and Bob Dylan.

"The first time I remember visualizing music was when I was 4 years old, listening to my father's Django Reinhardt/Stephane Grappelli and the Hot Club of France 78s," he says.

By the time Scorsese went to the NYU Film School in the mid-60s, the Stones had taken over his musical fantasies. His breakthrough film, "Mean Streets," featured not only an undiscovered director and a couple of undiscovered stars (DeNiro and Harvey Keitel), "Jumping Jack Flash" and "Tell Me" were on the soundtrack.

So naturally, the director

See STONES on page 7

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N PLEASANT ST
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S PLEASANT ST 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

CHECK OUT
MULTIMEDIA, BLOGS AND PODCASTS
AT
THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
WEBSITE
www.dailycollegian.com

HEALTH AND NUTRITION
DIVERSITY SCHOLARS
Apply today!
Stop by our OPEN HOUSE to learn more
Thursday, April 3, 4-6 PM
210 Chenoweth Lab
$6000
Scholarships
Available Fall 2008
For information and pre-nutrition advising, please contact: Dr. Nancy Cohen,
Department of Nutrition
215 Chenoweth Lab,
UMass-Amherst, MA 01003
cohen@nutrition.umass.edu or 413-545-2526
For more information and application form
www.umass.edu/sphhs/nutrition/hands
This project is based upon work supported by the Cooperative State Research, Education and Extension Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, under the agreement NO. 2006-38413-16595

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM–5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration:
www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes
or 413.585.2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

Stones return in 'Shine a Light'

STONES from page 6

felt a little invested in what tunes the Stones would play for "Shine a Light," which was shot at a benefit concert for the Clinton Foundation in New York in 2006.

"There were a few songs I just had to hear in the film, 'Sympathy for the Devil' and 'Jumping Jack Flash,' key songs," Scorsese says. "But the band had other ideas. They had a way of looking at the flow of the concert, the tone, what it would start with, what it would end with, when ballads would be heard, when the blues would come in, when country music would come in and that sort of thing.

"That makes what they do a two-hour piece of music, from start to end, that they determine just by arranging the songs and picking the songs they would do."

In "Shine a Light," Scorsese is the "harassed, exasperated filmmaker" trying to wrangle out of the band a set list of the songs the Stones would play in the order they would play them.

"I'm Edgar Kennedy in the Laurel & Hardy pictures. I'm the straight man, the 'master of the slow burn,'" Scorsese says with a chuckle. "The more exasperated I got, the more of that we got on film, the more fun we had with it in the cutting.

"But it's quite real. The only thing to do with it is have fun with that exasperation. Otherwise, why make the movie? I realized how absurd this is, trying to capture something that's so spontaneous. You can't restrict the spontaneity. But you've got to put the camera in certain places. That's what I'm worried about.

"Everything goes wrong, but what's really happening is, everything is going as planned. By them!"

He wanted to hear "Jumping Jack Flash" and "As Tears Go By," and Mick and the lads obliged. But Scorsese shot "Shine a Light" on film, which meant he had to back up each of five cameras with two others in the same spot, in reserve, for when the film magazine's 10 minutes of footage was spent. And all that planning didn't prepare him for what he actually saw on stage.

"Their passion surprised me," the 65-year-old director says of Jagger, Richards, Wood and Watts, his sixty-something contemporaries in the band. "I mean, they've been doing this forever. By the time they hit 'She Was Hot,' the third number, something happened ... Mick's dancing has something to do with that, but the back-up singers, the guitar solos, the percussion, somehow, on that third song, the machine of the concert is ratcheted up."

The reviews for "Shine a Light" aren't going to be Scorsese's best, because it is, as Kirk Honeycutt noted in The Hollywood Reporter, "another in a long line of Rolling Stone concert films." The director got to hang out and do a little business with his favorite band, capture them in their ageless glory, and that's enough.

But it isn't helping him with his problem, that director's block facing him as "Shutter Island" goes before the cameras.

"I have some classical music in mind for this one. There's also popular music of the early '50s that can find its way into the picture that would help me out.

"But you know, it's pre-rock 'n' roll," he says, as if still mystified. "Pre-Rolling Stones. So I don't know, it's tough."

Academy Award winning director Martin Scorsese was notably surprised at the passion still possessed by The Rolling Stones.

Study links economy, obesity

Despite common societal norms that are more accepting of thin bodies, the American economy drives behavior that makes people overweight, a recent study shows.

By Czerne M. Reid
McClatchy Newspapers

COLUMBIA, S.C. – Eat smart, move more – it seems like a sensible thing to do.

Many people acknowledge that, but do just the opposite. The result? High levels of obesity among both adults and children. The medical costs associated with obesity are estimated at $90 billion a year.

No wonder policy makers and researchers have been thinking of the epidemic and its solutions in terms of financial gains and losses.

Health economist Eric Finkelstein noted that in the United States, although societal norms are more accepting of thin bodies, the economy drives behavior that makes people fat.

Cheap high-calorie fast food is prevalent even in rural areas.

"Food prices have never been cheaper, and access has never been easier," Finkelstein said. "Once the cost of an activity goes down, it's easier to do that behavior."

But whereas it's cheaper and easier to eat extra calories, it's become harder to burn them off as television and other pastimes compete with physical activity.

"It's not that we don't have time, we're just not choosing to use that time for physical activity," Finkelstein said.

Technology has made our jobs better, faster and easier.

"The economy is driving us to engineer physical activity out of the workplace," said Finkelstein, author of "The Fattening of America: How the Economy Makes Us Fat, If It Matters, and What to Do About It."

Plus now there are medicines that help people stay healthy even when overweight.

Although economic forces drive behavior, health concerns should take precedence over economic ones when addressing obesity, Finkelstein said.

The private sector can get in on the act by using incentives or other strategies to make it cheaper and easier to be thin, not fat.

If the government is going to get involved, they should focus on children rather than adults, Finkelstein recommends.

He and colleague Justin Trogdon published a report this week in the American Journal of Public Health, in which they looked at different business models for the reduction of childhood obesity.

They concluded that steps to address the problem shouldn't be based on the potential for short-term financial savings.

Instead, they should look at how effective a program is at controlling weight and improving quality of life, compared to other uses for the money.

Heading off obesity during childhood in the long run saves billions of dollars of obesity-related costs during adulthood.

Marcie Calvert of Irmo, S.C., is doing her part to change her and that of her 4-year-old daughter, Chrysa. She changed her eating habits, and in the process went from 411 pounds to 195 pounds in a little less than two years.

Her daughter now also replaces high-calorie foods in favor of more healthful ones.

"I knew I was affecting my daughter after we blessed the food one day and she looked up and said 'Lord, thank you for this protein,'" Calvert said.

Finkelstein weighed in on the issue Thursday at an obesity prevention conference in downtown Columbia, S.C.

The event, sponsored by a non-profit organization Eat Smart, Move More, South Carolina, drew about 350 people from community agencies and organizations across the state.

Erika Kirby of DHEC's division of Obesity Prevention and Control, who helped plan Thursday's conference, hopes attendees leave with ideas that change their communities for the better.

"Ultimately we want to make the healthiest choice the easiest choice in terms of healthy eating and active living," Kirby said.

Is there a Master's in you?
masters.champlain.edu
Find the answer at Champlain College.
We design graduate programs specifically for busy professionals like you—someone who needs to see the benefit of an advanced degree right away. Our innovative approach integrates your coursework with your job, delivering immediate relevance to your career. And, because our graduate programs are online, you can learn with maximum flexibility and convenience.
Currently, we offer an MBA and an M.S. in Managing Innovation & IT. Get started today...and find the master's in you.
For more information, call (866) 282-7259 or e-mail gradschool@champlain.edu.
Visit our website at masters.champlain.edu to learn about upcoming campus or online information sessions.
CHAMPLAIN COLLEGE
Graduate Studies

UMass men's basketball coach Travis Ford defeated mentor Billy Donovan in last night's NIT Semifinal. Ford's Minutemen trailed midway through the second half before pulling off their third consecutive come-from-behind win.

UMass exploits key UF misses

BASKETBALL from page 12

difficult fadeaway jumper a few seconds before the shot clock ticked to zero.

That shot gave the Minutemen a 10-point lead with 4 minutes, 14 seconds remaining in regulation. The Gators pulled within six points on four separate occasions, but never really made a threat due to 13 missed free throws – many of which came late.

"Our missed opportunities at the free-throw line really gave them some momentum to make plays," Florida coach Billy Donovan said. "I thought their speed and quickness on the perimeter caused us some problems – going by us and getting into the lane."

In the first half the only team getting into the lane was Florida. Marreese Speights had his way inside against Milligan and others, almost registering a double-double with nine points and 11 rebounds. Other Gators were getting easy looks down-low. And when they did happen to miss, they often collected the offensive rebound and made the put-back.

The Minutemen, on the other hand, settled for long looks at the basket in the first half. Of the 34 shots they took in the opening half, 14 of them were from 3-point range. Although many of those attempts were relatively uncontested, only one went down; UMass finished the half shooting 11-of-34 overall.

After halftime UMass started to knock down its shots. The Minutemen did hit four 3-pointers in the second half, but they really began to push the tempo harder offensively, getting better looks at the basket. Lowe and Forbes made a concerted effort to drive the lane and they were rewarded with easy lay-ups.

"We told them we needed to get the game going up and down; the game's just not going fast enough the way we want it to go," Ford said about what he told his team during halftime. "It's crazy, but we were happy to be down nine points [at halftime], it could have been a lot worse."

Speights had a good second half, finishing with 16 points and 18 rebounds, but his teammates struggled. Freshman point guard Nick Calathes had 12 points and seven rebounds, but his shot was off all night (5-of-19) and he had a hard time getting his teammates involved with an uncharacteristically low three assists.

Eli Rosenswike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Minutemen led by seniors

SENIORS from page 12

On consecutive possessions, the captain made a wide open 3-pointer on the wing, then sank a fall-away 15-foot jumper that required a spin move to clear space from his defender.

"Forbes made some tough shots for us down the stretch," Ford said. "He made one falling-away jump shot with a hand right in his face."

Though Forbes evidently played inspired basketball, it was the performance of Milligan, who grew up in Manhattan, on both ends of the court that allowed the Minutemen to dictate the tone of the second half.

Gator sophomore center Marreese Speights dominated play through the first 20 minutes, nearly registering a double-double in points and rebounds. Milligan sat for much of that period with two fouls. Without their starting center, the responsibility to defend Speights fell to a group of inexperienced and overmatched UMass forwards.

As the Gators appeared poised to increase their lead in the second, Milligan changed the way he approached guarding Speights. He elected to be more physical with the big man and effectively neutralized the Gators' leading rebounder over the final 20 minutes.

"When I was going for offensive rebounds in the second half, they were hitting me more," Speights said of Milligan's aggressive play. "UMass just came out much better on defense."

The senior avoided collecting his fourth personal foul until 18 minutes into the second – an impressive feat considering that two of his four fouls were reach-in infractions committed at least 15 feet from the basket earlier in the game.

He even generated scoring for his team without being the primary offensive piece. Milligan collected five offensive rebounds, many of which came as tip-ins from missed UMass 3-pointers.

With several minutes remaining, Milligan converted several key plays on offense to stall any chance of a Florida comeback. At one point, after Chris Lowe shot an awkward runner with no chance of making the basket, the center was in perfect position to tap the ball into the hoop.

Then Milligan successfully rebounded a missed Brower three that gave the Minutemen a continuous 65 seconds of possession with four minutes left.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

Senior Gary Forbes led UMass to a win over Florida last night in his hometown of New York City.

Smith closes door on Crusaders in win

Aaron Smith earned his first save of the season, pitching 3-1/3 scoreless innings in UMass's win over Holy Cross yesterday. After two UMass pitchers struggled, Smith shut down the Crusader offense to preserve the win.

BASEBALL from page 12

came to the plate with the bases loaded and recorded a two-run single to cut the Crusader lead to four.

The following batter, Jim Macdonald, was hit by a pitch and the bases were loaded once again.

Mike Donato quickly fell behind in the count 0-2. He worked the count to 1-2 before taking a curveball over the left field fence to tie the game.

"The at-bat before that, [O'Brien] threw me a curveball, too, and I struck out on it," Donato said. "It's a tough pitch to take. So I was just looking for it and it worked out for me."

Though the Minutemen's bats came alive in the later innings, their pitching also improved after Monroy exited the game.

Freshman Garrett Butt earned his first collegiate victory after he pitched four innings, allowing three runs (two earned).

After Butt was pulled, Aaron Smith pitched the final 3-1/3 innings of the game and prevented the Crusaders from scoring a run.

This was the third time this season UMass scored at least 10 runs, but UMass coach Mike Stone believes this could occur more often.

"I've got a lot of confidence in these guys and sometimes I wonder if they have the same kind of confidence that I do, but I believe that these guys can do a lot of that," he said.

Baudinet, who played a year of basketball at Rochester before arriving at UMass last year, is one hitter who's greatly improved from last year.

The sophomore had two home runs and four RBIs in yesterday's victory and is batting .382 this season after going 7-of-53 from the plate last season.

"The biggest thing is just trying to keep my hips back," Baudinet said. "I was flying forward last year a lot, and even this year, when I make outs, it's usually when my hips are flying forward. So I just try to tell myself to stay back so I can see the ball a little longer."

UMass also saw another successful game from Multner. The freshman has stepped in and contributed immediately.

He went 3-for-3 with an RBI and a walk against Holy Cross and is batting .382 this season, tied for the team lead with Baudinet.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Understanding the 'Enemy'

Two Israeli films challenge our understanding of the Palestinian and Israeli 'Other'

Hot House

Special Jury Prize, 2007 Sundance Film Festival

Israeli filmmaker Shimon Dotan's interviews with Palestinian prisoners provide a candid look at these men and women, some of whom will become the next generation of Palestinian political leaders.

Thursday, April 3 at 7:30
School of Management 137

Storm of Emotions

Best Documentary, 2006 Monaco Film Festival

This award-winning documentary brings us face to face with the people on the front line of Israel's evacuation of Jewish settlements in Gaza—the secular and religious police officers who carried out the evacuation, and the settlers who were forced to leave their homes.

Monday, April 7 at 7:30
School of Management 137

FREE with UMass ID; $8.00 general admission

More information at www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST

Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Center for Student Development, and Student Affairs and Campus Life, in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival

Flyers struggle in A-10 after strong start

Rookie Wiggins leads Rams after losses to Minutewomen

By Jeff Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Dayton softball team, which has the second-best overall winning percentage in the Atlantic 10, has really struggled early in conference play.

Its success in non-conference play has not carried over, as it has limped to a 2-4 start in the A-10. To start the season the Flyers lost seven of their first eight games, but won 10 of their next 11. After those runs, they started A-10 play by losing two games to Charlotte.

Since their losses to Charlotte, (18-19, 3-3 A-10) the Flyers (15-14, 2-4 A-10) have played in four two-game series, splitting each. The last two series saw Dayton resume conference play against Temple and Saint Joseph's, respectively.

A-10 Softball

The Flyers were still in search of their first conference win when Temple (4-10, 1-3 A-10) came to Dayton on Saturday for a doubleheader. Temple took Game 1, 3-2, but lost Game 2, 7-0. The victory for the Flyers came behind an offensive surge and a complete game shutout from sophomore Eva Rappe.

The following day, the Flyers faced St. Joe's (5-12, 2-2 A-10) in another doubleheader. The offense from the previous game was absent, as the Hawks' pitching shut out the Flyers all the way until the bottom of the seventh in the second game. With one on and trailing, 1-0, Dayton's Megan Lee hit a two-run walk-off home run to give the Flyers their second conference win of the season.

Besides Charlotte, the Flyers have not played tough competition so far in the conference. Both Temple and St. Joseph's have the two worst overall win percentages in the A-10.

The lack of offense is to blame in many of Dayton's losses; they have scored fewer than two runs in six of their last seven losses. In those seven losses, Dayton's pitching has kept things close, allowing three or less runs in all but one game.

The next week is busy for the Flyers, who will play six games by week's end. First is non-conference opponent Ohio (12-11, 2-2 Mid-American Conference) in a doubleheader on Wednesday. The weekend brings an opportunity for Dayton to improve its conference record when they play Fordham (14-17, 4-2 A-10) Friday and Saturday and La Salle (9-13, 3-5 A-10) in a doubleheader on Sunday.

Charlotte catcher Jamie West and the 49ers are off to a 4-2 start in A-10 play. Their only losses came to first-place Massachusetts.

Fordham tough in A-10

Fordham's overall record may be a bit misleading, but in the A-10 they have continued the success they had last year, when they finished in second place.

Despite being under .500 overall this season, the Rams (14-17, 4-2 A-10) have ridden their offense to a 4-2 conference record.

Fordham's two conference losses came in a doubleheader against Massachusetts. In Game 1 the Rams lost 1-0, followed by a 4-2 defeat in Game 2. The close losses should encourage the Rams more than discourage them, as UMass (19-10, 6-0 A-10) is riding a 24-game win streak in A-10 play.

Since the losses to the Minutewomen, the Rams have gone on a six-game winning streak. In those games, Fordham defeated Iona twice and got their first four conference wins with victories over Rhode Island (8-19, 2-4 A-10) and Saint Louis (11-17-2, 3-3 A-10).

During the streak, the Rams have averaged over seven runs per game and have given up just under a run and a half per game. Along with the team's balance, the streak was sparked by the brilliant play of senior catcher Allison Storc and freshman pitcher Beckah Wiggins.

Both Storc and Wiggins received A-10 awards for their play last week. Storc was named A-10 Player of the Week after she hit .400 with two doubles, two home runs and 10 RBI.

Wiggins received A-10 Rookie of the Week accolades after pitching three of the team's four wins in the past week. The award is Wiggins's second straight and third overall rookie of the week award this spring.

Despite the recent winning streak the Rams still have a sub-.500 winning percentage overall. Fordham scheduled a tough non-conference slate that has proved to be a challenge.

The Rams have been tested by playing against five ranked opponents, including Ohio State, Louisiana State and Stanford. Two of the games against ranked opponents saw Fordham losing by a single run, one of which went into extra innings.

The Rams will look to continue their winning streak when they take on non-conference opponent Stony Brook this Wednesday and then resume conference play with two games this weekend against Dayton.

Bonnies off to quick start

Despite finishing 6-9 and in eighth place in the A-10 last season, St. Bonaventure currently sits in second place after jumping out to a quick 3-1 conference start.

The Bonnies began conference play with a split against St. Joe's and followed with a two-game sweep of Temple.

St. Bonaventure (8-10, 3-1 A-10) has gotten plenty of rest since its wins over Temple. They have not played in 11 days, due to their doubleheader against George Washington being cancelled.

In addition, the Bonnies have played only 18 games all season. Other top teams in the A-10, such as Massachusetts, Fordham and St. Louis, have played almost twice as many games at this point in the season. St. Bonaventure's next opponent, Charlotte, has played more than twice their amount of games, with 37 contests.

The extra rest could either help or hurt the team in the long run. Not having the opportunity to play together as a team as much and as often can knock a team out of synch. On the other hand, the extra rest may give the Bonnies an edge at the end of a grueling season.

St. Bonaventure will look to add to its early success in the A-10 when they play this Saturday in a doubleheader against Charlotte. The 49ers were picked to finish fourth in the A-10 Coaches's Poll, and will be a challenge to the untested Bonnies.

Jeff Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Fordham pitcher Beckah Wiggins won her second consecutive Atlantic 10 Rookie of the Week award and third overall. The Rams have won four games in the last week and Wiggins was in the circle for three of them.

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S

HUGE
INSANELY
STUPID
APARTMENT DEALS

Housing Fair Only
April 3, 2008
Campus Center 10-3

Hobart drops Stags in ECAC competition

LACROSSE from page 12

Player of the Year Watch list. The Tewaaraton Award is given to the best men's player in collegiate lacrosse, with Duke's Matt Danowski winning the award last year.

Danowski comes in at No. 1 on the list, with 26 goals and 30 assists throughout 10 games. Cannon, who is sixth on the list, has a knack for getting the Hoya offense in a position to score every time it takes possession. While the attackman loves finding the open man and passing the ball, the senior has scored 13 goals of his own in seven games.

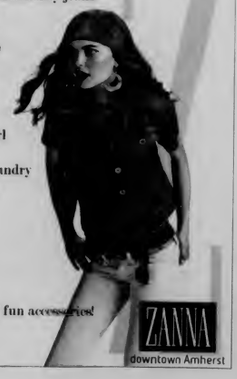
Nick Mirabito of Navy is ninth on the list, and must have big games against No. 3 Maryland, No.9 Army and No. 10 Johns Hopkins before the Patriot League Tournament begins on April 25.

LC, FU come up short

Twentieth-ranked Loyola led early against No. 2 Syracuse last Saturday, but succumbed to a third-quarter rally by the Orange, and went on to lose on the road for the first time this season, 13-8. Attackman Cooper MacDonnell had four goals for the visiting Greyhounds, who fell to 4-4 overall but are still undefeated in conference play.

Attackman Shane Koppens found freshman Chris Basler in front of the cage for the first goal just minutes into the game. MacDonnell put Loyola up 2-0, when he scored his team-high 13th goal of the season. The Greyhound defense left Syracuse without a goal in the first quarter, thanks in part to a stout unit lead by senior David Moore.

Early in the second quarter, Orange attack Kenny Nims would end Loyola's streak of consecutive minutes without a goal, dating back to the teams 15-1 win against Massachusetts two weeks ago (67 minutes, 37 seconds).



After a goal by attackman Jake Wilcox tied the game at five, Syracuse went on an offensive rampage, scoring the next four goals and taking a 9-5 lead. The Greyhound offense cut the deficit to two, but was not able to find offensive production in the fourth quarter, registering one goal on three shot attempts. Loyola will look to continue its undefeated conference play when it takes on Rutgers at home this Friday.

Fairfield did not fare any better than the Greyhounds, suffering its fourth straight loss to Hobart on Saturday.

After a hot start, the Stags have fallen to 3-4 overall and 2-3 in ECAC competition. The Statesmen scored the first goal seven minutes into the game, and would score the game's first nine goals. Fairfield's offense finally got something going early on in the third quarter, as midfielder Kevin Peters found fellow midfielder Dan Boudreau for his fifth goal of the season.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

where style happens
Citizens of Humanity jeans
Seven jeans
Mavi jeans
Free People
Hazel
Juno
Voxx
Miss Me
Madden Girl
Oh...Deer
Chinese Laundry
Yellow Box
Frye
Keds
Reef
Keen
Teva
Dansko
and ...lots of fun accessories!

ZANNA downtown Amherst

CHECK OUT
THE COLLEGIAN
SPORTS BLOG AT:
dailycollegian
sports
•
blogspot
•
com

Seven O's
EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
LIVE BAND
FRIDAY, 4/4/08
WOLFMAN CONSPIRACY
SATURDAY, 4/5/08
FOUR ON THE FLOOR
LOOKING FOR EXPOSURE?
STUDENT BANDS WELCOME TO PLAY AT SEVEN O'S
LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996
ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD
SUNDERLAND, MA 01375
(413) 665-6788
3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NEXT TO CUFFBIE APTS.

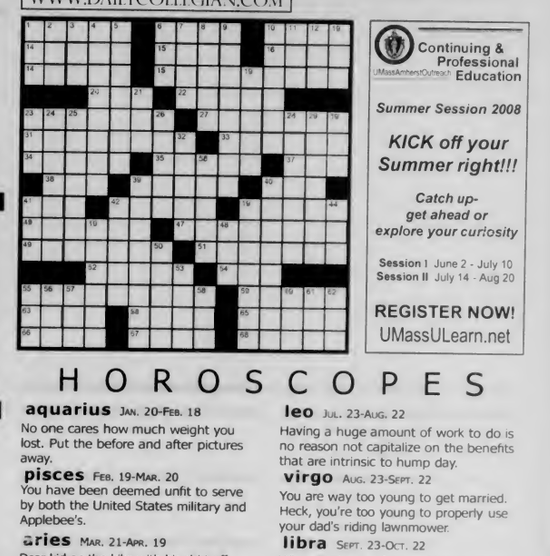
This one is actually possible.

7						9
	1			8	5			4
4			5
	7		1	6				2
		3	8		5	4
8				3	2		7
					3			6
1		8	6				5
	5							7

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!
WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Bart or Belle
6 Falls back
10 Thick piece
14 Alphabetical quintet
15 Spring forward
16 Land of Lima
17 Provisions
18 Moral fiber
20 GA city
22 At that place
23 Marvel Comics man
27 Scottish sculptor Paolozzi
31 Dime
33 Tabitha's TV grandmother
34 Compulsions
35 Compassion
37 NYC opera house
38 Ernie of golf
39 Pages
40 Freon or neon
41 Function
42 "Waterloo Bridge" painter
43 Spring from
45 Clan pattern
47 Detergent additive
49 Central theme
51 Breeds of hunting dogs
52 Active people
54 Boxing Day mo
55 Four parts
58 Footwear
63 Sitcom award
64 Stead
65 ___ cotta
66 Week elements
67 Stitched
68 Slammin' Sammy

DOWN
1 Took a load off
2 Goller's peg
3 Volleyball tiller
4 Woos
5 Steals, as livestock
6 Yale booster
7 Deflected
8 Take to the tub
9 Hasty drivers
10 Propagate
11 Luau garland
12 Knack
13 Purchase
19 Struggler's sound
21 Writer Deighton
23 R-V connection
24 Wright and Brewer
25 Fishermen
26 "___ Frome"
26 Iceberg alternative
29 Wardrobe assistant
30 Mare's morsel
32 Monica of tennis
36 Glee club voices
39 Hides
40 Schubert's "___ at the Spinning Wheel"
41 Shoshone
42 Estate
43 Certifies under oath
44 Hoop sections
46 Bear and Roosevelt
48 Nourished
50 Banks of Wrigley
53 Do a slow burn
55 Letters in math proofs
56 Thurman of "Pulp Fiction"
57 Tan or Smart
58 Start of a day?
60 Mined mineral
61 Notable period
62 Blue



CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"At the age of eleven or thereabouts women acquire a poise and an ability to handle difficult situations which a man, if he is lucky, manages to achieve somewhere in the later seventies."
— P. G. Wodehouse

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

THE BROTHERS WATT By William Wilson

SCRATCH N' SNIFF By Derek Cuneo

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

HOROSCOPES

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
No one cares how much weight you lost. Put the before and after pictures away.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You have been deemed unfit to serve by both the United States military and Applebee's.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Dear kid on the bike with his shirt off, it's not that warm yet and your bod is most certainly not calendar-worthy.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Every time you quote or reference Harry Potter God marks a point off of the value of your existence.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Eye boogers are merely nose boogers with dreams of a better life. They are the explorers of the mucous world.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Advil is not the answer to your headache woes. You need a good night's sleep and a massage with a happy ending.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Having a huge amount of work to do is no reason not capitalize on the benefits that are intrinsic to hump day.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
You are way too young to get married. Heck, you're too young to properly use your dad's riding lawnmower.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
When traditional forms of hard currency fail, wealth will be measured in belly button lint. You're going to be rich!

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Quoting John Lennon does not make you even remotely as prophetic as he was.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
The nation as a whole is aging, but you're still young so keep on raging.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
The ambient noise that fills your brain is a subtle yet pervasive sign that you are losing your mind and moving towards brilliance.

Never let go of Jack or the comics page.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

APT. FOR RENT

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Belchertown center of town on bus route 2 bedroom 725 first last security 413-323-6511 9-2pm

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

Attention Juniors&Seniors: Fall 2008 internship with the student legal services office. Get hands on experience in the legal field. Work directly with attorneys & clients. Earn 12 undergraduate credits. No experiience necessary- Full training provided. Contact our office at 413-545-1995 or stop by at 922 Campus Center.

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Summer in Maine Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

HOUSE FOR RENT

Hadley Close to Umass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270.

HOUSE FOR RENT

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house- 2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry laundry, finished basement. yard, 2 car garage. 1.5 mi to campus! $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900.24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

SERVICES

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 2, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutemen do it again

Senior Gary Forbes celebrates the Massachusetts men's basketball team's 78-66 win over Florida in the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament. Forbes led all scorers with 19 points, including 13 in the second half, to lead the Minutemen to another comeback win.

Maroon and White shine late, clinch spot in NIT final

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK — At some point, the Massachusetts men's basketball team should consider playing well in the first half, not just the second.

But so far that's all that seems to work for the Minutemen.

Trailing once again by double digits, UMass came storming back in the second half to defeat two-time defending NCAA Champion Florida, 78-66, in the semifinals of the National Invitation Tournament at Madison Square Garden last night.

After another poor shooting performance in the first half for the Minutemen, seniors and New York natives Dante Milligan and Gary Forbes sparked an 18-4 run that put UMass ahead, 59-51, with just over seven minutes remaining. Missed foul shots by the Gators and two key and impressive baskets by Forbes were more than enough for UMass to secure the win.

"These guys showed a lot of heart and integrity and believed in each other," UMass coach Travis Ford said after the game. "We've shown in our previous games that we've figured a way out to come back. And the reason we come back is that these guys have that never-say-die attitude."

The third straight comeback victory for the Minutemen (25-10) sets up an NIT final matchup with Ohio State — last year's NCAA Tournament runners-up. UMass came back from big half-time deficits against both Syracuse (22 points) and Akron (12) in the previous rounds.

UMass	78
Florida	66

"We came in the locker room very positive, and we knew we were going to make a run like we always do," Forbes said. "It's an ongoing thing with us."

"It shows how well we played as a team, and the coaching staff is bringing the winning tradition back at UMass," junior Chris Lowe said.

The Minutemen had strong contributions from all five starters — particularly in the second half — as all of them finished with at least eight points. Forbes (19) and Milligan (17) led the way, while Ricky Harris and Lowe each scored 16.

But it was Forbes that had the biggest baskets. Up five points with fewer than five minutes remaining, Forbes took the shot clock down to three before launching a 3-pointer. The shot went down, giving UMass a 62-54 lead. On the very next offensive possession, Forbes pulled off the same trick — this time taking a

See BASKETBALL on page 9

N.Y. pair leads UMass past Gators

Forbes, Milligan play hero during second-half rally

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK — Perhaps it's fitting that the Massachusetts men's basketball team's pair of New York City seniors had two of their most impressive performances to date in the city where they learned to play the game. More significantly, they will have a chance to end their collegiate careers with a National Invitational Tournament championship.

The Minutemen defeated Florida last night at Madison Square Garden primarily behind the strong, physical post presence of center Dante Milligan (17 points and 12 rebounds) and offensive ability of forward Gary Forbes.

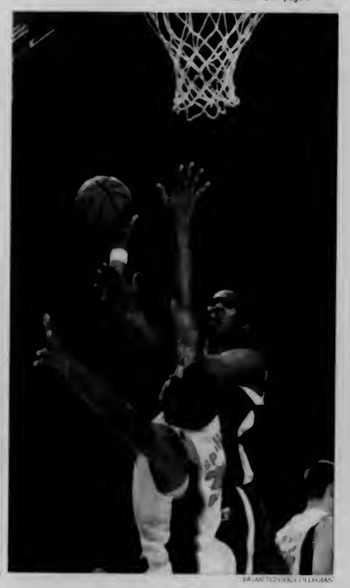
"If our seniors showed leadership and stepped up, I thought we had a good chance to win this game coming in," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "They've had the mentality of not wanting to permanently take off the UMass uniform."

Entering the contest, the Minutemen knew that they needed strong performances from both positions to defeat a Florida team that won the last two NCAA National Championships.

"It was the responsibility of these three seniors to show why they were in college for five years," Ford said. "We talked about all year long that this team is going to go as far as your three seniors take you."

The Maroon and White's third fifth-year senior captain and transfer, forward Etienne Brower, played well in the front court with nine rebounds but struggled to shoot from beyond the arc (2-for-7).

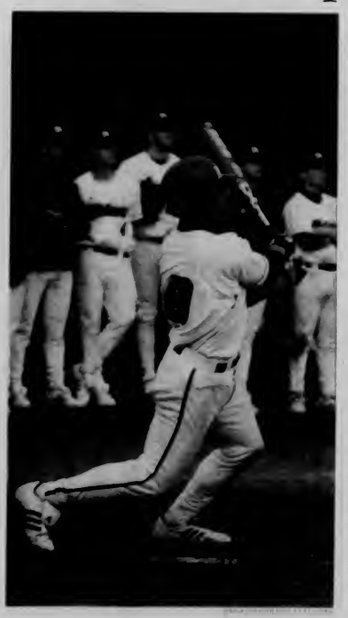
The Minutemen survived poor shooting performances over the past few games from Forbes — the team's leading scorer and reigning Atlantic 10 Player of the Year. He shot 7 of 16 against Florida and scored a team-high 19 points.



The dark shooting backdrop of the World's Most Famous Arena is a basketball venue that Forbes has experienced before. He played twice at MSG prior to last night in high school championship games.

"I felt at home," said Forbes, a Brooklyn native. "It seems ironic that I ended my high school career here as well. To say that I'll play my last college game at Madison Square Garden is definitely a dream come true."

Many of the shots that Forbes converted last night were the ones that he was missing in recent play. He also avoided his tendency to rely on the 3-point shot. Instead, the swingman penetrated toward the basket nearly every time he touched the ball.



Yet it was two pressure baskets that challenged the senior's resolve during the final three minutes.

See SENIORS on page 9

Senior forward Dante Milligan shoots over Florida's Marreese Speights in UMass's win last night.

Donato slam sparks comeback

Mike Donato watches his fourth-inning grand slam sail over the left-field fence during UMass's 16-9 win over Holy Cross yesterday.

By Mike Cosnoski
Collegian Staff

Trailing 8-2 after three innings is never a formula for winning, but when a team records 16 hits, they're never out of the game.

Such was the case for the Massachusetts baseball team yesterday afternoon.

The Minutemen (6-10, 1-5 Atlantic 10) scored seven runs in the fourth inning to tie the game at nine and never looked back, defeating Holy Cross (8-14, 4-0 Patriot League), 16-9, at Earl Lorden Field.

UMass travels to Alexandria, Va., to play three conference games against George Washington this weekend, beginning Friday.

Holy Cross scored seven runs in the first two innings, chasing starting pitcher Nathan Monroy after 1-2/3 innings.

Monroy allowed six runs on seven hits in his short stint and never appeared to have the Crusader batters off balance at the plate.

The first batter Monroy faced, sophomore Matt Perry, took a pitch to the opposite field to lead the game off with a home run.

Holy Cross scored two more runs in the first and added four more in the second to jump out to a 7-0 lead.

UMass	16
Holy Cross	9

The Minutemen scored one in the second and another in the third before figuring out Holy Cross pitcher Matt O'Brien in the fourth.

After a Kyle Multner RBI single earlier in the inning, Brian Baudinet

See BASEBALL on page 9

Georgetown, Loyola in Top 20

Greyhounds come up short against new No. 1 Syracuse

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

For the second straight week, the Eastern College Athletic Conference has two teams represented in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Division I Media Poll.

No. 4 Georgetown and No. 20 Loyola are in, with Fairfield receiving votes this week, despite not getting in the Top 20.

After outscoring and upsetting No. 2 Duke, the nation's only undefeated team last week, the Hoyas (5-2, 2-0 ECAC) kept their four-game winning streak intact, defeating No. 10 Navy, 11-10, in overtime last Friday.

Attackman Ricky Mirabito (three goals) faced his older brother, Nick (2 goals, one assist), a Midshipman attackman and leading scorer as an opponent for the first time.

The younger Mirabito, standing in front of the crease, scored off a feed from fellow attack Brendan Cannon (one goal, three assists) with just over two minutes left in the overtime period to win the game for the visiting Hoyas.

ECAC Lacrosse

The Midshipmen (8-2) tied the game with just one minute left in regulation on an unassisted score from midfielder Basil Daratsos. After winning the ensuing faceoff, Georgetown called a timeout with 24 seconds remaining, but turned the ball over when play resumed. Both Navy and Georgetown exchanged shots, but nothing was close to the net, sending the game into extra time.

Even though the Midshipmen held possession for the first seven minutes of the game, Georgetown got its offense in gear, jumping out to a 5-1 lead with three goals in the first quarter and tallying two more goals at the start of the second half.

Mirabito and Cannon hooked up again, as the Hoyas led 6-3 in the first half and added two more in the third quarter. But the Midshipmen responded by scoring four straight goals, cutting the deficit to 8-7 late in the third quarter. Both teams exchanged goals before Daratsos came back to tie the game for the Midshipmen.

Even though Navy held the advantage in groundballs, 42-32, both teams had 32 shots on goal, with the Hoyas controlling a majority of the draws.

HOYA ON WATCH LIST

Cannon represents the ECAC by being named to Insidelacrosse.com's NCAA Men's Lacrosse

See LACROSSE on page 10

MINUTEMEN TAKE ON OHIO STATE IN NIT CHAMPIONSHIP | PAGE 14

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 58 LO: 33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 2008

UMass Medical receives $1 billion

Funding to benefit life-science initiatives

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

The state senate recently passed a $1 billion bill that could help the University of Massachusetts Medical School cure everything from cancer to diabetes.

The bill, which according to the Worcester Telegram & Gazette allocates $500 million for infrastructure and new state research facilities, will allow for the new life science research center at UMass Medical.

"Our main goal is to utilize the funding through the life science initiatives to cost share a major program: the advanced therapeutics cluster," said Dr. Gary Schneider, associate vice provost for research administration.

The center will house an RNAi institute, a stem cell facility and gene therapy facility.

The facilities will also continue the Nobel Prize winning work of UMass Medical professor Craig Mello.

Schneider said that the therapeutic targets of stem cell research are "almost universal in scope in terms of diseases that could be treated […] our main centers of excellence here are cardiovascular diseases, muscular/skeletal diseases and diabetes; so those are natural targets we'll look at."

In addition to creating new infrastructure at UMass medical, the project expects to bring in new scientists to spearhead research.

"This is going to be a major building initiative which will substantially increase lab work on campus," said Schneider. "I'm certain that we won't wait until the building is up and functional until recruiting scientists to fill it up. We may be a little cramped for space for some time, but to bring together word class teams for this enterprise, we'll have to start [recruiting] soon."

Robert Connolly, spokesman for the university system, explains that while the house and senate versions of the bill are slightly different, and those differences are being worked out, there are some provisions expected to remain the same.

"The good news is there are a number of common elements, which are $95 million for another science research facility at UMass Amherst, and another $90 million for a facility at UMass medical," said Connolly. "This illustrates that the legislature and governor see UMass as an innovator in research which is great news for faculty and staff of the five-campus system, and shows they have confidence in the quality of research going on at UMass."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

UMass Medical will be the primary beneficiary of a $1 billion dollar funding bill from the Massachusetts legislature. The money will provide infrastructure improvements and boost faculty numbers.

SGA discusses student needs

By Mike Fox
Collegian Staff

Celebration and controversy marked last night's Student Government Association Senate meeting.

The meeting began with a ceremony in which leaders of both the SGA and Graduate Student Senate signed the official agreement between the administration and the United Student Action Coalition.

Former trustee Ruth Thompson reiterated the often mentioned gains of the student strike such as, more funding for outreach programs, a committee to address police interaction with students on campus and a "politicized campus and institutionalized negotiations."

GSS president Jeff Napolitano stated that while gains were made, "the issues of affordability and accessibility are still problems." He added that the state is still, "not blissful, even though Chancellor Cole listens. Students deserve more."

When asked to clarify, he cited the continued issues of high tuition and student fees. In regards to the effect that economic conditions have over the cost of college education, he recognized the fact that not much more could be done on the University of Massachusetts campus as long as the administration keeps to its word. He called on a need for the consolidation of student groups and resources in order to target the issue on the state and federal levels, citing the War on Iraq as one of the many drains of funding.

Former SGA President Aaron Buford and current President Malcolm Chu praised the cross-collaboration during the strike and that as other strike wouldn't be necessary unless the SGA disagreed.

Chu called this year, "One of the most amazing in activ-

See SGA on page 3

Students learn self-defense

By Emily Reynolds
Collegian Correspondent

Each month, resident assistants in student residence halls are required to organize educational programming. Last Tuesday, the RA's of the Grayson-Field cluster put on a program that no one should be without: self-defense.

"Each floor was assigned a theme, and ours was conflict," said Kristen DiMarzio, an RA in Grayson. "We thought an interactive thing would involve more people and they would have more fun."

They had fellow RA Mac Fox as a resource. Fox is a mix martial arts fighter who started learning when he was six years old. He has continued to train ever since.

"Even if you are a small person, you still have body weight," said Fox.

If the victim and attacker are in close proximity, then the best thing to do is go for places on the face. One such move would be to hook the hands around the ears of the attacker and drive the thumbs into the eyes.

"If you are a girl with small hands, keep in mind it is not that much of a distance to cover," said Adams.

While demonstrating that particular move, many of the females in the audience became squeamish.

"It sounds gross, but you have to do it in that situation," said Fox.

According the 2005 National Crime Victimization Survey, there are 200,780 people raped or sexually assaulted annually, and 90 percent are committed by a male against a female.

With these statistics, self-defense is a valuable lesson.

"It sounded interesting," said Yvette Chretine, one of the students who came to the program. "You learn stuff. It is good information."

Fox demonstrated the self-defense moves, using assistants Stephen Adams and Chris Gagnon, and Resident Assistants organized a self-defense event in the Grayson-Field cluster of Orchard Hill.

See SELF-DEFENSE on page 3

Students learned how to defend themselves against attackers at a self-defense event last Tuesday. The program's facilitator, Mac Fox, taught the group of residents certain techniques to prevent assault and other crimes.

UMass looks to bring back winning tradition

The Minutemen remain one victory away from the first National Invitational Tournament championship in program history. UMass defeated Florida on Tuesday and face Ohio State tonight in the title game at Madison Square Garden in New York City.

Congress considers taxing online sales

By Sruthi Valluri
Collegian Staff

Online shopping saves students from having to pay taxes that can amount to rates near 7.5 percent. This tax-free haven is derived from a 1992 Supreme Court ruling, which made it illegal for states to collect taxes unless the merchant had a physical connection to the state and its resident customer.

Under this ruling, retailers such as Wal-Mart can collect taxes on most online sales, but Web sites like Amazon.com can only collect taxes on shipments to a handful of states.

For students, this means that buying text books from across the country — except for a few states — is tax free. And in most cases, students who resell items for a profit can keep these profits without paying taxes.

While the Supreme Court's decision provides consumers some amount of relief, it left the circumstance open for congress to begin tax collection from out-of-state sellers.

A 2004 University of Tennessee study estimated that in 2003, state governments lost about $15.5 billion in revenue to these unclaimed taxes. In 2008, the study's authors said, this number would grow to be $21.5 billion. With the economy under pressure, lawmakers are looking to close this tax gap.

The Supreme Court has ruled several times against collecting out-of-state taxes, not because of its legality, but because of the bureaucracy involved Complying with thousands of different state tax codes would be too cumbersome for merchants.

Congress hopes to avoid this complication by standardizing state laws. In 2005, Sen. Michael Enzi (R-Wyo.) and Sen. Byron Dorgan (D-N.D.), introduced a bill called the Sales Tax Fairness and Simplification Act. The bill included a set of codes that would simplify almost 7,500 state jurisdictions to allow merchants to collect tax from any state that adopted standards set by the bill.

The bill was unpopular in a Republican-dominated House, but 15 states adopted the standards and more than 1,000 merchants voluntarily signed up to collect taxes from the SSUTA states. The move resulted in almost $75 million in revenue for states. With elections coming up and a shift in party demographics, similar and more sweeping bills will be making their way to the floor for the second time.

The debate pits lobbyists against each other. Web sites like eBay and Amazon.com would face a drastic decrease in customer traffic if a law were put into

See TAXES on page 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 113
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Pearson
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Ester
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
ADVERTISING MANAGER Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Stefan
ART & LAYOUT EDITOR Evan Mcdevitt
CLASSIFIEDS EDITOR Adam Staiger
EDITORIAL EDITOR A.T. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bass
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Pennypacker
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Thiss
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Stonestreet
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marissa Wheatley
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linnea Wallach
ASST. ART & LAYOUT Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ART & LAYOUT Nina McIntyre
ASST. ART & LAYOUT Brian Bloch
ASST. EDITORIAL James Matthews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Gaither
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Cheney
ASSISTANT NEWS Heidi Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Matt Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Merves
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwasser
ASSISTANT NEWS Brian Tolaro
ART/WEB EDITOR Michelle Arbuckle
EDITORIAL/WEB EDITOR Lee Wacter
NEWS/WEB EDITOR Nick Bent
SPORTS/WEB EDITOR Steve Gaines

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR

COPY EDITOR

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR

WEB EDITOR

Husky crime report

Larceny maintains place as top misconduct at UConn

BY ELIZABETH CONNELLY
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN

STORRS, Conn. — When people think of campus safety, they think of being protected against classroom shootings or being able to call the police if they feel threatened in any way. However, with all of this fear about being protected from a massive tragedy, people seem to overlook a less scary but much more prominent issue around campus, and that is theft.

According to the University of Connecticut's Campus Crime Report, arrests has been No. 1 campus crime since 2004. In 2004-2005 and 2006, the crime reports for larceny have doubled the number in crime reports for liquor violations, and reports for burglary has been the third highest reported crime.

Although the rate of larceny is quite high, there are many ways to prevent your belongings from becoming victim to theft. The first way is as simple as locking your door. Even if you are taking a shower or going down the hall to your friend's room it is important to lock you door. According to the UConn Police Department's Web site, it takes as little as 10 seconds for a thief to steal your belongings. So it's important to keep your door locked when you're not in it no matter what the circumstances are.

If you are studying somewhere besides your room try yourself and decide you want to go get a coffee or use the restroom, the best thing to do is take your belongings with you. However, when the library is crowded and tables are in high demand you may not want to lose your seat. To prevent theft in this situation the best thing to do would be to politely ask a person at the table next you if they would keep an eye on your things while you leave for a minute. Most of the time the people have no problem helping you out and having someone look over your things is better than taking the risk of leaving them out in the open to be taken.

Nick Morrone, a 4th-semester political science major, had his iPod stolen from the library during finals week last semester.

"My friend and I went to go get coffees in bookworms and left our stuff at the table figuring it would be fine for a few minutes," he said. "But when we got back to our seats my iPod was gone and I had to buy another one over Christmas break."

Along with dormitories and UConn buildings, the Dining Halls around campus can be a problem when it comes to keeping your belongings safe however, there are lockers outside almost every dining hall so taking the extra few seconds to place your bag or one can be a preventative way from getting your bag stolen. If all the lockers are taken there is always the option of putting your bag inside of the dining hall. And although they aren't stocked up, they are still in view while you are eating.

Ohio State now offers a degree in aviation, allowing students to study the art of flying while gaining actual experience in the skies.

Correction: In yesterday's article "Patrick names new secretary of education for Massachusetts" the date of the new chairman's appointment becoming effective was incorrect. The new chairman, Paul Reville, is slated to begin his appointment effective July 1.

New bill could arm URI police dept.

BY ROBERT PRELLWITZ
THE GOOD FIVE CENT COMPANY, RHODE ISLAND

KINGSTON, R.I. - A bill before the Rhode Island General Assembly could issue firearms to University of Rhode Island police officers.

The bill has not yet been voted on and no specific date for a vote has been set.

Called the Maintenance of Order on Campus Act, the bill would amend a section of Rhode Island General Law to require an armed campus police force at all of Rhode Island's higher education institutions.

The law currently leaves the decision to arm the campus police force up to the Rhode Island Board of Governors for Higher Education, which oversees the state's colleges and universities.

Andrea Hopkins, URI assistant vice president for public affairs, said that the university is opposed to the legislation.

"We've always maintained that the Board of Governors should retain the authority over whether campus police should be armed, and this bill takes that authority away," she said.

At a URI Faculty Senate meeting last week, president Robert L. Carothers stated his personal opposition to the legislation and noted that the Faculty Senate is also opposed by a ratio of "about five- or six-to-one."

But he also said that the issue is important, given recent incidents of campus violence, and said that the arming of URI police will eventually happen.

Aside from the removal of authority from the Board of Governors, Hopkins said that another problem with arming the campus police is the cost. The bill does not specify where the funding will come from to arm each police officer and to provide the specialized training that is necessary for carrying a firearm.

Maj. Stephen Baker of URI police said that it would cost about $1,000 to arm each officer. There are currently 23 officers on campus with three positions vacant. There would also be costs associated with giving each officer specialized training, but Baker did not have an estimate for those costs.

Baker said that he would like to see URI police armed. He said that he would prefer that the decision be made by the Board of Governors, but he is not opposed to the current legislation.

Ohio State trains new pilots

BY RYAN BARANSKI
THE DAILY LANTERN (OHIO STATE U.)

COLUMBUS, Ohio — On a clear day, one of engineering spend time studying in a library or sitting in a crowded campus classroom. Some are talking of the sky, all earn their Bachelor of Arts or Bachelor of Science degree in aviation.

The Ohio State University's College of Arts and Sciences, the College of Engineering and the Fisher College of Business all offer a diploma in Aviation, a Bachelor of Science degree in [illegible] and enterprise, but they also [illegible] at the Ohio State University.

Students in the program graduate with an airline transport pilot certificate, a commercial pilot certificate and a flight instructor certificate.

Christina Kurnowski, a sophomore in economics and aviation double major, is among those students.

Currently, I have my private pilot license, instrument flight rules license, commercial license, certified flight instructor license and my multi-engine license," said Kurnowski.

Kurnowski said her passion for flight began when she was in high school.

"I started flying in high school because it fascinated me. There was an airport five minutes from my house and I earned my private pilot license there before I came to college," Kurnowski said.

But receiving so many certificates and flight time was not easy, according to Kurnowski. Kurnowski said her flight instructor at the OSU Airport, students must follow a strategic plan to get the experience necessary to graduate.

Kurnowski said their flying careers by earning their private pilot license. From day one they are engaging in one-on-one flight instruction in the air coupled with learning from a textbook in small classes. Roby said a private pilot license typically takes 40-60 hours of logged flight time to complete.

"Each license which you receive has its own set of rules, but each one will require you to take a written test along with a check ride with a Federal Aviation Administration examiner and passing a medical examination," said Brandon Mann, a certified flight instructor at the OSU Airport.

According to an aircraft systems guide given to all aviation students, after receiving a private pilot license students move on to obtain an instrument flight rules license which takes approximately 40-50 hours to complete. Students can then work towards a commercial license which requires a minimum of 250 hours of flight time.

Fighting female image issues

Student art work produced from interactive design program

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Women's Health project at University of Massachusetts, hosted "In our Bodies: Experiences of Bodies and Self," an artistic workshop that allowed students to raise awareness about women's body image issues Tuesday night.

The event took place in the hallway outside the Craft Center in the Student Union, as student participants needed space for their bodies to be traced into life-sized silhouettes. Students rolled out paper, lay still as other students traced their entire bodies with chalk.

"Women especially in our culture receive negative messages about body image, this is a fun creative way to have a more positive experience with the body," said Stacey Mimnaugh, the coordinator for the Women's Health Project.

After the bodies were traced on the paper, the students walked back into the Craft Center where materials like, charcoal, paint, collages and other artistic materials were available for student use. Participants used their creativity to decorate their traced bodies.

Freshman Nicole Brownstein, had her hands covered in lime green paint as she characterized the workshop as, "breaking the boundaries that the media portrays as the ideal women to be."

When the students finish decorating their life-sized silhouettes, they will be on display. This exhibit will begin in September and will use the student's artwork and digital storytelling to present body image misconceptions.

"It was a great event aimed at showcasing the opinions of UMass' Women's Health Project female members on their bodies," freshman Katelin Bolduc said." I personally enjoyed the opportunity to join forces with other female students and to creatively exhibit our self esteem and opinions in regards to our bodies. Women are critiqued as not having the perfect body type in everyday life and this was a great way to showcase that not all women need to be a size two to be perfect and to be enjoy the skin that they're in."

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu

Residents in Orchard Hill learned self-defense skills from a program organized by resident assistants of the Grayson-Field cluster.

Students learn vital self-defense skills explained them with audience participation.

SELF-DEFENSE from page 1

"Most guys want to learn the cool stuff," said Fox. "For women, you want to go for what works."

Fox had 13 key points for women to hit that would inflict damage without a large amount of force.

First there are the feet, followed by the inside of the knee both places that could stop motion quickly. The armpit has many nerve endings, so hitting there could really hurt. The solar plexis also is a soft spot right under the ribs.

"If you hit the solar plexis, it is easy to knock the wind out of someone," said Fox.

Beyond that, most places to hit are in the head, including the windpipe, the flesh right under the jaw, as well as the tongue, ears, eyes and nose.

"You only need 15 pounds of pressure to tear off an ear," said Fox. The last one is the most obvious, though it only applies to male attackers: the groin.

"That is pretty much a given," said Fox. "You hit someone there, they will go down."

In addition to knowing all of the places on the body to strike, positioning is just as important. The victim can create distance between themselves and the attacker by using arms and legs. Some of the best things to do are to use quick force to surprise the attacker or do something to throw him or her off balance.

"You want to give yourself as much time to get away as you can," Fox said.

Some things to try in the event of an attack include the tiger mouth strike, driving the hand into the throat as fast as possible, the in-step kick, the basic kick to the groin, striking the nose with upward force and kicking the the attacker's knees and pulling away.

Even knowing some of the basic self-defense moves do not always protect a person, so knowing surroundings is even more significant.

"Prevention is the most important thing," said Fox. "Be aware of where you are."

That means do not go wandering down dark alleys late at night or head out alone in an unsafe neighborhood.

"No matter what gender you are, how big or how strong you are, you do not want to put yourself in that situation," Fox said.

While Fox knows a lot of things, he has always preferred the practical moves to the ones seen in movies.

"I am more interested in what works than what looks good," said Fox.

Although the women that attended Fox's class have a better idea of what to do to defend themselves, it is still far from really knowing how to protect themselves.

"Practice, practice, practice so that you do not have to think about it, just react a certain way," said Fox. "Do not stop here. Take classes on a regular basis. Repetition is the best thing."

Emily Reynolds can be reached at ereynold@student.umass.edu

SGA discusses Vassell situation

SGA from page 1

ism," but that the SGA would, "be ready to struggle if it had to."

Regarding the issue of asking for a decrease in student fees asking for more support of student services, Chu stated that, "the money being promised by the administration will come from a reprioritization of the budget. There will be a greater push for priority of student initiated activities over capital projects."

However he did acknowledge that the demands of the strike that were met were addressed before fees have been reevaluated. He repeated the claims of Napolitano, stating that more statewide organization will be necessary to address the issues of fees in front of the UMass Board of Trustees.

Towards the end of the meeting, Senator Shaun Robinson and President Chu advanced a motion pertaining to the Jason Vassell incident on February 3rd. The motion sought to recognize the act against Jason as a hate crime and for the University to pursue criminal action against his assailants. Senator Derek Khanna voiced opposition to the bill, stating that, "it would be poor form in a court trial to sponsor language showing support for one person in such a serious legal matter."

Chu said," I stand firmly behind supporting a member of our community. Our responsibility is to rally behind Jason and I personally believe that hate crimes can not be tolerated."

Mike Fox can be reached mfox@student.umass.edu

Taxes possible for online sales place. Traditional retailers and state governments, on the other hand, support the idea; retailers would be able to compete evenly with online companies, and state governments would collect revenue.

TAXES from page 1

In Massachusetts, a bill like the Enzo-Dorgan legislation would translate to $350 million this year. Opponents point out that even though there is an increase in revenue, collecting taxes on the Internet would "stifle the growth of online commerce and weaken the economy," according to the Boston Globe.

For online customers, a sales tax implies the loss of income. Catherine England, a spokeswoman for eBay, pointed out that nearly 724,000 customers use eBay as either a primary or secondary source of income, which sometimes amounts to nearly $10 million. According to the IRS, any amount more than $400 in self-employment is eligible for taxation. Students who make profits on their text books, therefore, are obligated to report earnings as income.

UMACC tops goal

The University of Massachusetts Community Campaign (UMACC) surpassed its goal of $425,000, as campus employees donated $454,833 to local, regional and international charitable organizations. This year's participation rate was 37 percent with 1,761 individual donors.

The UMACC solicits donations from UMass employees to benefit charitable organizations. Employees can donate to the campaign in a number of ways, including payroll deduction, cash and credit card payments. The organization focuses giving once a year, thus eliminating repeated requests in the workplace for donations. It also allows employees to donate to specific charities of their choice.

According to UMACC's Web site, last year UMass employees pledged $449,505 with Leaders' Circle members pledging 74 percent of the total dollars in that 2006 campaign.

The Leaders' Circle is a group of individuals who each contribute $500 or more and was established in 1993 to stimulate participation in the UMACC.

According to the UMACC Web site, the main goal of the 2007 campaign is, "to create and implement a program that recognizes and responds to the diverse charitable interests and values of our employees and which offers opportunities for campus pride."

—Adam Coulter

AASA
PROUDLY PRESENTS
The 25th Annual Asian Night
Around Asia In One Night
Hoang Park
Thi Nguyen
Your UMass Amherst Alumni Association is a proud sponsor of this event.
Check out the wide variety of benefits that membership offers at www.UMASSA.com
Join the UMASS

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Want to be a UMass Idol?
This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize
Sing at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 24, 2008 · Time: 6–7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center
Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu
or call UMass Dining Services: 413-545-2472.
Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing.
All entries must be received by April 23, 2008
There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round.
Limited to 20 contestants for the entire event.
Presented by:
UMass Dining Services
& LAZER 99.5
Sponsored by:
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2008
umass.edu/diningservices
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

Understanding the 'Enemy'
Two Israeli films challenge our understanding of the Palestinian and Israeli 'Other'
Hot House
Special Jury Prize, 2007 Sundance Film Festival
Israeli filmmaker Shumon Dotan's interviews with Palestinian prisoners provide a candid look at these men and women, some of whom will become the next generation of Palestinian political leaders.
Thursday, April 3 at 7:30
School of Management 137
Storm of Emotions
Best Documentary, 2006 Monaco Film Festival
This award-winning documentary brings us face to face with the people on the front line of Israel's evacuation of Jewish settlements in Gaza—the secular and religious police officers who carried out the evacuation, and the settlers who were forced to leave their homes.
Monday, April 7 at 7:30
School of Management 137
FREE with UMass ID; $8.00 general admission
More information at www.umass.edu/jewish
UMASS AMHERST
Sponsored by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Center for Student Development, and Student Affairs and Campus Life, in conjunction with the Pioneer Valley Jewish Film Festival

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Taking back Dr. King's legacy

Shaun Robinson

Tomorrow marks a very significant date in American history. April 4, 2008 is the fortieth anniversary of Dr. Martin King losing his life in Memphis. Since his passing, King has been canonized as a hero of epic proportions. He is no longer looked upon simply as a man devoted to righteous work. Instead, he is characterized as an immortal, messianic figure whose accomplishments are beyond the realm of possibility for imperfect souls.

This phenomenon is a problem on many levels. King's legacy is one to be remembered because it offers a foundation and template for those who wish to continue his pursuit of social change. By depicting the man as some sort of mythological demigod we make King into an idol, an entity to be worshipped rather than emulated. On this fourth decade of his passing, we as students must restructure our understanding of Dr. King and rescue his memory from the grasp of myth.

It is a well known fact that the deceased cannot speak on their own behalf. Dead men cannot confront the distortions of their actions, ambitions, and motivations made by the living. In this regard King is no different from innumerable social actors who have been ideologically castrated by gross misperceptions about their work and thoughts.

Those in power, many of whom had interests conflicting with those of King himself, have done an excellent job recreating him in their own image. A man who was once a great voice of dissent has now been reduced to a dreamer. People of great influence including teachers, leaders of government and the media have dissected King's career and extracted the convenient and removed what didn't fit their narrow portrayal.

We must ask ourselves: Which depiction of King are we being given? And is this depiction true to the essence of the man or is a diluted portrait suited to benefit those he opposed most? Like most students, I started hearing about Dr. King in elementary school. Our studies did not go into great depth. We learned that he was a great man that wanted justice for all and of course we were introduced to the "I Have a Dream" speech. Sadly enough, in growing older I've come to the realization that as revered a man as King is, most Americans still maintain this elementary school level understanding of his work.

It's come to the point that I cringe every January on King's holiday when the networks show clip after clip of the same overplayed excerpt of this speech.

I cringe not because I no longer appreciate the gifted oratory. I still hold it to be one of the finer speeches I've heard thus far. The displeasure stems from the fact that we are force fed the most romanticized excerpts of the speech but omitted are the sections where King indicts hypocritical nature of America.

So we must ask ourselves, as King did: Where do we go from here?

We hear a steady repetition of King foreseeing a day when "my four little children will live one day live in a nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character." I have nothing against this statement; it is quite noble given the circumstances. To not juxtapose this with more critical observations, however, is doing an immense injustice. The American public hears the aforementioned statement but is not aware of King warning that "America has given the Negro people a bad check, a check which has come back marked 'insufficient funds.'"

This is likely the most misquoted statement in the history of American rhetoric. I have heard individuals, who endorse policies contradictory to everything King stood for, co-opt his words for their own selfish gain. On quite a frequent basis ultra-conservative right wingers, many of whom were adamant segregationists a few decades back, select from King's dialogue on equality to reject everything from reparations to affirmative action.

It is also especially important to refresh King's legacy as we enter the fifth year of an unnecessary war.

As the more innocuous aspects of King's work are highlighted, the manner in which his nonviolent philosophy influenced his views on war is greatly neglected. During the 60s King used his position as a civil rights leader to become one of the Vietnam War's most vocal opponent. In a very direct speech entitled "Beyond Vietnam," he indicted the U.S. as "the greatest purveyor of violence in the world today." That's a far cry from the innocuous, tame and sedated representation of King we see on television today.

This Friday, when we celebrate the life and work of Dr. King forty years later, we should make it a point of duty to address these misconceptions.

He was not simply an idealist who had a dream. Instead, he was someone who diligently worked for change in this country and harshly criticized this nation for its faults. He was not a messianic figure head who descended from atop Mount Olympus. Contrary, to common wisdom King did not single handedly start and lead the civil rights movement. It is well documented that his position as drum major was chosen for him by his peers, and not the other way around.

So we must ask ourselves, as King did: Where do we go from here? How do we provide a proper understanding of the true Martin Luther King? We must remember the man that lived – not the caricature created by the media – and insure that his legacy remains a living one, not just idle history.

Shaun Robinson is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at skrobins@student.umass.edu.

DAILY COLLEGIAN READER POLL

On March 31, 2008, Senator John Kerry editorialized in The Collegian about making higher education in Massachusetts affordable. Should more state funding be given to assist those pursuing higher education?

☐ Yes. ☐ No. ☐ I can't even afford to comment

Cast your vote online at dailycollegian.com!

Playing the same old games

Nick Milano

Three months ago I bought Senator Obama's shtick. I thought he might actually bring about change in Washington D.C. when I saw him speak in a New Hampshire auditorium. As convincingly and beautifully John Edwards spoke the day before in a high school gym, Obama easily took the cake in pure ability to captivate and move an audience.

Less than three months later, the campaign in Ohio reared its ugly head. Both Obama and Senator Clinton mentioned NAFTA (North American Free Trade Agreement) at every turn, trying to outdo each other's opposition to the free trade agreement. But since the votes have been counted in Ohio, however, the two candidates have rarely mentioned NAFTA in Pennsylvania, though they are constantly discussing economic problems. This was the kind of politicking that Obama has been campaigning against.

To make matters worse, it was reported that his campaign told Canadian officials that his stance against NAFTA was about political positioning, not actual policy plans. As the supposed candidate of change, Obama's true colors shined through with the disgusting backroom politics that are all too common.

It has taken over a year of campaigning, but it is finally readily apparent that the three remaining presidential candidates (besides Ron Paul because he is genuine) are just empty suits making superficial promises.

Obama is certainly not the only one at fault. There are innumerable problems with Senator Clinton claiming she has the experience to bring about change in Washington – for instance, she once said that lobbyists represent real Americans.

While it may be true that special interests represent some niche segment of Americans, their ability to purchase influence on Capitol Hill is not shared by the common American. When this ludicrous statement is combined with the fact that she ranks second for accepting contributions from health care companies, her dedication to health care reform must be questioned.

At the very least, one must question who might benefit more from her presidency. Middle class Americans struggling to get by or entrenched special interests?

I once told myself I could accept the idea of Senator McCain leading the country because he stood out among a party of tainted criminals. But his claims of independence from special interests cannot be taken seriously when he has lobbyists running his campaign.

There is plenty of evidence from the presidential campaign, but also some from Massachusetts politics to prove this.

Saying one thing and doing another is a filthy trick far too many politicians have perfected.

Quick Quiz: Who said, "Change is not always comfortable or convenient or welcome. But it is what we hoped for, what we have worked for, what you voted for, and what you shall have?"

Need a hint? Those are the words of a famous African-American politician from the South Side of Chicago. A graduate of Harvard Law School, he emerged as a politician to be reckoned with due to remarkable speaking abilities and his uplifting message of hope and change. He was swept into office breaking years of Republican executive leadership.

Answer: Deval Patrick. Patrick entered a state house where his Democratic Party owns a supermajority in both the House of Representatives and the Senate. Despite this, one will be hard pressed to see any changes that Patrick has made to the political culture that flourishes on Beacon Hill.

Patrick did not introduce any sweeping ethics or lobby reform or even press for changes to make legislative activity more open to the public. His casino plan, though sharply criticized by me, was defeated with minimal debate by both the public and the House. All powerful Speaker of the House Salvatore DiMasi had his way with the legislature that he holds more tightly than a mother her newly born child.

Deval Patrick had the advantage of a resounding win over his closest opponent. He entered office with a very favorable public opinion and no partisan opposition in the legislature; yet, he has not enacted any real change in how business is done. Obama likes to use words like "hope" and "change," but like other politicians who have gone before him, the odds are very favorable that he will end up playing the same old games. The current campaign already suggests this.

There is no reason to expect a change from either Clinton or McCain. Clinton seems to have no issue with taking money from health insurance companies and advertising her "reforms" at the same time. McCain's supposed hard line against lobbyists and special interest is laughable when his campaign manager is a registered lobbyist.

Real, concrete change, not the abstract promises made in speeches, requires the electorate to step up and say enough. It requires a media to appropriately investigate the candidates' positions. It needs a person to rise above the petty political calculations and put serving the people, not himself, first. Maybe someday.

Nick Milano writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at nmilano@student.umass.edu.

Envisioning a future with Facebook

Solmaaz Yazdiha

Facebook is a social staple. As much a force of habit as changing one's underwear, it has made "friend" a verb, and has given birth to a whole new realm of cyber celebrity.

We live in a world of "me," where on a scale of social acceptance, narcissism may as well be equivalent to having cats. Facebook serves as a personal profile, an outlet for every user to serve themself on a platter, and to hold the onions.

Some see Facebook as a passing fad, interchangeable with pogs or piercings. It's all a matter of when "the book" and all its shimmer will glimmer and fade into the silly musings of our youthful days.

My older sibling along with countless other college graduates have long since lost interest in the social networking site, casting it off only for random checks when feeling wistful, reminiscent or simply in need of a good stalk. This may be the fate of our Faces as well, but maybe not.

Like a drug, Facebook begs the question: What makes us us? A cultural conundrum that will undoubtedly be discussed in years to come, the site satisfies the need of the nosey, the name-dropping and the needy. This could be seen as insulting, though anyone with a little common sense and humility would admit these qualities are – at least in part – human nature. Who doesn't want to know what's going on around them? Even nuns name names.

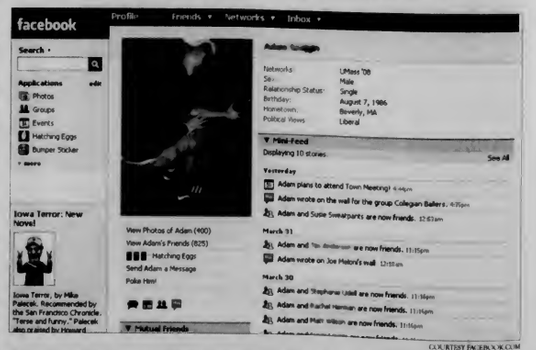
In a society so in tune with instant answers and easy internet, the real question is, why wouldn't Facebook be held in high regard? With a simple event invite, it can be known who will, won't, or might be at the Thirsty Penguin on this Friday or that Saturday, who they'll be coming with, when everyone's getting there, what should be brought and the level of fun to be expected.

Who needs a date book? Hell, who needs a date?

Who needs a date book? Hell, who needs a date?

The funny thing is, a lot of users are just lazy everyday people who'd rather sit behind a bright screen than go out and carry on real conversations. Drop the f and the ok, add a couple letters and you've got placebo. Swallow that, and fool yourself into feeling like you've interacted with enough real live people in one day to fill your social quota. If anything, it's a loophole in the good old-fashioned silent treatment, and Facebook has perfected it.

For our generation, Facebook has become a way of life. Like a common law, it has created a whole new book of etiquette for our text-messaging, video-chatting, "g2g"-ing, "lol"-ing crop. Wall posts constitute more analysis than a Shakespeare lit class, photo tags spark dining hall discussions far longer than it takes to digest a meal, and private messages are like second dates.

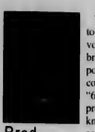


And poking? As taboo as tattoos.

The light blue Facebook silhouette is as well known as our president, and (arguably) far more respected. "A social utility that connects you with the people around you," it is the self-satisfier of social life.

So what's the future for Facebook? Where do we take our 1,247 pictures and 922 friends from here? With so many users in one generation, it is inevitable that the heart we put in our pages will beat far longer than our college years. Sure, people will get busy. They'll taste success, flop careers, start families, move on, but it is likely that their Facebooks will evolve with the days of their lives.

The gossip, rumors, and scandals of the book may die down, the daily checks and updates may too, but the membership will remain. Facebook will become a social directory, a way to keep in touch like e-mail and a way to check in, like a twenty-four seven high school reunion. Those who used Facebook before us were merely guinea pigs spinning wheels towards the success our generation has given the site. It only makes sense for their loyalty to die out; they were the substitute teachers, taking roll and beginning class, waiting for our late arrival. We are the ones who show up every day, who devote our time, our lives, even, as the familiar face.



Solmaaz Yazdiha is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at syazdiha@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY FACEBOOK.COM

Facebook.com has become a college-aged obsession. Will you be able to kick the habit upon graduation?

In my very humble opinion

Brad Leibowitz

You've all seen it. You go to a liquor store to buy some hard alcohol. Whiskey, tequila, vodka, whatever your personal choice of brain cell killer you like. As you inspect your potential buy, somewhere on the bottle you come by a few printed letters which read, "60 proof." It might read another number proof, but disregard that for now. Do you know what the term "proof" on liquor bottles actually refers to?

The common answer to this is that the term proof is twice the percentage of alcohol by volume in the given bottle of liquor you are drinking from; however, this is not the case. Here is the truth: the term "proof" gets its derivation from 18th Century British sailors who were in the rum business. To make sure that the rum they were transported had not been watered down, a part of their rum shipment would be generously sprinkled with gunpowder. Once the gunpowder set in, the sailors would then proceed to try to set the beverage on fire. If the rum did not ignite, the alcohol was proven to contain too much water to pass as proper rum. Thus, the term "proof" refers to rum which contained 57.15 percent ethanol that would, when a flame was put to it, ignite.

There are far too many opinions. Everyone has one.

You might be wondering if this is a true statement or not. I ensure you it is. However, you are entitled to your opinion and you still might think that I am full of it. You might be thinking to yourself how silly or laughable the above answer might be. Again, you are entitled to your opinion, and so am I. But here's the thing, in this writer's opinion, now a days, including this column and all the others contained in these pages, there are far too many opinions. Everyone has one.

The local barber has a somewhat well thought out opinion on how to take care of the U.S. border control problem. The local mailman has a somewhat well thought out opinion on whether or not Tom Brady deserves to be dating whatever the hell supermodel he is currently dating. You probably have a somewhat thought out, logical opinion on why or why not you should finally turn around and tell that noisy couple in class to "S.T.F.U."

According to Esquire staff writer Tom Chiarella, "…this country is a supermarket of opinion in which everyone rattles around with their wobble-wheeled carts, grabbing exactly what they need … there is so much opinion, offered so cheaply, in such rapid succession, on so many aisles of our lives that you can't tell the good stuff from the chintz."

Of all the opinions I have heard, this is the best one. Everyone – you, your mother, your friend Tom, my grandmother, my friend Jess, everyone's Uncle Dave and myself – have an incredibly overwhelming urge to tell everyone around us what we think about everything. Due to the never ending multitude of variety found in life, as a race we have entirely too many things to think about and too little people to say them to. Thus, like me, you know someone who simply will never "S.T.F.U."

Like everyone, you know someone who always has a need to tell you everything they are thinking. No matter if it has to do with the proper temperature at which to dry clothes, how to properly tell someone off, you know someone who just never shuts their mouth. Well, in my humble opinion, you should tell that person to shut their mouth, and then proceed to follow your own advice.

What the hell ever happened to simply taking things in? Whatever happened to listening to the sound of the world without saying a damn thing? As Tarantino put it, "… why do we feel it's necessary to yak about bullshit in order to be comfortable?" I agree. So how about this, for the next week you take things in and try to not express a single opinion to anyone. Simply let other people talk and see what happens. They might think you are listening harder then normal, yet all the while you might be thinking to yourself, "This person really needs to S.T.F.U." Either way, it will be one less opinion that no one really wants to hear.

S.T.F.U. Enjoy the silence. Take it in. But this is just my opinion.

Writers Note: If you can't figure out what S.T.F.U. means, you're too stupid to have an opinion. But that's just my opinion.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

Do it. For the children.

Write for Ed/Op!

editorial@dailycollegian.com

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

NO JOKE

Dear editor:

Re: "Brad DeFlumeri's Spring Fashion Guide," April Fool's Edition, Apr. 1, 2008

The decision to run Brad DeFlumeri's hate-filled interview has angered many UMass students, myself included. A) It is not funny to run over any human being, whether on Route 9 or not. B) "Best eye catching female accessory: nice ass, chest?" Are you serious? As a man with a mother and numerous female friends I was appalled at DeFlumeri's abrasive male chauvinism. Disgustingly pig-like. Grow up.

Samuel Levy
UMass student

Editor's note: The article in question ran in our print April Fool's edition and, thus, is not available to online subscribers.

TROUBLE IN TIBET

Dear editor:

Re: "Tibetan violence draws local reaction in North Hampton," Pamela Lawn, News, Mar 31, 2008

I was and am very very upset to read the article about Tibetan situation in The Daily Collegian.

As far as I know, the situation in Tibet was a riot rather than a so-called "parade." The rioters killed so many innocent people, one of them was just a five-year-old kid. I don't think any country in this world would allow this kind of riot without any response.

I think the one who should be blamed is not the Chinese government, it is the riotors. I do not know where the author got all that information, and I strongly recommend her to talk with someone from China before writing this kind of article.

There are almost 1,000 Chinese people working or studying at UMass Amherst. I am sure everybody will be very happy to tell her why Tibet is part of China, and what the real situation in Tibet is now.

Again, I am very upset with The Daily Collegian for publishing such an extreme article without further investigations. I believe that gave most of the Chinese students, faculty and staff a very bad impression of The Daily Collegian.

Wilson Smith

Dear editor:

Obvious bias and missing information makes me really angry about your news. Being the most influential newspaper at UMass and also New England colleges, I respect a lot of your work, completeness of reporting and political justice.

However, this article disappoints me greatly by speaking completely for one side. Your news ignores the fact that the crisis in Tibet has complicated historical background and this issue cannot be simply viewed just from some limited voices, newspapers and especially CNN. If you just go to youtube com you'll find tons of other side of this crisis.

So, please interview more people, more voices before you write those articles. Even if you don't mean to select a specific political side to join, you already offended a lot of Chinese students and scholars by the ridiculous information asymmetry.

Sorry if my words displease you. I just want you to understand how we feel about this article and our country. I don't want to argue over who is right and who is wrong here, because it's a long story and it's a story that involves too much conspiracy we may not know. Also, I don't want to say, "it's our own business and no country is qualified to judge," since it's an open world, and everyone could speak his own opinion.

Therefore, my opinion is, you should let people know more about China, and Tibet problem. But please keep your elementary equity, which is the basic job of the newspaper and media industry.

Huajie Ke
UMass graduate student

Dear editor:

As an alumnus, I hope to draw your attention and efforts to the matter in Tibet and I demand a response to the matter as well. Having spent my Ph.D period at Amherst, I know what a liberal place Amherst is and I have also talked/debated with many Tibetan fellows. But this extremely biased/distorted news is everything but being liberal.

A simple fact a five year old kid could see is that China has brought Tibet from slavery to modernization. The majority of the people are better off now. Many (or most) people who now reside overseas and make trouble on the issue are motivated to do so because they were the slave owners and the noble group and deprived of their privilege.

The others are some idealists and naive and simple-minded people who don't really know much about the history but are told and used by those people with agendas. It is absurdly funny and equally sad to see so many kind and innocent western people to stand with them without much effort to know the truth/history behind the matter.

I have had understanding/sympathy for Tibet. And I have to admit that there is much to be improved from the Central Government's part. Having said that, I feel this free Tibet movement is nothing but absurd.

I am completely appalled and disgusted by the current move from overseas "so-called" Tibetans and the sheer media distortion on it. For the first time in my life, I have to be with the central Government on the issue.

If I may give some of you a piece of my mind, in particular those in media professions if you consider yourself (qualified?) as one of them. Do your homework and know what you are talking about before you speak /comment on a matter of such gravity. Or simply keep one's mouth shut instead of showing ignorance.

Leo Gao
UMass alumnus

A COMIC OMISSION

Dear editor:

Although I certainly cannot speak for all UMass students, I'm sure I can speak for the majority of the students who devote 15 minutes of their time each day trudging through the clues of the daily crosswords.

As a UMass student from undergrad to present-day graduate school, I have been fortunate to have lived the UMass experience and seen the University change over the past seven years. Change can be good or absolutely awful, often depending on whether or not the idea and its implementation are followed through by subsequent classes.

While the editors have taken great strides to upgrade the newspaper, and I sincerely appreciate the effort that you put into our literary enjoyment, some of these changes have seemingly been forgotten and left for dead.

The crossword solutions have not been spared the evolution. During the early years of my collegiate career, we were fortunate to have the crossword solutions printed to the upper-right hand side of the paper. Those of us who were dedicated enough to actually hold on to these crosswords until the next day were occasionally let down by the mix-up of the wrong solution being printed. Although many of us remained silent and held our frustration within, letters upon letters of dissatisfaction must have stirred up the ever-changing staff of the Collegian.

Within a few years, The Collegian took notice of the problem and developed a magnificent solution: The solutions were removed from the paper and posted online. No longer would we have to suffer the baggage of lugging an extra newspaper for 24 hours while we anxiously awaited the crossword solution. No longer would we be painfully let down by Collegian editors when the incorrect solution was printed.

Or would we?

No sooner than a few weeks passed before all Hell broke loose. Every semester since, sporadic solutions would be posted for those who might by chance had saved that one particular crossword.

Those of us who check for solutions online are immediately reminded of "The Boy Who Cried Wolf." In fact, The Collegian has gone as far as completely removing the link to the crossword "solutions." For those of you who care, and most of you don't, this is the culmination of UMass letdowns. With our fees constantly on the rise every year in passing, our facilities have been constantly decreasing.

Wonderful ideas are implemented and forgotten about when new students take over. So I plead to you, Collegian staff, take The Daily Collegian back to the glory it once was. Don't let ideas fall apart and resolve them by making the issue disappear. If the class ahead of you implements an idea, keep with it. But most importantly, don't lie to us. We checked online for the solutions, they aren't there.

Matthew Kelley
UMass graduate student

Dear editor:

Everyday I do the crossword puzzle in The Collegian and there are always a few that I cannot figure out and it says that the solutions are online but when you go and check online the only solution is for February 12. What is the deal with this?

Shawn Vandekop
UMass student

Editor's note: Due to complicated technical issues involving our provider of crossword puzzles, The Collegian editorial staff has had continued trouble granting access to the solutions to post for you, the reader, online. We are currently in the process of trying to fix the situation, and will have the solutions back up as soon as possible.

FALLACY AT QUESTION

Dear editor:

"Re: When belief becomes the scapegoat," Ted Rogers, Ed/Op, Mar. 31, 2008

I would like to take a moment to respond to the nonsense published in the article "When belief becomes the scapegoat."

The issue here is the context in which these Christians' beliefs are being derailed. We here in the United States, in this new millennium of scientific and technological advances, face a backlash from conservative Christians who want to enforce their particular view of the world on the rest of society, and who have tried to do so by changing the laws in favor of their own personal beliefs.

There are no roves of Hindus seeking to place stickers in science textbooks stating that the Big Bang is only a "theory" that should be treated with suspicion and contempt. Yes, in some Islamic societies there are people who put anti-Semitic and anti-American falsehoods into textbooks and try to pass it off as education, and if it were the case in the U.S., we certainly would derail those beliefs as well.

The fact that these particular beliefs associated with Christianity are made the subject of ridicule is because it presents itself for the opportunity – Christians who whole-heartedly believe that humans and dinosaurs lived together 6,000 years ago in Eden, and then claim they have scientific proof to back it up, are simply asking for it.

Any other scientific theory must run the rigors of the skepticism of peer-review and countless experimentation, but Christians boo-hoo whenever they get the chance because they aren't getting equal time in the classroom? For what?

What scientific evidence do Young Earth Creationists have that is so earth-shattering that it deserves this time? Absolutely none. Instead, they try and use the law in an underhanded attempt to subvert the progress of science while taking whatever steps necessary to legitimize their own personally held beliefs, then cry foul whenever they are asked to present some evidence for what they purport to be scientific fact.

I sincerely doubt that professors here at UMass would waste their time "teaching how dumb Christians are for taking a direct interpretation of Genesis," any more than they waste time ridiculing people who believe in fairies, angels, or unicorns.

But if you are going to try and say you have proof that unicorns exist, scientific proof even, you must be prepared to face the same skepticism and methodical scrutiny that even the most gifted minds like Stephen Hawking and Albert Einstein had to face. There are no sympathy votes in peer-reviewed studies.

Thomas Berry
UMass student

WHERE'S THE CONTROVERSY?

Dear editor:

I am a person who has very strong opinions about the world of politics. I am a registered independent and consider myself a person with moderate views, but almost any person I have ever talked to about politics considers me a conservative nut job.

One thing I know for sure is that I do not agree with most things that liberals say, so if being opposite a liberal means I am a conservative, then I guess I'm a conservative. So the reason I am writing this is because I read The Daily Collegian almost every day and if I miss it, then I go online and catch up.

The first things I do when a get a Collegian is go right to the Editorial Opinion section. One of my greatest joys in reading the Ed/Op section is that it really pisses me off. I love reading things that liberals write on the sheer fact that it gets me thinking about how much a disagree with that person. I am one of the first people to sign onto the Collegian website and comment about how some liberal wrote some crazy nonsense and how much I disagree with them. I also love reading things that the few conservatives on campus write in The Collegian because I know it gets liberals really pissed.

When I read these articles I immediately think of what people's comments are going to be. So my problem is that there are not enough articles that leave me really ticked off. This year there is nothing like that. I am often bored reading it and to be quite honest with you, in more recent weeks I just scan the headlines with disappointment. This is an election year, people should be throwing fire and brimstone at each other with their conflicting view points.

I mean, nowadays the most controversial articles are about the SGA having a problem with student fees and something about the Republican Club and a poster.

Sure, some of those things are interesting but come on, this is UMass Amherst – there are more liberals per square foot than any other place in America, and if I know one thing about liberals, it's that they like to voice their opinions. I can't walk more than five steps through the campus center without someone trying to hand me a pamphlet on legalizing marijuana or ending the war. There is so much people can write about right now and no one is.

I just think that the editorial section of this paper has been very lame in recent months and that there should be a lot more articles that actually get people thinking, not something about cell phone use on campus or someone having a problem with iPods. Here are some ideas on what to write about:

For the liberals: The U.S. Military just released a statement saying there is a major strain on the troops from fighting a two-front war. For the conservatives, all I have is two words: "Jeremiah Wright."

So come on people, I want to be interested while reading other peoples' crazy views on things, whether they are crazy liberals or crazy conservatives.

Joe Ronan
UMass student

CONCERNING CATHOLICISM

Dear editor:

Re: "Vatican makes sinning a whole lot easier," Josh Wilder, Ed/Op, Mar 25, 2008

Wilder takes an interesting but misguided approach to the Vatican announcement of "new" sins that include accumulating wealth, failing to help the poor, and destroying the environment.

The purpose of this declaration was not to find new ways to condemn people to hell or make their lives more difficult, as Wilder claims. The purpose of defining sins is not to condemn but to provide guidance for living. The Church was listing new ways that the "old" sins Wilder mentioned (greed, gluttony, etc.) can be applied in a global community.

For example, the gas-guzzling hummers that Wilder refers to are a modern way to greedily hog natural resources. These sins are simply contemporary manifestations of the same wrongs that have a broader effect on society.

What bothered me more about Wilder's article was his apparent shock at the Vatican being unselfish and focused on the common good, as well as his negative view of the Church's human rights record.

The Vatican does not benefit from people sinning. Catholics stopped paying indulgences centuries ago, and the Vatican does not have to fulfill some sort of sinner quota. Granted, the Catholic Church does not have a perfect track record. The oft-mentioned Crusades, the Inquisition, and the forced conversions of millions in the Americas and elsewhere are a few wrongs that cannot be ignored. However, to say that the Catholic Church does not stand out as a "beacon of human rights" is unfounded.

To begin with, the message of the man Wilder smugly refers to as "that Jesus fellow" was one of loving and serving others, giving of oneself to help those most in need. If one looks at many of the major charity organizations in the U.S., it is no surprise that many have Catholic or Christian affiliations.

Catholic Relief Services, for example, works in some of the poorest parts of the world and is one of the first groups to respond to major natural disasters. To note other examples of human rights work, one cannot forget the late Pope John Paul II, whose great works included helping in the struggle for Polish liberation from the oppressive Soviet regime, for which he won the Nobel Peace Prize. And most people would agree that Mother Teresa was the epitome of selflessness in her work with the poor and sick.

I hope Wilder realizes that the Catholic Church, although susceptible to human error, provides guidance for its followers and helps those in need. The Vatican does not intend to condemn or oppress but intends to do as "that Jesus fellow" did.

Pamela Cohen
UMass student

LAUDING THE GREEN FEATURE

Dear editor:

Re: "From mansion to green: Sustainability at UMass," Katherine Neubert, Features, Mar 28, 2008

Katherine Neubert's article on sustainability at UMass is just the kind of useful and hopeful information I want to see in The Daily Collegian. Nice job.

Melinda Nielsen
Housing Services

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be no more than 350 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com. Please include your full name, e-mail address and a telephone number at which we can reach you for verification.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A cappella opens shop at WERS

All male Doo-Wop Shop talks performing, recording

BY ELISE HOROWITZ
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The University of Massachusetts at Amherst's all-male a cappella group, the Doo-Wop Shop, competed on live radio on Saturday, March 15. Emerson College's WERS 88.9 FM station hosted their All A Cappella Live concert at the Majestic Theater in Boston. For the first time, the Doo-Wop Shop was invited to present their vocal skills and vie for a spot singing with Rockapella, the group most known for their daily performances on the old children's show "Where in the World Is Carmen Sandiego."

The Doo-Wop Shop's latest album, "Black Friday" was voted Album of the Month by WERS 88.9 FM in July and August of 2006. In addition to Doo-Wop Shop, the other contestants were Brandeis's VoiceMale, and MIT's Logorhythms.

The members of the Doo-Wop Shop performed an impressive set, with songs ranging from a rendition of the classic "Fever" to the theme from the hit television cartoon, "Doug." Andrew Costello wowed the crowd, not only with his vocal talent and variety, but also with the dancing that accompanied his three solo pieces.

David Duran's performance satisfied the audience as well, as he acted out the lyrics to Queen's "I Want to Ride My Bicycle" by jumping enthusiastically around the stage and riding on the back of fellow group member Geoff Herrmann.

The event was hosted by Emma Evans and Cristin Grogan, better known as "CG", who host Emerson's weekly a cappella radio show. In addition, three a cappella aficionados acted as judges for the performance, including Nate Altimari, UMass Amherst and Doo-Wop Shop alum. All three judges praised the vocals of the Shop; Julia Avanti, a former All A Cappella host on WERS said that, "although UMass had half of the numbers of the MIT Logorhythms, they produced just as much sound".

Unfortunately, the audience voted differently, clinching Brandeis's VoiceMale a spot alongside Rockapella. When asked if the group was disappointed, senior Ian Kibbe replied, "Not at all! We would have had to prepare another show for the next day!" The group did mention that the other schools' proximity to Boston's Majestic Theater may have drawn a larger following, thus allowing them to receive more votes.

The boys praised the organization of the concert, noting that the atmosphere backstage was very relaxed and fun. As for being onstage, "It was unreal - once in a lifetime," said Shop member Keais Pope, "Well, hopefully twice in a lifetime!"

The members were also impressed by the approximately 12,000 who listened to the All A Cappella Live performance; almost 2,000 attended the show and the rest through the live broadcast. The boys all strongly stressed that, while they love music, performing is what they thrive on.

In case you missed All A Cappella, The Doo-Wop Shop has already scheduled performances through this summer. In addition to their upcoming appearance with The Vocal Suspects in UMass's A Cappell-ooza this month, they will be traveling this weekend to Albany to participate in A Cappella Innovation, a show which celebrates the use of the human voice as an instrument, alongside American Idol's Blake Lewis.

The Doo-Wop Shop will also be celebrating their 15th anniversary of being on-campus with a reunion show in early May. They will also be performing at all of this summer's orientations for incoming freshman, as well as recording a new CD with the Brandeis VoiceMale. The album, whose title has yet to be determined, will feature 10 to 12 of the group's favorite songs. Since they don't have a recording studio available for them, the boys "put up egg crates and mattresses all over a small room to block the echoes of the sound," explained Kibbe.

However, the group doesn't need to worry about their tone; junior Jimmy Arno is rumored to have perfect vocal pitch. "If we're practicing, we can just ask Jimmy to give us a note, or if what we're doing sounds right, and he'll tell us," said Kibbe.

"It's a blessing and a curse," laughed Arno.

Although all of the members initially began their musical lives with instruments, and then moved onto vocals, only two continue to pursue musical careers. Mike Carney, a junior, is a concert pianist, and freshman Geoff Herrmann is a vocal major at UMass. David Durán says that his history of playing the drums often helps him with his vocal percussion. "Since I know the sounds that different drums make, I can put what I think sounds good into the song."

So, if you're captivated by the sound of the human voice, find out more about the Doo-Wop Shop's upcoming performances. Think you have what it takes to become a member? Good news! The group will be holding auditions next fall. Although they began as a group of just five crooners, they are now eight members strong, which is helpful in case one can't attend a performance. However, no matter how large or how small, they are always inviting.

"What makes us different is that we're friends," says Costelo. "I feel like it's a frat; we're all brothers."

Elyse Horowitz can be reached at ehhorowi@student.umass.edu.

UMass's Doo-Wop Shop performed in the studio at Emerson College's radio station WERS, and at All A Cappella, a competition in Boston. The eight members of the Shop are planning performances throughout the rest of the spring semester, and are recording a new album.

Series shows classic Kurosawa film of crime, kidnapping

BY KEVIN KOCZWARA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Amherst Cinema has put together a film series featuring movies from around the world this spring.

The movie series features films that are considered "art house" films. An art house movie is an independent film for a certain group of moviegoers instead of the mainstream Hollywood crowds.

Amherst Cinema's The Essential Art House Series has featured four films so far. Each movie is shown Sunday afternoon and again Thursday night. One of the two showings features a guest lecturer who introduces the film. The lecturer usually speaks about the historical context, the social issues the film touches on and the other movies it has influenced.

This past Sunday "High and Low" was introduced by Hampshire College professor Baba Hillman. She talked about the movie's social and historical context in both the time it was filmed and today's society. She was brief in her comments but gave insight into the film's symbols before the movie began.

"High and Low" is written and directed by Akira Kurosawa who is better known for his samurai classic "Seven Samurai." He has many accomplished and classic films in his resume ("Ran," "Throne of Blood" and "Rashômon") but is relatively an underground secret. He is a widely respected director and writer in the world of art house cinema and many of his movies have been remade by other directors in different mediums instead of the samurai backdrop. His movies always have a message or idea Kurosawa is trying to convey.

"High and Low" is a film in the same vain of many Hitchcock classics. The movie starts off as a kidnapping tale but moves into a mystery thriller. The writing is strong and, like Hitchcock, the plot holds many clues but never enough to give away the ending.

Kingo Gondo (played by Toshiro Mifune) is threatened to be voted out by his fellow shareholders of a major shoe company if he does not comply with their wishes. Kingo seems to be a very strong character in these scenes. He is resilient when faced with the possibility of losing his job and his fortune. He continually defends his stance and stands strong when it comes to making a quality product over profits. Kingo then sends the other businessmen away after daring them to try and vote him out of the companies shareholders.

Little does anyone know, but Kingo has mortgaged all his belongings to raise enough money to buy out other shareholder's stock in the company, making him the majority shareholder and owner of the company after one final check is delivered. But the check never gets delivered.

A kidnapping plot unfolds and Kingo becomes a local hero, but his decision leaves him in financial ruin and emotional disarray. He is forced to work his way back up the corporate ladder after being removed from his position in the National Shoe Company.

The second half of the film is a crime drama. The movie moves away from Kingo as the main character and follows around the detectives who try and find the kidnapper who had extorted 30 million dollars from Kingo. The story moves with the tough nosed police who investigate every lead they are given. The only clue given to the viewers is a few shots of the kidnapper and his shack-like household looking up at Kingo's home. No other information is given and it leaves the audience wanting all the answers. It is a plot device that creates more tension and a need for information.

The kidnapping is mysterious and the links seem very weak to viewers until all of the social issues are revealed. The kidnapper stares up at Kingo's house, which is perched atop a large hill, looking down on the city as if he is their god, and sees it as a symbol of power and luxury.

See SERIES on page 8

HIGH AND LOW

STARRING: TOSHIRO MIFUNE

AMHERST CINEMA

GRADE: A

Amherst Cinema is showing the crime thriller "High and Low," written and directed by Akira Kurosawa, as part of The Essential Art House Series. The film addresses social issues like the corruption of power.

Cozy French-themed café wows

BY BARBARA BOORAS
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

When you walk into Esselon café you can't help but feel as though you are entering a cozy Parisian café. With its rustic charm, emphasis on high quality coffee and an eclectic menu, Esselon cafe is indeed a hidden jewel.

Esselon's wide variety of cuisine may be intimidating when first looking at one of their four menus. Esselon cooks up French and American classics for breakfast, lunch, dinner and a delectable brunch on weekends.

Owners of Esselon, Denis and Essie Laflamme decorated the dining room in a unique European style. The building, which used to be an antique store, still maintains its classic style and some original fixtures. The tin ceilings with peculiar hanging lamps add to the unique atmosphere while the warmth from the green and earth tone brick walls make you feel at home.

One feature of this cute café that particularly makes it stand out from its competitors is its breathtaking Zen garden and outdoor seating area. Decorated with brightly colored tulips and trees, it is a perfect place to sit outside in warm weather while slowly sipping on one of their fresh cups of coffee.

But it is not just the ambiance that is bringing in hundreds of regulars and new customers on a daily basis. Locals are returning to Esselon for the outstanding food and drinks.

Ordering is a simple and efficient at this café. First, customers go to the front counter and talk with one of the friendly staff members with whom you will place your order. Once you pay you're given a number to place on your table, both in or outside the restaurant. The knowledgeable staff is happy to answer any questions customers may have about the menu or Esselon Café while you relax and wait for your meal. The outstanding service is exactly what one would come to expect at any fine European Café.

Breakfast is an art at Esselon café. Whether you're ordering the perfectly fluffy blueberry pancakes, a delectable breakfast burrito or the more unusual smoked salmon eggs benedict, you will not be disappointed. Each of the mouthwatering breakfast items has a unique artistic presentation and savory dishes are always paired with a small green side salad with homemade vinaigrette, which is a great healthy twist.

Although prices are a little higher than average at Esselon, you are paying for the best quality and, without a doubt, it is money well spent. Breakfast dishes will run you anywhere from $6 to $10. The weekend brunch will set cost, on average around $9.

You will be pleased to see a decent selection of wine and beer accompanying the brunch, lunch and dinner menus. The list of about 20 different items includes red and white wines from everywhere from New Zealand to Portugal alongside classic brews such as BBC Steel Rail.

If you stop in for dinner, check out the gourmet burgers, Italian favorites such as mushroom risotto and pasta puttanesca. If you want to really shoot the works, order the melt in your mouth Steak Frites. A perfect portion of seared sirloin, topped with roasted garlic and lemon herb butter, served with pomme frites (the fancy French way of saying fries). Dinner entrees cost anywhere from $10 to $25 and are served from Tuesday through Saturday.

Whether you are an iced or a hot coffee person, you cannot leave Esselon without ordering one of their many coffee specialties. My personal favorite would be either their frothy lattes or rich, chocolaty mocha. The focus on perfectly roasted coffee is thanks to Esselon's co-founder Scott Rao, known for Rao's Coffee in Downtown Amherst. Today, Scott Rao's special brew is served all over campus and the pioneer valley.

Finally, once you've picked out your coffee or tea, don't forget to scan the desserts in the display case by the front counter. You'll find everything from cookies to cheesecake to the most decadent French classic crème brulé.

Without a bad thing to say about this quaint French-American hidden jewel, be sure to check it out at 99 Russell Street in Hadley right on Route 9.

Barbara Booras can be reached at Bbooras@gmail.com

With a beautiful garden and delicious meals, the Frenca-American Esselon café on Route 9 satisfies in both atmosphere and cuisine.

Pearl Street gets experimental

Indie-rockers bring unique sound to Northampton club

BY MICHELLE ABBASCIANO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Minus the Bear, an experimental indie-rock band, is a highly unique quintet hailing from Seattle Washington. Though their music is hard to classify, its sound is a combination of lively guitar-taps and electronics, with gliding bass lines, skittered drums and layered beats.

Minus the Bear also includes plenty of synthesizers, as well as smooth, honest vocals on top of dance-worthy rhythms. Although the somewhat repetitive lyrics are not the deepest ever written, it's made up for by the well thought-out and sophisticated composition of the music itself. The band's sound is far from pop, but Minus the Bear's songs are light and radio-friendly, nonetheless.

Even from the beginning, Minus the Bear has been respected and well-received, but was almost immediately labeled and categorized as just another math-rock band. However, by its second full-length release in 2005, "Menos El Oso," the band showed exponential growth as musicians and proved that it had taken giant leaps away from its initial releases.

By the time its latest record, "Planet of Ice," was released in 2007 on Suicide Squeeze Records, Minus the Bear has managed to fortify themselves as remarkably original portrayers of epic-sounding, technologically infused indie-rock with heart and soul. The album includes their single "Knights," as well as "Throwin' Shapes," both of which have music videos to accompany them.

The band's video for "Throwin' Shapes" was released on March 10 and was featured on MTV2. Directed by Michael Gaston and Brooke Montgomery, the video is sarcastic and light-hearted and really shows the band's sense of humor.

"Planet of Ice" was also important because it showed the band's range and ability to grow with the music. It is more organic sounding now, like humans, rather than drum and guitar machines. According to drummer Erin Tate, the band definitely tried to take it to a different place than they've done before. "We wanted to make ourselves sound different than we're used to sounding. There's definitely a vibe of wanting it to sound more like five guys jamming, but still have a technical feel to it."

2008 has proven to be a hectic yet successful year for Minus the Bear, to say the least. The band was asked to play the Coachella festival for the second time, as well as the Bonnaroo festival for the first time, which runs from June 12-25. With other artists on the lineup ranging from Metallica to Kanye West to Willie Nelson, this was a huge accomplishment and step forward for the band. Minus the Bear also played the Langerado festival in Florida at the beginning of March.

Portugal. The Man, tour-mates and good friends of Minus the Bear, is an equally unique and probably even harder to categorize group of musicians. They are a three-piece unit from Alaska with their roots in the progressive and indie rock genre, though they can also be categorized as soul and experimental, with hints of blues and folk.

This band is brilliantly ambitious and guaranteed to be unlike anything you have ever heard. Their music is unpredictable yet serene, which makes it refreshing and interesting to listen to. John Gourley (guitar) and Zach Carothers (bass) provide the main vocals for the band. Their high-pitched voices, although a bit odd at first listen, tend to give their music a soothing effect and fit well with the mellow beats.

Their most recent release is "Church Mouth" released in July 2007 on Fearless Records. The album features 12 progressive songs, each one distinctively different from the next. Although most hover around three minutes long, the impressive music composition and timing provide more than enough substance to please listeners. Gourley provides the band with abstract and enigmatic lyrics that rely heavily on imagery.

Portugal. The Man is now off of Fearless Records and plan on independently producing a new studio album, due to be released sometime this year. The highly anticipated album is tentatively titled "Censored Colors."

Minus the Bear, Portugal. The Man, and opening act 27, will be performing at the Pearl Street Ballroom in Northampton, this Saturday, April 5. The show starts at 8 p.m. and tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

Michelle Abbasciano can be reached at mabbasci@student.umass.edu

Minus the Bear and Portugal. the Man will be bringing their experimental form of indie-rock to Pearl Street on Saturday night. Minus the Bear will also be playing at this year's Bonnaroo festival.

Raconteurs avoid sophomore slump with new album release

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Raconteurs released their second album earlier this week.

Only a week ago, The Raconteurs announced that their second album entitled "Consolers of the Lonely" would be coming out this spring. A week later it was already in stores and available for download on every major site from iTunes to Amazon.

The Raconteurs are best known as being "Jack White's other band;" despite that distinction, they have shown that they are not merely a sequel to the White Stripes. The Raconteurs are a band, made up of career musicians who have all been in around the Detroit rock scene and though they were in different bands at different times, shared a mutual respect for each other's work and musical taste.

"Consolers of the Lonely" finds the band and White in somewhat of a transitive phase creatively. White is still in the midst of a retro-blues rock obsession, so this release bears some resemblance to last year's "Icky Thump." This album, along with "Icky Thump," will likely fall into what will almost surely be described as White's "Nashville Period" once future music aficionados begin to analyze the guitarist's work.

The album begins with the title track and starts off with a killer riff that proves the band is in no mood for a sophomore slump or a tedious reinvention of their sound. "Salute Your Solution" follows this track and is the album's first single. From the first listen it is clear why it was chosen for radio play – it is a track that gets your attention and features a stellar bass line. It's pressure packed into three minutes that include both a keyboard solo and guitar solo before abruptly ending and prompting a second listen.

After the hard rocking first songs, "You Don't Understand Me" provides a downturn in momentum while keeping consistent with the album's quality. The piano-laden track prompts a series of songs that are of a more relaxed tempo.

The album's high point comes at song seven in the form of "Top Yourself" which is probably a safe bet for a second or third single. The lyrics are trademark White - simple yet emotionally direct.

He asks, "How are you going to top yourself?" When there is nobody else? How are you gonna do it by yourself? 'Cause I'm not gonna be here to help you" before unveiling a slick slide guitar groove that dominates the song.

However, it must be stressed that this is a band effort, not just a Jack White effort, as it will likely be labeled by numerous reviewers. Brandon Benson shares lyrical duties with White on most of the tracks and is technically the band's lead singer; however the two have such a similar vocal style that it is often hard to distinguish who is singing at any given point.

Jack Lawrence is also not one to be left in the background. He carries his weight in all the songs and often provides a nice interlude between Jack's choruses and screeching guitar solos. Also drummer Patrick Keeler holds his own amongst the other musicians and his affinity for Inuit rock is apparent from their decade of playing together in the indie rock band "The Greenhornes."

The only criticisms that can be made of the album is that at fifteen tracks, it sags a bit in a middle. The album also lacks the clear standouts for singles that were inherent in "Steady as She Goes" and "Level" but this could possibly be because this is a more solid album without the growing pains of the band's initial merger.

Overall, the album plays like a tighter version of the band's first album. After over a year of touring the band is more comfortable than ever and this album should provide enough fodder for them to be a huge presence at this summer's festivals.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

"CONSOLERS OF THE LONELY"

THIRD MAN/ WARNER BROS

4/5

Up Late Saturday Night?
1pm Sunday Worship
MERCYhouse :: knowmercy.org

Lincoln Real Estate
25 N. Pleasant St • 413-253-7879 • www.amherstlincolnrealty.com
PROVIDING THE BEST OFF CAMPUS LIVING EXPERIENCE
24 HOUR MAINTENANCE
SAFE APARTMENTS
FRIENDLY STAFF
TWO GREAT LOCATIONS:
AMHERST CENTER AND HOBART LANE
WE START SHOWING APARTMENTS
FEB. 6TH FROM 11:30AM – 4:30PM M-F

Domino's Pizza
AMHERST / HADLEY
413-256-8911
Rt 9 Across From Stop & Shop
Store Hours
Open 11am-4am Thurs -Sat
11am 3am Sun.-Wed
Mt. Holyoke Location: 593-9500
www.Dominos.com
My Wings or Kickers Special
10 Buffalo Wings or Domino's Pizza Buffalo Chicken Kickers & an Order of Cheesy Bread
$9.99
Three or More Medium 1-Topping Pizzas
$5.55 each
Three or More Large 1-Topping Pizzas
$7.77 each
Any 3 Breads Choose 3 From:
Garlic Breadsticks, Cheesy Bread OR Cinna Stix
$9.99
Large Unlimited Topping Pizza
$10.99
No Double Toppings
WE ACCEPT OCMP
Find Out More About autismspeaks.org

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
BUY 1 GET 1 free
PACKAGES LOTIONS ACCESSORIES
APRIL 10, 11, 12
U CONN 1244 STORRS RD STORRS, CT 06268 PH: (800) 487-HOTT (4688)
WESTFIELD 439 EASTMAN ST WESTFIELD, MA 01085 PH: (413) 364-UTAN (8826)
UMASS 68 UNIVERSITY DR AMHERST, MA 01002 PH: (413) 549-HOTT (4688)

Check us out on Facebook!
Advance your career, develop new skills and help the environment... all in one place.
Hire Smart. Train Well. Out Perform.
Ask anyone who works here, and they'll tell you that the culture at Triumvirate Environmental is hardworking, fun, and exciting.
If you want to work for a company where mentoring and training are keys to success, we'd like to talk to you.
We are currently hiring ENTRY LEVEL ENVIRONMENTAL SPECIALISTS at our Boston, New York & Baltimore area offices.
Interested candidates should call our Human Resources Department at 800.966.9282, or e-mail us at careers@triumvirate.com
TRIUMVIRATE ENVIRONMENTAL

We got the facts from you.
9 out of 10 UMass students know how to have fun without alcohol.
Are you one of them?

Nations, genres combine at Bezanson

Latin-jazz quartet delivers

IAN NELSON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

To become versed in and to immerse oneself in the work of a brilliant set of musicians' pre-recorded material is one thing. To happen upon such brilliance in a live setting with no preconceived notions or expectations is another.

WMUA and the Fine Arts Center treated an audience to one such occasion Tuesday night, breathing new life into their Magic Triangle Jazz Concert Series with the Afro-Cuban, Latin-Jazz sounds of the Omar Sosa Afreecanos Quartet. With cheap tickets and the intimate setting of Bezanson Recital Hall, music fans young and old, chattering about their unfamiliarity of the group, were not necessarily taking a risk checking out this portion of the Jazz Series.

As the lights dimmed, the towering Cuban via Ecuador-San Francisco-Barcelona Sosa floated onto the stage in billowy white garb, crimson candle in hand, to his position behind the ivory. He eased into the performance, conjuring chanting vocals from a sampler atop the piano while arching himself over the keys, feeling out light drops of sound on the keyboard.

Next to stride onto the stage was Senegalese vocalist/multi-African instrumentalist Mola Sylla, wailing in an ancient tongue over the sampled vocal. Bassist Childo Tomas of Mozambique appeared third, bubbling a high- to low-pitch vocal through a glass of water. To round out the quartet, U.S. drummer Marque Gilmore took the stage in a cymbal rush to provide backbone to the swirling array of foreign as well as domestic sounds.

The multi-national approach to Sosa's predominantly Latin compositions incorporated African rhythms to the spicy, hip-shaking grooves. He set the beat with quick, little vocalizations, scatting and chanting while beating his long, pointed red-leather shoes on the ground. This pounding of his feet on the wooden stage rose over nearly all the instrumentation, creating a natural rhythm and upping the show's overall energy, which was tremendous.

Sosa impressively and studiously manned a grand piano with his right hand, along with a separate Rhodes keyboard at his left, all the while manipulating pedals at each instrument with both feet. He rose to his feet and demanded simple and frequent audience participation, pleading the hall to clap the beat several times as well as to chant "Africa" during one number. Sosa also leapt from his piano bench at the conclusion of every song, the fire of the music compelling him to such extremes.

The songs generally built from sparse, natural sounds such as the light tap of the piano, crumpling paper, flute chirps, clinking shells, and the aforementioned water bubbling to thick, Latin-influenced compositions ripe with heavy five-string bass lines and tight, jazzy drumming. The quieter moments reflected the ambience of a slow day at a dusty desert marketplace, as intermittent wooden flute imitated bird chirps, shimmering cymbal accents acted as an occasional breeze, while piano and other Senegalese instrumental sounds were the minimal bustle of carts down a dirt road.

These extreme dynamic shifts provided much excitement and heat, as displayed by the beads of sweat which dropped onto the keyboard from Sosa's brow. His small, round-framed spectacles rested on his nose intelligently, as did his wise wisp of a beard, which pointed outward from his chin. In his smooth, raspy voice, Sosa dedicated the last song of the set, which featured Sylla playing a traditional two-stringed instrument from Senegal, to women.

At the end of the set, the Quartet left the stage to a rowdy standing ovation, who chanted for an encore. Sosa and his Quartet provided, dedicating the song to the god of love.

"I wish we could travel the whole tour with this crowd," Sosa exclaimed appreciatively, and proceeded to show off his classical influences in the following song, which delved into a near dub groove.

After the encore, the band left their instruments again, only to be prodded back onstage by the audience's still chaotic, seemingly endless applause. The second encore, the true final song of the evening, featured the tenets of "justice, freedom, and peace" chanted from Sosa's sampler. The warm tones of the last song finally eased the undoubtedly pleased audience into the night, leaving the notion that, in this day and age, fusion of genres and, in Omar Sosa's case, nations, is one of the only real ways to be creative musically.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY JAN SELMAN

The Omar Sosa Afreecanos Quartet brought a unique and dynamic blend of music to Bezanson recital hall on Tuesday night.

Cinema shows crime thriller

SERIES from page 6

smack in the face to the poorer people who live below the hill. This one image sums up the the central theme behind the film – the moral dilemmas that the rich and powerful must encounter and how the poor view the rich. It is a class examination. We are sympathetic to Kingo at points, but we're also harsh on him, especially when he will not pay the 30 million dollar ransom for his chauffeur's child, after being more than willing to pony up the cash for his own.

The crime drama focuses on a young man who abuses his great power for his own benefit. The greed he has outweighs even Kingo's. The kidnapper is willing to kill people so that he will have all of the ransom money for himself. He is willing to use his own knowledge to his advantage to exploit his newly acquired power. While Kingo loses his power and his mind, the kidnapper becomes much like Kingo was at the beginning.

The movie is an examination of human nature and our struggle for power and money. "High and Low" searches deep for answers to as why people do certain things, and how these actions build perceptions.

Through great directing and performances, Kurosawa accomplishes everything he set out to in the movie. The crackling noises from the reel show the film's age, but the acting and direction are timeless. The dark underworld of the poor and the slums are shot beautifully and the heroin addicts feel like they are sitting only a few feet away. "High and Low" is a beautiful piece of cinema from the past.

The film is playing this Thursday April 3 at seven pm. Tickets cost $6.50 for members, $8.50 for adults and $7.50 for students.

Kevin Koczwara can be reached at kkoczwar@student.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT
MULTIMEDIA, BLOGS AND PODCASTS
AT
THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN WEBSITE
www.dailycollegian.com

HEALTH AND NUTRITION DIVERSITY SCHOLARS
Apply today!
Stop by our OPEN HOUSE to learn more -
Thursday, April 3, 4-6 PM
210 Chenoweth Lab
$6000 Scholarships Available Fall 2008
For information and pre-nutrition advising, please contact: Dr. Nancy Cohen, Department of Nutrition, 215 Chenoweth Lab, UMass-Amherst, MA 01003
cohen@nutrition.umass.edu or 413-545-2526
For more information and application form
www.umass.edu/sphhs/nutrition/hands
This project is based upon work supported by the Cooperative State Research, Education and Extension Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, under the agreement NO. 2006-38413-16595.

Take out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam
By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons
Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.
FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.
This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art, April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413 585 2760
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons: Cuban, 1959– Birth Certificate, 1991. Woodcut on amate (bark) paper; carved wood; and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller class of 1925 Fund in 2007. Photograph by Thomas J. Guttanni
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP
413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

Need Experience?
Located in the Campus Center Basement.
What: Business Manager
Where: The Daily Collegian
When: Next Year
All majors accepted!
If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.
Now Accepting Applications!

NIT run could lead to Ford's departure

KING from page 14

After yesterday's press conference at Madison Square Garden, Ford plead "no comment" to inquiries about his future employment. Even if LSU has not contacted the coach, you have to wonder how looking ahead to bigger programs will effect his preparation.

Meanwhile, the Tigers have been without a coach since the middle of the season, when the school fired John Brady just two years removed from a Final Four appearance.

The job apparently seems like a pressure-filled situation. Former UMass coach John Calipari was rewarded with a 10-year contract after making the Elite Eight during the 1994-95 season.

After the many years of losing during the Bruiser Flint and Steve Lappas eras, there's no question that Ford has much less pressure at UMass than in the Bayou. Judging from the attendance figures at home games, he doesn't have much support either.

But then again, LSU is a primarily a football school and will probably stay that way with its big-time resources and coach (though we'll see how LSU coach Les Miles fares without all of Nick Saban's stockpiled talent, but that's another story).

Another emerging story line is the connection between the possible coaching hire and former Chancellor John Lombardi. Lombardi, of course, was muscled out of the Amherst campus by UMass President Jack Wilson and former chair of the UMass Board of Trustees Steven Tocco. Lombardi hired former vice chancellor Mike Gargano away from UMass and Ford could be the next.

In the end, the LSU job would probably be the final jump for Ford before he takes over the Kentucky program somewhere down the line. It's clear that Ford is just passing through on his way to a top coaching position in this relationship of reciprocity with UMass.

Yet at this point in his young career (11 seasons as a head coach), Ford is just 14 years removed from his playing days at UK.

Regardless of whether Ford's coaching ability and if he would be a good fit for the Bayou, he still has an unimpressive resume at UMass. Sure he turned the program around quickly, though some of that was derived from talent held over from the previous regime. It's no secret that Ford's goal is to coach at his alma mater. And judging by his coaching ability, it's likely that he'll get there sooner rather than later.

But here's the reality of the Travis Ford file. He's made one NCAA Tournament appearance (Eastern Kentucky in 2004-05) and has never coached a Top 25 team.

Is an SEC school really going to fire a coach who reached the Final Four two years ago and hire someone who has never experienced the second round of the NCAAs?

This brings us back to the current situation. The Maroon and White can secure its first NIT championship in program history with a win over (the?) Ohio State University tonight at Madison Square Garden.

Therefore the question must be asked: will the team's run through the NIT Tournament help or hurt the program in the long run?

The answer could swing either way, depending on how Ford handles his options. The Minutemen have a talented core of returning players, but will lose a lot to graduation at the same time. Many wrote off UMass this season after the team lost forwards Rashaun Freeman and Stephane Lasme. So an improvement over this year's success is certainly not out of the question for 2008-09.

But would Ford still have been a leading candidate for these jobs if the Minutemen had made the NCAA Tournament and lost in the first round? It's something we'll never know.

So enjoy this one UMass fans, because it looks like you'll have a few more years of rebuilding to deal with once the Minutemen hire a new coach. If not, perhaps this episode will be enough to convince hibernating fans to appreciate the product this rising young coach will put on the court next season.

Michael King covers men's basketball for the Collegian. He can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com

Ford had "no comment" on reports he may be leaving for LSU after UMass's victory over Florida.

Buckeyes have long history in tourney previously made title runs in both 1986 and 1988. They captured the NIT over Wyoming in '86 and fell to Connecticut two years later in the finals. Their record now stands at 17-7 in the tournament all-time.

NIT from page 14

For UMass, this is its first trip to the NIT Championship game in school history – and the only time the Minutemen have played in the finals of any postseason tournament.

They made the Final Four of the NCAA Tournament in the 1995-96 season, losing to Kentucky, which is Ford's alma mater. UMass's furthest run in the NIT before this year was a Final Four appearance in 1990-91 under coach John Calipari. The Minutemen dropped that game to Colorado.

IRRELEVANT INFORMATION

Ohio State and UMass met in the Final Four of the NCAA College Cup back on December 14. The Buckeyes won, 1-0, before eventually falling to Wake Forest in the title game. That makes Ohio State the current runners-up in the BCS National Championship, the NCAA Basketball Championship and in the College Cup ... Ford and Matta rang the NASDAQ closing bell in Times Square on Wednesday ... These two teams have never met in college basketball ... After defeating Florida in the NIT semifinals, UMass is now 4-1 all-time against defending national champions.

Butler (535 points) and Koufos (512) are the first pair of Buckeye teammates to score over 500 points in the same season since Michael Redd and Scoonie Penn accomplished the feat in the 1998-99 season ... UMass has allowed an average of 75.2 points per game. Ohio State is 14-1 when scoring over 70 points this season.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Koufos will be force in NIT title game exciting game. Obviously Ohio State has a lot of tradition, a great basketball program and obviously coach [Thad] Matta is a great coach."

M. HOOPS from page 14

The Buckeyes have some history in the NIT, with this season's appearance their eighth in school history. This will mark their third trip to the championship game. They claimed the 1986 title over Wyoming.

Dante Milligan's play was crucial for UMass against Florida Tuesday.

Last year the Buckeyes made it all the way to the NCAA Championship game, eventually losing to the Gators. But this year's squad is vastly different to last season's, with freshmen superstars Greg Oden, Mike Conley and Daequan Cook all leaving early for the NBA. The Buckeyes also lost starters Ron Lewis and Ivan Harris to graduation.

With the exception of Butler running the point, the entire starting lineup is new for Matta. But the talent is there. Butler was named to the Big Ten First Team after the regular season by the media and recently set a school-record with 101 made 3-pointers this season. His 212 assists this year is second to only Conley's 238 in 2007 in the school record books.

But the biggest name on the Buckeyes may be Koufos. The 7-foot, 19-year-old freshman is on the radar screens of NBA scouts already. ESPN's Chad Ford has him ranked No. 21 on his Top 100 NBA Draft Prospects list, citing his strength down low, his inside-outside skills and strong passing, footwork and inside moves.

His play in the NIT thus far has shown all of those things. Koufos is shooting a spectacular 70 percent from the floor (32-of-46) in the four games, averaging over 17 points and 5.5 rebounds per game.

Sophomore guard David Lighty (11.5 points per game) and senior forward Othello Hunter (10.3 points, 7.5 rebounds per game) are also playing well for Ohio State during the NIT.

The balanced scoring for Ohio State is something that Matta also sees in Ford's team.

"Obviously [they are] a very aggressive, talented basketball team. You can look at their stat sheet and they have five guys that can get 30 points in a game," Matta said at Wednesday's press conference. They have a great blend of drivers and shooters, and they finish around the basket.

"They are going to get up and really try to force your hand," he added. "They use their speed and quickness to their advantage with their full court defensive stuff."

To help counteract UMass's up-tempo offense, the Buckeyes will play a grind-it-out style of play, designated to keep scores low and throw teams like UMass out of rhythm offensively. How well UMass handles Ohio State's zone defense will be crucial for the Minutemen.

"Ohio State is trying to force turnovers, force shots and make you uncomfortable in their zone," Ford said. "We like to get the ball up and down the court and have fun playing basketball. They are going to press on almost every possession. They are not a typical zone team. They are very aggressive."

UMass junior point guard Chris Lowe is mindful of the task at hand against the zone defense, but thinks the outcome of the game will be decided elsewhere.

"We have played a lot of aggressive teams, we just need to play our style," Lowe said. "It is going to come to who has the will to come out and get the victory."

That victory would mean a lot to senior captains and New York natives Gary Forbes and Dante Milligan.

"I feel like Dante and I want to leave this school in better shape than we found it," Forbes said. "This school has never played for a championship. It would mean a lot to us especially winning it at Madison Square Garden."

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com

Almost Here!
Single or Shared Rooms
Online Room Selection
See your Bulletin for start dates!
Read your Room Selection Bulletin and come to one of the Online Room Selection Information Sessions:
The Housing Assignment Office will review online room selection instructions, guidelines, and strategies, and will show you online room selection menus so you can get ready to select your own assignment.
Pick a one-hour information session prior to the room selection period you plan to participate in, and we'll see you there!

Date	Times	Location
Tuesday, March 25	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 168C
Tuesday, April 1	12:00-1:00pm or 1:00-2:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Wednesday, April 2	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Monday, April 14	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76
Tuesday, April 15	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Pierpont Hall Main Lounge
Wednesday, April 16	6:00-7:00pm or 7:00-8:00pm	Campus Center Rm. 174-76

www.housing.umass.edu UMassAmherst

Western New England College
Lecture Day 2008

Tuesday
April 8, 2008
6:00 p.m.
Rivers Memorial Hall
Free and open to the public
Award-winning Novelist
E.L. Doctorow
"Religion and Literature: Texts that are Sacred, Texts that are Not"
The New York Times calls E.L. Doctorow "an astonishing novelist." The award-winning author of nine novels including Ragtime, The Book of Daniel, and Billy Bathgate, Doctorow will be the keynote speaker at Western New England College Lecture Day 2008.
Join us for this thought-provoking evening with one of the nation's leading literary figures.

Are you a Doctorow fan? Start the dialogue now. Visit our E.L. Doctorow blog at http://eldoctorowvisits wnec.blogspot.com
WESTERN NEW ENGLAND COLLEGE
1215 Wilbraham Road
Springfield, MA 01119
www.wnec.edu
For more information, contact Campus Events at 413-782-1567.

49ers cruising in Atlantic 10

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

Over the past weekend, the Charlotte 49ers swept their series at LaSalle to improve to 6-0 in Atlantic-10 play this season. The 49ers moved up five spots to No. 18 in the Collegiate Baseball newspaper poll, and improved their record to 21-3 on the season. The 49ers are one of only 16 teams to break the 20-win mark this season.

Senior Brian McElroy was named A-10 player of the week after recording at least two hits in each of the games this weekend. In addition, second baseman Carey Shaylor earned co-rookie of the week honors after he hit .421 at the plate and drove in seven runs over the past five games.

A–10 Baseball

The 49ers are also perfect on their home field going an impressive 15-0 thus far, and 28-3 since their field opened last season. They have won 13 straight series against A-10 competition, eight of which have come via sweeps dating back to the 2006 season. The 49ers lead the league with a team batting average of .343.

Duke wins 10th straight

After their third straight weekend sweep, the Duquesne Dukes have completed a 10-game win streak after opening the season 0-10. The Dukes handled St. Bonaventure this weekend, outscoring them 26-7 over three games.

Senior outfielder Eric Morrison led the way in Saturday's doubleheader blasting two home runs and driving in four. Incredible pitching by Ryan Juran in Game 1 earned him his third straight victory, and Paul Bugajski came within two outs of a complete game in the nightcap. The Dukes improved to 6-0 in conference play and remain tied at the top of the conference standings with the 49ers.

Kaible heating up

Fordham's senior pitcher Chris Kaible went 2-for-5 at the plate on Friday, and also pitched two innings of scoreless relief as the Rams defeated the Billikens, 7-6. The win was Kaible's first of the season.

With the win, the Rams improved to 13-10 on the season, but stand at only 2-4 in the conference, where they are tied with six other teams, including the Billikens. The Rams struggled this past week, going 2-3 due to inconsistent pitching and hitting. Over their last five games they have given up 48 runs while scoring 32.

This weekend, the Billikens will be looking to bring their record back over .500 as they currently stand at 11-12. The Billikens should improve this season if they can pick it up on the defensive end. They hold a team ERA of 5.81 and have given up 145 runs, 22 more than they have scored this season.

In Friday's series opener, SLU's Zach Outman recorded his second win of the week, and the 500th career-win for first year manager Darin Hendrickson. Outman had a great week tossing nine innings allowing only three earned runs, and recorded five strikeouts.

Owls match best start

Owl's freshmen Ben White struck out a career-high 11 batters in Friday's rout against Saint Joseph's, 13-2. White tossed six shutout innings in the victory retiring 10 of the last 13 batters via the strikeout.

The Owls have opened the season 13-10, but more importantly 5-1 in conference play. This matches the best start in school history through six games, which they last completed in the 2001 season.

In order to remain competitive in the conference with league leaders Charlotte and Duquesne, the Owls will need to lower their team ERA which now stands at 4.71, and raise their team overall batting average which stands at .272. They will look to begin this improvement when they visit the 49ers this weekend, in an early series with big conference implications.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu.

UM offense lacking firepower

By Joe Meloni
Collegian Staff

Before the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team left for its match with Penn State last Friday, UMass coach Greg Cannella hoped for a low-scoring game.

Cannella got his wish as the Minutemen (3-5, 1-1 ECAC) won 7-5. Penn State is used to playing defensive battles with its defensive style, but the Minutemen are historically a team that needs to score as often as possible to consistently win. But because his team is struggling so much to score, Cannella is no longer confident that his team can win high-scoring affairs.

In fact, the Minutemen are 2-4 when allowing more than five goals. Their lone win when allowing more than five came against Albany on March 11.

Most expected that the Minutemen would struggle on offense after losing Brett Garber to graduation and Jim Connolly to suspension, but not to this degree. Junior Tim Balise and freshman Pete McNichols are the only two UMass players with more than five goals. After them, Evan Blum's five and Bobby Hayes's four are third and fourth.

Aside from leading UMass in goals, Balise leads the team in shots and shooting percentage. He has taken 45 shots on the season, 29 of them have been on net and 15 have gone for goals. McNichols is similarly efficient. He has taken 36 shots, 25 of them were on goal and 10 resulted in goals.

UMass Lacrosse

Many of UMass's other forwards and offensive midfielders have struggled to keep their chances on goal. UMass's No. 3 shot taker, Hayes, hits the net just over 37 percent of the time he shoots.

As a team, the Minutemen are last in the ECAC in goals scored (44), goals per game (5.52) and shooting percentage (17.6).

Facing off

Junior Joe Reale drew most of the face-off duty early in the season. After an impressive 10-for-16 performance in a season-opening win against Hofstra, he was 5-for-20 in the next two games losses to Yale and Harvard.

Reale hasn't been a bad option for the Minutemen, but has struggled to consistently win draws. For a team like UMass that has struggled to score, winning faceoffs to gain momentum and create extra possessions is invaluable.

In his last two games, Reale had results similar to the losses to Yale and Harvard, he was 5-for-19 against Penn State and Loyola. Overall, Reale is 46-for-94 on the season.

Hayes took most of UMass's faceoffs last season and won just over 50 percent of them. He has seen limited action in the role this season, but has enjoyed a lot of success; he has won 11 of his 15 attempts.

Freshman Stephen Zorkers and junior Nick Glasser round out UMass's face-off unit, but neither have seen enough action in the role to fairly assess his performance.

Outhustled

When teams cannot rely on regular contributions from their offense, they typically find success when doing the less glamorous things well. Cannella preaches the value of hard work and grit to his teams, but hasn't seen it often enough.

No statistic in lacrosse judges a team's level of hustle better than groundballs. UMass's opponents have scooped up 238 groundballs to UMass's 197. So when Cannella questioned the level of intensity his team has played with prior to their trip to University Park, Pa., to play Penn State, he had justification.

The Minutemen collected fewer groundballs than their opponents in four of their last five games, including a 39-21 margin against PSU last time out. Not surprisingly, UMass is last in the ECAC in groundballs per game at 24.62 ... Junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider is second in the ECAC with a 7.26 goals-average.

Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni.a.gmail.com

Peter McNichols ranks second for the Minutemen with 10 goals this season. No one else on the team has more than five goals.

Tim Balise is one of two Minutemen with double-digit goals this season. He leads the team with 15.

UM facing stiffer competition

By Melissa Turtinen
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team has been struggling getting wins on the board. After the Atlantic 10 opening weekend the Minutewomen are 3-8 overall, 1-1 in their conference.

Last season after playing 10 games the Minutewomen sat at 5-5. They ended their season 8-9 overall, 3-4 in the A-10. UMass coach Alexis Venechanos explained that even though their record was better last year, the Minutewomen are playing better this year.

UMass started their season with a very competitive schedule, one of the toughest in the nation. In the first nine games of their season, six of the teams were ranked in the Top-20.

In the last four games the Minutewomen have been improving and starting to play their game. Venechanos said that they have been trying to get better on attack, midfield and defense to play the entire game as a team instead of having glimpses of brilliance.

"[We're working to] improve our defense and get them on the same page. We have been moving them around on attack and defense," Venechanos said. "We haven't reached our full potential yet, we have at least five games left and we'll peak in a couple weeks [which is good]."

UMass Lacrosse

Getting quality shots

The Minutewomen have had trouble keeping up with their opponents in the amount of shots they are taking. As of March 30 the Minutewomen have had 250 shots, only 172 on goal, while their opponents have 313 shots, 230 of them were on goal. UMass is averaging 22.7 shots a game, where their opponents are at 28.5.

The lack of opportunities is affecting the overall score of the game. UMass only has 87 goals on the season, but they have been scored on 136 times. Although, the low number of shots on goal has allowed them a high shots on goal/ scoring percentage of 88.8 percent, while their opponents are at 73.5 percent.

"[We're trying to improve] our shot selection and being better shooters. The games that we were able to do well in we were 30 to 40 percent," Venechanos said. "The combination is taking the right shots at the right time. We continue to work on that."

Typadis is a threat

Senior Kathleen Typadis was the leading scorer in the 2007 season with 52 goals and 8 assists for a total of 60 points. This season she has been gaining points slowly, but in the last four games she has been getting back on track scoring 11 goals. Total this season she has 15 goals and one assist.

At the beginning of the season Typadis was being guarded by opponents because they know her strength is scoring. That allowed other players, such as junior Kaytlin McCormick and senior Melynda Zwick to be open for more scoring opportunities.

McCormick is the leading scorer for the Minutewomen with 23 goals and 6 assists. Zwick is ranked second in points, third in goals with 9 goals and 9 assists. Typadis is second in goals and third in points.

As the season progressed attention moved to McCormick and Zwick and opened up Typadis for more goals, Venechanos said.

"[Typadis, McCormick and Zwick] have been making a more deadly attack and more threats open things up for everyone else," Venechanos said.

Schreiner successful with draw controls

Freshman Kelsey Schreiner has been successful with draw controls in recent weeks. To date she has 19 draw controls, two goals and two assists for a total of four points. She has the second highest number of controls behind senior Jeannette Villapiano.

"Schreiner has been doing a good job putting our team in position when we get the ball. She is smart, has quick hands and a strong presence in there. She has consistency, she is a selfless player and does what the team needs," Venechanos said.

Overall, UMass has a higher number of draw controls during the game than its opponents. They have 132 as opposed to the other teams 114. Holding the advantage in draw controls is very beneficial for the Minutewomen because it means getting extra possessions.

"Having more possessions on attack definitely helps us out," Venechanos said.

Earlier in the season the Minutewomen would get the ball and struggle bringing it to the attack end successfully. Venechanos said it starts with the draw. If UMass spends less time trying to get the ball off of the draw they will have more time and a better chance moving it to the offensive zone and getting more goals.

Free position shots improving

In the last few games UMass has done well with their free position shots. In the past they were scoring on around 10 percent of the shots, where recently they have been making close to 50 percent of the shots, Sinnett said. Currently their free position goal percentage is 33 percent.

Doing well on the free position shots helps create scoring chances and goals.

"We do play aggressive on attack and initiate things in there," Venechanos said. "You get your chance for eight meters (free position shots) and it gives scoring chances. Now we've been able to convert on them. It can be the deciding factor [in a game]."

The Minutewomen have also been doing well against the free position shots in their defensive end, defenders are getting their stick on the ball and freshman goal keeper Colleen Speth is doing well stopping them, she said.

UMass takes the field next on Sunday against Temple for their third A-10 game of the season.

Melissa Turtinen can be reached at mturtine@student.umass.edu

Kathleen Typadis has scored 11 goals over the past four games after a slow start in 2008.

Spiders rising in conference

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Richmond women's lacrosse team has experienced for themselves that defense wins games after beating La Salle, 19-5 Sunday.

The game was a combined effort as nine of the Spiders (4-7, 2-0 A-10) scored against the Explorers (0-9, 0-2 A-10). Their offense received a big boost from junior attack Allison Furstenburg (five goals, two assists) and freshman midfielder Anne Ryan (four goals).

Furstenberg's performance against La Salle earned her the A-10 player of the week award. She leads the team in goals (35) and is second on the team in assists (19) for the season.

A–10 Lacrosse

Ryan tallied her total goals for the season after scoring three in the win over UMass last Friday, giving her seven for the week on seven shots, earning A-10 rookie of the week honors.

Goalkeeper Erica Marrocco recorded nine saves while allowing a season-low five goals.

Richmond is leading the Atlantic 10 in goals (12.82) and points per game (19). However, the Spiders are near the top in goals against average (13.55), though that number was helped by allowing just five goals to the winless Explorers, who are second only to Massachusetts for fewest goals per game.

The Spiders next two conference games are away at St. Bonaventure Friday and Duquesne on Sunday.

Their high-powered offense could bail them out of both games as the Bonnies and Lady Dukes are a combined 4-14 and have yet to win a conference game.

Temple narrowly beating A-10 opponents

None of Temple's three A-10 victories have come easily. The Owls' largest margin of victory came against Duquesne where they won, 12-9.

Temple's (6-3, 3-0 A-10) is giving up the fewest goals (74) in the conference and has a .470 save percentage. Offensively, is trailed only Richmond, with 31 goals in A-10 games.

The Owls' first road conference match comes this Friday at La Salle and starts a five-game road trip. The last time Temple played a game away from home was March 13, a 12-9 win of California Davis.

All five of those road games come against teams with records under .500. Their conference slate ends with Richmond, who went 2-7 in its non-conference part of the schedule.

Bonczek nearing career mark

La Salle senior Emily Bonczek is one goal away from tying her season high for goals scored (40).

She has been the main catalyst for the Explorers, scoring 45 percent of the team's goals and is the only player in the A-10 to record seven goals twice this season, against Drexel on March 5 and Louisville on March 9. She currently leads the league in goals per game (4.43).

The Explorers are still winless despite the fire power Bonczek provides the team. She has scored more than the rest of the team combined on four different occasions. In those four games, the team's average margin of defeat is 4.5 goals when Bonczek scores more than her teammates and 6.3 when the Explorers score more than Bonczek.

Duquesne finally come home

After going 3-4 over its long road stretch, Duquesne returns home to face George Washington Friday. Its last home game was against Stony Brook Feb. 24 where the Lady Dukes lost to Stony Brook, 21-18.

Duquesne missed its last home meeting due to inclement weather, a March 9 matchup with Davidson. Since then, Duquesne (3-7, 0-1 A-10) beat Cincinnati and Bucknell but lost its first conference game at Temple, 12-9, March 30.

The match was a back-and-forth affair, but Temple prevailed late in the second half. The Owls scored two goals while holding the Dukes scoreless in the last five minutes.

Junior attack Kathleen McNish scored a goal and tallied two assists in the loss. She currently leads the A-10 in assists per game (2.40).

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmill@student.umass.edu

Mill Valley
E·S·T·A·T·E·S

HUGE
INSANELY
STUPID
APARTMENT DEALS

Housing Fair Only
April 3, 2008
Campus Center 10-3

MEDICAL STUDENTS SHOULDN'T FEEL LOST IN A CROWD!

YOU ARE INVITED TO A MEDICAL SCHOOL OPEN HOUSE
SATURDAY, APRIL 12, 2:00-4:00 PM
NEWTON MARRIOTT
(EXIT 24 OFF RT 128/95 IN NEWTON, MA)

SPONSORED BY:

SABA UNIVERSITY SCHOOL OF MEDICINE
978-630-5122
WWW.SABA.EDU

MEDICAL UNIVERSITY OF THE AMERICAS
978-632-1599
WWW.MUA.EDU

FREE PARKING AND REFRESHMENTS!

Get directions to a great career.

Introducing EY Insight, a new careers website experience where it's easier than ever to find your way to opportunities for real growth and success. Meet real EY people and get a first hand look into their lives at EY 360°; explore your real career possibilities with Picture Yourself; find real advice and interview tips at Interview Insider.

It's like a roadmap to your future.

Visit us at www.ey.com/us/eyinsight

FORTUNE 100 BEST COMPANIES TO WORK FOR 2008

Assurance • Tax • Transactions • Advisory

ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do

© 2008 Ernst & Young LLP

Fenton set to join Sharks in Worcester

P.J. Fenton signed with the Worcester Sharks of the American Hockey League yesterday. The Sharks, the San Jose Sharks' AHL affiliate, announced the signing last night.

Fenton, a native of Springfield, was drafted by San Jose in the fifth round of the 2005 NHL Entry Draft after scoring nine goals and assisting on eight others as a freshman in 2004-05.

This season, he tied his career high with nine goals and set a new mark in assists with 19. After assisting on a goal against New Hampshire in the Hockey East playoffs, he moved into ninth place on UMass's all-time scoring list with 95 points. He served as an assistant captain for UMass in each of the last two seasons.

Fenton will be playing with Merrimack's Matt Jones who also recently signed with San Jose after a strong sophomore season with the Warriors.

Worcester is not enjoying a very strong 2007-08 season. The Sharks have seven games remaining in their season at 27-34-5-6.

– Joe Meloni

Fenton's father, Paul, played eight seasons in the NHL with the Winnipeg Jets and the Los Angeles Kings.

OTHER HEA SIGNINGS

Maine freshman Andrew Sweetland formerly his final three seasons of eligibility and signed with the Florida Panthers. The Black Bears also lost goaltender Ben Bishop, a junior, who signed with the Saint Louis Blues. Maine's Travis Ramsey (Manitoba) and Rob Bellamy (Philadelphia) also signed with AHL franchises.

Boston University seniors Brian Ewing (Springfield), Pete MacArthur (Bridgeport), Ryan Weston (Albany) and Brian McGuirk (Syracuse) all signed with AHL franchises.

Providence defenseman Trevor Ludwig signed with the Iowa Stars, the AHL affiliate of the Dallas Stars. Dallas drafted Ludwig in the sixth round of the 2004 draft. Friar junior Cody Wild left school a year early and signed with the Springfield Falcons; he was drafted by the Edmonton Oilers in the fifth round of the 2006 NHL draft.

Senior forward P.J. Fenton signed a pro contract with the San Jose Sharks. He will be assigned to the organization's AHL affiliate in Worcester.

Final awards for Mass Attack

Before the 2007-08 season began for the Massachusetts hockey team, the sky was the limit on how far the Mass Attack could go.

A rough second half cut UMass's season short, losing in two games to New Hampshire in the Hockey East quarterfinals. With the season now in the books, here are our thoughts on who did well, who didn't, and who surprised everyone in 2007-08.

MOST VALUABLE PLAYER
JEREMY RICE: MIKE KOSTKA, DEFENSEMAN

When a team finishes its season with a disappointing result, it's hard to find a full-fledged most valuable player, but if you had to pick one, it has to be team captain Mike Kostka.

Cahoon has done a good job bringing quality individuals into his locker room to lead his team year after year, and Kostka was no different this season. After reaching No. 5 in the national polls, UMass plummeted, going 2-11-1 over the next 14 games. Despite that, the Minutemen pulled together to salvage a postseason berth and keep its season alive. The credit has to go to Cahoon and his captain.

JOE MELONI: KOSTKA

Kostka was the best UMass player from Game 1 against Clarkson through Game 36 against New Hampshire. On top of emerging as one of the league's best defensive defenseman, Kostka led UMass with seven power-play goals and stabilized a unit that was miserable early in the season.

Early in his career, Kostka was the type of player coaches loved because he did the little things well. But by the time his career ended, Kostka was the No. 1 defenseman that every team needed. He essentially shut down an entire side of the ice during his shifts. As team captain, Kostka set the standard on and off the ice for all UMass player.

ROOKIE OF THE YEAR
RICE: JAMES MARCOU, FORWARD

Cahoon raved about his new offensive weapon from the beginning of the season, and with good cause. The 5-foot-7 Marcou impressed fans, teammates, opposing coaches and the media alike with his ability to create something out of nothing. He led the Minutemen as a freshman with 32 points and 24 assists. His eight goals were fourth on the team.

Countless times he took the puck to the net, only to dish it off to a rushing line mate that no one in the Mullins Center ever saw but him. His vision on the ice is often noted as his best asset, but teammates such as Kostka point to his patience as a passer, something a freshman is usually not expected to possess. It's clear Cahoon will be building the future of UMass hockey around this sensational athlete from King Park, N.Y.

MELONI – PAUL DAINTON, GOALTENDER

Freshman James Marcou led UMass in scoring. But after an injury forced freshman goaltender Paul Dainton into the role of full-time starter, he quickly became one of the best young goaltenders in the country. Without Dainton's steadiness in goal, I have to wonder if UMass would have made the playoffs.

Dainton ended the season with a 2.56 goal-against average and a 12-14-6 record. Boston College net minder John Muse received most of the attention recently due the Eagles' postseason success, but the coaches of Hockey East selected Dainton as the best freshman net minder in the conference.

BIGGEST SURPRISE
RICE – DAINTON

Dainton certainly deserves some consideration as the team's top rookie, but I believe he is more deserving of this honor. It was known coming into the season that Dainton was talented and would compete right away for the starting job, but he had enormous skates to fill after the departure of Quick.

Jeremy Rice, Joe Meloni

His steady play in net all season is the reason the Minutemen had any success this season. Often times, losing a quality goaltender like Quick can handcuff a team's progress for a year or even two. Dainton made sure that didn't happen.

MELONI: MARTIN NOLET, DEFENSEMAN

Whenever an opponent decided to take a run at one of UMass's smallish forwards, Nolet came to their defense, in part replacing Kevin Jarman as the team's enforcer. Against Boston College on Nov. 16, Eagle defenseman Anthony Aiello threw Marcou to the ground after he collided with Muse. Aiello followed Marcou into the corner, staring down the 5-foot-7 forward. Nolet quickly skated over to Aiello and initiated a scuffle.

Not only did Nolet develop as the team's best physical presence, his overall game improved vastly from his disappointing freshman campaign. He settled in nicely alongside Kostka on UMass's top defensive pair and learned how to play hockey from his captain.

UNSUNG HERO
RICE: JUSTIN BRAUN, DEFENSEMAN

Sophomore defenseman Justin Braun did more things individually for the Minutemen than any other player on the roster. According to Cahoon, Braun played more minutes this season than anyone else, and it doesn't surprise me. Braun is the team's best offensive defenseman, and he's no slouch on with his defensive responsibilities either.

You can find Braun on the power play, the penalty kill and anywhere else he is needed. He was the team's rookie of the year last season over forward Will Ortiz, who had a great freshman year offensively.

Braun was sixth on the team in scoring with 20 points on four goals and 16 assists, on point behind Kostka, the top-scoring defenseman. It's clear Braun is one of Cahoon's smartest players on the ice, and I expect to see him a more of a leadership role as a junior next season.

MELONI: BRETT WATSON, CENTER

Brett Watson is one of the best defensive centers in college hockey. At times, fans question his presence on the ice since he rarely scores goals. But no one in the UMass locker room would ever say a negative word about the sophomore.

Cahoon typically pairs Watson with his more offensive-minded wingers to curb the effects of their inevitable defensive mishaps. As a freshman, Cahoon considered Watson his best penalty killer and still does after his second season in Amherst.

With UMass's captain, Kostka, and 2-of-3 assistant captains, David Leaderer and P.J. Fenton, graduating, they will need to select three more to step into those roles. Junior Alex Berry named Watson before any of the current captains when asked who some of the team's best leaders were earlier in the season. So I fully expect to see an "A" prominently featured on Watson's sweater when the 2008-09 season begins.

BIGGEST DISAPPOINTMENT
RICE: DAVID LEADERER, DEFENSEMAN

Last season Leaderer was easily one of the most reliable players for the Minutemen, but his production waned significantly in 2007-08. Offensively his numbers dipped from 12 points on four goals and eight assists to eight points (three and five).

However, that is not where Leaderer excels. In 2006-07, he tied Kostka for second on the team with a plus-11 rating (behind Cory Quirk's plus-15). This season, he plummeted to a minus-7, and the Minutemen simply were not as successful with him on the ice as they were in the past.

Some of that can be attributed to that fact that UMass scored slightly fewer goals overall this season and allowed slightly more, but an 18-point drop in plus-minus rating is to great to ignore.

MELONI: WILL ORTIZ, WINGER

Will Ortiz led UMass with six goals before anyone else on the team had more than three. That was on Nov. 20 against Vermont, a game UMass lost 4-2. Ortiz didn't score his seventh goal, however, until March 14 in the first game of the Hockey East Quarterfinals.

The winger suffered some injuries during that span. But was also a healthy scratch at times because of undisciplined play that has become as much a part of his game as his dazzling puck-handling.

No one can question Ortiz's ceiling, he has the potential to become one of Hockey East's best goal-scorers, but it is often questioned where his head is. Against UMass Lowell on Oct. 19, he took a tripping penalty 36 seconds into overtime, and against Northeastern on Feb. 15, he took a slashing minor with 52 seconds remaining and UMass down by a goal. Cahoon benched Ortiz after the loss to Northeastern, but he never got back in sync.

BIGGEST MOMENT
RICE; WINNING LIGHTNING COLLEGE HOCKEY CLASSIC

There were plenty of opportunities for the Minutemen to make sure their best moment of the season did not come halfway through the schedule, even after the second-half slide, but a poor performance in New Hampshire prevented that from happening.

Regardless, this win – and the win in the first round of the tourney over Notre Dame – stands as one of the greatest feats in the history of the born-again program, which returned to existence in 1993 after two hockey-free decades.

They're season did not go as planned, but the Minutemen should still be proud of what they accomplished in Tampa back in December, where likely the best hockey ever played by a UMass team happened, beating two of the more respected programs in the nation.

Following up that win with a deep postseason run would have done wonders for Cahoon's efforts to bring UMass hockey to national relevance, but it will still go a long way in making sure people in the hockey world know about the Maroon and White.

MELONI: SAME

It seems irrelevant at the moment, but the Minutemen were untouchable when they went into this tournament and even more so when Matt Burto beat Richard Bachman in overtime to clinch the title for UMass.

It's a shame for Cahoon that the biggest win of the season came in December, but not much happened after that. I spoke with Will Ortiz in November and he mentioned that the Minutemen wanted to win the tournament over the holidays, Hockey East and a national championship. The Minutemen looked good enough to do at least two of those things at this point in time and with some luck they could've been heading to Denver a week from now.

TURNING POINT
RICE – FEB. 15, 2-1 LOSS TO NORTHEASTERN

You could really point to any game or any moment during the second half of the season and say that's where it really went wrong for the Mass Attack, but on Feb. 15 in Boston, it was clear the Minutemen had little chance of breaking out of their collective funk.

Down 2-1 with less than a minute to play, Will Ortiz was called for slashing, effectively ending the Minutemen's hopes of tying the game. Before that time, it seemed nothing could go right for the Minutemen. After taking that penalty, it was clear UMass wasn't going to help themselves either.

MELONI – WINTER BREAK

Excuses aren't Cahoon's favorite thing. But he told me before the break how much he loathed winter break, and after UMass fell apart he did the same thing.

The Minutemen were two completely different teams when they began the second half of their season. Dainton wasn't very good, the offense wasn't very good and absolutely nothing went UMass's way.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu. Joe Meloni can be reached at joe.meloni@gmail.com.

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

RUSSELL'S LIQUORS
18 Main St. Downtown Amherst 253-5441
Mendocino Red Tail Ale...$10.99 12/PK
Miller High Life...$8.99 18/PK
All Beers Plus Deposit
MANY, MANY MORE BEER SPECIALS!
Giant Wine Sale!
EXTRA 10% OFF ALL SALE ITEMS, AND BIN ENDS.
Bar Vodka or Gin Special!
$10.99 1.75 Liter
$6.99 Full Liter
BOTH ARE 80 PROOF!

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

4 + 5 April | 2008
GLOBAL EYES
A Smith College symposium
new ways of seeing art
to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art
4 April | 5:30 PM
5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History
Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons contemporary artist
Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium Smith College
FREE and open to all
5 April | 8:30 AM – 5:30 PM | Symposium
REGISTRATION REQUIRED
Detailed information + registration: www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413 585 2760
SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

$ CASH FOR YOUR CLOTHES $
how does it work?
You bring us your awesome clothes...we sell them... you make money!
(40% to be exact)
it's so easy!
No appointment necessary.
Buy & Sell at the area's BIGGEST & BEST consignment store!.
exclusive Drop & Shop Rewards
Urban Exchange
233 Main Street Northampton MA
413-585-8729
Hampshire Collegian

Sudoku salmon.

			9		2
	1	9				3	6
5	6						7	9
		6	5		1	7
	3						5
		1	4		3	8
7	2						1	8
	9	8				6	3
			1		9

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

ACROSS
1 Wait on
6 Top dog
11 Lingerie buy
14 Effective use
15 Blood part
16 Corn serving
17 The easiest of putts
18 Traveling worker
20 Mountaineer's challenge
21 Allegation
23 Positioning maneuver
24 Palo ___, CA
26 Actor Knight
28 Bock or porter
29 Lemieux and Cuomo
31 Author Harte
33 Towel off
34 Church table
35 Japanese companion
37 Ant
39 Hunter's companion
43 Browns in butter
45 John Hersey's bell town
46 Ernie of golf
49 Itemized record
50 Napping
51 Rules of conduct
53 Final degree
54 Lean-to
55 Best players
57 Chico's brother
59 Molnaro and Michaels
62 Marvels
64 Gentleman's gentleman
66 Fried
67 Fortune cards
68 Ooze
69 Newspaper honchos, briefly
70 Cads
71 Cut differently

DOWN
1 Long yarn
2 Wicked
3 Bulwarks
4 Vigor's partner
5 Of voting
6 Where China is
7 Beatles movie
8 Steak house order
9 Attila, for one
10 Grace closer
11 Formed drops
12 Park employee
13 Pulse location
19 Cause friction
22 ___ Angeles
25 Neeson and O'Flaherty
27 Lucy's husband
29 Navigator's guide
30 Puglisi Laila
32 Work out, in a way
35 Arrives
36 Mix up
38 Destroy
40 Father of Icarus
41 Individual
42 Republican letters
44 Alternative fuel
46 Pass, as time
47 Used a machine cutter
48 Candles
50 Small snake
52 ___ Miguel, CA
58 Nocturnal insect
59 Rodent pests
60 Mother of Castor and Pollux
61 Goulash or stumgullion
63 Daisy of Dogpatch
65 Woodshed item

amherst cinema
Fri, April 4 - Thu, April 10
THE COUNTERFEITERS 2:45 5:00 7:15 9:30
DARFUR NOW Tue 4/8 7:00 Director Present!
WR: MYSTERIES OF THE ORGANISM Sun 4/6 2:00 Thu 4/10 7:00
The Band's Visit 2:30 4:45 6:45 9:00 No 2:30 Show Sun
THE DIVING BELL AND THE BUTTERFLY 4:30 9:15
persepolis 2:15 7:00 No 7:00 Tue or Thu
28 Amity St. Downtown Amherst (413) 253-2547 www.amherstcinema.org

PLEASANT STREET THEATER
Fri, April 4 - Thu, April 10
SHINE A LIGHT 4:30 8:00 PLUS: 2pm Sat & Sun AND 10am Wed
PARANOID PARK 5:15 9:15 PLUS 10:15 am Wed
JUNO 7:15 PLUS 3:15 Sat & Sun
27 Pleasant St. Downtown Northampton www.pleasantstheater.org (413) 584-5845

The Second City
One Nation Under Blog
FRI, APR. 4 • 8:00 PM DOORS 7:00 PM CALVIN
RYAN MONTBLEAU BAND
plus Barefoot Truth
FRI, APR. 4 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:00 PM BALLROOM
MINUS THE BEAR
plus Portugal The Man, 27
SAT, APR. 5 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:00 PM BALLROOM
KAKI KING BAND
SUN, APR. 6 • 8:30 PM DOORS 7:00 PM BALLROOM
Iron Horse Music Hall 20 YEARS
Pleasant Street 10 PR APR ST NORTHAMPTON, MA
10 PREVIOUS TICKETS OF THIS KIND WON YOU ANY MEASURE OF FAME.
WWW.IHEG.COM
413-586-8686

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Buzz, your girlfriend — woof!"

— Macaulay Culkin as "Kevin McCallister"

RETRO GEEK By Steve Dickenson and Todd Clark

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! By Tim Rickard

BLISS By Harry Bliss

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Humans vs Zombies is currently being studied by real zombies to see how we act when under attack by the undead.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Go into the dishroom in the DC and ask someone to give you a sponge bath.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
Having soul is a good thing. Having a soul patch is the worst thing.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
You have become disconnected from the campus community. Handcuff yourself to a stranger and feed the key to a squirrel.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
It might be warm but that doesn't mean you can stop worrying about being mauled by a polar bear.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
Stop throwing out your banana peels. They make great hats!

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You produce more than a farmer's market.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
It's ok to make up lyrics when you don't know the song, but it is not ok to make up lyrics to the alphabet.

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You are more beautiful than a rain drop on a farm after a two year draught.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
The UMass basketball team is dandy, but the players on the football team are a little too randy.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
You will soon learn that Portugal is your true home.

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
You must be as the blade of grass bending towards the sun if you ever hope to grow.

Comics is hotter than the Golden Girls. Okay, all of them except Bea Arthur.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Student Union Art Gallery presents "Line Scape and Sound Fields" by Francesca Caruso, Sophia Flood, Brendan Dean and Kyle Nilan 4/7-4/18. Reception Tu 4/8 5-7pm. Gallery hours: M-Th 10-5 and F 10-3. Free. 545-0792

APT. FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Belchertown center of town on bus route 2 bedroom 725 first last security 413-323-6511 9-2pm

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve.

APT. FOR RENT

Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates
APARTMENT FOR RENT
2 bedroom $1175
3 bedroom $1475
4 bedroom $2225
Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

EMPLOYMENT

Attention all Juniors & Seniors! April 7th is the last day to apply to become a legal assistant with the legal services office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field. Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center.

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

EMPLOYMENT

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity.Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tripplakecamp.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsend-

EMPLOYMENT

campjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404
Hadley Close to Umass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270.

University Bartending classes start soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!

HOUSE FOR RENT

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N Pleasant St. Amherst www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential. Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS THURSDAY

THURSDAY, APRIL 3, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

One more time

Minutemen face Ohio State in NIT Final

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

Trailing by 22 points with 14 minutes remaining against Syracuse: extremely difficult to come back from, but possible.

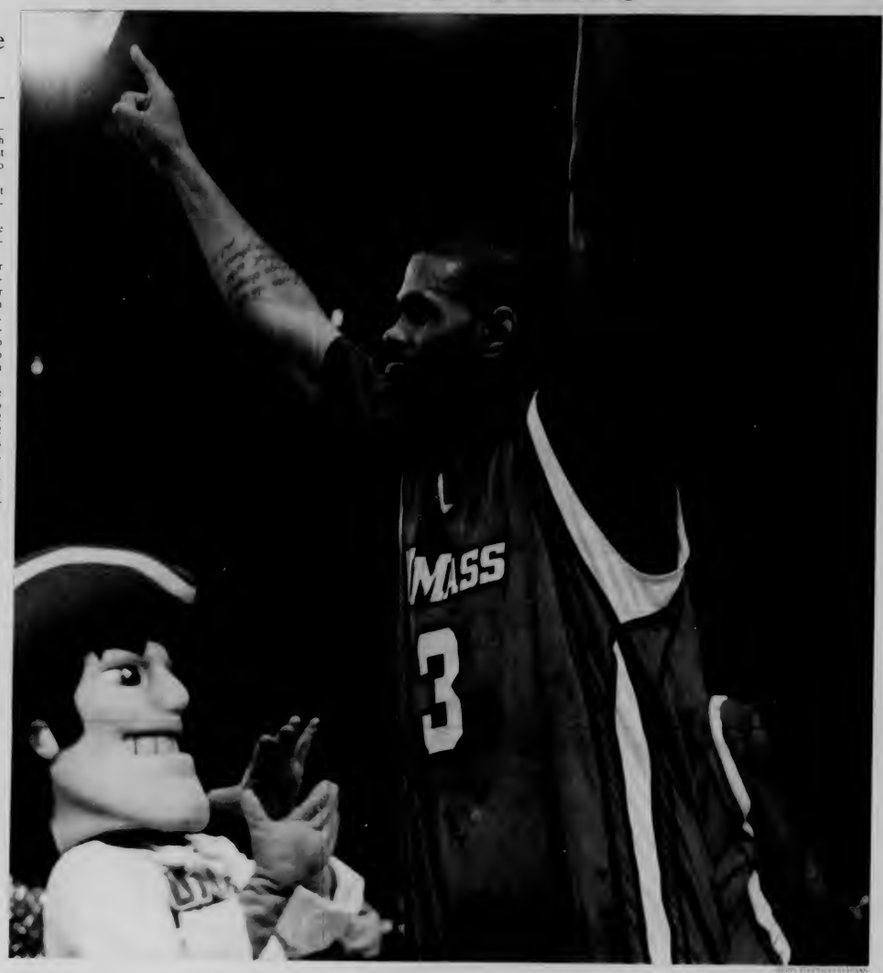
Double-digit deficits against both Akron and Florida: seemingly no big deal.

Completing four consecutive and improbable late-game comebacks: almost inconceivable.

But that's been the norm for the Massachusetts men's basketball team during its first-ever run to the National Invitation Tournament Championship Game. The Minutemen will try to complete their improbable journey to an NIT title tonight against Ohio State at Madison Square Garden in New York. Tipoff is at 7 p.m.

UMass (25-10) overcame three straight double-digit deficits to reach the final; trailing by 22 points against the Orange, 12 against the Zips and by 10 versus the two-time defending NCAA Champion Gators.

The Minutemen have their work cut out for them if they hope to pull off the same second-half magic against Ohio State (23-13), as the Buckeyes are 17-3 this season when leading at the half and a perfect 21-0 when up with five minutes remaining.



"That is not something that you want to keep relying on," UMass coach Travis Ford said at Wednesday's pre-game press conference at MSG, referencing the recent comebacks. "These guys know that if that happens they can come back, but that is not a situation you want to put yourself into.

"I think it is important we get off to a better start because of Ohio State's aggressive nature," he added. "The only thing you can control is how hard you play."

Ohio State's trip to the finals of the NIT hasn't had the same drama as UMass's, but that's fine with the Buckeyes. Led by star senior point guard Jamar Butler and freshman center Kosta Koufos, they have beaten all four teams in their path (UNC Asheville, California, Dayton and Mississippi State) by at least 11 points.

"They are a team that is big and physical at every spot," Ford said about Ohio State. "They are a team that really relies on their physical makeup and they play really hard. It should be an

See M HOOPS on page 9

Luke Bonner and the Minutemen have the opportunity to do something no UMass basketball team has done before – win a national championship, albeit the NIT. They play Ohio State tonight at Madison Square Garden in New York. Tip off is set for 7 p.m.

Milligan overlooked until breakout game

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

UMass Basketball

Opposing coaches often mention how important it is to stop Gary Forbes and Chris Lowe when playing the Massachusetts men's basketball team.

They rarely seem to discuss Dante Milligan, except after games when the senior center has a game-changing, double-double performance.

Milligan's 17 point, 12 rebound outburst on Tuesday night in the National Invitation Tournament semifinals against Florida is one of many recent examples.

"I thought Milligan was a definite difference up front," Florida coach Billy Donovan said after the 78-66 loss. "I thought he had a really special game."

UMass will likely need another such performance from Milligan tonight against Ohio State in the NIT Championship game. The Minutemen must contend with 7-foot Kosta Koufos down low, and may have to do so with reduced services from the hampered Tony Gaffney.

Gaffney played just four minutes against Florida. He had an emphatic slam dunk for his only field goal, but didn't appear to be 100 percent in his brief stint. Luke Bonner played 11 minutes in place of Milligan. He had no points but had seven rebounds.

NOT-SO-FREE THROWS

If someone other than Ohio State's Jamar Butler is shooting free throws during tonight's game, the results may not please UMass coach Travis Ford or Buckeyes coach Thad Matta.

Both teams have struggled all season long at the foul line, with UMass shooting at a 67 percent clip and Ohio State slightly ahead at 68.5. Without Butler's stellar free-throw shooting (82-of-87 for 94.3 percent), that number dips down to 63.7 percent.

With the way Ohio State plays offensively, they rarely even get to the foul line. Despite the Minutemen's struggles there, they have actually made more free throws (582) this season than the Buckeyes have even attempted (553).

All five UMass starters have attempted at least 110 free throws, while no Buckeye has taken more than 94.

IN THE NIT

It's not as prestigious as the NCAA Tournament, but both teams have some history in the NIT.

Tonight's matchup with UMass marks the third appearance for Ohio State in the NIT Championship game, and eighth overall in the NIT. The Buckeyes

See NIT on page 9

Big step for UM, step up for Ford

Michael King

The Massachusetts men's basketball team is one victory away from winning the 2008 National Invitational Tournament.

Great. But what does that mean?

Make no mistake; UMass is not playing for a national championship. Though an NIT win would mark an impressive accomplishment for the program, it doesn't carry the same satisfaction as qualifying for the NCAA Tournament, according to the Minutemen.

The team certainly proved its resolve by turning the frustration of not making the NCAA Tournament into a respectable run in this lesser championship. But all year the Minutemen preached that their primary goal was to qualify for the NCAAs. That sentiment was highly prevalent among the team's three fifth-year seniors, especially captain Gary Forbes.

There's no question that the team's run through the NIT has been outstanding for the program from an exposure perspective.

But that extra exposure may come at a price.

UMass coach Travis Ford largely considered to be one of the premier young coaches in the game – may upgrade jobs shortly after tonight's game, win or lose. Even before the team's NIT success, rumors flew about a possible return to his southern roots in the Southeastern Conference.

Ford's name has been thrown around for a number of openings, including South Carolina, Providence and Marquette. In fact, there was some speculation last year that Ford would be a candidate for the Kentucky opening. Since the Minutemen started rattling off several impressive non-conference wins early this season, many have speculated about possible destinations for Ford after the season.

In reality, these reports may be nothing more than rumors.

According to ESPN's Pat Forde, UMass coach Travis Ford may be leaving after this season to coach at LSU, an SEC rival of Kentucky, where Ford played his college ball.

But consider this: yesterday morning, ESPN's Pat Forde reported that Travis Ford will most likely be named the men's basketball coach of the Louisiana State Tigers.

"To reiterate, I had two people in the game tell me the deal is '90 percent' likely to happen," Forde wrote on ESPN.com yesterday afternoon.

Meanwhile, Dan Parker of the private company LSU hired to aid its coaching search denied Forde's report, according to Jim Kleinpeter of The Times-Picayune of New Orleans. Parker said that that no interviews have been held, nor have any offers been extended.

See KING on page 9

COLLEGIAN
WEEKEND EDITION

FRI H:39 | SAT H:28 | SUN H:33 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 2008

By Michael King
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK – In a season that was about exceeding expectations for the Massachusetts men's basketball team, the Minutemen fell just short of winning a championship in 2007-08. Ultimately, the team's season and run through the National Invitation Tournament ended Thursday night at Madison Square Garden. UMass (25-11) fell in the NIT finals, 92-85,

Ohio State	92
UMass	85

See BASKETBALL on page 17

INSIDE:

FEATURES
Campus Center activism
Page 6

EDITORIAL OPINION
Greaney on: Facebook stereotypes
Page 8

ARTS & LIVING
Students showcase skills in Van Meter
Page 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 114

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Mike Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szajgin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McInnyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS ALMS LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
S.P. Sullivan

COPY EDITOR
Domenic Poli

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
Lief Walcutt

Graduates kick off centennial

By Kate Olesin
Collegian Staff

Though the University of Massachusetts has been around since 1863, its graduate school is just celebrating its 100th anniversary.

The graduate school kicks off its centennial with a series of alumni colloquia and presentations titled "A Century of Scholarship, 1908-2008," on Wednesday, April 9.

In the Campus Center, from 10 a.m. to 4:45 p.m., graduates representing the different schools and programs with advanced degree programs and the W.E.B. DuBois Library will speak on topics related to their fields.

The graduate school, established in 1908 by the Board of Trustees of Massachusetts Agricultural College, has 5,700 students in 73 masters and 52 doctoral programs.

Michael Blakey, an alumnus of the College of Social and Behavioral Sciences, will give a talk titled, "The Idea of Race and Nature Politic." Blakey is currently a professor of American studies at the College William and Mary and a National Endowment for the Humanities professor of anthropology.

Priscilla Clarkson, the current dean of Commonwealth College, and representing the School of Public Health and Health Sciences will give a lecture titled "My Last Lecture: Ten Things that Really Matter."

Dev Gupta, the CEO of NewLANS, a firm developing high-speed, wireless data transmission is an alumnus of the College of Engineering. His talk is titled "Built to Last."

Rajan Varadarajan, an alumnus of the Isenberg School of Management is giving a speech titled "Global Outsourcing of Goods and Services: Business Decisions in the Face of Public Denouncements and Disapprovals."

Varadarajan comes from Texas A&M University and is the associate dean for research and doctoral programs, distinguished professor of marketing, and the Ford Chair in marketing and E-Commerce.

Representing the College of Natural Sciences and Mathematics is David J. Mazzo, speaking about "From Classroom to Boardroom: One Analytical Chemist's Journey." Currently, Mazzo is the President and CEO of Aeterna Zentaris Inc., a biopharmaceutical company.

Also speaking will be an alumnus from the College of Humanities and Fine Arts, Gennaro Chierchia currently at Harvard University where he holds the Hiias Foundations Chair of Linguistics. His talk in titled "Logic and Grammar: How Language and Reasoning Shape Each Other."

Neel Anderson, an alumnus of the College of Natural Resources and the Environment will give a talk about "Perspectives of Research Careers." Anderson is the vice president of the Worldwide Technical Insights organization of the Pepsi-Cola company.

Homer "Skip" Meader II, a W.E.B. DuBois scholar, is the senior area director for National Evaluation Systems, a division of Pearson Education Inc. He represents the campus library system and the School of Education and talking about "The University's Archives: Inspiration from Days Gone By."

Deborah J. Kenny a graduate from the School of Nursing will give a talk titled "Military Nurses Making a Difference: Diffusion of Military Research into Civilian Nursing Practice." Kenny is a lieutenant colonel in the U.S. Army Nurse Corps and is currently serving at the Uniformed Service University in Bethesda, Md.

The colloquia are free and open to the public.

Kate Olesin can be reached at kolesin@dailycollegian.com.

The Graduate School at UMass celebrates its 100th anniversary this month.

Cell division discovery at UM

A University of Massachusetts professor has taken a play out of building contractors' playbooks.

Dr. Maura C. Cannon, Research Associate Professor of Biochemistry and Microbiology, and a team of researchers from Ohio University and the University of Sussex, England, recently published the results of a study on plant cell division in the Feb. 12 issue of The Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences.

Cannon and her colleagues found that during cell division, a process about which little is known, structural proteins form microscopic scaffolding to construct walls in nascent cells.

"Plant cell walls are the most abundant biomass on Earth," Cannon said in a statement. "If we know how the cell wall assembles, we can exploit this information to engineer plants with cell wall structures that are commercially desirable."

Better understanding of the process of cell division may prove beneficial to the development of biofuels such as ethanol derived from plant cellulose.

The field of nanotechnology also stands to gain from the findings of Cannon and her colleagues.

"The structural proteins in plant cells know how to self-assemble. They do it all the time. Since the most abundant proteins on Earth can self-assemble, we should be able to figure out how the process works," she said. "Such knowledge will be fundamental to the success of the emerging nanotechnology industry."

Cannon and graduate students Qi Hall and Yumei Wang selected the flowering weed Thale Cress, or Arabidopsis thaliana, a member of the mustard family prevalent in North America for their research. Thale Cress was the first plant to have its entire genome mapped by scientists, with an available library of mutated copies of every gene. The specimen they studied contained a mutation in a gene called RSH, which resulted in embryos with malformed cell walls.

Cannon's research, however, can be applied to any plant, as the cell walls of all plant species are composed of the same structural proteins.

—S.P. Sullivan

Professors combine forces

By Ben Williams
Collegian Staff

Two professors from different departments have received nearly $1 million to create a powerful new biology research tool.

For years, engineers have been using a tool called "finite element modeling" to digitally simulate how their constructions will act under different conditions, such as a bridge in the wind, or a car bumper during a collision.

Now engineering professor Ian Grosse and biologist Betsy Dumont are applying the same technology to the skulls of gorillas and wings of birds, among other things.

"The twist with biological systems is that we're really trying to reverse-engineer what evolution has already come up with," said Dumont in a statement.

Grosse and Dumont hope their program, called Biomesh, can help research how animals evolved.

"This method is now being used by biologists to see how biological systems have been optimized for their particular use," said Grosse. "Things such as stresses in bone structures, fluid flow in arteries, and strain of hearts muscles, even how cell walls deform under forces."

"Imagine someone wants to know how forces are transferred in a bird skull relative to a reptiles, because the two are evolutionary related, you'd be able to download both [models] to compare those two things," said Dumont. "The strength is in having the same bones from many different kinds of organisms so you can make comparisons."

The program will be the first of its kind. While there are other Web sites that offer detailed visual reconstructions of biological systems, Biomesh is unique in offering mathematical models that can be tested according to the users needs.

While the program is being developed primarily for studying evolution, Grosse and Dumont say it could have practical applications outside of biology.

"The first is more information about biological things, but you never can tell what practical applications that it will lead to, which is part of the reason the NSF supported us," said Grosse.

"Biologist think mostly about the evolution part, but entirely possible that this could be expanded into orthopedics for example, models of elbow joints that people could come in and use," said Dumont.

"What we've proposed developing, we like to think of it as community garden; you plant seeds and share the garden with the community," said Grosse. "We're proposing digital repository of models and seeding it with models of common biological systems and structures, and then inviting [the] worldwide community of biologists to contribute, like a Wikipedia of models."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

Smoking addiction becomes biological

By Seth Borenstein
Associated Press

WASHINGTON – Scientists have pinpointed genetic variations that make people more likely to get hooked on cigarettes and more prone to develop lung cancer – a finding that could someday lead to screening tests and customized treatments for smokers trying to kick the habit.

The discovery by three separate teams of scientists makes the strongest case so far for the biological underpinnings of nicotine addiction and sheds more light on how genetics and lifestyle habits join forces to cause cancer.

"This is kind of a double whammy gene," said Christopher Amos, a professor of epidemiology at the M.D. Anderson Cancer Center in Houston and author of one of the studies. "It also makes you more likely to be dependent on smoking and less likely to quit smoking."

A smoker who inherits these genetic variations from both parents has an 80 percent greater chance of lung cancer than a smoker without the variants, the researchers reported. And that same smoker on average lights up two extra cigarettes a day and has a much harder time quitting than smokers who don't have these genetic differences.

The researchers disagreed on whether the variants directly increased the risk of lung cancer or did so indirectly, by causing more smoking.

The three studies, funded by governments in the United States and Europe, are being published Thursday in the journals Nature and Nature Genetics.

The scientists studied the genes of more than 35,000 white people of European descent in Europe, Canada and the United States. Blacks and Asians will be studied soon and may yield different results, scientists said.

They aren't quite sure if what they found is a set of variations in one gene or in three closely connected genes.

The gene variations, which govern nicotine receptors on cells, could eventually help explain some of the mysteries of chain smoking, nicotine addiction and lung cancer. These oddities include why there are 90-year-old smokers who don't get cancer and people who light up an occasional cigarette and don't get hooked.

"This is really telling us that the vulnerability to smoking and how much you smoke is clearly biologically based," said psychiatry professor Dr. Laura Bierut of Washington University in St. Louis, a genetics and smoking expert who did not take part in the studies. She praised the research as "very intriguing."

The smoking rate among U.S. adults has dropped from 42 percent in 1965 to less than 21 percent now.

The new studies are surprising in that they point to areas of the genetic code that are not associated with pleasure and the rewards of addiction.

That may help explain why some people can quit and others fail, said Dr. Nora Volkow, director of the National Institute of Drug Abuse in Bethesda, Md., which funded one of the studies.

"It opens our eyes," Volkow said Wednesday. "Not everyone takes drugs for the same reason. Not everyone smokes cigarettes for the same reasons."

One clue is in the location of the just-discovered variants, on the long arm of Chromosome 15, Volkow said. It is in an area that, when damaged during tests on animals, makes them depressed and anxious. While some people smoke because it helps them focus or gives them a physiological reward, others do it to stave off depression.

That suggests that adding antidepressants to some smokers' treatment could help them kick the habit.

Bierut said a simple, inexpensive test could be developed to screen people for the variants. Kari Stefansson, lead author of the largest of the three studies, agreed. He is chief executive of deCode Genetics of Iceland, which already does prostate cancer genetic tests.

Such testing could carry risks all its own, bioethicist Arthur Caplan of the University of Pennsylvania warned. People who have been found to have a genetic predisposition to addiction and lung cancer could find it harder to get health or life insurance, or their employer might drop their coverage, he said.

"The good news is that getting these risk estimates will help focus anti-smoking campaigns, and some people will want to voluntarily get into anti-addiction programs early, where they will probably work better," Caplan said in an e-mail. But if such testing is done, it should be voluntary, and the results should be kept private, he said.

Smoking-related diseases worldwide kill about one in 10 adults, according to the World Health Organization.

Smokers who get the set of variants from only one parent see a risk of lung cancer that is about one-third higher than that of people without the variants. They also smoke about one more cigarette a day on average than other smokers. This group makes up about 45 percent of the population studied.

Smokers who inherit the variants from both parents have nearly a 1-in-4 chance of developing lung cancer. Their cancer risk is 70 to 80 percent higher than that of smokers without the genetic variants. They smoke on average two extra cigarettes a day. This group accounts for about one in nine people of European descent.

Smokers who don't have the variants are still more than 10 times more likely to get lung cancer than nonsmokers. Smokers without the variant have about a 14 percent risk of getting lung cancer. The risk of lung cancer for people who have never smoked is less than 1 percent, said another study author, Paul Brennan of the International Agency for Research on Cancer in Lyon, France.

Brennan and Amos, working on different teams, linked the genetic variation itself – when triggered by smoking – directly to lung cancer. Brennan said the nicotine receptors that the variants act on also can stimulate tumor growth.

But Stefansson said the increased lung cancer risk was indirect – the variants led to more smoking, which led to more cancer.

For Stefansson, the research hits home. His father, a smoker, died of lung cancer. And Stefansson, who doesn't smoke, frequently lectures his 23-year-old daughter "who smokes like a chimney." She acts as if she is immortal and smoking can't kill her, Stefansson said. But his own research shows that her genes are probably stacked against her.

Scientists have narrowed down genetic variations which make people more likely to be addicted to smoking.

Need Experience?

Located in the Campus Center Basement.

What:
Business Manager
Where:
The Daily Collegian
When:
Next Year

All majors accepted!

If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.

Now Accepting Applications!

Officials propose to release prison convicts, funds lacking

By Ray Henry
Associated Press Writer

PROVIDENCE, R.I. – Lawmakers from California to Kentucky are trying to save money with a drastic and potentially dangerous budget-cutting proposal: releasing tens of thousands of convicts from prison, including drug addicts, thieves and even violent criminals.

Officials acknowledge that the idea carries risks, but they say they have no choice because of huge budget gaps brought on by the slumping economy.

"If we don't find a way to better manage the population at the state prison, we will be forced to spend money to expand the state's prison system – money we don't have," said Jeff Neal, a spokesman for Rhode Island Gov. Don Carcieri.

At least eight states are considering freeing inmates or sending some convicts to rehabilitation programs instead of prison, according to an Associated Press analysis of legislative proposals. If adopted, the early release programs could save an estimated $450 million in California and Kentucky alone.

A Rhode Island proposal would allow inmates to deduct up to 12 days from their sentence for every month they follow rules and work in prison. Even some violent offenders would be eligible but not those serving life sentences.

A plan in Mississippi would offer early parole for people convicted of selling marijuana or prescription drugs. New Jersey, South Carolina and Vermont are considering funneling drug-addicted offenders into treatment, which is cheaper than prison.

COURTESY SXC HU

Midwest lawmakers are considering a budget proposal which would shorten the prison terms of thousands fo convicts – some of them dangerous.

The prospect of financial savings offers little comfort to Tori-Lynn Heaton, a police officer in a suburb of Providence whose ex-husband went to prison for beating her. He has already finished his prison term, but would have been eligible for early release under the current proposal.

"You're talking about victim safety. You're talking about community member safety," she said. "You can't balance the budget on the backs of victims of crimes."

But prisons "are one of the most expensive parts of the criminal-justice system," said Alison Lawrence, who studies corrections policy for the National Conference of State Legislatures. "That's where they look to first to cut down some of those costs."

Rhode Island Corrections Director A.T. Wall was not sure how many prisoners could be freed early. The payoff for doing so may be relatively small: less than $1 million for the first fiscal year, although that figure would increase over time.

In California, where lawmakers have taken steps to cut a $16 billion budget deficit in half by summer, Gov. Arnold Schwarzenegger proposed saving $400 million by releasing more than 22,000 inmates who had less than 20 months remaining on their sentences. Violent and sex offenders would not be eligible.

Laying off prison guards and making it more difficult to send parole violators back to state prison would account for part of the savings.

Law enforcement officials and Republican lawmakers immediately criticized Schwarzenegger's proposal, which would apply to car thieves, forgers, drunken drivers and some drug dealers. Some would never serve prison time because the standard sentence for those crimes is 20 months or less.

"To open the prison door and release prisoners back into communities is merely placing a state burden onto local governments and will ultimately jeopardize safety in communities," said Fresno Police Chief Jerry Dyer, who could see 1,800 inmates released in his area.

In Kentucky, which faces a $1.3 billion deficit, lawmakers approved legislation Wednesday to grant early release to some prisoners. Initial estimates were that the plan could affect as many as 2,000 inmates and save nearly $50 million.

If the governor signs the bill, the exact number of prisoners would be determined by prison officials. Violent convicts and sexual offenders would be exempt.

Gov. Steve Beshear has said Kentucky must review its policies after the state's inmate population jumped 12 percent last year — the largest increase in the nation.

Kentucky spends more than $18,600 to house one inmate for a year, or roughly $51 a day. In California, each inmate costs an average of $46,104 to incarcerate.

The prison budget in Mississippi has nearly tripled since stricter sentencing laws took effect in 1994.

To curb spending, lawmakers have offered a bill to make about 7,000 drug offenders in prison eligible for parole. A second proposal would allow the parole board to release inmates convicted of selling marijuana and prescription drugs after serving just a quarter of their sentences. Currently, they must serve 85 percent of their terms before release.

Michigan is trying to speed up the parole process for about 3,500 inmates who were convicted of nonviolent, nonsexual offenses, or who are seriously ill.

Barbara Sampson, chairwoman of the Michigan Parole Board, said early release often makes sense, especially for low-risk offenders who get help rebuilding their lives.

"Getting that prisoner back to the community so that he can stay connected to his family, getting him back into the work force... that's a positive thing," she said.

But not everyone is sold on the idea.

"Economics cannot be the engine that drives the

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?

KAMINS

SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS

- PRESIDENTIAL APTS
- COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
- PERRY APTS
- 177 N. PLEASANT ST.
- COLLEGE INN APTS
- LANTERN COURT APTS
- MILL HOLLOW
- CRESTVIEW APTS.

55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST

LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Post it on dailycollegian.blogspot.com

Myspace revamps music pages for selling tunes

Web site unveils new music store

By Alex Veiga
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES – MySpace, which has lured millions of big acts and garage bands alike to build profiles on the popular social networking hub to attract fans, said Thursday it will turn those pages into portals for selling music, merchandise and more.

Helping back the new MySpace Music are three of the biggest recording companies – Vivendi SA's Universal Music Group, Sony BMG Music Entertainment and Warner Music Group Corp.

Financial terms of the partnership were not disclosed, but each of the music companies will receive an unspecified equity stake in the new company, said Chris DeWolfe, MySpace co-founder and chief executive.

The fourth-largest music company, EMI Group PLC, is not part of the deal.

DeWolfe said MySpace is in licensing talks with "everyone" but declined to say where discussions stand with EMI, home to artists such as Coldplay and Norah Jones.

MySpace Music, which will roll out gradually in coming months, will enable artists to sell music downloads, concert tickets and merchandise such as T-shirts through their profile pages and to offer ringtones through a unit of MySpace parent News Corp.

"We believe that the Web is becoming increasingly more social," DeWolfe said during a conference call. "MySpace Music is a new way of experiencing music online that everyone can participate in."

Fans also will be able to stream audio and video for free through musical artists' profile pages.

DeWolfe said some tracks will be sold without copy-protection safeguards but noted that the major labels had committed only to experimenting with offering content in an unrestricted format.

Selling music without the copy protections that make such tracks incompatible with Apple Inc.'s iPod music players could place MySpace Music in direct competition with existing digital music stores such as Apple's iTunes, Amazon.com, Napster Inc. and others, analysts said.

"It's definitely got a lot of potential to it, but how much it really changes the game is yet to be determined," said Michael Gartenberg, vice president and research director for JupiterResearch. "This is one of those important events in the history of digital music and it has a lot of potential going forward."

MySpace may also be looking for ways to maintain its lead on rival social network Facebook, which has been gaining in popularity.

James McQuivey, digital music analyst for Forrester Research, noted that the venture is wisely aiming to serve as a one-stop portal for music fans.

"A MySpace music store is exactly the right step to get the music industry to the next level because it recognizes that consumers don't just buy music, they experience it... That's what people do with music already on MySpace, it's what has made Last.FM and iMeem.com so popular so quickly," he said.

The company declined to discuss pricing or other revenue details.

In 2006, MySpace began letting artists sell music from their profile pages using a third-party technology, but that capability never was integrated into the site the way MySpace Music's storefront will be, DeWolfe said.

MySpace, which boasts more than 110 million monthly users, has more than 5 million profile pages showcasing major label artists, independents and unsigned acts. All those artists would eventually be able to take advantage of MySpace Music's offerings, the company said.

MySpace Music will operate as a separate company, with a president who reports to DeWolfe and to a board of directors that will include representatives from the recording companies.

MySpace had been discussing the venture with music companies for several months, during which MySpace and Universal Music overcame a major hurdle – a copyright infringement lawsuit Universal brought against MySpace in 2006 over alleged illegal music sharing.

The two companies settled the dispute when MySpace agreed to pay Universal $100 million, according to a person familiar with the settlement who spoke on condition of anonymity because the terms are confidential.

Sony BMG is a joint venture of Sony Corp. and Bertelsmann AG.

Shares of Warner Music rose two cents to close at $5.81. News Corp. shares rose 17 cents to $20.17.

MySpace Music will be a seperate company from MySpace, and will sell both songs and merchandise on-line.

4 + 5 April | 2008

GLOBAL EYES

A Smith College symposium

new ways of seeing art

to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art

4 April | 5:30 PM

5th Annual Miller Lecture in Art and Art History

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons | contemporary artist

Wright Hall | Weinstein Auditorium | Smith College

FREE and open to all

5 April | 8:30 AM – 5:30 PM | Symposium

REGISTRATION REQUIRED

Detailed information + registration:

www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes

or 413.585.2760

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART

Life during wartime

A local woman's fight for peace

By Frank Godinho
Collegian Staff

Every Wednesday morning since 1996, political activist Dade Singapuri can be seen setting up her table, adorned with fliers and posters, in the University of Massachusetts Campus Center to spread her message of peace and social justice to college students.

A resident of Amherst since 1977, Singapuri has used her proximity to the five colleges to reach out to the students and community simultaneously. On the UMass campus, a place where tens of thousands of people go about their business every day, she said she has had an opportunity to reach out to tomorrow's leaders.

"I love meeting young people. I feel more alive here. Your minds are wide open, and you haven't solidified into your prejudices yet. You're inquiring and you're thinking," said Singapuri.

Since childhood, Singapuri has been one to think outside the box. She said her strong beliefs and ambitions, along with a core set of social values, have shaped her to become the woman she is today.

Each Wednesday, Singapuri sets up her table in the Campus Center concourse and offers those who stop by an array of newspaper articles and clippings that cover issues often ignored by the mass media. These articles cover political, social, economic and environmental issues of which she believes all students should be aware.

She's not trying to sell anything, and she's not paid to be here either. And though she doesn't have to be here, she said it's her passion for standing up to our politicians and her genuine concern for what students think about the issues that keep her motivated to come back.

Born in 1933 and raised in the quaint United States-Mexico border town of Del Rio, Texas, Singapuri always felt like she never quite fit in.

"In my town, the main entertainment was gossip. It was deadly and extremely racist. You were either Mexican, with condescension, or you were an Anglo. Right away, I knew that the only ticket out of there was an education," she said.

But long before embarking on her college career, she was an avid reader. Learning more about the world than the average adult, by the age of 10 her favorite books were about other nations, their cultures, governments and history.

"It drives me crazy that we don't teach history well in this country," she said.

After high school, Singapuri left her hometown to go to college, where she obtained a degree in zoology at the University of Texas at Austin. However, Singapuri longed for more in life and decided to leave Texas behind her.

"There was just nothing to do in Texas so I decided to move to Chicago. I wanted to be in a big city," she said. And for the next eight years, that's where she stayed.

A life-altering moment, after Singapuri lived in Chicago, was her impulsive decision in her life to travel around the world, she said.

"I didn't have the money for it, [but] managed to travel the cheapest way. I hitchhiked through Europe, and eventually wound up in Singapore, where I met the man who I'd later marry," she said.

According to Singapuri, your whole life's perspective changes when traveling around the globe, particularly when visiting countries in the Third World.

"Traveling is one of the most educational things you can do," she said.

While promoting her message of peace and social justice to the community, she advocates an end to the war in Iraq.

Signs declaring, "Abolish the War," and "Justice for Peace," can be clearly seen hanging on her Campus Center table. Outraged with how the war in Iraq doesn't seem to have an end in sight, she is particularly angry with some of the consequences it has had on us as a nation.

"I'm unhappy about the direction that we're going, in this world," she said.

And Singapuri is not only frustrated with the direction the United States is heading as a country, but also frustrated with the operations of the U.S. military.

"Our military exists only to serve our corporations. This has been going on since the 1820s or '30s. When Andrew Jackson was president, he sent Marines all over Central and South America, and those countries opened up to corporations like the United Fruit Company, and others that existed back in those days," she said.

"We called it our sphere of influence, but it was [really] to take over any government that didn't want us taking over their resources."

This idea of the military being run by corporations is what she calls a "corporatocracy," rather than a democracy. She said in the book, "Confessions of an Economic Hit Man" by John Perkins, he describes how our corporations sent people all over the world.

Activist Dade Singapuri, a Campus Center concourse staple, can be seen advocating peace and social awareness every Wednesday.

These corporations would invade other countries and claim the resources as their own and when countries disagreed with us, we would overthrow their governments and kill their leaders, Perkins said in his book. Singapuri believes this book is one of the ways young people can learn more about the lack of justice in this world.

At her table, Singapuri encourages students to debate and have discussions about issues such as these. She can be very opinionated about how she feels on certain issues, but she said it is only because she feels so strongly about them.

As far as Singapuri's views on Iraq are concerned, it all comes down to the issue of resources, particularly oil.

"If we were a just nation, we would talk to these people and say, 'We'd like to have your oil, we'd like to have your tin and we'd like to have your copper. What can we pay you? Let's negotiate,'" she said. "That way your people can have lives and we can make a profit. But we don't because capitalism is a cancer, a growing cancer."

Another frightening thing about our country right now that our economy is failing, she said. "It can't help but fail when you don't put your people to work and you don't give them the social services they need, like health care and education."

And while many of these government failings are on a grand scale, such as rising gasoline prices, Singapuri said citizens see smaller problems every day, in the form of goods produced or bought from foreign nations.

"When Bush came to power, gasoline was just $25 a barrel. But now, the price has escalated to $100. Through this inflation, it has caused Saudi Arabia and other oil producing countries to own us," she said.

"Unless everybody, and that means 90 percent of UMass, 90 percent of all the people around this country, does something, the United States is going to continue to go down," she said. "The poor will get poorer while the corporations will get stronger and stronger and ultimately take over.

Now retired, Singapuri dedicates all her free time on research and political activism.

"It's like my religion. I learn so much from being here. People tell me about their lives. I figure, here's something you can do — work for change," she said..

Frank Godinho can be reached at fgodinho@student.umass.edu.

UMass students teaching for change

How Teach For America is improving the lives of adults, children

By Lucas Correia
Collegian Staff

After graduating from the University of Massachusetts in 2006, Teach for America Corps member Stefanie Perry was placed to teach in a first-grade special education; her students were easily distracted and barely able to count to 10 or write their own names.

"The expectations for these students, by all of the adults who had dealt with them previously, were very low," said Perry. "It was heartbreaking to see that they had basically been neglected through their whole kindergarten year."

It turned out what Perry's class, located in a Brooklyn elementary school, needed most was confidence and support. "Coming into the class and telling them that I expected them to succeed seemed to do the trick," she said. "It's been so amazing to watch them grow."

This is the story of one of thousands of college graduates who have participated in Teach For America, a national education outreach program designed to enhance the education of children in low-income neighborhoods.

Teach For America places passionate and determined college graduates in classrooms in low-income school systems in need of teachers.

The organization builds "a diverse, highly selective corps of top recent college graduates and professionals ... who become lifelong leaders in pursuit of educational excellence and equity," said TFA Communications Associate David Nachtweih. "These are our nation's most promising future leaders."

The summer before starting as a Corps member, the participants are subject to a specialized, intensive five-week training session. Members agree to a two-year commitment to the school in which they are placed.

"During their two years, Corps members go above and beyond traditional expectations to ensure that children growing up in low-income areas have more of the opportunities they deserve," said Nachtweih. According to the company's Web site, the primary goal of TFA is to close the educational gap between students of different socioeconomic classes and races.

A study by the National Assessment of Educational Progress reported that 9-year-old students in low-income communities are three grade levels behind those in high-income communities. Half of these students won't graduate from high school by age 18, the study said.

The National Center for Children in Poverty, a research organization at Columbia University that works to benefit the lives of impoverished families, reported that African-American and Latino/Hispanic children are three times as likely to grow up in a low-income area.

According to TFA's Web site, "these disparities also prevent many children of color from truly having equal opportunities in life." Teach For America sees potential in every student regardless of his or her financial situation. They feel all students are entitled to the same opportunities, the site continued.

"While the problem is daunting, we see evidence every day in classrooms across the country that when students in low-income communities are given the educational opportunities they deserve, they excel," said the Web site.

The organization has become a rising trend in the post-graduation decisions of many college students across the nation.

"Our application numbers are on the rise ... It's great to see that more and more young people are excited about taking on this challenge," said TFA recruiter Elena Knappen.

According to Nachtweih, the numbers have gone up significantly. In 2000, over 4,000 students in the United States applied to TFA, 850 of which were accepted. By 2007, the number of applicants had more than quadrupled, with 2,900 accepted out of a 18,000 applicants.

Matt Sloan, TFA campus coordinator at UMass, has noticed this trend at UMass during his two years holding this position. "I have not heard the results from this year yet, but I believe we planned to exceed last year's numbers again," he said.

Christie Jennings, currently a UMass senior, will be a TFA Corps member this fall. She said she saw an opportunity to "[support] myself and [try] to make a difference in an issue that I am passionate about that relates to my studies and that would provide a really great foundation for my future endeavors."

"You can really take an adventure somewhere else and throw yourself out of your comfort zone — for me this time is now," Jennings said. "I know that this experience will not be easy, and I expect that I will become overly emotionally invested, but I think it will help me to grow as a person."

For now, all she knows for sure is that she teach elementary school in Jacksonville, Florida.

"I feel like we all want to change the world. While I know that there is no way I will change the lives of every student I meet over the next two years, I will be completely content knowing that I reached just one," Jennings said.

For Perry, reaching one wasn't enough. With almost her entire class at the age-appropriate reading level, Perry stayed with them, continuing by teaching their second grade class.

"It feels good to be able to show everyone, even the students themselves, what great things my class is capable of. The students that I've had for the past two years mean everything to me," she said. "I've gotten very close to both the students and their families. For me, the achievement gap has faces, names, and an emotional connection. Any fighting that I do to close that gap will be done in the name of these students."

Lucas Correia can be reached at ljcorreil@student.umass.edu.

Stefanie Perry answers questions from students in her class during a geography lesson.

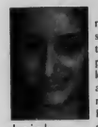
5th Annual
MILLER LECTURE in Art and Art History
IN MEMORY OF DULCY BLUME MILLER, SMITH CLASS OF 1946

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons

Exiled from Cuba and living in Boston, Campos-Pons will speak about her work and experience as an artist of Nigerian descent.

FRIDAY 4 APRIL 2008 5:30 P.M.
WRIGHT HALL, WEINSTEIN AUDITORIUM
SMITH COLLEGE
Free and open to all. No reservations necessary.

SMITH COLLEGE MUSEUM OF ART & MUSEUM SHOP



This program is offered in conjunction with GLOBAL EYES: new ways of seeing art a Smith College symposium to explore how global influences are reshaping our understanding of the meaning of art. April 4-5, 2008. Info and registration www.smith.edu/artmuseum/globaleyes or 413.585.2760

Maria Magdalena Campos-Pons, Cuban 1959- Birth Certificate 1991 Woodcut on amate (bark) paper, carved wood, and etched glass. Purchased with the Dorothy C. Miller class of 1925 Fund in 2007 Photograph by Thomas J. Gustaitis

413.585.2760 www.smith.edu/artmuseum Northampton, MA

EDITORIAL OPINION

Of friends and Facebook

Leigh Greaney

Technology is making us rude. We filter, judge, and stereotype people involuntarily. We can get to know people without getting to know them through their actions. Not only do social networking websites like Facebook and MySpace enable this snobbery, but even the seemingly lesser of the evils, such as iTunes and AIM have stepped up their stereotyping capabilities.

The process of getting to know someone has completely changed. Our parents didn't meet on Facebook or MySpace, and they certainly didn't have most of their conversations in black and white.

They didn't meet their friends by having the same taste of music discovered by their shared iTunes play lists. They actually had to take the time to get to know people rather than scrolling down a page of Facebook bumper stickers to see if they had the same sense of humor.

But maybe we're the lucky ones. Maybe we're saving ourselves time by not wasting time getting to know a person who would just make us cringe at every like and dislike. Much like the success of eHarmony's love matches, maybe we are privileged to have this filtering system so we can focus on people who make our life flourish.

We might be skipping over people who could benefit our lives by clicking them out.

However, maybe it is the opposite that is happening. If we are so willing to judge people based on their taste in literature, music and whether or not they look like they have fun by their Facebook pictures, maybe we're missing something.

We might be skipping over people who could benefit our lives by clicking them out. We might be losing out at the hand of our automatic stereotype system.

As important as similar interests are in any kind of relationship, there is still value in differences. We learn from other people because other people are pieces of ourselves. If we automatically void people from our lives because they are not enough like us, we are doing a disservice to ourselves.

UMass, along with many other large college campuses, tends to structure itself a lot like high school. Unlike small colleges where most of the students have similar interests already, UMass students section off. There seems to be some unwritten code of where you fit in and what type of people you become friends with.

The categories people place themselves in even seem to be judged by living areas. There are the Southwest girls with their Ugg boots, leggings, and their cackling gossip in Berkshire Dining Hall.

There are the Southwest boys with their hair gel and their Timberlands smoking cigarettes outside their dorms arguing whose team is better. There are the Central kids who smoke impressive amounts of weed and park themselves on blankets on the hill with or without shoes.

There are the Orchard Hill kids who for the most part are just like Central kids but have to walk a little further to get home. There are the multi-cultured Northeast residents who are either engineers, mathematicians, or both, discussing global warming and Darfur.

There are the mysterious Sylvan residents who seemingly only talk to their suitemates. Lastly, there are the off-campus residents who are sick of being sectioned off and want to make their own impression absent from where they sleep at night.

While it is still very possible to wear Uggs and leggings and live in Northeast and to be a mathlete living in Southwest, the existence of these categories persists. But how did the message get out that this is the way it is? Was it Facebook group after Facebook group, was it something said in orientation, or is it just the same high school concept that has been dividing people up for ages?

The same concept repeats. We look at people and see what we want to. We see a tie-dye shirt, we think "Central kid," we see a fake tan, we think "Southwest," but why don't we see past that?

We scroll down a Facebook page, we see books, music, activities, but we don't see a soul. You need to have a conversation first to see any glimpse of that.

Whether it's technology that is making us snobby, or whether it is our own prejudice, the bottom line is that it's happening more and more. We section people off in our AIM buddy lists the same way we do in real life.

Everyone has the chosen few who they recognize enough to put on our list, yet we don't talk to them. We just want to see what they're doing. We want to judge them without grounds for judgment.

The only way to cure this cancer is to stop it at the source. Try to free your mind of preconceived notions of what someone is like. Get to know a person before you become their "friend" on Facebook or before you make ignorant comments about someone you've never met in the dining hall.

Put actions and words before appearances. Get to know someone you normally would filter out of your life. Get to know what you have in common with them. Get to know yourself.

Leigh Greaney is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lgreaney@student.umass.edu.

Faith in a new era

Eric Magazu

In a day when American history is rewritten to reflect the fashions of Hollywood and the social engineering projects of the American elite, it is important to reflect upon the values of our wise forefathers, whether they are our ancestors explicitly by blood heritage or implicitly by our common American patriotism.

More importantly, we need to recognize that our freedoms as Americans have never come from governments, constitutions or political leaders, or even by the merits of our devoted forefathers, but by a right knowledge of God and His law.

In a day when many of our friendships are rooted in drinking parties and overnight hook-ups, it is remarkable to learn that the purpose of the law of God is to teach us the right harmony between God and man and between man and man. This instruction of God is designed with wisdom to reconcile the differences between people in order to establish a just social order. Without knowledge of God, there is no chance that a government of men can ever be established with justice, because with the knowledge of God thus man attains a proper understanding of his purpose, which is to bring glory to God at all times and in all places.

Our only hope to remain somewhat faithful to the law of the Lord is to mutually support and reinforce each other.

The second governor of Massachusetts, John Winthrop, who is famous for his invocation of the New Testament notion of a "City upon a Hill," teaches the function of the Law as such, "that every man might have need of others, and from hence they might be all knit more nearly together in the bonds of brotherly affection. From hence it appears plainly that no man is made more honorable than another . . . out of any particular and singular respect to himself, but for the glory of his Creator and the common good of the creature, Man."

Many of us find difficulty when it comes to possessing a sincere belief in God, and this is understandable, because it is the natural state for man to be rebellion against truth. Religious people are perhaps the biggest hypocrites, since they go through all the motions, but they too have weak faith. If there existed any man that truly believed in God, he would react by either a strict and perfect obedience, because if a man believed without doubt, he would dare never transgress the Law, or he would delve into a profound sadness and distress for not being able to keep the Law.

We rarely find either of these reactions among people. This is because, due to our own love of self, and not of God and neighbor, we are blinded to reality. Therefore, our only hope to remain somewhat faithful to the law of the Lord is to mutually support and reinforce each other. In the manner Moses taught us, we shall talk of the Law "when you sit in your house, and when you walk by the way, and when you lie down, and when you rise."

The most essential question of our lives is whether we are right with God. It is a question for which we must find an answer, because there is no other question more important, as upon it rests everything else. There are many false teachings in reference to this question. One such false answer rests with the proposition that a special birthright rooted in national heritage confers a special status before God. While we should all be proud of our ethnic heritage, the notion that by being Irish, for example, makes us right with God is absurd.

Another false answer rests on the notion that belief in a certain narrative or the repetition of certain actions confers upon the bearer a special standing before God.

Unfortunately it seems we are not so lucky that God can be so easily fooled by our schemes. Another idea is that somehow our social and economic advancement prove that God is blessing our behavior. Rashi, the respected Jewish biblical commentator, disputes this by pointing out that God will reward transgressors in this world, so as to cause them to forfeit what reward they might have had in the one to come.

The most seductive false teaching is that one can love God and keep the Commandments and be made right with God. This teaching, unlike the others, is solid; the only problem comes in our ability to live by it. Even if we are diligent in keeping all that is required of the Law, we will fail, because the Law sets a standard much higher than we can imagine.

It would appear that not only is knowledge of the will of God unattainable by our own reasoning ability, but that our route to salvation is unattainable by anything inside ourselves. Therefore it is necessary that each of us never rest until we can answer this most important question, "How can I be assured that I am right with God?"

Eric Magazu is a Collegian columnist He can be reached at emagazu@student.umass.edu.

Firearms on campus: the nation debates

Hannah Nelson

In Louisiana there's a state legislation up for vote that would allow college students and professors to carry handguns in light of the wave of school shootings. This sort of proposal has been tossed around in the past, but now more than ever it's being acted on.

I'm all for the right to bare arms, but this concept can sound frightening in all actuality. Oklahoma's House of Representatives has already passed its bill and is on its way to the Senate, with other states following suite.

Alabama currently allows people 21 and older to possess a permit, but firearms are banned on campuses. The bill to let guns on campus failed there and would have been full of restrictions for students.

The age restriction would have been maintained, students would have to pass a course, be part of ROTC, and have a valid permit. My favorite clause was the restriction on people who have gotten speeding tickets. Also, potential applicants can't be convicted of a felony or misdemeanor.

Louisiana's bill going up for vote is very similar in structure to the Alabama bill. Louisiana would prevent the colleges from making their own school prohibitions against the firearms if it was passed, leaving campuses that don't agree in a tight spot.

Utah students have been carrying concealed guns for the past year. Many students there reference the Virginia Tech shooting as the turning point for feeling unsafe on campus.

Primarily this has been an issue for the larger campuses across the country, which makes for an unsettling reminder for students on a campus the size of UMass.

Other states examining the issue are Alabama, Arizona, Georgia, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Michigan, Ohio, Oklahoma, and South Carolina, with failed action in Mississippi, South Dakota, Tennessee, Virginia, and Washington.

Massachusetts is as liberal as they come, and as a liberal state it is not likely guns will be allowed on campus here anytime soon. (After all, our lawmakers are all too busy making us pay astronomically for health insurance.)

The issue that one representative in Oklahoma addressed was the presence of alcohol on campuses. Campuses are usually the exception in states that allow concealed firearms to begin with, labeled as no-firearm zones.

Should college students be allowed to carry guns?

Arguments on this issue are provided by Students for Concealed Carry on Campus, which incidentally does not have an UMass chapter, but does have 23,000 members across the country.

Their argument is: "College students can already legally purchase firearms, and every state that provides for legalized concealed carry has statutes prohibiting license holders from carrying while under the influence. Legalizing concealed carry on college campuses would neither put guns into the hands of more college students nor make it legal for a person to carry a firearm while under the influence."

The more I think about the issue at hand, the more it makes me squirm to consider the very possibility that someone sitting next to me in a lecture, let alone myself, could have a gun on them legally. It is a responsibility as well as a right.

Though for some of the states getting involved in the debate over whether or not to let their students carry, it is just as much an issue of privilege. The right to carry would be the privilege of a few, namely veterans and ROTC students.

But the thought of legalizing guns on campus to begin with does seem to come across as an encouragement nonetheless. By targeting campuses with legislature it is as if it's reinforcing the feelings of poor safety and security.

If concealed weapons were allowed in all states, then I would be willing to wager that a large number of college students would not carry anyway. The very implication that this legislation could be used as a means to counteract the school shootings, as if it is a feasible remedy is insulting. It's not going to solve the problem.

I actually don't think that this is necessarily a ridiculous concept, but rather one that requires a lot of careful handling.

It has the potential to cause more problems on top of the existing one. A lot of concerns include how police would have to be all the more aware of suspicious student behavior. It may make the few students allowed to carry the guns feel better, but it doesn't make the issue go away or make everyone else feel safer.

I actually don't think that this is necessarily a ridiculous concept, but rather one that requires a lot of careful handling. I am tired of the people who say that lax gun laws and accessibility are the problem.

They are not. It is a structural issue. It is an issue within our society. When it comes down to it, the problem isn't the guns; it's what makes the people turn to the violence in the first place, which is a whole other argument in itself.

Hannah Nelson is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at hnelson@student.umass.edu

1. Stare at space
2. Become enlightened
3. Write to editor

editorial@dailycollegian.com

Students showcase talent in Van Meter

CAITLIN CAGHAN/COLLEGIAN | DESIGN CHRIS MAST

BY JOE STAHL
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On April 2, the basement of Van Meter was jam-packed with students supporting their peers performing acts ranging from stand-up comedy to interpretations of Led Zeppelin.

The Van Meter basement-gone-coffeehouse may have been serving terrible java, but the talent that took the stage was a delight to watch. Run by the Resident Life staff, the show was competently conducted for a casual evening of entertainment.

Beginning at 8 p.m., the hosts gave a warm welcome to the modestly sized crowd, its small size possibly due to contradicting locations noted on posters and fliers advertising the event. Initially, the coffeehouse was scheduled to be in Butterfield hall, the neighboring dormitory.

All of the acts that came out Wednesday had a time slot of approximately five minutes to showcase their potential. Fortunately and sometimes unfortunately, almost every performer exceeded their allotted time, resulting in a three-hour, act-after-act show. For the most part, the crowd remained patient and polite, giving each act due respect.

The performers that brought the most appeal and allure were freshman Two first-year students, Ryan Harrington and Brendan Ryan from Braintree, Mass., needed no microphones when they performed two original songs. Their ban — Lollipop, Lollipop — has previously performed around campus.

"We have been friends since first grade, but I guess we first started playing together in the fourth grade," said Ryan.

Lollipop, Lollipop has been inspired by bands and artists such as The Format, Jason Mraz, Bright Eyes and Nine Days.

"Last semester we performed a lot more than this semester. We try to perform as much as we can," Ryan said.

Heather Waxman, a Van Meter resident with a large fan base, was another musical act that impressed the audience. Waxman opened her act with a break-up ballad, "Almost Lover" by one of her most beloved artists, A Fine Frenzy. After her graceful and tender rendition, she sung an original number, entitled "Sigh."

When asked Waxman's favorite artists and inspirations, she had a difficult time responding. "Oh, boy. Where do I begin? So many artists like Johnny Cash, The Beatles and even Rilo Kiley have inspired me. Everything comes into my music," said Waxman.

Shifting from the Yamaha keyboard that belongs to Waxman and the acoustic guitars belonging to Lollipop, Lollipop, music major Jon Fratt charmed the audience with his smooth and tantalizing saxophone. He had the crowd snapping from the get-go, turning the bland basement into a real coffeehouse atmosphere. Fratt, a Maine resident by way of Brooklyn, is multi-talented. He also plays the piano and clarinet and recently began learning the cello.

See TALENT on page 13

The Source

(the sors) n. key to discovering the weekly happenings of Western Mass.

Friday, April 4

MUSIC

Soul-acoustic musicians Ryan Montbleau Band and folk-rock band Barefoot Truth will be playing at Pearl Street Ballroom at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $12.50 in advance and $15 at the door.

FILM

University Productions and Concerts (UPC) presents a screening of "Sweeney Todd: The Demon Barber of Fleet Street" in the Campus Center Room 101 at 8 p.m. and 10 p.m. Based on the Broadway musical of same name, the movie is directed by Tim Burton and stars Johnny Depp as a barber bent on revenge. This event is free and open to the public. An encore is scheduled for Sunday at 6 p.m. in the Cape Cod Lounge.

Saturday, April 5

MUSIC

In support of his new album "Rain," influential English musician Joe Jackson and his band will be playing at the Calvin Theater at 8 p.m. Tickets prices range from $29.50 to $49.50. Jackson will be supported by soul-jazz singer-songwriter Mutlu.

•

Indie-pop band Minus the Bear perform at Pearl Street Nightclub at 8:30 p.m. Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door. Alaskan musician Portugal. The Man and Boston-based band 27 will be opening the show.

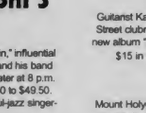
WMHC's "Radio Week Party" will take place from 10 p.m.-1 a.m. in the Blanchard Great Room at Mount Holyoke College. DJs will be spinning music all night, including Michael Jackson's "Thriller," so come dressed appropriately. Tickets are $3 for MHC students, $5 for Five-College students and $7 for the general public.

SPEECH

Former General Wesley Clark and Andrew J. Bacevich, a professor of international relations at Boston University, speak at 1 p.m. in the Johnson Chapel at Amherst College. They will address the issue of a national draft. The event is free and open to the public.

Sunday, April 6

MUSIC



Guitarist Kaki King will be playing in the Pearl Street clubroom at 8:30 p.m. in support of her new album "Dreaming of Revenge." Tickets are $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

FILM

Mount Holyoke College's Jewish Film Festival presents a screening of "The Longing: The Forgotten Jews in South America" from 7 p.m.-10 p.m. in Dwight 101. The event is free and open to the public.

Compiled by Allie Roth, Collegian Staff

COME MEET AND DISCUSS
THE INTERNATIONAL STATE OF THE INCREDIBLE CRANBERRY WITH

JOHN C. DECAS
CEO DECAS CRANBERRY SALES, INC.

The Decas mission is to be the worldwide leader in technologically advanced cranberry-based ingredients for the food, health and nutrition markets.
UMass engineering, food processing and business schools have skills needed with this burgeoning wonder fruit

At 8:00 p.m. on Tuesday, April 8, 2008 in Memorial Hall - FREE and open to all

SPONSORED BY THE STOCKBRIDGE FORUM
FUNDED BY ALPHA TAU GAMMA: THE ACADEMIC, SERVICE AND SOCIAL FRATERNITY OF THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

New Kids: back on the Block

Looking older yet equally as dreamy as they did when they exploded onto the scene over 20 years ago, the New Kids on the Block are expected to officially announce their reunion today.

BY SKYE MCINTYRE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Do you remember your first crush? If it wasn't that boy who incessantly chased you around the playground in first grade, perhaps it was Uncle Jesse, the raven-haired rocker from "Full House" who set your heart a flutter.

Maybe it was doe-eyed Jonathan Taylor Thomas peering at you through the television screen from the set of "Home Improvement" that instantly made you weak in the knees.

For thousands of girls around the world however, it was The New Kids on the Block that evoked starry eyes and high-pitched squeals upon the mere mention of their name.

No need for nostalgia anymore, jumping on the bandwagons for disbanded groups getting together again for no apparent reason are the New Kids, reuniting in celebration of the 20th anniversary of their most popular album "Hangin' Tough."

Yes, you read that correctly. Now dust off your cassette tapes and practice your best thumbs-on-your-belt loops, leg-swinging dance moves. It's time to see if the boys from Boston still have "The Right Stuff."

Earlier this week, it was unofficially announced by several media outlets that Danny Wood, Donnie Wahlberg, Jordan Knight, Joey McIntyre, and Jonathan Knight, the quintet who took female hearts and the music world by storm in the late '80s and '90s, would be getting back together for a national tour.

Though representatives of the men (they're all well into their third and fourth decades on this planet) are keeping mum for now, expect to hear the hysteria-inciting news very soon. Confirmation of the reunion is planned to come straight from the horse's mouth. All five group members are scheduled to appear on the Today Show Friday morning to make the big announcement.

The New Kids, or NKOTB, as they became known in their later, cooler-than-thou, pretty soon we'll change our name into a symbol years, first gyrated their way onto the scene in 1986. The brain child of similarly-marketed group New Edition's founder, Maurice Starr, the New Kids released a self-titled album under Columbia Records and quickly took their act on the road, performing everywhere from school dances to malls.

Their first work was a commercial flop, yet the spunky and adorable adolescents prevailed two years later when they released the heartfelt ballad "Please Don't Go Girl." McIntyre's yearning for the continued stay of an on-the-outs relationship must have resonated with listeners, for the single quickly climbed Billboard's charts and clenched an impressive slot at Number 10.

After several nationally-televised appearances, the boys landed a gig opening for Tiffany, the one-hit-wonder behind the highly-synthesized, drum machine-infused '80s classic "I Think We're Alone Now." By the end of the following year, "Hangin Tough" had gone eight-times platinum, and the heartthrobs from the Bay State were selling multiple music industry records and selling out concert venues from Massachusetts to Montana.

A marketing frenzy ensued, with products ranging from bedding featuring the faces of the group, to lunchboxes, to buttons, to plastic dolls in their likeness, and New Kids fever spread across the nation and the world. Their success rolled over into the next decade, and the money-making prodigies enjoyed fleeting fame.

Like all flashes in the pan however, there came a point when the New Kids jumped the shark. In '94, the New Kids became NKOTB per request of their record label in hopes of revamping their image and helping to sell "Face the Music," a less bubblegum, more mature-sounding album released in the same year. The disc quickly became a drugstore-shelf staple.

That June, while on tour to promote their latest effort, the group abruptly ended their stint on the road and called it quits for what most figured was forever.

Until now, that is.

Though some of the members such as McIntyre, who appeared on Broadway, in a number of television guest spots, and on a season of ABC's reality phenomenon "Dancing With the Stars," have enjoyed minor success after NKOTB came to a screeching halt, the five some had all but faded into obscurity until rumors of a reunion began to swirl in gossip circles earlier this year.

New Kids fans wait no more, it's only a matter of time until you can relive your younger years and behold the beauty that is the New Kids on the Block in person. Look for them in a city near you.

Skye McIntyre can be reached at smcintyre@student.umass.edu.

AASA

PROUDLY PRESENTS

The 25th Annual Asian Night

Around Asia In One Night

Saturday, April 5th, 2008

Fine Arts Center

Heather Park

Solo Artist

John Nguyen

Fine Arts Council

Student Arts Cultural Enrichment Fund (SACEF)

Yuri Kochiyama Cultural Center (YKCC)

Your UMass Alumni Association is a proud sponsor of this event.

Check out the calendar of events at www.UMassAlumni.com

You're Connected to UMASS.

STOP THE SLAUGHTER!

Research proves animals feel pain like we do, can think and feel, and are capable of complex social lives. Yet in the US each year:

- 25 billion animals cruelly raised & brutally slaughtered for unhealthy diets that are destroying our planet.
- Over 100 million lab animals imprisoned & tortured.
- 100's of millions of wildlife killed & wounded for sport.
- Millions of fur animals killed just for vanity.

Animals' lives are a living nightmare. They are routinely branded and mutilated without anesthetic, starved, overcrowded, & killed when still infants. Stress disorders like self-mutilation are common. Most farm & lab animals never see the light of day. Millions of animals are so sick that they are dragged to their deaths. Over 95% are crushed, suffocated, chopped open, or scalded alive while fully conscious. If people treated pets the way these baby animals are treated, they would be arrested.

YOU CAN MAKE A DIFFERENCE.

Massachusetts Animal Rights Coalition is making a difference.

To join MARC or for more info: www.MassAnimalRights.org

Coffeehouse

TALENT from page 10

"I usually perform just within the music department. Back home I play though," said Fratt.

Dylan Murphy was by far the evening's most natural and comfortable performer. The brooding Murphy performed a Dave Mathews Band oldie in which he invited the crowd to sing along. The second number was a cover of Sadcore artist Damien Rice's "Cold Water." He made the number his own with pressing vocals mingled with delicate and wry falsettos.

Wrapping up the night was The Telephone Company. The band urged the crowd to stand, and most complied. Others who decided not to partake in standing with the dancing crowd either sat and watched docilely or realized it was almost 11 p.m. and decided to leave.

When asked about the show, audience member Lunise Joseph said, "It was really good. It's nice to see students perform because living in Southwest, I usually don't get to see this kind of stuff. The turnout was big."

Audience member Katie Davis had some suggestions for future Coffeehouse nights to come. "When the weather gets nice, I think it would be cool for the students to perform outside or something," said Davis.

Overall, the basement of Van Meter was brought alive by the 15 or so performers. It wasn't too bad of a way to spend the hump day.

Joe Stahl can be reached at jstahl@student.umass.edu.

UMass student Chuck Vermette shows off his talent last Wednesday evening in Van Meter.

Energy boosters a sure let down

By Cori Lucius
Collegian Correspondent

College students know all too much about pulling all-nighters and trying to make up for the lack of hours in one day.

For these reasons, it's not surprising that students are the biggest consumers of every kind of "quick-fix" energy booster known to man. According to Simmons research, Red Bull, Monster and Rock Star make up a $3.4 billion a year industry, winning over the hearts of almost 31 percent of United States teenagers.

The United States is choosing not to follow in the footsteps of countries such as Denmark, Norway and France, which have all banned several energy drinks due to a legal limit of caffeine allowed. Names like Cocaine Energy Drink or Jolt may sound thrilling, but when you guzzle down an 8 ounce can of Red Bull or Rock Star what "energy boosting" ingredients do you ingest?

Many do not realize exactly what they are putting into their bodies.

The most common ingredients that provide the energy in these drinks are taurine, guarana, ginseng and the all too popular caffeine. Many manufacturers claim taurine to be a non-hazardous component due to the fact that it's an amino acid that occurs naturally in the body; being added to replace the small amounts lost during physical activity and times of stress. It is also said to alleviate muscle fatigue and allow one to perform better physically.

An 8 ounce can of Red Bull, Monster and Rock Star each contain about 1000 milligrams of taurine alone. It is because of these claims that many athletes will replenish with an energy drink. However, the high amounts of carbohydrates in an energy drink make it hard for the body to absorb the nutrients and fluids, which can cause dangerous dehydration during exercise. The ingredients guarana and ephedrine work to speed up food metabolism, causing food energy to burn faster.

Guarana has the same stimulating effects as caffeine. While it's popular for impairing one's appetite and preventing sleep, it can also lead to higher blood pressure, increased heart rate and more trips to the bathroom then you probably want. Rock Star contains 25 milligrams of guarana, while both Red Bull and Monster include it in an "energy blend."

Then there's caffeine, the stimulant that makes one feel more alert and active. Along with the power to make you feel awake and able to seize the day, it can also be very unpleasant if consumed in excess. Let's put it this way – high levels of caffeine will cause it to act as a diuretic or in general terms a laxative. The more one drinks, the harder it will be to obtain the same effects, leading to more consumption and most likely more trips to the bathroom.

This common ingredient can also cause heart palpitations, increased blood pressure and heart rate, anxiety and the obvious sleep deprivation.

Like taurine, caffeine also causes dehydration and should never be used during exercise. A typical energy drink contains anywhere from 70 to 200 milligrams of caffeine compared to a cup of instant coffee, which has about 80 milligrams. This may not seem like a lot, however, you can see how drinking a coffee in the morning and an energy drink at night may be over-doing it.

Besides all the added energy providing ingredients, these drinks contain loads of sugars. Too much sugar can also act as a laxative and cause one to "crash" after the sugar has left the bloodstream and the energy high has faded.

Athletes certainly don't want to rely on energy drinks or any high-sugar drink before a game or competition. It leaves one feeling nauseous, and the sudden "crash" causes muscles to become weak potentially leading to dizziness or fainting. The original Red Bull contains 110 calories and 27 grams of sugar, Monster has about 100 calories and 26 grams of sugar and Rock Star has about 140 calories and 31 grams of sugar.

Along with the dangers of a racing heart, irritability, and an occasional bathroom stall mishap, there is also a popular practice of mixing energy drinks with alcohol. Since alcohol is a depressant and energy drinks are stimulants, it can sometimes mask how intoxicated one is. This can cause one to feel capable of doing something they shouldn't. In addition, both cause dehydration and will actually lead to a worse hangover. While energy drinks may promise a lot of benefits, it's wise to remember that if something sounds too good to be true, it probably is.

Cori Lucius can be reached at clucius@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY TONY CENICOLA/THE NEW YORK TIMES

Because many college students are short on sleep and high on stress, they often turn to popular energy drinks including Red Bull and Rockstar. Though they provide a temporary rush of adrenaline, the high caffeine and sugar contents in such drinks are detrimental to one's health.

Asian Night

By Christina Fong
Collegian Correspondent

Spring festivities are well underway and The Asian American Student Association will be hosting their 25th Annual Asian Night this weekend. A cultural spectacle, the night will be unveiling a myriad of performances and demonstrations presented by Five-College students.

On April 5, the show will commence at 7 p.m. Advertising and invites through posters and Facebook.com have already been sent to students. While the free food and admissions are attractions for college students, the performances themselves should be enough to attract others from the community. For those not involved with the Asian American community on campus—Asian Night is yet another unfamiliar student affair at UMass.

Performed every year in the Fine Arts Center, Asian Night is a popular celebration of the diverse Asian community on campus and in the general Five-College community. This solely student-organized and student-performed event is already expecting over a thousand spectators, which will consist of current students, alumni and faculty members. The event itself can cater up to 1,900 audience members.

Typical performances done in the past include: traditional and modern dances, singing, hip-hop, stepping and martial arts. Colorful performances, music and costumes are expected. Several of the university's Registered Student Organizations members play a part. A new addition this year will be a fashion show featuring traditional and modern clothing organized by Taiwanese Student Association coordinator Angela Chen.

Another staple of Asian Night are the special guest speakers. Previous guest speakers that have shown up were Asian American artists who discussed their backgrounds in the entertainment industry. Singers, actors, comedians and writers of the past years have all offered amusing and fruitful insights into the world of entertainment and the arts.

This year, AASA has not one, but two special guest speakers lined up for the night. Spoken word artist John Nguyen and solo singer Heather Park have been invited to move the audience to laughter, tears, or cheers, and to spark interest in their performances.

Asian Night is a largely cooperative project with planning and organization beginning at the start of fall semester with the bulk of the work beginning around December. The executive board, which consists of President Will Wong, Vice President Sophia Quang, Treasurer Anthony Bui and Secretary Tiffany Chao, are the main organizers of the night. Stage management and performance coordinators are all required to help the night run smoothly.

AASA began Asian Night in 1983 in the hopes of promoting Asian awareness in the UMass community as both a show and a cultural learning experience. Since then, Asian Night has evolved, encompassing more performances and more variety with each year.

The night is being funded by the support of the UMass community. Contributors include the Arts Council, the Yuri Kochiyama Culture Center, Alumni Association, Office of Programs and Services for ALANA Students and Student Affairs Cultural Enrichment fund.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu.

Ryan Montbleau band to play

Mass natives make their way to Noho

By Matthew Solomon
Collegian Staff

Ryan Montbleau has come a long way from his days of playing the neighborhood bars and coffee shops of Boston.

Last year, fans lined up down the street and around the corner, waiting to buy tickets for his band at the Iron Horse Theater in Northampton. They've averaged over 200 gigs per year as of late, and have been generating the kind of energy that only comes around once in a while. This Friday he'll be moving up in the Northampton IHEG hierarchy when he swings through town with his band, the Ryan Montbleau band, to play the bigger and more danceable Pearl Street Theater.

Although Ryan himself is clearly made for superstardom with his distinct voice and intricate guitar parts, his band will never be caught struggling to keep up. They're extremely tight and all of them are equally talented at their respected instruments.

The Ryan Montbleau Band consists of Matt Giannaros (acoustic/upright bass, electric bass, vocals), Laurence Scudder (viola), Jason Cohen (piano, organ, clavinet, Rhodes, Moog), James Cohen (drums) and last but certainly not least, Ryan Montbleau (guitar and vocals). Ryan blends his beautifully constructed guitar parts with some extremely creative and poetic lyrics. He sings as if his words possess a divine power. As a whole, the band is well balanced and their heart thumping, soul caressing grooves will not let you down.

They draw their sound from a wide variety of influences including Americana, folk, blues, ragtime and '70s R&B/soul. Their sound has emerged from the abyss of the underground Boston music scene as uniquely uplifting and spiritually energizing. They've put out four albums since 2002 which include "Begin," "Stages" (2003), "One Fine Color" (2006) and "Patience on Friday" (2007).

In a typical show, they'll take their fans through the entire spectrum of human emotion. Smiles always seem to spread throughout their crowds like wildfire. They'll leave you feeling spiritually fulfilled and more or less just happy to be alive. When the end of the night rolls around, good vibes will pour out of the theater and give the Pioneer valley a fresh thrust of positive energy.

Another song written by Ryan, entitled "Substitute Teacher Blues" from the album "Stages," is an extremely witty story about Montbleau's days as a substitute teacher at his old high school. He talks about how at that time in his life, he was struggling just to pay the bills. He "basically took abuse from high school kids all day," and then played gigs around the Boston area at night.

He also makes a few comical shout outs in this song to John Mayer. He says when he would get off work, Mayer would be all over the radio. He says he likes Mayer but Mayer says (in one of his songs) "I want to run through the halls of my high school and I want to scream at the top of my lungs."

Well, Montbleau says in response to this, "I do that s everyday!" The Ryan Montbleau band plays tonight at Northampton's Pearl Street Theater. The show is scheduled to begin at 8:30 p.m., tickets are $15 at the door.

Matthew Solomon can be reached at msolomon@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Drawing their sound from a wide variety of influences including Americana, folk, blues, ragtime and '70s R&B/soul, the Ryan Montbleau band is set to play Pearl Street tonight.

Buddy a true stand up Guy

Legendary guitarist still shines

Musician Buddy Guy's recent performance at the Calvin Theater proved despite his age, there is more life in his years than years in his life.

By Peter Rizzo
Collegian Staff

For someone who has already reached his 70th birthday, Buddy Guy sure knows how to bring a crowd to its feet. With almost a half-century of guitar playing under his belt, you would think Guy might be somewhat tired of going on stage and ripping amazing solos every other night. However, when up on stage, Guy's enthusiasm and energy is equal to that of a rambunctious teenager.

Guy wasted no time jumping into his set, which showcased his often humorous and playful take on the blues. The guitarist sweet-talked the crowd and pulled out all the tricks in his bag in order to make the double-decker Calvin Theater as small and comforting as a dusty blues bar in downtown Chicago.

The guitarist is known for his showmanship and did not disappoint. His first major display of theatrics came about halfway into his set when he ventured out into the crowd locked in an epic solo. Not content to merely saunter out and return a few seconds later, Guy circled the entire theater, even going up a flight of stairs and around the balcony without so much as a break in his playing. This gave fans with balcony seats a chance to see the guitarist up close and personal and only served to add to Guy's likeability.

In another display of the guitarist's confidence, he sat down in an empty seat, and continued to play before finally making his way back to the stage. The loose attitude of Guy and his band served to get the crowd on its toes, never quite sure what kind of showmanship Guy might pull out next.

While Guy mostly stuck to his own songs from his vast catalog, he did break into a brief cover of Cream's "Strange Brew" and played a few bars of "Voodoo Chile" with one of his bandmates. This was no ordinary bandmate however. This guest guitarist happened to be less than a third of Guy's age.

The young guitar prodigy joined Guy, after a brief introduction and proved that despite his small stature and young age, he could shred with the best of them. Guy and the young guitarist took turns trading solos and ultimately, proved that age is not a significant indicator of technical prowess. The two shared the spotlight for an extended jam before Guy sent him away with a round of applause and an announcement that his protegee would soon be making his way to daytime television as a guest on Oprah.

Not content to just be a one-man show, Guy actively shared the spotlight with his band, letting his second guitarist take solos and playing a kind of musical "Simon says" with his equally talented pianist. The bassist and drummer did their best to let the others have the spotlight, often playing softly while Guy joked with the crowd, but always doing their best to give him a solid musical platform with which to launch his erratic guitar playing from.

Guy showed everyone in the theater why he is considered one of the best guitarists ever. Wielding a beige Fender Stratocaster, he effortlessly mesmerized the crowd, often breaking out into a solo without a moment's notice. It is easy to see why greats such as Hendrix and Clapton not only looked up to Guy, but were influenced by his over the top guitar playing.

The crowd was audibly enthralled with his performance, often calling out requests for songs and words of praise. As the show ended, and the old blues player left the stage, he did so to a standing ovation from a satisfied crowd.

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu

'Funny Games' neither humorous nor fun

Re-make leaves audience asking why

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Michael Haneke doesn't need your patronage. He doesn't even need your enthusiasm.

All he needs is your attention, for two hours, tops.

The Austrian director revisits the past with his latest release, "Funny Games." A replica of his 1997 work of the same name, the original gained cult status in his native land as a grisly reproach against the use of violence in cinema.

Tim Roth and Naomi Watts star as a bourgeois couple headed for holiday in the updated version of "Funny Games." In tow is their young son, Georgie (Devon Gearhart) and their recently renovated sail boat. As the family makes its way down the Long Island Expressway, listening to a Handel aria, they seem blissfully unaware of the horror which lurks within their idyllic summer reverie.

But we're not. Death metal in the credits and a bold red text give us a sneak peak of what we're in for, long before villainy lends itself to a human form. When it does, it crops up as two preppy sociopaths, as played by Michael Pitt and Brady Corbett.

They approach the family shortly after arrival, asking for eggs but snooping around for more. They ask about the family's dog, and you know to get a little suspicious. They divulge that they crept onto the family's gated property via a hole in the fence, and you know all bets are off after that.

If the plot of "Funny Games" sounds familiar to you, that's because it's meant to be. The plot is standard home invasion fare. But here's the thing — the Farbers' aren't the real targets of "Funny Games." We are.

As a director, Haneke has a history of making big statements with his pictures. His 2005 film "Cache" gathered international acclaim as a treatise on violence, while 2001's "The Piano Teacher" veered into the realm of sadomasochism for eerie effect.

"Funny Games" isn't the exception to the rule. The film kicks off its violent streak with an attack staged against Roth's character. Taken captive, the family demands to know why, but there is no reason. When they continue to push, the assailants tease with the usual motives — unhappy childhood, homosexuality, and bad education, all for laughs.

Violence unfolds within "Funny Games" realistically. Far from glamorizing, acts of violence and torture are depicted with unsympathetic precision. Part of their greater effectiveness is that Haneke allows the most gruesome sights to occur away from the screen.

Cinematographer Darius Khondji ("Delicatessen") helps contrast the film's heavy tones by saturating the set with white light. The effect is endless summer, even in the face of abject terror.

To the characters who find themselves in the middle of so much terror, their actions are often frustrating. Rather than fight back, they prefer to rationalize. Rather than do the smart thing, like head for the hills or find a cell phone, they opt to stay still.

C'mon guys, you may find yourself thinking, what are you, asleep?

Like the absence of motive and back story, the characters' inaction comes off like a deliberate jab against audience expectations. They're sitting back, expecting a back story because there always is one. Later on, they expect a lucky break, not because they're trying to make one, but because it's normally written into the script that way.

The cast handles these obstacles well. Roth comes off strong, even as the character he plays is a simp of the worst order. Pitt is diabolic, giving off a sense of what prep-school psychosis really looks like, while Watts is truly superb. She digs her feet into her character's anguish and doesn't come up for air until the credits roll.

"Funny Games" is an artificial work, and wants its audience to realize as much. Under the guise of art, Haneke has actually presented us with smut. If it weren't for his A-List cast or heavy accent, this tripe wouldn't be ranked anywhere above the torture porn of Eli Roth's "Hostel" franchise. That film gets panned, but at least it wears its amorality on its sleeve.

Haneke's ultimate design in "Funny Games" is to force the audience to feel their own complicity in the violence occurring on screen. His assailants break the fourth wall and alternatively beckon us to take part in the activities, asking us, "What do you think about all this?"

But what we think about all this should be pretty obvious. We've been hit from the get-go with images of innocent people being tortured for sport, from assailants who seem to act without motive or restraint. It's very disconcerting. It's very deliberate.

It's also happens to be a whole lot of bull.

The director could use a refresher lesson from Film Class 101. It's never good form to debase or manipulate the emotions of your audience, nor is it good form to badger your audience with images of non-stop human pain and suffering. We may be Americans, but it doesn't mean that we're desensitized.

Above all, you should never, ever let your audience get the impression that you can't stand them. Not only will it deplete your fan base, but it's also liable to evoke the bitterest of all ires against you, your cast, and the project you've worked so painstakingly on.

Twice.

Yet that's the thing about "Funny Games." It's never on our side, and never wants to be.

As a result, the film is tough to watch and tough to ignore. Maybe it wants to jar some sense into the audience, but mostly, it just feels like an ambush. If challenging the casual consumption of violence were really Haneke's bag, we'd see less bloodlust and more humanity. But Haneke isn't interested in saying anything new about casual violence, instead, he's just interested in punishing us for being there in the first place.

Whether you leave "Funny Games" applauding or retching, one thing's for sure, the finished product is exactly what Haneke intended it to be. Shocking and repulsive, it's a viewing experience that sneaks up into your gut and stays there. Not recommended for the faint of heart or the weak of stomach.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY IMDB.COM

A shot-by-shot re-make of an Austrian film, "Funny Games" leaves little to the imagination. Unfortunately, the film's predictability isn't the only cinematic element it's lacking.

Join The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
UPSTAIRS
AMHERST·BREWING·COMPANY
FOR THE RELEASE OF
The Minute
Presented by Amherst Brewing Company
FEATURING THE ARTS & LIVING OF AMHERST, NORTHAMPTON, AND UMASS
STARTS AT 6PM
BUT YOU CAN SHOW UP WHENEVER.

Koufos's big second half dooms UMass to Ohio State (23-13).

BASKETBALL from page 1

"It's been a great year; it's been a fun year," UMass coach Travis Ford said. "I thought it took one of Ohio State's best efforts to beat us. I'm just disappointed that there's no practice tomorrow. It's no coincidence that when you have great kids, success follows."

The Maroon and White found itself with an uncharacteristic five-point lead at halftime and the team outrebounded Ohio State. But it was the team's failure to defend the frontcourt against the Buckeyes and make open shots that led to its final loss.

In fact that rebounding edge (49-37) allowed UMass to disguise its poor shooting performance. Senior forward Gary Forbes struggled through a 6-for-21 night, including seven missed 3-point attempts. Junior point guard Chris Lowe shot an abysmal 1-for-12 despite registering 10 assists.

The scoring ability of sophomore guard Ricky Harris kept UMass within reach during the second half. He led all scorers with 27 points and earned himself a spot on the NIT All-Tournament team along with senior center Dante Milligan and Forbes.

Though both teams made the same number of field goals, it took UMass 30 more attempts to reach that figure. Without the Maroon and White's 30 offensive rebounds, the margin of victory would have been much greater for Ohio State.

BRIAN TEHRANCHI/COLLEGIAN

Gary Forbes attempts a lay-up during UMass's loss to Ohio State last night.

"Our plan was to let UMass get every offensive rebound and just guard them the second time," Ohio State coach Thad Matta said in jest after the game.

Yet UMass's success on the glass did not translate into excellent low-post defense. In the first half, Milligan (14 points, nine rebounds) successfully adapted the physical play dictated by the officials, holding Buckeye forward Kosta Koufos to one made field goal.

Koufos erupted for 21 points in the second half, earning 2008 NIT Most Outstanding Player honors. Milligan collected his fourth foul with 12 minutes remaining and sat on the bench for the majority of the period. Koufos then took over the game against an overmatched Luke Bonner and a slightly hobbled Tony Gaffney.

"Dante was playing good basketball and it really could have helped us more having him in there down the stretch," Ford said.

UMass scored the most first-half points (41) of any Ohio State opponent this season. However, the Maroon and White scored nine through the first eight minutes of the second. The scoring drought to begin the second half allowed Ohio State to build a nine-point lead by the 10-minute mark.

The Buckeye's halftime adjustments focused on slowing the game down to minimize needless turnovers and look for the best option on offense. On many possessions, Buckeye players found themselves either left wide-open on the wing or with no Minuteman impeding their path to the basket.

Yet it was the team's ability to penetrate into the frontcourt that opened multiple options for Ohio State.

"In the first half, we were very timid inside," Matta said. "We wanted to get on the attack mode. When you play a team like this that takes a lot of chances, the one thing we felt we had to do was drive to the basket."

Defensively, the Minutemen were determined to dictate the tempo of the game from the beginning. UMass hoped to wear down the Buckeyes with an aggressive full-court press, while quickly moving the ball upcourt on offense. The Minutemen made 12 3-pointers, but allowed Ohio State to shoot 53 percent from beyond the arc.

Once the Minutemen tied the game at 68 with 6:19 remaining, they looked to be executing the plan to perfection. However, Koufos scored OSU's next seven points to permanently put the Buckeyes in the lead.

"They withstood a lot of the pressure that we caused on both ends of the court," Ford said. "I thought we gave up too many easy lay-ups that allowed them to rest for a second. We made enough 3s to win the game; we just gave up too many late to allow our style of play to fatigue them."

After another Ohio State run, the Minutemen cut the deficit to five points with 1:44 left. Milligan's reentry into the game was not enough to spark the UMass offense, as the Buckeyes slipped away with the victory.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN TEHRANCHI/COLLEGIAN

Ohio State guard Jamar Butler ties up UMass point guard Chris Lowe during last night's 92-85 Buckeye win. The Minutemen led by five points at halftime but couldn't hold the lead.

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✓ Oct 26th-28th Amherst College Dining Hall
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
Classes start April 11 -13
UMass Campus Center
Amherst, MA
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

Ford, Minutemen pleased with season

By Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

NEW YORK — Heads down.

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Travis Ford and his team walked that way to the locker room following the loss to Ohio State last night in the finals of the National Invitation Tournament.

It was a tough way to end the season for the Minutemen, especially after engineering three straight improbable comebacks just to get there.

After losing a hard-fought and heartbreaking NIT title game, the Minutemen now feel stung for the second time this season. The first came when UMass got the disappointing news on Selection Sunday that it didn't make the NCAA Tournament.

They haven't made one in 10 years. But the Minutemen bounced back from that disappointment and made their longest postseason run in school history.

Last year's team narrowly missed out on the NCAA Tournament as well — and in similar fashion. Consecutive early exits in the Atlantic 10 Tournament likely cost them their shot. And last season seemed like the time for UMass to make the Big Dance, with one of the best frontcourt duos in school history with Stephane Lasme and Rashaun Freeman.

With the loss of those two to graduation — in addition to 3-point threat James Life — the 2007-08 season seemingly had the makings of a "rebuilding" year for UMass. The frontcourt was decimated and Ford had to completely alter the team's style of play because of it.

With the incredibly high-tempo offense newly installed, everyone knew the Minutemen would, at the very least, be fun to watch. Albeit the NIT and not the NCAAs, few could have thought they would be one of the last six teams in the country playing in April.

It usually takes a few years of adjusting to a completely new style of play to pay dividends. But Ford and his group made it work.

"I don't think there's any question that they achieved a lot more than anybody thought [they would] when we started back in October," Ford said. "I can't be [more] proud of a team as I am of these guys."

For seniors Gary Forbes, Etienne Brower and Dante Milligan, the way their careers ended was a major disappointment. But at some point this season they've all talked about leaving the UMass program better off than what it was when they arrived — and they felt they did just that.

"I definitely would have liked it to be better, to be the first team to win a championship, but you can see from the fan support that we made a difference since I've been here," Forbes said. "This has been a great roll."

"I definitely believe that we are leaving the program in better shape than it was, and we can only just hope for the best for the future," added Milligan. "I can't say enough about what coach Ford has done for everybody here at the program. The UMass experience has been great."

Without those seniors next season, UMass loses the Atlantic 10 Player of the Year (Forbes), an emerging low-post presence (Milligan) and a multi-faceted player that contributes in every way (Brower). Similar to this season, fans may expect a drop-off heading into 2008-09.

There will be plenty of talent returning next year. Point guard Chris Lowe is back for his senior season and will likely be a top point guard in the A-10. Ricky Harris was A-10 Most Improved Player of the year and David Gibbs — a highly touted recruit — can help soften the blow of Forbes. Inside play may be a problem, but it was supposed to be this year, and UMass overcame it to reach the NIT finals.

After reflecting on the loss to Ohio State and the entire season in the locker room, Ford and his players walked into the press conference differently — with their heads up.

If you listen to the rumors that Ford will be the next coach at Louisiana State next season (he vehemently denied the rumor after the game, saying he's had no contact with LSU about the job), he may not coach Lowe, Harris or any other Minuteman next season.

Whoever the coach of the Minutemen may be next season, the program is better off now than it was when he got here three years ago.

UMass fans can keep their heads up for that.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

Seniors Dante Milligan and Gary Forbes embrace upon being named to the NIT All-Tournament team after UMass's loss to Ohio State last night.

CINEMARK
The Best Seat In Town
CINEMARK AT HAMPSHIRE MALL
367 Russell St. 413-587-4233
Schedule for Friday 4/04/2008 thru Thurs. 4/10/2008
Purchase Tickets @cinemark.com

(Midnight Show)
Once Upon A Time In The West (PG)*
12:01 am

Leatherheads (PG-13)*
1:15 4:25 7:05 10:00

Nim's Island (PG)*
1:25 4:35 7:00 9:30

The Ruins (R)*
1:45 4:55 7:50 10:10

21 (PG-13)*
1:05 4:05 7:20 10:15

Run, Fat Boy, Run (PG-13)*
1:35 4:45 7:25 10:10

Stop Loss (R)*
1:10 4:15 7:15 10:05

Superhero Movie (PG-13)*
1:20 4:20 7:35 9:50

Drillbit Taylor (PG-13)
1:55 4:30 7:30 10:25

Shutter (PG-13)
1:40 4:50 7:45 9:55

Horton Hears A Who (G)
1:00 4:00 6:45 9:00

10,000 B.C. (PG-13)
7:10 9:45

College Road Trip (G)
1:30 4:10

The Bank Job (R)
1:50 4:40 7:40 10:20

* NO PASSES NO SUPERSAVORS
TICKETS AND INFO AVAILABLE AT CINEMARK.COM

Loss compounded by Ford-to-LSU rumors

Success increases expectation despite loss of Milligan, Brower and Forbes; UMass outrebounds OSU in loss

By Michael King and Eli Rosenswaike
Collegian Staff

UMass Basketball

NEW YORK — In addition to losing in the finals of the National Invitational Tournament, the Massachusetts men's basketball team could also lose its coach. Rumors of UMass coach Travis Ford moving on to the same position at Louisiana State have intensified as the Minutemen made their NIT run.

But immediately after his team's loss to Ohio State, Ford categorically denied any and all rumors about his future.

"We made great strides in UMass basketball this and I'm looking forward to coaching them," Ford said of his players. "I've heard everything that you guys have been hearing, and it's been interesting. It makes me question things — I haven't talked to anybody."

Ford also acknowledged that the thought of upgrading jobs has not yet crossed his mind.

"I haven't even thought about it," Ford said. "But no one has called at this point."

The coach also didn't believe that the discussion of his personal future affected his team's performance, based on the Minutemen's first-half performance.

"No way — we were up five at halftime," he said.

Building on success

Ford hopes that the Minutemen's success this season will translate into more fan support next year.

"I hope that the fans are excited and that they will come out and support this basketball team next season," Ford said. "We really appreciate having all of the fans here at the [Madison Square] Garden."

Ford knows the extra exposure will create pressure to maintain the success of 2007-08 without the three seniors the team will lose to graduation.

"We need to build on this, but it's not going to be easy," Ford said.

"We have some great players leaving with some with some great players returning."

Free-throw shooting

In major college basketball games, free-throw shooting can be the difference between winning and losing. Though the Minutemen shot 67 percent collectively this season from the line, UMass had made more foul shots (582) than Ohio State attempted (470) coming into the game.

During the first half, the Maroon and White connected on all six of its attempts. In the second, the Minutemen made 3-of-5, shooting 81 percent overall.

However, no missed free throw was costlier than senior forward Gary Forbes' failed conversion on the front end of a one-and-one with 1:30 remaining. Though Etienne Brower rebounded the missed shot, the Minutemen failed to score on the possession, and, more significantly, could not cut into OSU's seven-point lead.

Battle on the glass

UMass has not won too many games this season strictly from its rebounding. Though Ohio State ranks near the bottom of the Big Ten in rebounding differential, it was unclear if the Minutemen could outrebound a team that plays in a much more physical league.

UMass outrebounded the Buckeyes 49-37, but 30 of those rebounds came on the offensive glass. Though, that discrepancy helped mask the Minutemen's poor shooting performance of 35 percent.

In the first half, it appeared that UMass was going to ride its physical play inside to its first NIT Championship. But Kosta Koufos took control of the frontcourt for the Buckeyes during the final 20 minutes.

Once Milligan left the game with 12 minutes left after collecting his fourth foul, the Buckeyes further asserted itself in the front court and gradually improved the rebounding differential.

In rare territory

Despite the loss to Ohio State, UMass finished its season with a 25-11 record, registering its highest win total since the 1995-96 season — when the Minutemen made it all the way to the NCAA Final Four.

UMass has accomplished a 25-win season five times dating back to the team's inception back in 1899.

Live and die

All season the 3-point shot has been the staple of the Minutemen. If they hit them, they usually win. Against Ohio State, only Ricky Harris hit them when they mattered most, and UMass fell in large part because of it.

Brower hit three 3-pointers, but two of them came after OSU had essentially sealed it.

Other than Harris's 7-of-13 performance, the Minutemen went 5-of-20 from beyond the arc. Forbes missed all but one of his eight tries.

Meanwhile, OSU hit more than half (10) of its 19 attempts. Evan Turner was a perfect 3-of-3; he hadn't made a 3-pointer since Feb. 29 — a span of nine games. Jamar Butler also made three, and four others hit one.

Michael King and Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at sports@dailycollegian.com.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

UMass men's basketball coach Travis Ford doesn't think that the rumors surrounding his departure affected his team's play last night. The Minutemen lost to Ohio State despite holding a five-point lead at halftime.

BRIAN TEDDER/COLLEGIAN

A UMass fans displays his plea for Travis Ford to remain in Amherst.

Owls come to Amherst for A-10 match

By David Brinch
Collegian Staff

After its first Atlantic 10 victory against George Washington last week, the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team aims to get its first back-to-back victories of the season, as it hosts Temple at McGuirk Stadium Sunday.

"It's going to be a great game. They have a great attack, and lead the A-10 with three wins, and that's why they've been able to do it," said UMass coach Alexis Venechanos.

The Minutewomen are 25-3-1 all time against the Owls, in a series dating back to 1980 when UMass beat TU, 7-4, in the Association for Intercollegiate Athletics for Women Championship Game. The Maroon and White have not faired as well as of late, with the last UMass victory against Temple coming in the 2000 season. That year, the Minutewomen beat Temple, 5-3, and went on to win the Atlantic 10 regular season championship as well as the tournament.

Last season, the Maroon and White suffered an 11-10 defeat in both teams' conference opener, as UMass tied the game twice in the last eight minutes of the game, but came up short.

The Minutewomen lost their A-10 opener to Richmond Friday, as the Spiders used a 6-2 run in the final 13 minutes to hold onto the victory, 17-12.

"I just think it shows the resilience in our girls, and turning the weekend around," Venechanos said. "Getting a win 48 hours after a tough loss shows a lot about our team's character. I was really impressed with our team's ability to do that."

Midfielder Kaytlin McCormick and attackers Kathleen Typadis and Melynda Zwick each had three goals in the loss at Richmond, while freshman goalkeeper Colleen Speth made 10 saves for the Maroon and White. The rookie has started the past eight games for the Minutewomen.

Freshman Haley Smith was the catalyst for a four-goal Minutewomen run after UMass trailed by three goals midway through the first half. Richmond scored three unanswered goals to put the Spiders up 9-7 at halftime, and added the first goal of the second half before Typadis scored her third goal of the game. Holly Drown and Zwick had back-to-back goals to put UMass within one, but UMass could not keep up. Richmond had two players who scored five goals, as the Spiders outshot and controlled more groundballs than the Minutewomen.

However, UMass was effective on the clears and were aggressive, which was definitely evident in their match up against GWU.

Zwick netted the game-winning goal two minutes into overtime to give UMass its first conference win of the season. Typadis, who had a hat trick in the contest, has scored eight goals in her past three games, after a scoring drought plagued the senior captain early in the season.

"We're taking it game by game with Kath; I've been really impressed with her resilience this season," Venechanos said.

"In the beginning of the season, teams had a lot of their focus on her, and with the other attackers on our team stepping up, now things are opening up for her. So ideally, this is benefitting everybody else," she continued. "Her scoring goals for us make our team more dynamic for sure. She is a tremendous talent who has great instinct."

The Minutewomen got off to a hot start early in the game, scoring four-straight goals within the first 11 minutes. But the Colonials rallied, outscoring UMass 5-2 in the second half, tying the game at eight, and forcing overtime. McCormick found Zwick in transition, and was able to capitalize.

"Melynda understands the game really well," Venechanos said. "She has a great vision and is a great attacker, and is a vocal leader out there. I know the girls look for her to quarterback [the offense], and she gives us stability in the attack."

Splitting the pair of games this weekend and going into the matchup with the Owls, Venechanos is optimistic on her team's performance and capability to improve.

"I think right now we are still trying to decide what team we are," Venechanos said. "We played four games in eight days, [and] against GW we were able to put some goals away early, not knowing how hard a game it was going to be. Going into overtime, I think we still kept our cool."

Despite the positive thinking, Venechanos knows the offensive-minded Owls will come out looking for a victory against the Minutewomen.

By Stanley Stilgoe
Collegian

Freshman attack Haley Smith and the Minutewomen take on Temple this weekend.

"I think we match up well on the attacking end, and on the defensive end, with our strengths, and their strengths and weaknesses, so I think overall, its going to be a great matchup," she said.

David Brinch can be reached at dbrinch@student.umass.edu

555 deal

Three Medium One-Topping Pizzas

$5.55 Each!

Domino's Pizza

413 - 256 - 8911

Open till 4 am Nightly

Minutewomen on the road against George Washington

By Steve Games
Collegian Staff

Playing 25 games on the road against some of the best teams in the nation was worth it for the Massachusetts softball team as it is riding an eight-game winning streak. The Minutewomen (18-11, 6-0 Atlantic 10) look to continue the streak as they travel to George Washington (5-12, 1-3 A-10).

The Minutewomen are back on the road after completing a four-game homestand against Dartmouth and Charlotte. UMass swept Dartmouth, 7-0 and 7-5, and swept Charlotte, 7-1 and 5-2. Leading the way for the Minutewomen is junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter and sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders. Balschmiter was honored once again with the A-10 Player of the Week award. She has a 0.79 ERA with 148 strikeouts and opponents are only hitting .169 against her. Sanders has a 2.06 ERA with opponents only batting .190 against her.

"I thought [Sanders] did a great job today and yesterday," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said during practice on Wednesday. "She pitched live to batters and I thought she handled everything pretty well. I thought despite not having her stuff she handled the Charlotte situation pretty well."

Though Balschmiter is pitching like one of the top pitchers in the nation, Sortino thinks she can still improve.

"She's got to have better command of her pitches early in the count," she said. "She's been falling behind with some batters. She's got to rise up to the occasion. The fact that she has the ability to throw a 74-mile-per-hour fastball, she's got to be able to command the zone and use her moving pitches to finish off the deal."

The weather in which UMass is playing is not ideal for a softball team. At practice on Wednesday it was warm enough to practice outside, however the entire team wore sweatshirts and the wind was blowing hard. In the Washington, D.C., area the weather might be in the low 60s, but the forecast calls for rain on Friday and Saturday.

"The weather is an incredible neutralizer," Sortino said. "This game was not meant to be played in 30-degree weather. The people that really have the toughest time are the pitchers more than the hitters."

George Washington is coming off two losses to Towson, 6-0 and 6-3. Sophomore pitcher Amanda Gabriel has a record of 4-9 with a 2.51 ERA. Against Towson in Game 2, she pitched a complete game, but received little support from her defense. It committed five errors that led to six runs. The Colonials are struggling to win at home (1-5) and has lost seven straight games. Senior outfielder Chrysanthi Halkiotis is batting .379 with a .446 on-base percentage.

"They're well coached, they'll be well disciplined and I'm sure they're pitching will be better," Sortino said. "We have to go there ready to play and today hopefully we practiced long and hard and tomorrow we'll do a little bit and get on the plarle."

Steve Games can be reached sgames@dailycollegian.com.

UConn Invitational starts outdoor season

By Sam Grossack
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men and women's track and field teams open their outdoor season this weekend at the Connecticut Invitational. This comes after weather forced the cancellation of last weekend's home opener, and the unveiling of the new track facility at UMass.

The Minutewomen look to build off of a strong indoor season behind the leadership of redshirt junior pole-vaulter Kristen Bakanowski, and senior runner Christina DeRosa.

Bakanowski finished first at the Atlantic 10 indoor championships, and went on to break her record of 12 feet, 6 inches at the ECAC Championships by 5.5 inches. DeRosa received national attention after she finished second at the A-10 Championships in the 5K run. She had the fastest time of the season of any runners at UMass with a time of 16:41.71.

UMass also looks for continued strong performances from Danielle Bolt, a transfer from Youngstown State, and freshman Gina Perno. During the indoor season Bolt ran the 55-meter dash in just over seven seconds for the second-fastest time in UMass history. She also regularly nahbed points in the 60- and 200-meter dashes.

Perno was the team's most consistent mid-distance runner during the winter season, often placing high in the 800- and 1,000-meter runs. She is the team's faster runner in these events.

On the other side, the Minutemen will rely on their depth in the mid-distance and distance events to lead them to success this season. The mid-distance has four consistent athletes led by senior James Bentley, followed by sophomores Ryan Diorio and Mark Mariano. The crew is rounded out with freshmen Scott VanderMolen.

Two juniors, Josh Boone and Peter Fortunato, lead the distance group along with senior Ryan Durkin and sophomore Andrew McCann. UMass needs continued consistency from these two groups if it hopes to continue to be competitive.

The Minutemen also have three sprinters who will look to expand on strong outings throughout the winter. Freshmen Darius Velez was a top runner in the conference who is primed to have a very bright future over the next few years. He is joined on the team by two other top sprinters in sophomore Ian Hackney and senior Nathan Barksdale.

At the Connecticut Invitational last spring the Minutemen took fifth while the Minutewomen finished sixth.

Looking ahead to next week, both teams host the Massachusetts Invitational, which will serve as the delayed opening for the new track and field facility in Amherst.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossac@student.umass.edu

Kristen Bakanowski leads the Minutewomen into their outdoor season opener this weekend in Storrs, Conn., at the Connecticut Invitational.

UMass hosts meet Sunday

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

In preparation for the defense of its Atlantic 10 Championship, the Massachusetts rowing team hosts Colgate and Holy Cross this weekend.

After losing to rival Rhode Island last week in the Yankee Cup, UMass has been practicing hard to face the Rams again in next weekend's Knecht Cup. The Knecht cup will be the last time the teams see each other before squaring off in the A-10 Championship April 19.

In an attempt to be better prepared for the Knecht Cup and the A-10 Championship, the team has not tapered their practices this week, or tried to peak for this weekend's race.

"We're gonna use this to just keep building through it and see where we are," said senior captain Sarah Marsan.

The team sees this weekend's race as just another practice to prepare for its more important regattas.

"The Knecht Cup and obviously A-10s are our focus right now. But each race is just another opportunity to train and get better," said senior captain Amanda Mawn.

UMass coach Jim Dietz hopes to get a lot of practice out of the race this weekend.

"We hope to do a couple of races against these guys, just to really get our money's worth," he said.

For Dietz and Colgate coach Greg Kruczynski, the race will be a reunion of teacher and student.

The two first met when Dietz coached Kruczynski at the Coast Guard Academy. After Kruczynski finished his service in the Coast Guard, he came to work as a graduate assistant under Dietz while he worked toward his master's in exercise science at UMass. Later, Kruczynski would be hired as Dietz's full-time assistant for five years before moving on to Colgate.

Stephanie Hopf, the assistant coach at Colgate, will also join the reunion. The Hadley native, rowed at UMass for four years before she graduated in 2006.

"They are similar to our program in a lot of ways. They're a smaller school so sometimes I think they struggle with numbers, but they're always pretty competitive," Marsan said.

Holy Cross, UMass's other opponent was defeated by Coast Guard last weekend, a team UMass defeated in every event two weeks ago.

"I think we're feeling really comfortable. It's just a shot to compete against ourselves at this point, with the [Varsity 8] and the [Junior Varsity] and see if we can get better," Mawn said.

The first race should get underway around 10:30 a.m. on the Connecticut River in Amherst and be over by 11:30.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu

Join The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

UPSTAIRS

- AMHERST·BREWING·COMPANY -

FOR THE RELEASE OF

The Minute

Presented by Amherst Brewing Company

FEATURING THE ARTS & LIVING OF AMHERST, NORTHAMPTON, AND UMASS

STARTS AT 6PM

BUT YOU CAN SHOW UP WHENEVER

Comix

"I MAY NOT AGREE WITH YOUR OPINION, BUT I WILL SMACK YOU IN THE FACE IF YOU OPEN YOUR MOUTH AGAIN."

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

ACTIVITES

Student Union Art Gallery presents "Line Scape and Sound Fields" by Francesca Caruso, Sophia Flood, Brendan Dean and Kyle Nilan 4/7-4/18. Reception Tu 4/8 5-7pm. Gallery hours: M-Th 10-5 and F 10-3. Free. 545-0792

APT FOR RENT

Belchertown center of town on bus route 2 bedroom 725 first last security 413-323-6511 9-2pm

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Center of town 1,2,3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

ANNOUNCEMENTS

Free Ride to Church & back in Dwight Chapel Van. Be at Haigis Mall @ 10:00am or Converse Hall @ 10:20am Sundays. www.dwightchapel.org See you there!

EMPLOYMENT

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

Attention all Juniors & Seniors! April 7th is the last day to apply to become a legal assistant with the legal services office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field. Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center.

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED. Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Summer in Maine
Males and females. Meet new friends! Travel! Teach your favorite activity.Tennis, swim, canoe, sail, water ski, kayak, theater, video, English riding, ropes, pottery, office, landsports and more. June to August. Residential. Enjoy our website. Apply online TRIPP LAKE CAMP for Girls: 1-800-997-4347 www.tnpplakecamp.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

EMPLOYMENT

Hadley Close to Umass. 5+ bedrooms, 2 full baths, laundry hookups, large yard. Call 549-4270.

University Bartending classes start soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail. 545-6837

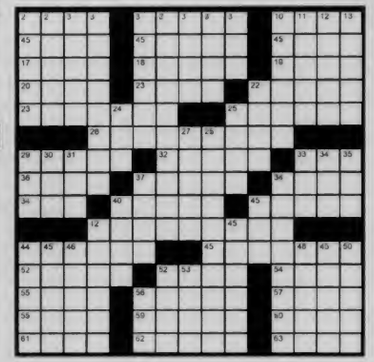
HOUSE FOR RENT

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101



TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst.www.tapestryhealth.org

ACROSS
1 Bargain-hunter's dream
5 ___ Ferry, N.Y.
10 Rowboat rower
14 Frozen treats
15 Down Under gems
16 Jazz singing
17 The one singled out
18 Disturbed
19 Traffic diverter
20 Top-drawer
21 Concoct
22 "Beetle Bailey" character
23 Flowerlike badge
25 Worked for
26 Military cafeterias
29 "Barnaby Jones" star
32 Penultimate round
33 Tenth mo.
36 Drove (a nail) obliquely
37 Afternoon TV fare
38 Lose vitality
39 Collapsible bed
40 Onward
41 Picture border
42 Of Greco-Roman culture
44 Severe critic
47 Scrawny guys
51 Like a rainbow
52 Choice cut
54 Adam's garden
55 Traditional wisdom
56 Kind of cigar or sandwich
57 Went by car
58 Grounded birds
59 In isolation
60 HOMES part
61 Unvarying
62 Sanctify
63 Honey

DOWN
1 Indian instrument
2 Sneeze sound
3 Tilts
4 Appreciated
5 Has suspicions
6 Tyrants
7 Military post
8 Tooted
9 Mach topper
10 Academy Awards
11 Squirrel treat
12 Kitchen appliance
13 Mighty mount
22 Bando and Mineo
24 Decade count
25 Harvardians rivals
27 Warms up
28 Frogs, toads, newts, etc
29 Oft-used abbr.
30 Scary word?
31 TV soundstage
33 Mare's morsel
34 Summer hrs. in Chicago
35 Golfer's peg
37 Skyrocket
38 Stumbled
40 Took off
41 Guy
42 Edam or brie
43 French resort
44 Hay units
45 Kitchen lure
46 Rugby formation
48 Revere
49 Communication services
50 Contemptuous expression
52 Temporary calm
53 Clarinet relative
56 Taxi

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

IRON HORSE ENTERTAINMENT PRESENTS

RYAN MONTBLEAU BAND
plus Barefoot Truth
FRIDAY, APRIL 4 • 8:30 PM
DOORS 7:30 PM - BALLROOM

MINUS THE BEAR
plus Portugal The Man, 27
SATURDAY, APRIL 5 • 8:30 PM
DOORS 7:30 PM - BALLROOM

KAKI KING BAND
SUNDAY, APRIL 6 • 8:30 PM
DOORS 7:30 PM - CLUBROOM

TOOTS AND THE MAYTALS plus Fear Nuttin Band
THURSDAY, APRIL 10 • 8:30 PM
DOORS 7:30 PM - BALLROOM

Pearl Street Nightclub

10 PEARL ST. • NORTHAMPTON, MA

TO PURCHASE TICKETS ON FOR INFO VISIT OUR WEBSITE OR CALL:
WWW.IHEG.COM
@413-586-8686

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach

Summer Session 2008

KICK off your Summer right!!!

Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity

Session I: June 2 - July 10
Session II: July 14 - Aug 20

REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

Townehouse of Amherst Condominums

Walk to Campus!
Hurry,
Get 'em before they're gone!
50 Meadow St. Amherst, MA
Tel: 413.549.0839
Fax: 413.549.8487

Incoming Seal!

You are a pole dancer.

	6		9		3		7
		2				5
3	1						9	6
			3	4	5
1								8
			7	8	1
6	3						8	1
		1				7
	7		4		9		5

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Write angry letters to the quarterback of the football team for his blatant and horrific mistreatment of seals.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
You have been avoiding homework like a sickness, but like the chickenpox, it only gets more painful with age.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You live life in the fast lane, but you're driving a '93 Ford Taurus. Take a break for safety's sake.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
PEOPLE THINK YOU ARE MAD AT THEM WHEN YOU SEND TEXT MESSAGES IN CAPITAL LETTERS!

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You will take a road trip this weekend and subsist entirely off of Pop Tarts and Beef Jerky.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
Free all the livestock from the Stockbridge school and let them roam freely on the soccer fields.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Hey, you can't smoke here! Oh, that's not a cigarette, you're just hot.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Maybe someone will listen to you if you carry around a microphone everywhere you go.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Steroids are decent, but big muscles are no good if your testes don't work.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
Yo Rip Van Winkle, you will never succeed in life if you don't get out of bed.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You will rue the day you strolled down North Pleasant St. wearing shorts and a pair of Uggs.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Imagine how The Shredder's mother felt about giving birth to her jagged offspring.

If I Had My Way... By Joe Merkin

Quote of the Weekend

"I'm famous for my bottom dances, but you'll only see my bum and willy if you raise a million pounds within an hour."

— Billy Connolly

Caption Contest

Winning Caption Submitted by: Nick Anastasia

Next week's contest will start on Monday.
See the picture and submit captions at www.dailycollegian.com/caption

"Late for Clowns 101 again."

The Con-Artist By Tom Frink

SPORTS WEEKEND

FRIDAY, APRIL 4, 2008 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Owls soar into McGuirk

Page 20

BALISE SCORES 6 IN WIN | PAGE 10

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN
NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

SUNNY : HI: 55 LO: 35 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2008

Tragedy shakes campus

Campus officials and residents meet in JQA, discuss incident

BY DAVID HUMPHREYS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Following the death of a student, University of Massachusetts officials held an informational meeting on Friday in the John Quincy Adams residence hall.

The meeting, which offered students with both facts and resources surrounding the death of sophomore Liam O'Donnelly, was presented by campus leaders including Interim Chancellor Thomas Cole, Dean of Students Jo-Anne Vanin and Police Chief Barbara O'Connor.

"This is one of the unfortunate things about being chancellor," Cole said to students at the meeting. "I wish I could tell you how I feel at this point, after hearing of the death of Liam."

O'Donnelly, 20, from Hingham, Mass., fell to the ground from his room in 1704 John Quincy Adams Tower at approximately 3:30 a.m. on Saturday. He was remembered as quiet and reserved by members of his community.

Sam Ameyaw, the resident assistant on the 17th floor, saw O'Donnelly in the men's bathroom on Saturday at 12:30 a.m, three hours before his death. "He was the same Liam... he's a soft-spoken guy, he keeps to himself most of the time... nobody suspected anything," he said.

"I went to [Norfolk County Agricultural] High School with Liam," said UMass junior Marielle Livesey. "He was quiet but he was a nice guy... I liked him a lot."

Chief O'Connor said it didn't seem that alcohol was an issue but is still waiting on a toxicology report from the medical examiner.

She said that because the case is still under investigation, she could not disclose whether there was a note left in O'Donnelly's single room but did say that the door to his room was locked and no foul play is suspected. O'Connor asked anyone with information to call the police.

Dr. Linda Scott, a staff psychologist from Mental Health Services, said there will be another meeting to address O'Donnelly's death within the next few days.

"It is about coming together as a community... this is a very difficult time for everyone," she said.

David Humphreys can be reached at dhumphre@student.umass.edu.

The University held a meeting Friday night in the JQA residence hall to inform students about the death of Liam O'Donnelly.

Student dies after fall from Southwest tower

BY WILL MCGUINNESS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A University of Massachusetts student fell to his death from his 17th-story dorm room early Friday morning.

Liam O'Donnelly, 20, a second-year student from Hingham, Mass., fell to the pavement below his room in 1704 John Quincy Adams Tower at approximately 3:30 a.m., according to UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski.

The investigation is ongoing and will be carried out by the Massachusetts State Police. They do not suspect foul play at this time.

Gregory Freeburn, a resident of the floor, said the sound of police gathering near the scene woke him up. He said O'Donnelly, who lived alone in a single, largely kept to himself and was a quiet person.

Nicole Kadey, who also lives on O'Donnelly's floor, said she did not believe the news at first. When she saw police arriving in the parking lot outside yelling, "Get your first aid kits," she said it shocked her.

Students on the floor also said they saw caution tape over the door to his room.

"This is a difficult time for the campus community. Our sincere condolences go out to Liam's family and friends," said Blaguszewski.

A JQA community meeting was held Friday night. Representatives from the dean of students, mental health services, the UMass Police Department and residential life will be present to share information about the student death and provide resources.

Will McGuinness can be reached at wmcguinn@gmail.com.

Alcohol 'major' factor in campus violence, University police say

BY KAITLYN SILVA
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's Note – The following article is the first in a week-long series covering violence on campus.

Despite the best efforts of both the administration and student organizations, acts of violence continue to be an issue on campus.

Though there are many factors that may lead up to a violent incident, Deputy Chief Patrick Archbald of the University of Massachusetts Police Department has found one major factor is almost always present.

"I'll say unequivocally that alcohol is the foundation for what are normally very intelligent, forward-thinking, career-minded students," he said. "It's alcohol that causes them to make those decisions and go askew from their normal decision making and get themselves involved in some criminal act."

According to Archbald, when UMPD officers respond to calls about violence on Thursday, Friday and Saturday nights, the individuals involved had been consuming alcohol "almost without question."

"Invariably, the officers make the observation at the scene," he said. "Even if the officer doesn't make the observation and the defendant doesn't say anything, you can still see by their reaction that they are under a certain level of influence."

While the consumption of alcohol has not become a focal point in recent discussions concerning the stabbing that took place in the MacKimmie residence hall on Feb. 3, it contributed to the violent tensions.

"The two individuals outside of the dorm were under the influence of alcohol," said Archbald. "I feel very strongly that there's a possibility that that whole events may have never happened or may have happened differently were it not for alcohol."

The people involved in the incident, John Bowes, 20, of Hancock, N.H., and Jonathan Bosse, 19, of Milton, Mass., allegedly smashed in a dormitory window of former student Jason Vassell, 23, before entering the building and engaging in an armed fight with Vassell.

"That was really serious," said Archbald. "There were a lot of stab wounds. I can't say for sure that it wouldn't have happened were it not for alcohol. I don't know. All the parties who were under the influence of alcohol acted in a way that they likely would not have acted were they not under the influence of alcohol."

However, some students still doubt that alcohol is what ultimately leads to violence.

"It's a chicken and egg issue," said Zoe Crowley, a junior at UMass. "Does the alcohol cause the violence or are people who are easily violent more likely to drink?"

See VIOLENCE on page 3

According to UMPD, calls of violence on Thursday, Friday or Saturday nights almost always involve alcohol-consuming students.

ASA presents 'The Journey' at UMass

BY LATOYA MURPHY
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The African Student Association presented an event held on Saturday in the Student Union.

"The Journey: from Past to Present" began by serving dinner to the guests followed by the acts that were lined up for the night.

As an introduction to the festivities, there was a presentation of all of the African nations' flags. During this part, guests at the event were able to show pride in their native country by clapping and cheering.

The next event on the program list was a Loernard Tshitenge poem read by Felix Okonkwo, president of ASA. The poem served as encouragement and advice to all of the African men and women alive today.

The evening continued to a skit that represented African concerns, including a change in women's submissiveness toward men. A speaker touched on some other concerns that engulf Africa today. He also made sure to include not only the negative stereotypes and issues that represent Africa, but also the positive ones as well.

The main events of the night were the Anthonia Olatunde fashion show, the Zouk dance and the Mapouka dance. The fashion show included African-inspired clothing that was modeled by members of the African Student Association.

The night ended with a dance party and a DJ playing the latest in reggae and African music. The attendees appeared to be enjoying themselves throughout the entire duration of the night.

The ASA is one of many Registered Student Organizations at the University of Massachusetts and is composed of a diverse group of UMass students who have roots in all parts of Africa and other continents as well.

The group strives to promote awareness of African culture, customs and people. For anyone interested in becoming a member, the organization meets every Sunday at 5 p.m. in Campus Center Room 908.

Temple suffocates UM on McGuirk

BRIAN THOMAS/COLLEGIAN

Sophomore Merritt Cosgrove unsuccessfully tries to squeeze through two Temple defenders during the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team's 12–9 loss to Temple yesterday at McGuirk Alumni Stadium. See page 10 for complete coverage.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 115

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Hunton
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Staggin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbaciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcott
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS SCHOLASTIC SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY OWNED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967. THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADCAST SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL (413)545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
William McGuinness

COPY EDITOR
Nichole Amaral

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Chris Martin

WEB EDITOR
James Hale

Across the Nation Around the World

State programs recycle drugs to help with medical costs

BY CANDICE CHOI
ASSOCIATED PRESS

The struggle to keep soaring medical costs in check is feeding an increase in state programs that collect unused prescription drugs to give away to the uninsured and poor.

Some states allow donations of sealed drugs from individuals, while others only accept pharmaceuticals from institutions, such as doctor's offices or assisted-living homes. Drugs are typically vetted by pharmacists to cross-check safety, then distributed by hospitals, pharmacies or charitable clinics.

The type of drugs donated run the gamut and include antibiotics, antipsychotics, blood thinners and antidepressants.

At least 33 states have laws to allow or study drug recycling programs, according to the National Conference of State Legislatures. Most state programs are just a few years old or still in the test stages, but officials envision huge gains.

In Iowa, David Fries, CEO of the Iowa Prescription Drug Corp., said the program has the potential to double or triple in the near future. Officials in Tulsa, Okla., also see plenty of room for growth.

"There are millions of dollars of unused meds out there that have not been captured," said Linda Johnston, director of social services for Tulsa County.

Regulations to ensure safety vary from state to state, but the basic concept is the same.

"These are medications that would've otherwise been destroyed," said Roxanne Homar, Wyoming's state pharmacist.

A pilot program in Cheyenne, Wyo., last year netted $81,000 in donated drugs to fill 557 prescriptions. State officials say that's just a small slice of the vast reserves of drugs that go to waste each year. The program is now working to get $180,000 in drugs it has online so it can be accessed by other programs in the state.

Drug recycling programs pay for themselves "by just working with one patient and saving them and keeping them out of the hospital over the long term," Iowa's Fries said.

Ensuring that a diabetic doesn't miss her medication, for example, might stave off "eye problems, foot problems, all kinds of medical conditions," he said.

It's still too early to measure the impact of drug recycling in offsetting the costs of emergency room and other hospital care for the uninsured. But when medical conditions go untreated, the financial toll is clear.

A study by the Commonwealth Fund in 2006 found 59 percent of uninsured people with chronic conditions either skipped a dose of their medicine or went without it because it was too expensive. One-third of that group visited an emergency room or stayed in a hospital overnight or did both, compared with 15 percent of their insured counterparts.

The costs to treat uninsured patients in Wyoming alone are staggering. Every year, hospitals there provide about $120 million in uncompensated care, according to Susie Scott, executive director for the Wyoming Health Care Commission.

There are between 80,000 and 90,000 uninsured in Wyoming, and their options for medical care are "generally limited to emergency room situations," Scott said.

In Iowa, hospitals in 2005 provided $465 million in uncompensated care, according to the state's hospital association.

Meanwhile, between March and December of last year, Iowa's drug recycling program collected 319,000 dosage units worth an estimated $292,000.

In the face of such enormous costs, saving a few dollars by using recycled drugs may seem futile. But the savings that could be achieved would add up over time.

In Louisiana last year, one charitable pharmacy in Baton Rouge filled more than 38,000 prescriptions worth $2 million, the vast majority of which were donated medications. Officials say they don't track how many people the state's recycled drug program has helped statewide.

"In health care reform, it's got to be a cumulative effect of a lot of different efforts. It seems like throwing a 10-foot rope down a 40-foot hole, but we have to begin somewhere," Scott said.

Officials in Oklahoma's Tulsa County agree; they've worked with charities since 2004 in a program to fill the prescriptions of county residents.

"We do know that the cost of not providing medications has a large ripple effect and impact on our community whether it's going to the emergency room, whether it's going to a nursing home early, dying early, missing school. If we don't get medicines to people who need them for their mental illnesses, they become homeless, they end up in jail," Johnson said.

Still, some states are having trouble getting their drug recycling programs off the ground.

In Florida, for example, a program created two years ago to get cancer drugs to the uninsured has languished. Only three of the 300 hospitals eligible to participate have signed up, taking in a total of seven drug donations. Critics say the program has lacked publicity.

And since drug recycling programs rely on donations, they're not seen as long-term solutions. But when successful, officials say they can help plug gaps in medication for those who live paycheck to paycheck.

Several state programs collect unused perscription drugs and give them to people who are uninsured or cannot afford medicine.

Undergraduate admissions focus on 'legacy' at Stanford

BY SALONE KAPUR
THE STANFORD DAILY (STANFORD)

(U-WIRE) STANFORD, Calif.

As undergraduate admission grows increasingly competitive, the impact of legacy status on admission decisions has raised questions about what role it should play in the admission process.

According to Stanford University Dean of Undergraduate Admission and Financial Aid Richard Shaw, approximately 20 percent of the matriculating freshmen of the Class of 2011 had a parent who received an undergraduate or graduate degree from Stanford.

"We are comfortable with considering intergenerational relationships to the University," Shaw said. "Legacy applicants come from highly educated families and must be competitive to be successful in the admission process at Stanford."

Howard Wolf '80, vice president for Alumni Affairs and president of the Stanford Alumni Association, agreed that legacy admissions are critical to Stanford's future as an elite institution.

"I see only advantages to Stanford of our current legacy admission policy," he said. "The transfer of intergenerational loyalty, and the relationships between the University and its graduates that support this loyalty, are supremely important to Stanford and its future."

Though both Shaw and Wolf emphasized that legacy status is only one of the many factors considered in the admission process, some students question whether it should be considered at all.

"I think the idea of the system is elitist," said Avery Halfon '10. "Though I haven't met a single legacy student who does not deserve to be here, I think the policy is unfair because it is not merit-based."

Jessica Perez '10 added that while the policy is not bad in practice, it should not be considered in the admission process.

"Whether or not a student's parents attended Stanford University shouldn't be something that admissions considers when deciding whether to accept a student," Perez said. "You can't tell whether or not a student is prepared for the University based on what their parents did."

Some students, both legacy and first generation, argued that the policy is too complex to be branded either good or bad.

"Legacy admission means a lot of different things to different people," said Hanna Michelsen '10. "I think people assume that legacy admits are likely to succeed here. Because their parents came here, it is much more likely that they have cultivated an environment in which education was supported and kept as a priority."

Shaw stood behind the policy.

"It is often very misconceived that children of graduates of Stanford or like institutions get in simply because of their legacy status," Shaw said. "This is not correct. They must meet the very high expectations of all candidates and they must be exceedingly well educated and competitive."

But one legacy admits questioned Shaw's defense, suggesting that legacy status may have played a much larger role in the student's admission.

"I definitely feel that being a legacy really saved me in the admission process," said a third-generation legacy sophomore who spoke on the condition of anonymity. "Though I worked really hard in high school, I think that without being a legacy it would have been a lot harder for me to get in."

That alumni make up the majority of Stanford's donors makes the issue all the more contentious.

"It's all about the money," said Soroush Salehian '10. "I don't think that this policy will end anytime soon because the University depends on these donations and the services that alumni provide. Legacy is like a reward."

Web resource to help find ancestry

BY GABRIELLE DEMARCO
LIVESCIENCE.COM

Imagine being adopted, with no understanding of your cultural or genetic background. You don't know your heritage or what diseases you are genetically predisposed to. Most of us have some idea about the roots of our family tree, but little understanding of what those lower branches mean in terms of our predisposition to a host of diseases and ailments.

Now, a group of computer scientists, mathematicians, and biologists from around the world have developed a computer algorithm that can quickly trace an individual's genetic ancestry with only a small sample of their DNA. In fact, the program can trace the genetic ancestry of thousands of individuals in minutes, without any prior knowledge of their background.

The multi-disciplinary approach, published in the September 2007 edition of the journal PLoS Genetics, allowed the research team to address this type of research in a novel way. Unlike previous computer programs that required prior knowledge of an individual's ancestry and background, the new algorithm looks for specific DNA markers known as single nucleotide polymorphisms, or SNPs (pronounced snips), and needs nothing more than a DNA sample in the form of a simple cheek swab.

The researchers used genetic data from previous studies to perform and confirm their research, including the new HapMap database, which is working to uncover and map variations in the human genome.

"This work was an exciting opportunity to form an interdisciplinary team of computer scientists, mathematicians, and human geneticists," said Petros Drineas, the senior author of the study and assistant professor of computer science at Rensselaer Polytechnic Institute.

"Now that we have found that the program works well, we hope to implement it on a much larger scale, using hundreds of thousands of SNPs and thousands of individuals," said Drineas, who was funded by an NSF CAREER award. "The program will be a valuable tool for understanding our genetic ancestry and targeting drugs and other medical treatments because it might be possible that these can affect people of different ancestry in very different ways."

Understanding our unique genetic makeup is a crucial step to unraveling the genetic basis for complex diseases. Although the human genome is 99 percent the same from human to human, it is that 1 percent that can have a major impact on our response to diseases, viruses, medications and toxins. If researchers can uncover the minute genetic details that set each of us apart, biomedical research and treatments can be better customized for each individual, Drineas said.

This program will help people understand their unique backgrounds and aid historians and anthropologists in their study of where different populations originated and how humans became such a hugely diverse, global society.

The program was more than 99 percent accurate in trials and correctly identified the ancestry of hundreds of individuals. This included people from genetically similar populations (such as Chinese and Japanese) and complex genetic populations like Puerto Ricans who can come from a variety of backgrounds including Native American, European, and African ancestries.

"When we compared our findings to the existing datasets, only one individual was incorrectly identified and his background was almost equally close between Chinese and Japanese," Drineas said.

Join The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
UPSTAIRS

- AMHERST·BREWING·COMPANY -
FOR THE RELEASE OF
The Minute
Presented by Amherst Brewing Company
FEATURING THE ARTS & LIVING OF AMHERST, NORTHAMPTON, AND UMASS
Wednesday the 9th
STARTS AT 6PM

GEORGETOWN UNIVERSITY
Semester in Washington Program in Law
Get Washington internship experience and Georgetown academic credit this summer.
June 2-August 9, 2008
Gain experience that can help launch your legal career this summer in Washington, D.C. Enroll in Georgetown University's Semester in Washington Program in Law and see the legal and public policy process from the front row as an intern on Capitol Hill, in other areas of government, or at a law firm, corporation, a lobbying firm, or non-profit organization in the metropolitan Washington D.C. area. In the process, you'll gain academic credits while you study the legislative process and explore ethics, leadership, and social justice as they relate to the law. You're invited to join a community of achievers in Washington this summer and open new doors to opportunities for your future career.
• Work as a legal intern in metropolitan Washington, D.C.
• Earn up to six academic credits from Georgetown University.
• Build relationships that you can leverage throughout your career.
ENROLL TODAY
Visit scs.georgetown.edu/washington or call 202.687.8200

We got the facts from you.
9 out of 10 UMass students know how to have fun without alcohol.
Are you one of them?

UMassOnline begins work to expand program in Chinese continuing ed.

BY KATHERINE NEUBERT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University officials announced last week that UMassOnline may soon be available in China.

The University of Massachusetts has begun working together with China's Continuing Education Association (CCEA) and the CerEdu Corporation to make the award-winning distance education program accessible there.

Under the agreement signed in Beijing, UMassOnline will be the first foreign provider of online education and degree programs in China.

"We are very proud to have been chosen by our partners in China to enter into this agreement," said University President Jack M. Wilson in a press release. "We have developed one of the best online education programs in the world, and that is increasingly being recognized around the globe."

While the pact must still be approved by the Chinese Ministry of Education, plans call to offer credit and non-credit courses, certificate programs and degree programs from all five campuses – through online and face-to-face programs – throughout China, with UMassOnline.

Within a year, 40 UMassOnline courses, four certificate programs and one master's degree program could be made available in China.

UMassOnline provides the highest quality education offered by the UMass system in a flexible, online format, enabling students, professionals and lifelong learners to take courses anywhere or at anytime.

This agreement comes from the academic and research partnership that was formed in 2006 with the signing of a memorandum with Tsinghua University, which both CCEA and CerEdu Corporation are affiliated with. The University also has a close relationship with the Chinese Ministry of Education.

Final approval power over distance learning programs in China is controlled by the Ministry of Education, which currently does not recognize the college credits or degree credentials earned in China via distance learning offerings from any foreign-based academic institution. Only 68 universities within China have been authorized by the Ministry to deliver online programs.

"This joint venture will position UMassOnline to receive the Ministry's approval to provide online education and grant degrees throughout China," said David Gray, CEO of UMassOnline. "With a population nearing 1.3 billion, the opportunity in China is enormous and we look forward to collaborating with both the CCEA and CerEdu to develop online learning programs of the highest quality."

"The importance of this strategic partnership cannot be overstated," said Yan Jichang, vice chairman and general secretary of the CCEA. "Gaining support throughout all of China and from the Ministry of Education for UMassOnline, with the intention of encouraging, introducing, approving and sustaining high-quality online courses from a leading university already well known to us, is important to the future of China's place in the league of nations and the aspirations of our students to achieve world class academic credentials."

Zhu Yidong, vice chairman of the Cernet Education Corporation said, "The combination of our powerful distance learning platform with UMassOnline's Vista learning management system creates a 'best of both worlds' offering, in terms of technology and course quality, for recruiting, teaching and empowering students throughout the many regions of China and achieving the best possible outcomes."

"Within five years, with ministry approval protocol and UMass exclusive rights still in place, the parties to this agreement in my opinion will have gradually offered online courses of such high quality and breadth that we will have clearly demonstrated the efficacy of online instruction and will have paved the way for other foreign universities to enter the China market," he said.

Katherine Neubert can be reached at kneubert@student.umass.edu

UMPD promotes campus anti-violence

VIOLENCE from page 1

Crowley believes that violence is mainly an issue of temperament, making alcohol only one of many contributing factors.

"Especially people who drink in large groups at parties, where violence is most likely to occur," she said.

Archbald has also acknowledged that drinking isn't necessarily an issue under the appropriate circumstances.

"There is drinking on this campus by people over 21 who never cause a problem. They're responsible," he said. "We know there's drinking happening on this campus with people under 21 who don't draw attention to themselves even though they're breaking the law, they're not out to hurt anyone."

The UMPD currently has only one officer working in the area of community outreach and prevention, though Archbald hopes to see more officers involved in the area in the future.

"There's always different ways we can be approaching the problem," he said.

The department is working with other campus organizations to help open up discussion and prevent violence. Most recently, the UMPD has coordinated with the Not Ready for Bedtime Players to create an anti-violence skit shown in dining commons last week.

"We're trying to strike a balance between providing the students a good environment to learn in and allowing them to explore at the same time and branch out," Archbald said. "Although we understand that alcohol is going to be consumed by this age group, we still understand what our responsibility is and we're not going to back away from that responsibility."

Kaitlyn Silva can be reached at kmsilva@student.umass.edu

French navy follows pirated yacht in Somalia

Pirates hijacked a luxury yacht off the Somali coast and took the crew hostage Friday.

BY SOPHIE LOUET AND CISSMAN BALMER
ASSOCIATED PRESS

PARIS — The French navy continued to trail a luxury yacht off the Somali coast on Sunday, two days after pirates stormed the boat and took its 30 crew hostage, French Defense Minister Herve Morin said.

"We are still in this phase of the pirates carrying on sailing with us following them at a distance," Morin told Europe 1 radio, adding that he expected the hijackers would eventually make land somewhere in Somalia.

Kidnapping and piracy are lucrative businesses in lawless Somalia and most Somalis treat their captives well in anticipation of a good ransom.

Local authorities said the boat was off Garaad, a fishing town in central Somalia, after being seized by pirates from Harardheere. From that port, privateers have made Somalian waters among the world's most dangerous.

"We do not have the military capacity to combat pirates. They have fast boats, sophisticated weapons and the ransom money from other vessels they seized in the past enabled them to be strong," Ahmed Said Ow-Nur, ports minister for the semi-autonomous Puntland region, told Reuters by phone.

No demands had been received so far, he said. Pirates stormed the French-owned yacht, the Ponant, on Friday as it was sailing through the Gulf of Aden, off Puntland. They then took the boat south towards the Somali coast.

The French defense ministry said 22 of the crew were French, including six women. The rest were believed to be Ukrainian and Korean. The boat's owner, the Compagnie des Iles du Ponant, told anxious relatives on Sunday they were well.

"The crew has not been ill-treated. They are all together and were able to have breakfast and take showers this morning," the mother of one of the hostages told France Info radio, relating what company officials had told her.

The crew had been sailing from the Seychelles to the Mediterranean without passengers when they were attacked.

French media showed navy pictures on Sunday of the pirates sitting on the deck of the Ponant, which was towing the two motorboats they had apparently used to launch their attack.

Prime Minister Francois Fillon said on Saturday France wanted to resolve the crisis peacefully.

"All channels of discussion are open to try to resolve this issue without using force," he said. "We are putting the emphasis on protecting the life of those on board."

France has 2,900 troops stationed in Djibouti, which borders Somalia and lies on the coast. It also has a naval force in the Indian Ocean and has diverted at least one warship to the area.

Health services reaccredited

BY ELIZABETH HAWLEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

University Health Services at the University of Massachusetts has been reaccredited.

UHS is the campus health center at UMass, providing health care, referrals and education services while focusing on the needs of the student body.

UHS was reaccredited by the Joint Commission, a national organization looking at health care standards. The Joint Commission has been in existence since 1975, developing standards for outpatient ambulatory care. The service is one of nearly 1200 accredited organizations across the United States.

The Joint Commission accredits organizations that comply with the Joint Commission's health care and safety standards. The Commission evaluated UHS against state-of-the-art standards.

"Being accredited by the Joint Commission is another demonstration of our commitment to excellence," Bernette Melbty told the UMass News Office. "Meeting these rigorous standards helps us ensure high-quality health care for the campus community."

Elizabeth Hawley can be reached at ehawley@student.umass.edu.

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Want to be a UMass Idol?
This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize
Sing at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 24, 2008 · Time: 6–7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center
Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu or call UMass Dining Services: 413-545-2472.
Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing.
All entries must be received by April 23, 2008
There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round. Limited to 20 contestants for the entire event.
Presented by: UMass Dining Services & LAZER 99.9
Sponsored by:
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2008
umass.edu/diningservices
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

Who Wants to Be the Next UMass IRON CHEF?
WIN PRIZES
• THREE TEAMS PER DC OF THREE STUDENTS EACH
• MYSTERY BASKET WILL BE PROVIDED
• ONE WINNING TEAM PER DC
• SUBMIT RECIPES BY FRIDAY, APRIL 11
Winning Team to compete at the Taste of UMass
For complete details: www.umass.edu/diningservices
FRANKLIN DC WEDNESDAY APRIL 16 FROM 5–7 PM
WORCESTER DC WEDNESDAY APRIL 16 FROM 8–10 PM
HAMPSHIRE DC THURSDAY APRIL 17 FROM 5–7 PM
BERKSHIRE DC THURSDAY APRIL 17 FROM 7—9 PM
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
umass.edu/diningservices
Ivy
Sponsored by Campbell's Soup
Campbell's

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

John McCain and the myth of the 'true conservative'

Brad DeFlumeri

John McCain is an American hero. And he is also, albeit disputably, a conservative. The notion that he is something else – usually emanating from an anti-minority and rather regrettable wing of the conservative movement – is politically unsound and devoid of any realistic basis.

Conservatives of all types clamor for the "good old days" of Reagan at a time when the current GOP president is running up record debt and spending money on housing programs in a way that would have given Adam Smith and David Ricardo ulcers.

On the search for one mind-altering conservative leader, a subject on which so many of my colleagues seem to be wasting their time, Jeff Jacoby of the Globe said in February: "My point is simply that the immaculate conservative leader for whom so many on the right yearn to vote is a fantasy. Conservatives who say that McCain is no Ronald Reagan are right, but Mitt Romney is no Ronald Reagan either. Neither is Mike Huckabee. And neither was the real – as opposed to the mythic Ronald Reagan."

This, however, is not to say that I blindly agree with many of McCain's policy prescriptions – I don't. On matters from illegal immigration to campaign finance to the Bush tax cuts to global warming, McCain has historically been too much to the left of what I would want in a Republican president. For these reasons, I supported Romney in the primary, until he conceded defeat to McCain.

What many anti-McCain conservatives like Coulter and Michelle Malkin don't see – or perhaps ignore in an effort to squeeze one more sound bite out of their otherwise irrelevant careers – is that McCain's behavior as president need not be identical to the way he voted as the senior Senator from Arizona, a state riddled by crime, uneven access to education and immigration concerns.

To be sure, the presidency and defense of the country bring with them more important and sobering challenges than the constituent-driven agendas of many Senators. And this is where and why Senator McCain bothers me a bit less, and President McCain excites me a lot more.

McCain is a political maverick who has been willing to vote and legislate across party lines in what he perceives as the best interests of the country. To Coulter, this makes him a "sellout" and less desirable a candidate than Hillary Clinton. To me, Coulter's rejection of McCain is just another reason to vote for him.

McCain is a man whose worldview is informed by so much more than his political education in the Senate. He was a prisoner-of-war for almost a decade at the "Hanoi Hilton" in Vietnam – a place that would make GITMO look like the North Apartments.

During this time, he refused both special treatment and release offered to him by the North Vietnamese because his father was a Pacific theatre admiral. As a consequence, he routinely endured brutal beatings and witnessed the extremes of human suffering. From these extremes, McCain has developed some "odd" notions of taking care of another and perhaps getting the government to act to protect the poor and the needy. To some, like Malkin and Coulter, this sounds "too liberal" and makes McCain a traitor who abandoned conservative principles long ago.

Senator McCain bothers me a bit less, and President McCain excites me a lot more.

However, because McCain has lived through brutality that most Americans can hardly comprehend, I am willing to say there is something exceptionally refreshing in his willingness to break from contemporary conservative orthodoxy. It was this orthodoxy, you may recall, on which our current president ran his campaign in 2000 and quickly abandoned amid calls for the government to act. More importantly, it has made John McCain look like a refreshing post-Bush option.

If McCain's liberal social tendencies push away some old-style paleoconservatives, then his instincts on national defense and foreign policy should clearly be enough to pull them back in. As Jacoby of the Globe explains, "on the surpassing national-security issues of the day – confronting the threat from radical Islam and winning the war in Iraq – no one is more stalwart." In short, where Obama, Clinton and Pelosi would surely send diplomatic and fact-finding teams, a President McCain would send Marines and SEALs.

He would command an intensification of the international respect which he is already given and which his socialist opponents from the Democratic Party crave.

In an election cycle in which few things are certain, McCain's love for this great nation and his belief in both its inspirational greatness and moral rightness are profoundly indisputable. In Nov. 2007, the Boston Globe labeled McCain a national-greatness neoconservative in line with Bill Kristol of the Weekly Standard and David Brooks of the New York Times. Neither Kristol nor Brooks have ever been guilty of advocating for the Clintonian welfare state or Obamian socialization of healthcare.

In John McCain, conservatives would be getting a truly inspiring man whose life experiences serve to inform his thinking. He is, indeed, an American hero whose top priority will be to defend the soil and further the national interests of the country he has so selflessly served in both peace and war.

Unconvinced conservatives ought to let Clinton and Obama continue ripping each other apart. McCain's attention is and will remain on defeating our enemies in the Middle East, an issue on which he is fully qualified to lead the country. My vote goes to McCain.

Brad DeFlumeri is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at bdeflume@student.umass.edu.

COLLEGIAN READER POLL

Will Travis Ford be the UMass Men's basketball coach next year?

- ☐ Yes.
- ☐ No.
- ☐ Who's Travis Ford?

Of names and their changes

Lauren Rockoff

What if your name were Tara Leigh Patrick? Samuel Clemens? Barry Obama? There are a million reasons to change your name; but when it comes down to it, doesn't your name function as a key part of your identity? For Carmen Electra – who was born Tara Leigh Patrick, Samuel Clemens – who wrote under the pen name Mark Twain, and Barack Obama – who was known as Barry until college, a name change became the identity alteration of choice. But why?

Currer Bell was the pseudonym for Charlotte Bronte who wrote "Jane Eyre." Pen names of this sort were common for women in Bronte's time because female writers did not receive the same respect or have the opportunity to achieve the same popularity as their male counterparts.

Some change their names for a different reason. Albert Brooks changed his name from Albert Einstein to avoid being confused with a certain scientist.

So, whatever the reason, would you do it? Your parents thought long and hard about that name, or at least, they made a momentary effort of some kind. They may have named you after a character in their favorite book or a beloved family member or teacher. For some, naming one's child is akin to the hazing associated with joining a sports team or sorority. Those in power mistreat you, and then when you are in power, you mistreat those below you. After living a life of verbal abuse because of an outdated or pun-able name, a mother sometimes finds solace in the act of putting her own flesh and blood through the same afflictions she experienced.

When you change your name, a piece of your identity disappears along with your old name.

If you immigrate to this country, there is often a lot of pressure to change your name to something quintessentially American, as well as something people can pronounce on the first or second try. Yet, when you change your name, a piece of your identity disappears with it.

The reason for a name change, perhaps seeming more grown-up and dependable – as seems to be the motivation behind Barry's change back to his name Barack – must be more important than maintaining a sense of who you have been with that name. In the name department, Obama has been through a lot, beginning with his difficulties getting people past the closeness of his name to Osama and one or two other name slights that some have used to attack his credibility.

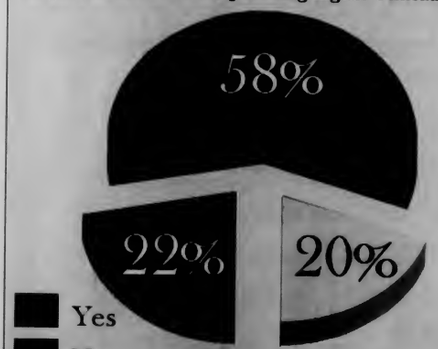
Did you ever have a nickname in elementary or high school that everyone insisted on using but drove you nearly to tears at its every repetition? Perhaps you tried continually to get people to call you by some "cool" name that seemed to you to encapsulate your very being. I recently saw a rerun of "Full House" where Stephanie Tanner was called "Step-on-Me" by her classmates and decided to change her name to the "coolest" name she could think of: Dawn. The concept of names is so important that it shows up everywhere, from one of the 1990's most well-loved sitcoms to the cover of a recent "Newsweek" ("When Barry Became Barack").

Our names are our callings cards. They determine our place in the line at graduation and our placement on attendance lists. If your last name starts with anything in the R through Z range, you will know of this injustice. Being last never feels nice, and our names often play a key role in arrangement. However, chances are you made at least one good friend in your part of the alphabet during homeroom in middle or high school.

But if your name was Tim Allen Dick, would you be comfortable shortening it to Tim Allen, casting off the Dick without acknowledging the sanctity of that four-letter surname on your birth certificate? The "Home Improvement" star did. So did Angelina Jolie Voight, in an attempt to distance herself from her famous and estranged father John Voight. Or perhaps you'd go the way of Norma Jean Martensen Baker and favor a nice name with alliteration like Marilyn Monroe. At the same time, some people favor the legendary one-word name over the double M, choosing instead to go from Marshall Mathers to Eminem or shorten the mouthful Madonna Louise Ciccone Ritchie to, simply, Madonna.

Perhaps, as the roommate formerly known as Angela Stasiowski suggests, the tendency of the famous to change their names goes beyond their publicists' advice to change Anastassakis to Aniston but stems from something deeper. Name changing may be a psychological tool for separating one's professional life from one's personal life. We can assume that J-Lo's mom leaves it to her daughter's fans to call the singer/actress, J-Lo and sticks to something along the lines of Jennifer or Jenny.

To the same tune, I wonder whether it gives the same satisfaction to see one's pen name on the binding of a book as to see one's birth name adorning its cover and title page. And I ask myself, how gratifying can it be to see and hear your name all over the media and to know that it's not your real one?



Lauren Rockoff is a Collegian columnist. She can be reached at lrockoff@student.umass.edu.

"DAILY COLLEGIAN pullquote podcast"

Collegian 'pod-columns' now online at dailycollegian.com!

COLLEGIAN READER POLL RESULTS

On March 31, 2008, Senator John Kerry editorialized in The Collegian about making higher education in Massachusetts affordable. Should more state funding be given to assist those pursuing higher education? *

- ■ Yes
- ■ No
- ☐ I can't even afford to comment.

*Collegian reader polls are non-scientific

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

UMass bands battle it out this Wednesday

BY ANDREA MURRAY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts has produced such musical talents as The Pixies, Natalie Cole and Stephen Kellogg and the Sixers. The University Programming Council is in search of the next great UMass band, so they are hosting the Battle of the Bands at the Student Union Ballroom this Wednesday. At least one member of each band is a current UMass student.

At the end of the battle, the Spring Concert lineup will be announced. The tickets for the Spring Concert are expected to go on sale Friday morning for the May 4 show. UMass students get into both the Battle of the Bands and the Spring Concert free of charge with their U-Cards.

The judges will be Michaela Farley and Danny Soto, the co-chairs of Concert and Productions at UPC. Special guest judges will be Bryon Bullock and Paula Hodecker of the Crafts Center. Free refreshments will be available, and the crowd will serve as the fifth and final judge.

The battle will consist of three rounds: first ten bands, then five bands, then down to two for the final duel. Each of the ten bands will be have a time slot of up to seven minutes in the first round. Once the judges have voted off half of the bands, round two will begin during which they will have another seven minutes to win over the audience's auditory favor. Round three will leave the last two bands to duke it out with two more seven-minute sets. A winner will be announced shortly thereafter.

The Boston-based, indie-pop quartet, Lannen Fall will play from 9:35 p.m. until 10:00 p.m. following the end of the battle. The band credits everything from Butch Walker to Blink-182 as their influences. The Spring Concert lineup will be announced during their set.

UPC will be giving away a Playstation 3 and a 16GB iPod Touch along with other great prizes. One giveaway will happen between each set for a total of ten giveaways. Every student who comes will receive a ticket at the door for the giveaways.

Picked on Sally describe themselves as punk/rock and hail from Fairfield, Conn. Some of their influences are Saves The Day, Elvis Costello, Alkaline Trio, Ben Kweller and The Bouncing Souls. They formed in '03 and recently recorded a new album in March. They will open the battle at 7:00 p.m.

Leaving London, a UMass-based quartet, will follow P.O.S. They describe themselves as a mix of rock, funk and power-pop and cite influences in the Red Hot Chili Peppers, Third Eye Blind, John Mayer, Dave Matthews Band, Prince, Radiohead, Incubus and Led Zeppelin.

The Boston-based hip-hop, rap and lyrical duo, Static and Messiah, will perform next. The two met in high school and have rhymed together ever since. According to their Myspace.com page, growing up in Boston helped them to write a little better and spit a little harder.

Acadia, a South Eastern-based quintet describe their vibe as indie, happy hardcore and surf all blended together. A variety of artists including Saves The Day, Brand New, Morrisey, Glassjaw, Thursday, The Police and John Lennon have influenced them. Acadia has been featured on MTVU's Web site, BestMusicOnCampus.com, as an "Artist Spotlight." In Jan. '07, Epitaph Records named them one of the top five unsigned bands in the nation. Their music is licensed for use on MTV shows, movies and other ventures.

Next is UMass-based solo act Abdi. Danny Soto, a UMass student, describes Abdi as a Caribbean-sounding T-Pain.

Exit Reason is a Greenfield-based alternative rock quartet. Their Myspace.com page reads "their only influence is life and everything that comes with it." They summed up their sound as similar to "the Village People, minus the gay and plus a cheetah and some dragon wings."

Following that, M.A.V., a Boston-based hip-hop group will perform. M.A.V is an acronym for "money and violence."

The progressive, experimental and psychedelic Dude, Fuckin'... Yeah from Amherst will take the stage following M.A.V. Their influences vary and include Radiohead, Pink Floyd, Jimi Hendrix, Yes, Tool and Ween. They compare their sound to Phish, The Mars Volta and Led Zeppelin.

Fully Loaded also hails from Boston. Their music is hip-hop that draws on rock roots.

The Chris Piquette Band, a pop rock outfit from Chicopee, will be the final act in the first round. Their song "Every Time" appeared in the movie "Cathedral Pines," which had its premiere at Northampton's Calvin Theater. Their influences are varied and include Santana, AC/DC, Pearl Jam, The Beatles, Ben Folds Five and Stevie Wonder.

The show is free and begins at 7 p.m. this Wednesday in the Student Union Ballroom.

Andrea Murray can be reached at akmurray@student.umass.edu.

UMass Battle of the Bands will take place this Wednesday in the Student Union Ballroom. The winner of this concert will open for this year's spring concert. 80 Proof (pictured above) received that honor last year.

Phallic photos: outlandishly hilarious or just plain infantile?

Aliens, dinosaurs add intrigue to book of 'Superbad' cartoons

BY MORGAN MEAGHER
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

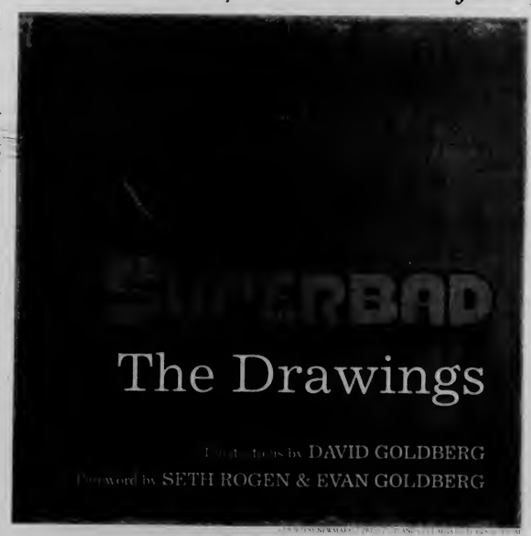
If your first thought after seeing "Superbad" was "Golly, I wish there had been more pictures of dicks," then today is your lucky day, my friend. Newmarket Press has just published a collection of "Seth's" drawings – 82 of them, to be exact – simply titled "Superbad: The Drawings."

The title is vague, but it speaks volumes to anyone who has seen the film. The book, a mere six by six inches, is practically exploding with drawings, including many not actually seen in the movie.

The book includes a foreword by Seth Rogen and Evan Goldberg, in which the co-authors of the film discuss how Seth's little problem came to be and why they chose Evan's older brother David to actually create all of the drawings for the movie. Next, an introduction from the esteemed artist himself. The elder Goldberg describes for the avid reader all of the painstaking research that went into these drawings. Then, after a mere five pages of foreplay, the dick drawings arrive in full splendor.

Conspicuously absent is the "big, veiny, triumphant bastard" which originally thrust Seth's illustration issue into the light. However, the 82 pictures form a compendium big enough to satisfy even the hungriest of "Superbad" fans.

The book includes some real gems: the "Penisaurus," the "Khrushchev Penis" and the "Alien Penis" bursting from a man's chest are some of the best. Goldberg also created several phallic renditions of scenes from the film, including Seth and Evan getting off the bus, and the touching scene, where Seth finally admits his love for Evan.



The drawings are nothing if not diverse. Goldberg sketched penis versions of famous scenes from a slew of films, including "Platoon," "The Karate Kid," "Star Wars" and "Dr. Strangelove." Many of the drawings are rather clever. The subtle references to Dylan and Seinfeld are sure to amuse anyone who picks up on them. To its further credit, the collection looks authentic.

Many of the illustrations are drawn in black or blue pen on lined, notebook paper. It is easy to imagine fourth-grade Seth sitting in class, whiling away the hours by scribbling these very pictures, then stuffing them into his Ghostbusters lunchbox.

The "Potsdam Penile Conference" and the "Declaration of Independence Penis" might have been inspired by a dull history class, while "Evolution of the Penis" could have been constructed in a boring biology lecture. A plethora of doodles depicting penises at work and at play, from "Rice Paddy Penises" to a "Hang-gliding Penis" to "A Meeting of Heads" over tic-tac-toe round out the phallic musings.

The penises themselves are lacking in racial diversity, and there are only a couple of caped crusaders in the bunch. Goldberg also skipped over some of the most obvious choices for his drawings. No Moby Dick, no picture of Nixon; but so far as movie merchandising goes, this little book is far more clever and interesting than the typical action-figures and t-shirts springing from most popular films these days. From the photo of the real Seth and Evan on the first page, to the elegant "Fini" with a bowing penis at the end, this book is sure to please any "Superbad" enthusiast.

Morgan Meagher can be reached at mmeagher@student.umass.edu.

"Superbad: The Drawings" expands on the phallic musings of Evan Goldberg's character Seth's drawings in the movie "Superbad," the story of three friends embarking on an epic pre-high school graduation adventure. The book includes a wide range of pictures, something for every sense of humor.

On penises: they're not pretty, but they are pretty immature

BY SHAYNA MURPHY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Morgan Meagher has made her case for "Superbad: The Drawings." I am here to make a rebuttal.

But before I do, let's get something straight, right here, right now.

Phalluses are not pretty. They're not pretty on their own, or with a new trim. They're not even pretty with body jewelry (although I have heard that comes in handy in other ways). So why, I ask, would someone be compelled to create a book devoted to various depictions of the phallus?

For absurdity's sake, that's why! And if you ask me, it's quite a joke indeed.

"Superbad: The Drawings" picks up where the movie left off. Ostensibly a collection of Seth's childhood drawings, drawn by David Goldberg, the book takes us through the gamut of historical phallus depictions. They're all here – the Viking Conquest, the misadventures of Robin Hood and even the rising of the American flag on Iwo Jima.

And the drawings don't just dabble in events past. Featured among the drawings are the illusive Silverback Penis, a creature taken for fable for decades, but revealed here as little more than a well-endowed gorilla, and also, the Penisaurus Rex. Even the David gets a phallic re-imagining. Da Vinci would no doubt be glad to see his work in its original form.

These are the strengths to "Superbad: The Drawings," but the problem with the book is that it relies way too much on cliché. For example, we've all seen the infamous scene in "Alien" where it bursts out of the guy's chest and onto the dinner table. Does it really need to be revisited again?

The book also fails to explore its own findings in any great depth. Sure, we all know the Titanic sank after it struck a big iceberg in the north Atlantic, but isn't it time we know the real story? That all those phalluses went down with the ship not because of lifeboats, but because of a lack of prophylactics?

"Superbad: The Drawings" may seem like harmless fun, but it actually raises a lot of questions about who we are as a society. Are we a society so dull that this is how we get our jollies, with books that skimp over our history and refuse to bend to any normal rules of storytelling?

"Superbad" makes a mockery of everything we should hold dear in our publications. Plot, character development, climax – nothing happens, and nothing ever gets off the ground. Instead, the characters throughout the book stay one-dimensional and bland; and the plot, while starting off strong, goes limp by about page 30 or so. This is mostly on account of the plot's randomness. It seems to jump all over the place.

Ultimately, "Superbad: The Drawings" seems like a waste of time. If we wanted to see phalluses dressed up like cowboys or Khrushchev, we could go online. The expectations with a book are that it should be something greater, something offering insight and clarity. Instead, all one can expect to get with "Superbad" are a bunch of doodles of penises in silly get-ups.

I'll pass on any more of this phallic foolery, thank you. And if you know what's good for you, you'll go ahead and do the same. The only sorts who could enjoy this sort of brain-less garbage are the types who aren't thinking with their heads, anyway.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

Celebrating diversity:

Music, movies and fashion for Asian Night

By Christina Fong
Collegian Staff

On Saturday night, the University of Massachusetts was promised a trip around Asia filled with many lively and comedic performances.

The sound of beating drums and the entrances of two large lions was an eye-opening welcome. The lions, of course, weren't real and were instead traditional costumes worn by a pair of people to function as the front and rear of the animal. The Lion Dance, performed by the Boston Group, was a playful one. They weren't a shy duo as they danced and ate on stage, playing to the crowd.

The night showcased many different student and non-student acts. It was a compilation of the various musical and artistic talents on campus. Several UMass cultural associations were involved, including the South Asian Student Association (SASA), Vietnamese Student Association (VSA) and the Taiwanese Student Association (TSA).

Dancers lit up the stage floor with several dynamic acts. The dance group Mass Masti from SASA performed traditional bhangra and modern hip-hop dances. Their name itself comes form a Hindu term meaning "fun, carefree, and playful." VSA members presented their own dance as well, performing a customary hat and ribbon dance. A traditional Chinese dance, "Dunhuang Fairy," was elegantly performed by student Alyssa Young. Stepping and Korean hip-hop dancing were also well incorporated into the show by the sisters of Sigma Psi Zeta and a Korean dance group.

Chinese pop singing and Korean rap were also included in the show. Songs were performed by students Sang-Jin Nam, Will Wong, Zoe Zhou, Wayne Park and Mimi Cai, all of whom received a rock-star ovation.

Though singers and dancers comprised the majority of the night's entertainment, other acts such as the UMass Tae Kwon Do club and the Chinese Wushu Research Institute were on hand to show off their martial arts skills. Board-breaking demonstrations, choreographed fights and weapon exhibitions left the audience in awe. Although some demonstrations took more than one attempt, the crowd cheered the participants to success.

Special guest performer Heather Park was the real star of the show, stealing the spotlight with her soulful voice and entertaining the crowd with songs from her debut album "Dream in Pictures." At one point during her set, she attempted to involve the audience with clapping to prove that "Asians have rhythm." Spoken word artist John Nguyen made a nervous appearance, but gave an adequate performance when delivering a few of his written pieces.

Two comedic movie trailers by Gary Mei were the most amusing elements of the show. "Pre-Med: The Movie" was a mix of Matrix-style fighting and pre-med horrors combined in a hilarious fashion. Cheesy college humor never fails to rally up laughter in a crowd.

The masters and mistresses of ceremony also made attempts at humor. Most of the time, they had those in attendance laughing to the point of tears. The Fresh Prince of Bel-Air dance imitation was particularly entertaining.

The night ended with a fashion show organized by TSA. Flashy clothing with roots in traditional and modern styles was enthusiastically modeled by students in the five-college community. Clothing from many different Asian countries was flaunted. The fashion show was a well-chosen conclusion to a night devoted to celebrating diversity within the local Asian community.

Overall, the night was an engaging cultural experience. Five-college students were able to showcase their diverse backgrounds and the various ethnicities. It's always worth getting to know the world beyond the confines of UMass.

Christina Fong can be reached at cfong@student.umass.edu

Recorded music no match for live show

By Michelle'Abbasciano
Collegian Staff

Minus the Bear and their friends and tourmates Portugal. The Man proved to be an excellent pairing last Saturday night at the Pearl Street. Both acts had audiences up and on their feet throughout the night.

After what seemed like an hour-long wait, the experimental indie/rock band Minus the Bear took the stage to an enthusiastic round of applause from an anxious crowd at Pearl Street in Northampton Saturday night. The five band members greeted the audience with warm smiles and friendly waves, picked up their respective instruments and strummed the first notes of the song "Knights" off their latest record, "Planet of Ice."

The introduction proved to be a great choice, evident by the appreciative, excited cheers from the fans. The honest vocals on top of dance-worthy rhythms, and surprisingly light guitar breakdowns set the perfect tone, immediately providing an upbeat environment for the rest of the band's set.

As the second song of their performance, which was equally as light, energetic and keyboard-heavy, came to an end and the thunderous applause from the at-capacity crowd ceased, the band declared they would be playing an "old song."

Minus the Bear played "Thanks for the Killer Game of Crisco Twister" off of their 2002 release "Highly Refined Pirates." Laced with maracas and synthesized keyboards, the song was a huge hit, sparking the crowd's clap-along.

At multiple times during Minus the Bear's set, the band made sure to thank their tour mates for coming out with them. They seemed genuinely grateful and more than appreciative that their good friends and fellow musicians in Portugal.The Man agreed to share the spotlight.

The eager audience members made sure to show the band their excitement about their first performance in Northampton, or Western Mass. for the matter. Additionally, the band put on such a phenomenal show that each song they played seemed to outdo the preceding one.

Although most of the songs included repetitive lyrics, this is a band that really takes the time to compile thoughtful music. The majority of Minus the Bear's songs are upbeat, toe-tapping tunes, but the echoey vocals over leisurely, jam session-type guitars on "White Mystery" was a perfect way to slow down their set and change it up a bit.

A definite crowd favorite was "Throwin' Shapes," which also sparked a strong clap-along and had every head in the room nodding along. Unfortunately, lead singer and guitarist Jake Snider was getting over a bad cold. It did not affect the vocalist's energy level or effort, but it did prove to take a strain on his throat.

Snider's vocals were slightly raspy and overwrought by the end of the song, but he continued to give the performance his all.

"The Fix," an energetic, bouncy song off of the band's 2005 release "Menos El Oso," carried an impressive guitar breakdown accompanied by brilliant melodies by keyboardist Alex Rose. "Pachuca Sunrise," off the same album, trumped it and had everyone in the room swaying along. The first few rows even seemed to open up into an impromptu dance floor by the song's climax. "Pachuca Sunrise" also included fairly repetitive lyrics, but that only seemed to favor the band, as it made the song easier to sing-along too.

By the end of the band's set, it was evident that the majority of the crowd members were longtime fans. This was obvious by the way the audience screamed approvingly once they recognized the first few opening notes of songs.

After a 30-second absence from the stage and a threateningly loaded "encore" chant from the crowd, the band emerged back onto their platform to perform two more songs, including the highly popular "Fulfill the Dream."

Their closing song of the night was "Absinthe Party at the Warehouse," which nearly every member of the audience knew. Its bouncing bass line and entertaining lyrics won the already zealous crowd over and allowed the band to close their set with a bang. Every last ounce of energy they had remaining was poured into the closing chords.

Although Minus the Bear's set was the obvious crowd pleaser, Portugal.The Man's set was also highly entertaining and unique. The five-piece band quietly emerged onto the stage, and lead singer John Gourley gave instructions to "kill all the lights," as they proceeded to dive into their opening song "A.K.A. M80 The Wolf."

This slow-paced, psychedelic song had an eerie vibe to it and combined with Gourley's high-pitched, emotional voice, "A.K.A. M80" proved to complement their equally exceptional, moving set. With a simple, yet entrancing light show that pulsated in coordination with the beat of the music, the band drove through each of their songs with an uncanny amount of energy.

Nearly every one of Portugal's songs earned the crowd's approval. Although there was little interaction between Gourley and the crowd, the fans still nodded along to every song and appreciated the heavy beats and distinctive lyrics.

Portugal.The Man's sound is much mellower than Minus the Bear with heavier jam sessions, haunting vocals and vigorous beats; yet at their core, the two bands share the same qualities. Both invoke a true rock 'n' roll spirit and are indie/experimental bands. The two acts truly compliment each other well as tour-mates.

Venue and performance equally unique

MoCA in North Adams hosts Stephen Malkmus and The Jicks

Stephen Malkmus and The Jicks took their act to the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art in North Adams last Friday.

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

Stephen Malkmus and the Jicks finished off their Midwest/East Coast leg of their United States spring tour with opener John Vanderslice last Friday at the Massachusetts Museum of Contemporary Art in North Adams. The group effortlessly meandered through an impressive set full of tracks from their new record "Real Emotional Trash" without once busting out a throwback tune from Malkmus' former band, the deeply admired Pavement.

John Vanderslice and his three other band members opened the show, churning out some fairly simple pop songs. Things got interesting when one of his musicians switched over to violin, creating a more delicate, rustic feel. This was the last show at which Vanderslice joined the Jicks on their tour, closing the set out in the middle of the decent-sized crowd with an intimate acoustic number.

The Jicks then took the stage, including a shambling Malkmus complete with button fly undone. Their beat up amplifiers reflected years on the road, including some childish alterations of their brand names, reading "Banger" instead of "Orange," "a snail" in white standing out from blacked out portions of "Marshall," and most immaturely, an amp that read "Ms. Boogie ass."

A relaxed Malkmus worked his way through the entire set in a sort of controlled stumble, predominantly opting for his fingers over a pick to coax atonal sounds from the strings. He casually summoned thick, muddy sounds from his trio of guitars, as well as searing tones and strangled vibratos. He wrestled with the pedals at his feet, though consistently got it right and created the perfect guitar jangles and chimes.

An equally relaxed (and barefoot) Joanna Bolme swayed from side to side, plucking out rhythms from her bass guitar and providing aloof backing vocals, while Mike Clark multi-tasked, taking the duties of a second guitar, keys, and the occasional tambourine. Drummer Janet Weiss also provided backing vocals, though more angelic, and was the perfect backbeat for Malkmus' stinging guitar tones. Her bass drum featured the large blue and green spiral and yellow owl which grace the "Real Emotional Trash" album cover, seemingly drawn on with Sharpie marker.

Malkmus was the obvious focus, however, joking with the crowd in between every song from the center of the stage. He commented on the industrial grounds of MASS MoCA, claiming there's nothing like it west of the Mississippi. He mused that the facility must be what David Byrne's house is like, but not as weird. He fielded a comment by an audience member mentioning an odd Malkmus interview with FOX News, claiming they must have seen him as a mere "liberal wacky slow-talker." Continuing with the comedy, Malkmus mentioned this year's upcoming Olympic Games in Beijing, imagining himself there as a representative of the "United States of Shreddage." Malkmus then immediately launched into a squealing, miniature guitar solo.

The Jicks rocked through key cuts from their new record including "Dragonfly Pie" and "Hopscotch Willie." After finishing the song "We Can't Help You," Malkmus, perhaps jokingly, revealed that former Sudanese NBA player and current activist Manute Bol is a fan of Malkmus' music. He provided an anecdote by Bol, who apparently claimed that "We Can't Help You" is his theme song while touring Africa providing aid to those suffering from hunger and civil war.

The set ended and the Jicks left the stage to heavy applause, returning after time for a well-earned encore. During this extra set of music, Malkmus took the opportunity to introduce each Jick, providing a theme song for each member before spitting the tongue-in-cheek announcement "all I wanna be is cool." The Jicks played three more songs, including the two and a half minute "Dark Wave" from their 2003 record "Pig Lib."

Malkmus never stopped smiling throughout the entire show, evidence that he is still having fun creating and performing music and doesn't need Pavement songs to milk a positive reaction from the audience. Malkmus helped strengthen MASS MoCA's reputation for bringing interesting and relevant acts to the area, surely with more to come in the future.

Jon Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

Join The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
OUPSTAIRSO
- AMHERST·BREWING·COMPANY -
FOR THE RELEASE OF
The Minute
Presented by Amherst Brewing Company
FEATURING THE ARTS & LIVING OF AMHERST, NORTHAMPTON, AND UMASS
Wednesday the 9th
STARTS AT 6PM
BUT YOU CAN SHOW UP WHENEVER

BEACH CLUB TANNING STUDIOS
BUY 1 GET 1 free
PACKAGES LOTIONS ACCESSORIES
APRIL 10, 11, 12
UCONN 1244 STORRS RD STORRS, CT 06268 PH (860) 487-HOTT (4688)
WESTFIELD 432 EAST MAIN ST WESTFIELD SHOPS PH (413) 504-TAN (8626)
UMASS 65 UNIVERSITY DR AMHERST, MA 01002 PH (413) 549-HOTT (4688)

If You've Got a Plan We've Got a Van!
POTTER'S AUTO & TRUCK RENTAL
Insurance Replacement Rates
FREE PICK-UP
• Direct Billing to Insurance Company
• Locally Owned & Operated
• 7 & 15 Passenger Vans
• UMass Purchase Orders, MHEC Rates
Potter's Collision Repair
at North Amherst Motors
78 Sunderland Rd., North Amherst, MA
(413) 549-RENT (7368)
www.pottersauto.com
(One mile North of UMass - on bus route)
Collision Repair & Glass Replacement

COME MEET AND DISCUSS
THE INTERNATIONAL STATE OF THE INCREDIBLE CRANBERRY WITH
JOHN C. DECAS
CEO DECAS CRANBERRY SALES, INC.
The Decas mission is to be the worldwide leader in technologically advanced cranberry-based ingredients for the food, health and nutrition markets.
UMass engineering, food processing and business schools have skills needed with this burgeoning wonder fruit.
At 8:00 p.m. on Tuesday, April 8, 2008 in Memorial Hall - FREE and open to all
SPONSORED BY THE STOCKBRIDGE FORUM
FUNDED BY ALPHA TAU GAMMA, THE ACADEMIC SERVICE AND SOCIAL FRATERNITY OF THE STOCKBRIDGE SCHOOL OF AGRICULTURE

Temple controls pace of play in win decision. Senior captain Jeanette Villapiano never left the field. She grabbed three ground balls in her time spent playing both midfield and defense.

W. LACROSSE from page 10

"Temple did a great job of controlling the pace and having long possessions," Venechanos said. "In this game, transition was where we did well. [The Owls's] controlling of the ball basically limited our opportunities for that."

Senior captain Kathleen Typadis netted the first goal of the game, firing a shot past Temple goalkeeper Bridget McMullan. Her second goal was also critical during the course of the game. She scored with six seconds left in the opening frame, giving the Minutewomen a 7-6 lead going into halftime after UMass ran two minutes off the clock to setup the first-half-ending goal.

Typadis' hat trick highlighted her midseason breakout. She is quickly closing in on redshirt junior Kaytlin McCormick's team-leading 24 goals. Typadis' three-goal performance leaves her with 18 goals on the season, good for second on the team. Her three goals led all attacks on the field and was a team-high.

Also of note, Typadis' two draws-controlled in the game gives her the all-time record in UMass history with 104.

McCormick also scored in the contest, finding the back of the net on an assist by senior captain Melynda Zwick midway through the first half.

The second half was different than the first. The Owls scored six goals in the second half, while UMass only scored two. Three of those goals came on a pivotal run for Temple, in which the Owls scored three goals to open the half. Typadis and junior defender Holly Drown tied the game for the Minutewomen at 9-9, but another string of three straight goals sealed the victory for Temple.

The final goal was scored by senior midfielder Whitney Richards, the Owls's leading scorer (29 goals). Richards' goal gave her the third Temple hat trick of the game.

Midfielders Berkley Summerlin and Chelsea Rosiek also had hat tricks on the day for the Owls.

Richards also nabbed two ground balls and two caused turnovers in the game.

The trio had four points (three goals, one assist) each in their complete-game efforts. Summerlin had three ground balls and knocked the ball loose once.

Venechanos has yet to criticize her freshman goalie, noting Temple's effective use of the clock en-route to a victory.

"When teams have long possessions on you, your defense has to be focused as well as the goalie," Venechanos said. "We've never played against that before. It wasn't too much of a turning point; it just worked out to [Temple's] advantage."

The Owls took advantage of opportunities more effectively than the Minutewomen and that – combined with smart, mistake free play from its veterans – gave Temple the edge.

Next, UMass will face the Saint Joseph's Hawks, in the first of its two-game trip to Philadelphia.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu

Whitney Williams hit her second home run of the season in UMass's 10-1 win over GW in Game 2 of Friday's doubleheader.

Owls's deliberate offense baffles UMass her third goal of the game that assured Temple the win.

TEMPLE from page 10

"We were tied or down by one, and we didn't have the ball. It could have been us going up by one [but they had control]," Venechanos said regarding the Owls's long possessions. "They played to their strengths."

In the first half, UMass was on top of its game. The Minutewomen seemed to recover on loose balls very quickly. The defense didn't allow quality shots on their goalkeeper, freshman Colleen Speth and they played aggressively to keep control of the ball. They also came back very quickly whenever Temple would score a goal, which has been hard for the Minutewomen to do in recent weeks because they have trouble resetting and seem to get let down.

The Minutewomen did well when they had control of the ball and gained momentum, allowing them to dominate play during the first half. They controlled the field in between the 30-yard lines, which has been difficult for the team in the past. During the second half in the defensive zone, typically a strength for the Minutewomen, it was hard for them to get control of the ball.

The turning point in the game was when Temple controlled the ball and slowed the game down. Temple took its time and got the ball to the player it wanted to take shots.

The Owls took [illegible] and controlled the pace [illegible] the game making UMass play [illegible] their level.

Mel[illegible] at mtorr[illegible]

Kaytlin McCormick shoots on Temple's goal during UMass's loss to Atlantic 10 play yesterday.

Sophomores homer in sweep

SOFTBALL from page 10

"From my memory I think Brandice went to a full count maybe twice, if that," Sortino said. "She's going to have games like that, I'm not saying they'll be perfect, but she can dominate when she gets ahead early in the count."

Not only was the pitching dominated throughout the game, but the UMass batters were hitting their stride. UMass had a 2-0 lead until sophomore centerfielder Carly Normandin knocked a three-run homer to centerfield.

"[Normandin] was outstanding at the plate; she's very powerful," Sortino said. "She swung early in the count, and I think it had great dividends."

The Minutewomen added two more runs as sophomore pitcher Amanda Gabriel struggled. The Colonials defense didn't provide much help for Gabriel, committing four errors in the first game. Balschmiter struck out the last six batters of the game.

In the second game, the Minutewoman offense gave Sanders a 3-0 lead before she threw her first pitch. In the top of the first inning, Williams reached on an error, and senior leftfielder Lauren Procter drew a walk. Junior third baseman Whitney Mollica advanced the runners to second and third, respectively, with a sacrifice bunt. Junior right fielder Samantha Salato cleared the bases with a three-run shot to left field.

Sanders gave up a homerun to the Colonials leadoff batter senior Chrysanthi Halkiotis but settled down and did not give up another hit until the sixth inning. Sanders went six innings, giving up two hits, while striking out three.

"[Sanders] definitely had a better command over the up and down part of the zone," Sortino said.

Sanders, who picked up her seventh victory of the season, has only allowed three runs over her last two starts, lowering her ERA to 1.98.

In the second inning, Williams hit a three-run homer to give UMass a 6-1 lead. Sophomore first baseman Sarah Reeves would make the game 10-1 in the sixth inning [illegible] Former Reeves [illegible] four times, drawing [illegible]

"I look at Whitney, Reeves, Sarah Reeves and Carly Normandin, all players that weren't [illegible] motors last season [illegible]

This season [illegible] the offense [illegible] is hitting .[illegible] and 16 RBI. Normandin [illegible] homerun and [illegible] RBI. Williams has 10 extra-base hits including two homeruns and nine RBI.

Up next for UMass [illegible] College. The Minutewomen [illegible] the Eagles on Wednesday at [illegible]

Steve Cunningham can be reached at [illegible]

Academic excellence:
a direct path to success.
Ernst & Young, in conjunction with the Ernst & Young Foundation, congratulates the University of Massachusetts—Amherst. We are proud to team with you to support the University's diversity initiatives and academic success by making a $500,000 contribution to create the Ernst & Young Partners in Education Program at the Isenberg School of Management.
Highlights of the new program include corporate seminars, tutorial assistance, Ernst & Young scholarships and development of a mentoring program.
ey.com/us/careers
Assurance • Tax • Transactions • Advisory
ERNST & YOUNG
Quality In Everything We Do
© 2008 Ernst & Young LLP
Ernst & Young refers to the global organization of member firms of Ernst & Young Global Limited, each of which is a separate legal entity. Ernst & Young LLP is a member firm serving clients in the U.S.

Minutewomen win on Connecticut River

UMass defeats Colgate and Holy Cross in lone home meet

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts rowing team rebounded after a loss last weekend in the Yankee cup with a win on Sunday against Colgate and Holy Cross.

The day held four races between the three schools: Varsity 8, Second Varsity 8, Novice 8 and Varsity 4. UMass and Holy Cross participated in all four races while Colgate raced only Varsity and Second Varsity 8 boats.

The first race that got underway was the Varsity 8. With UMass trailing Colgate, the Minutewomen made a push to come from behind and take the race. UMass finished the race in 8 minutes, 28.6 seconds, fewer than two seconds before Colgate.

Due to strong currents, all races after the first were shortened.

Following the Varsity 8 race, the UMass Second Varsity 8 continued the success by beating Colgate by 23 seconds, with a time of 5:58.5.

"It was really aggressive," senior coxswain Dana Pukla said. Pukla led the Second Varsity 8 who got off the line quickly and were able sustain it through the whole race.

The Novice 8 had the most impressive win of the day when they beat Holy Cross by almost 36 seconds. The boat finished with a time of 6:03.9. The last race of the day was the Varsity 4 boats.

UMass raced two boats against Holy Cross's one with the UMass "B" boat taking first with a time of 7:00.4. Holy Cross followed in second with a time of 7:29.0, and the UMass "A" boat took third with a time of 7:34.5.

"The women showed a lot of tenacity," UMass coach Jim Dietz said.

Dietz was particularly impressed with two boats.

"I was very pleased with the Second Varsity 8 and the Novice 8. They really came to race," Dietz said.

The regatta was a reunion for Dietz as he squared off against an old student of his, Colgate coach Greg Kruczynski. When Dietz coached men's rowing at Coast Guard, Kruczynski rowed for him before coaching alongside Dietz for seven years at UMass.

The mentor got the better of his former student, despite Kruczynski's really giving UMass a challenge.

"It was kind of a dog fight between us and Colgate," said senior captain Sarah Marsan.

The Minutewomen did not taper their practices this week, as they tried to prepare for their next two races, the Knecht Cup and the Atlantic 10 Championship. With UMass not diminishing or trying to peak at the time of the race, it makes their victories that much more impressive.

"Today was a huge morale booster for everyone," said senior captain Amanda Mawn.

The confidence boost comes just before the Minutewomen have their final test before they defend their A-10 title. Next up for UMass is the Knecht Cup Saturday April 12 and Sunday April 13 on the Cooper River in Camden, N.J.

"We're just going to use each race to learn from and get stronger," said Marsan.

The Knecht Cup will feature over 50 schools from across the nation, and will give the Minutewomen a better idea of where they stand come the A-10 Championship.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

The Massachusetts rowing team defeated both Colgate and Holy Cross yesterday on the Connecticut River. The Minutewomen performed well following their loss to Rhode Island last weekend.

Hackney takes third at UConn Invitational

By Adam Miller
Collegian Staff

The Massachusetts men's track and field team must have forgot that March 9 was almost a month ago. The Minutemen finished fourth place this Saturday at the Connecticut Invitational. It was their first meet since last month's IC4A Indoor Championships on March 8 and 9.

UMass finished the meet with several performances in the Top 3, even though it was the team's first meet of the outdoor season.

Sophomore Ian Hackney (22.28 seconds) took third place in the 200-meter dash. UMass coach Ken O'Brien believes that it was the best performance of Hackney's career.

"[Hackney's finish] shows the young man is in really good shape and about to have a really good season," O'Brien said.

The 400-meter dash had a strong showing from the Minutemen as they had three runners in the Top 5. Senior Nathan Barksdale (49.76 seconds) took first over Brown's Kevin Cervantes by 0.15 seconds.

Sophomore Samuel Laorenza (50.11 seconds) finished third, and freshman Michael Perotta (50.41 seconds) took fourth.

"That particular race was really difficult for us," O'Brien said. "Nobody gave up or blinked an eye."

The other first-place performance came from senior Nils Fischer (15 minutes, 2.57 seconds), who finished 13 seconds ahead of Sacred Heart's Luis German.

The men's 4x100-meter relay team (43.24 seconds) came out on top in its first race of the year. The relay team consisted of Barksdale, Hackney and sophomores Brian Miller and Andrew O'Donnell.

"We have a team that has a lot of young kids on it," O'Brien said. "The time that they ran or the distances they threw were like they were at the end of the indoor season."

The women's track and field team came in sixth this weekend with positive results from sophomore Lisa Wilson and redshirt junior Kristen Bakanowski.

Wilson (145 feet, one inch) took third in the discus throw, giving her the third best throw in UMass history. Bakanowski (3.5 meters) finished third in the pole vault behind Harvard vaulters Sally Stanton and Clara Blattler, who took first and second.

Bakanowski last competed in the ECAC Indoor Championships on March 8 and 9. She took first with a career-high 3.95 meters.

Sophomore Holly Heinricher (26.08 seconds) took seventh in the 200-meter dash for the Minutewomen while redshirt freshman Shiyi Zan (18:10.96 seconds) finished third in the 5,000-meter run. She raced in place of senior Christina DeRosa, who typically runs the 5K.

Next week will be a home meet for both teams as they participate in the UMass Invitational on April 12.

Adam Miller can be reached at ajmil0@student.umass.edu.

Sophomore Ian Hackney finished third in the 200-meter dash Satuday at the Connecticut Invitational.

Faceoff success sparks offense in New York

M. LACROSSE from page 10

ing chances on most possessions. But the team also took advantage of several opportunities to score in transition. Balise and freshman attack Zach Rodgers dominated the early scoring, as they accounted for four of the team's first six goals.

"We shot the ball very well [in the first quarter]," Cannella said. "We jumped out and had a lot of energy early. The guys made plays, and that's what you need to do in this sport."

Balise leads the team in total offense with 26 points (21 goals and 5 assists). In fact, the six goals marked the largest individual performance since former Minuteman Jeff Zywicki tallied six in the team's NCAA Tournament win over Syracuse in 2005.

"Tim [Balise] is very consistent with his work ethic, so you can expect that play," Cannella said. "I think he expects it of himself as well."

More significantly, the Minutemen spent much of the contest on the attack due to high face-off winning percentage of midfielder Joe Reale. The junior won a career-high 15-of-21 attempts.

In previous matches, opponents would consistently win face-offs. Consequently, UMass spent the majority of the games on defense, which led to the team's suffering offensive output.

Sophomore Bobby Hayes assisted on two UMass goals in its win over the Red Storm Saturday afternoon.

Saturday, the Maroon and White held St. John's to eight goals, despite allowing 34 shots. Junior goalkeeper Doc Schneider made 15 saves behind the strong play of the UMass defense.

Game notes

UMass extended its series domination against St. John's to 13-0 ... Midfielders Nick Glasser and Bobby Hayes also attempted faceoffs, but the pair lost its three combined chances ... Senior defenseman Brian Danvers picked up six groundballs for the Minutemen.

Michael King can be reached at mking@dailycollegian.com.

8th-inning mistake dooms Clegg Friday

BASEBALL from page 10

Tempesta single, Macdonald hit a two-run homer off of GW's Eric Cantrell.

The Minutemen registered three more hits in that inning and received RBIs from Andrew Black and Andy Tuetken.

With timely hitting and good pitching, UMass won the final two games of the series. However, the same could not be said of the first game, in which the Minutemen were limited to two hits and fell, 5-0.

Chris Neary, who started for GW, wasn't overpowering the UMass hitters – he struck out two batters in eight innings and limited the Minutemen to one hit, a Baudinet single in the seventh inning.

Mitchell Clegg started for UMass, allowing five runs in eight innings. Clegg pitched well for most of the game but struggled in the sixth and eighth innings.

Colonial catcher Andrew Abokhair drove in two runs in the sixth inning with a two-run double, and Tim Reeves hit a three-run home run with two outs in the eighth to put the game out of reach.

Winning two out of three games in the series was crucial for the Minutemen. In their other series against conference opponents, UMass was swept by Duquesne and lost two of three games last weekend to Xavier.

They finished last season at one game under .500 in the A-10 (13-14) and failed to make the conference tournament. Though the season is still early, UMass cannot afford to fall too far down in the standings if they want to qualify for the tournament.

Unlike conference tournaments in basketball, the majority of the teams do not qualify for the conference tournament in baseball.

UMass is currently tied for 10th place in the A-10 with Rhode Island, and Fordham and will have a chance to make up ground against St. Bonaventure this coming weekend. The Bonnies are currently tied for sixth place in the conference.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

YOU CAN'T MAKE UP YOUR INTERVIEW

After-grad careers, part-time jobs, and internships.

START BUILDING

cbcAmpus.com

Arigato II あかりと Hibachi Steak & Seafood

15% off with Student ID
(except Friday & Saturdays)
Sushi · Full Bar · Cocktails

Reservations Suggested
413.253.0707

Born to Sudoku.

				9	4	7	2
							1
		8	1	7				9
	6		9	2			3
		5				8
	3			4	7		1
9				6	2	1
5
3	1	2	4

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 "M*A*S*H" setting
6 Recedes
10 Lose clarity
14 Motionless
15 Spiteful
16 Egg-shaped
17 Halifax location
19 Produce skin
20 Do ushering
21 Citrus fruit drink
23 Said again and again
27 Radiance
28 Finished
29 Distress signal
31 Clairvoyants
32 Electric eye, e.g.
35 Crumb bum
37 Gore and Smith
38 Floral badge
40 Eggs to Nero
43 Printing process, briefly
44 Football team
46 Plains tent
49 Slangy affirmative
51 Repair
52 Indian and Pacific
54 Digressions
57 Apparition
59 Cake layer
60 Stick with a stick
61 Dreadnought
66 Lascivious look
67 Toledo's lake
68 March King
69 Byrnes and Hall
70 Marsh grass
71 Foe

DOWN
1 Relatives
2 Lennon's lady
3 RPM word
4 Graphite removers
5 Perplexed
6 Hams it up
7 Wager
8 Get-out-of-jail money
9 Symbol of slowness
10 Predict
11 Fly in an aircraft
12 Ire
13 Church officers
18 Hep character
22 Edible marine mollusk
23 Bonheur or Parks
24 Daredevil Knievel
25 Writes
26 Distribute in small quantities
30 Drainland
33 Show the ropes to 34 Decompose
36 Shoshone
39 Bashful
40 Stove chamber
41 Jacket slit
42 Common conjunctions
43 Not quite ringers
45 Aussie tennis great Roy
46 Overbalance
47 Reverberated
48 Pale and sickly looking
50 Tapped gently
53 Not drunk
55 Zilch
56 Fibers in V's
58 Foal's mom
62 Equal score
63 Shade of color
64 Doctrine
65 Discharge a debt

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Do you desire fame, fortune and a great sex life?

Comics Guy is graduating and needs a replacement for next year.

Find out about the position and pick up an application in The Collegian office located in the basement of the campus center or email inquiries to comics@dailycollegian.com

Quote of the Day

"We are bits of stellar matter that got cold by accident, bits of a star gone wrong."

— Sir Arthur Eddington

Scratch n' Sniff By Derek Cuneo

Dream Nation By Louis Coppola

Labrat By Richard Martelly

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
Take it slow, and be on the lookout this week. Early April is iceberg season in these waters.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It is the time of the year when the elk shed their winter antlers and end petty quarrels.

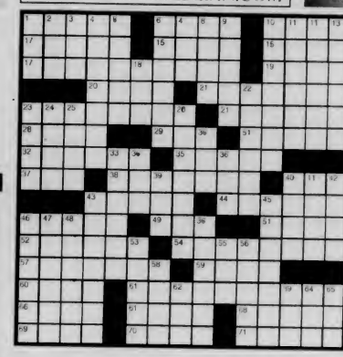
aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
Unless your goal is to give someone a slightly gross, lukewarm drink, crying gets you nowhere.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
Dying your hair is having a much more literal effect than you might have hoped. Your once shiny mane now looks haggard.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
You are one of those people who are simply too nice to hate.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
A relic from your past will make a surprising return. Smile politely and sell them into sexual slavery.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
The fruits of your labor will be way cooler than a baby but much less painful to produce.



virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
The hosts of TLC's "What Not To Wear" will soon be showing up at your door. They know about your fashion misdeeds.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Change your last name to a verb, and use it to determine your actions for the rest of your life. Manny Strokes, for example.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
If only invitations to crappy Facebook applications could be used as fossil fuels, the world would never run out of energy.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
You are a tiny prawn caught in the stressful and haggard fishing net of the Amherst real estate market.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
There comes a time in every burrito's life when it must ditch the tin foil and go au naturale.

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherstOutreach
Summer Session 2008
KICK off your Summer right!!!
Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity
Session I June 2 - July 10
Session II July 14 - Aug 20
REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

Your mother called. She said you should be eating more vegetables and reading more comics.

comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Student Union Art Gallery presents "Line Scape and Sound Fields" by Francesca Caruso, Sophia Flood, Brendan Dean and Kyle Nilan 4/7-4/18. Reception Tu 4/8 5-7pm. Gallery hours: M-Th 10-5 and F 10-3. Free. 545-0792

Apt for rent

Hobart condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Apts for rent

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications, 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Employment

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV). for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

Employment

Attention all Juniors&Seniors! April 7th is the last day to to apply to become a legal assistant with the student legal services office. Earn 12 undergraduate credits while gaining valuable experience in the legal field. Contact us at 413-545-1995 or stop by our office at 922 Campus Center.

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER

Employment

OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

University Bartending classes start soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

House for rent

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-

House for rent

abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

28 Stockbridge St. 6 bedroom house -2 baths, living room, eat in kitchen, pantry, $2,925+ www.amherstlincolnrealty.com 253-7879

Room for rent

Near Amherst Center $475 Inclusive Reduced Rent for Part Time Nanny. 549-7789 Strong St.

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906, 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test. 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst. www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTSMONDAY

MONDAY, APRIL 7, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen drop the ball

BRIAN HEDGES/COLLEGIAN

Temple's Lindsay Wells causes a turnover against UMass attack Kaytlin McCormick yesterday during the Owls's 12–9 win at McGuirk Stadium. McCormick scored a goal and assisted on two others, but the Minutewomen could not overcome a second-half rally from TU.

Temple uses runs to out-do UMass in conference matchup

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts women's lacrosse team couldn't find an answer to the Atlantic 10's top team yesterday at McGuirk Stadium. Temple beat the Minutewomen, 12-9.

UMass (3-9, 1-2 A-10) fell victim to the experienced midfield of Temple (8-3, 5-0 A-10). Freshman goalkeeper Colleen Speth again suffered the loss for the Minutewomen and now falls to 2-7 on the season.

Temple	12
UMass	9

Her runs that the Maroon and White allowed the Owls to create were a crucial part in the Minutewomen's defeat. Temple scored consecutive goals six times, while UMass only did so three times.

The duo of senior defender Julie Papaleo and junior Jackie Rosenzweig led the defensive effort for the Minutewomen who played the entire game. Rosenzweig also pitched in on offense, picking up a groundball in her own defensive zone off of her own caused-turnover and converting a successful clear into her first-career goal.

The Minutewoman defensive front saw significant time during this game. The methodical play of Temple called for UMass coach Alexis Venechanos to make this

See W. LACROSSE on page 7

Statistics don't tell whole story of Owls's successes

BY MELISSA TURTINEN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Looking at the statistics from Sunday afternoon's Massachusetts women's lacrosse game, one would assume that the Minutewomen came away with a win, but the score of the game tells a different story.

UMass lost to Temple, 12-9, after having the lead for most of the first half. The Minutewomen dominated on shots, 22-19 and groundballs, 10-8. They were successful in draw controls, 13-10, in which UMass senior Kathleen Typadis had two giving her a career total of 104 to surpass the school record of 103. UMass also had a season-low eight turnovers to Temple's 12. None of that seemed to be enough to beat the Owls, who remain undefeated in the Atlantic 10.

"[Temple's] goals and possessions were timelier. When they had the ball, they were under control," UMass coach Alexis Venechanos said.

The reason for the Minutewomen's loss was the lack of possession in the second half. Temple controlled the ball for the last 15 minutes of the game, which did not allow UMass to get a chance to gain control for a run at the goal. In the second half, Temple scored six goals and held UMass to two.

In the last six minutes of the game, Temple ran four minutes off the clock in its offensive zone until senior Whitney Richards scored

See TEMPLE on page 7

Balise leads Minutemen past St. John's

Junior scores 6 goals in win over ECAC opponent

BY MICHAEL KING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Amidst the tumultuous circumstances on and off the field that have characterized the 2008 season for the Massachusetts men's lacrosse team, UMass coach Greg Cannella has challenged his experienced attackmen to demonstrate a greater level of leadership on offense.

UMass	13
St. John's	8

Evidently, the Minutemen (4-5, 2-1 ECAC) responded to their coach's challenge, as the team defeated winless Saint John's (0-9, 0-4 ECAC), 13-8, in Queens, N.Y. Junior attack Tim Balise, who scored the game-winning goal against Penn State on March 29, tallied six times for the Minutemen – a new career high.

"Toward the end of the season, the seniors begin to think about the end of their careers," Cannella said. "There's a great sense of urgency, and I think some of the younger guys feel that as well."

The Maroon and White face conference-rival Hobart (5-4, 2-2 ECAC) at Garber Field next weekend. Now with two victories in conference, the Minutemen maintain third place in the ECAC behind Loyola (5-4, 4-0 ECAC) and Georgetown (7-2, 3-0 ECAC).

Cannella hopes that his team's performance over the past two weeks will breed more consistent success.

"We talked a lot about consistency last week," Cannella said. "A couple of wins leads to more confidence and hard work, so hopefully we'll continue to play well."

UMass built a seven-goal lead before the Red Storm scored its first goal with nearly four minutes into the second quarter. St. John's cut the deficit to five midway through the third quarter, but the Red Storm would get no closer.

The Minutemen passed the ball efficiently enough to create scor-

See M. LACROSSE on page 8

BRIAN HEDGES/COLLEGIAN

Junior attack Tim Balise scored six goals in UMass's 13–8 win over Saint John's Saturday in New York.

Balschmiter perfect in win

BRIAN HEDGES/COLLEGIAN

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter pitched the eighth perfect game in UMass history during the first game of Friday's pair with GW.

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Junior pitcher Brandice Balschmiter showed why she is one of the top pitchers in the nation this weekend. Balschmiter threw a perfect game as the Massachusetts softball team won, 8-0, over George Washington.

It was the third no hitter of Balschmiter's career and her first perfect game. The perfect game was the eighth recorded in UMass softball history.

UMass	10
GW	1

In the second game of the doubleheader, sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders allowed two hits and one earned run in a 10-1 victory. UMass hit three homeruns in Game 2. Sophomore shortstop Whitney Williams went 1-for-4 with three RBIs in the nine-run win.

UMass	8
GW	0

"I thought [Brandice] had all cylinders going," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said. "I thought she was able to locate with tremendous speed with her fastball, and her moving pitches were on task."

Balschmiter did not allow a single batter to reach first base, and she struck out 13 of the 18 batters she saw over six innings of work. Balschmiter lowered her earned run average to a nifty 0.76 and improved her record to 13-6. Not one ball made it out of the infield as Balschmiter dominated GW. The Colonials (5-16, 1-5 Atlantic10) are losers of nine straight. UMass (20-11, 8-0 A-10) has won 10 straight, including 26 straight conference wins.

See SOFTBALL on page 7

Maroon and White take 2

Serino, Leigh shut down GW

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Nick Serino pitched 6-1/3 scoreless innings Sunday, and the Massachusetts baseball team won its first conference series this season, taking two of three games from George Washington on the road.

UMass hosts Connecticut tomorrow at Earl Lorden Field at 3 p.m.

Serino struck out a career-high seven batters while walking three and allowing five hits in the 4-0 victory. The freshman has pitched well for the Minutemen (8-11, 3-6 Atlantic 10) this season, leading the starting pitching staff with a 2.45 earned run average.

The UMass offense struggled in the early innings of the game but got a lead-off home run from Brian Baudinet in the fourth inning.

UMass	4
GW	0

Similar to Serino, Baudinet is a player who's stepped into a starting role and excelled this season. He saw limited time last season (7-for-53 at the plate) but already leads the team with five home runs this season.

UMass	6
GW	3

Bryan Adamski led UMass with five home runs last season but that was over a span of 47 games, while Baudinet's already reached that mark over 18.

GW	5
UMass	0

Prior to Baudinet's home run, George Washington's (16-13, 5-4 A-10) Pat Lehman had retired the first nine batters and struck out six.

The Minutemen scored another run in the fourth on a Jim Macdonald RBI single and added two more in the ninth inning to give Mitchell Eilenberg, who relieved Serino in the seventh and finished the game, a cushion to work with.

Lehman pitched a complete game and struck out eight batters, but the offense couldn't get anything going. Eilenberg didn't allow a hit in the 2-2/3 innings he pitched.

Bryan Leigh, a transfer from Barry University, provided the Minutemen with another solid pitching performance on Saturday.

Leigh limited the Colonials to two runs over seven innings; and mainly due to a four-run first inning, the Minutemen won, 6-3.

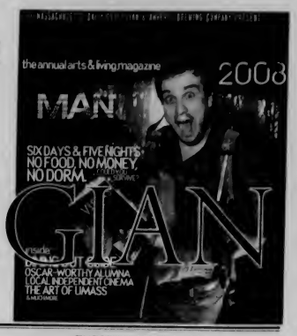
Entering the eighth inning, Leigh hadn't allowed a run but was removed from the game after allowing a two-run home run and a single in the eighth.

The top of the first inning didn't appear to be promising, as Baudinet and Ryan Franczek both grounded out to shortstop.

However, following an Adam

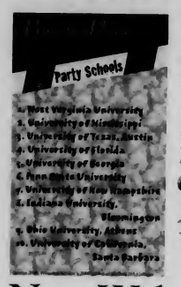
See BASEBALL on page 8

JENNA OPLINGER/COLLEGIAN



Brian Baudinet hit his team-leading fifth home run of the season as the Minutemen won the rubber game of the weekend's three-game set with George Washington.

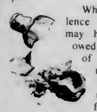
CHECK TOMORROW'S COLLEGIAN FOR THE MINUTE



THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 61 LO: 32 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2008



UMass retains party image

Students voice opposition to campus' weekend reputation

BY DEVON COURTNEY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's note – The following article is the second in a week-long series covering violence on campus.

While recent violence on campus may have overshadowed the University of Massachusetts' reputation as a party school, many students, faculty and alumni remain concerned with the image UMass still holds.

"The party reputation at UMass was aggrandized by both students and administration," said junior legal studies and history major Michael Tsapatsaris.

Senior computer science major John Brattin had a different perspective.

"I'm annoyed that UMass has a reputation for being a party school," he said. "When I told people I was going to UMass, 90 percent of them made some lame joke about how much I must want to drink. It frustrated and embarrassed me every time I had to explain that in fact I was serious about my studies and that I had no plans to drink at all."

Even the Princeton Review, which in its annual report two years ago cited UMass as the eighth largest party school in the nation – has since dropped UMass from its ranks.

"I think UMass is greatly exaggerated as a party school, and it has the same level of partying as most universities," said junior neuroscience major Deanna De La Cruz. "UMass has a lot to offer students and it is sad that out of its greatest accomplishments, it is outshined by

See PARTY on page 2

Despite having been dropped from the Princeton Review's list of top party schools, the reputation has lingered on at UMass.

New Web site designed to help interns

Online hub created to seek, review internships nation-wide

BY JESSICA SACCO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

A brand new Web site known as Youintern.com has just recently been launched for students looking to learn about and seek internships available to them on the Internet.

The Web site is founded and run by two advertising executives, Anad Chopra-McGowan and Daniel Chaparian, and two undergraduate Boston University juniors, Jason Kahn and Jeff Li.

The site is directed to those in advertising and marketing, but there are plans to expand to other industries as well.

The idea for Youintern.com came from the founder's understanding that there was no real place on the Internet where students could get information on internships in one central location.

The main goal for the Web site is the "democratization of the internship process," said Chopra-McGowan. "All the information is available to everyone, whether you're in a small place or big, or if you're in your city or another. [Youintern.com] gives you the information to make a good decision about your internship."

Once reaching the page, navigation is simple, and after registering, one is able to search, browse or review any internship available on the Web site. Reviews are posted directly by students who wish to share their experience with others about their past work with internships that are offered on the site. Not only that, but students are able to get expertise advice and comments from professionals in the advertising and public relations industries.

However, Chopra-McGowan says he feels the review section is the most effective part of the Web site.

See INTERNSHIP on page 2

KRISTI INAKA/COLLEGIAN

Using youintern.com, students can swap internship experiences while searching for their next foray into the real world.

Smith professor wins Guggenheim

For the third year in a row, a Smith College professor has been announced among the Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation fellows.

Daniel Horowitz, the Mary Huggins Gamble Professor of American studies at Smith, was one of the 190 Guggenheim fellows chosen from a pool of 2,600 applicants.

Horowitz, who joined the Smith faculty in 1989 and has taught at Harvard University, the University of Michigan and Wellesley college, among others, focuses on the study of writers and their responses to consumer culture.

The award, one of the most celebrated honorifics in academia, will assist Horowitz in his research, which he described in a statement as "using research to write intellectual history that patiently and boldly explores how writers use ideas to transform how we understand the world."

His new project explores contemporary writers and their shift from viewing culture as "a source of moral degradation to ... a focus of pleasure and social communication."

Horowitz received his undergraduate degree in American studies from Yale University and a graduate degree in history from Harvard University. He has received numerous awards throughout his tenure, including a career award from the American Studies Association (ASA) in 2003 for his achievements in teaching, advising and program development, fellowships from the National Humanities Center and the National Endowment for the Humanities and book prizes from the North East Popular Culture Association and the ASA for his book, "Betty Friedan and the Making of 'The Feminine Mystique.'"

The John Simon Guggenheim Memorial Foundation awards approximately 200 fellowships each year with the purpose of assisting artists and academics in their fields under the freest possible conditions. It was established in 1925 by United States Senator Simon Guggenheim and his family in memorial of their deceased son.

S.P. Sullivan

Smithipedia to take college history to World Wide Web

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

All things Smith College will go online next week as the Northampton, Mass., school plans to release "Smithipedia" – an Internet-based encyclopedia – on the World Wide Web.

"The Internet is a fantastic tool with access to information," said College Archivist Nanci Young in a statement. "We receive a lot of recurring questions that could be answered online."

Described as a "central, accessible location for a variety of information," the encyclopedia focuses on the college's past and traditions.

Young criticized universities like Princeton and Brown for publishing solely hardcopy editions of their histories, rather than pursuing an online alternative as well. Taking into consideration the endless stretch of history as compared to the static nature of printed publications, Smith opted to host the historical information pertinent to the school on the Internet, according to Young.

Young – who initiated the project worked with five STRIDE scholars to complete the approximately 20 articles centered on Smith College that will find their way online starting next week. Each of the contributors focused on a different aspect of Smith's history to correspond with their interests.

"Since I'm taking classes about race and history, and I'm a minority here at Smith, I was eager to learn Smith's racial history," said Elsa Rosales, a sophomore majoring in sociology.

For fellow contributor and history major Fatima Vasconez, the freedom to choose any topic of interest allowed her to research the history of single-sex colleges.

All of the scholars have been engaged in piecing together the history of the college by meeting and speaking with people who witnessed and participated in Smith's past, including former president Mary Maples Dunn.

Young hopes to eventually open the process of adding to the online encyclopedia to the rest of the student body.

"I'd love to open up 'Smithipedia' to departments or student [organizations]," she said. "This work can be a real community-building process."

Guest lecturer leads discussion of African diaspora in Europe

BY GISEL SAILLANT
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Students discussed the African Diaspora in Europe during an event organized and hosted by Commonwealth College at the University of Massachusetts last week.

The lecture, entitled "Europe and the African Diaspora," was presented by Sara Lennox, director of the social thought and political economy program, and professor in German and Scandinavian studies department at the University.

As the students ate their pizza slices from Antonio's, Lennox took the opportunity to go around the room and ask them their names and majors. She concluded that despite the wide array of majors reported in that room, none of them had a concentration in the presence of "black Europeans."

Lennox explored reasons why generations of the African Diaspora have lived and continue to live in Europe.

"We are here because you were there," Lennox said, using a very familiar saying amongst black British citizens that explains their presence in Europe.

With the overhead projector on, Lennox tried to help the students visualize the connections Africa has had with Europe and the Americas. With the help of laminated slides of the transatlantic slave trade and the European colonies in Africa, Lennox helped the students connect with Africa.

"[Everything] in Africa has been occupied by Europeans. The transatlantic slave trade allowed Africa to go to the Caribbean," Lennox said.

She discussed colonialism as a means to explain the African Diaspora in Europe.

"The whole point of colonization was to extract the resources of the land; economies were severely affected. Colonizers organized the countries to work for them," Lennox said.

According to Lennox, the main reason the African Diaspora is in Europe is economics.

Lennox claimed that historically, Africans have been present in Europe since the 16th century, and she showed the students a painting that supported her claim. She told the audience it was very fashionable for white aristocrats to be painted next to black page boys since they wanted the portrait to show contrast, making them seem whiter.

The economic movement of African descendants to Europe started mainly after the scramble for Africa, "when Europeans decided this is going to be yours and mine," Lennox said.

The African presence in Europe has grown steadily ever since.

Lennox posed the question, "What do white Europeans think about people of African Diaspora?" According to Lennox, she asked this in order to understand the opinions white Europeans have about the African Diaspora. European culture needs to be taken in consideration, she said.

"One thing different about Europe is that they are not countries of immigration. The understanding until recently is homogeneous, everyone else is foreign," Lennox said.

In order to understand the attitude white Europeans have towards the African descendants, Professor Lennox explained the evolution of the concept of race in Europe. She explained how philosophers in the 18th century wanted to explain the existence of the people in Africa.

"The Europeans felt that Africans were different people, they thought, 'We are superior to them, we represent civilization. We need to help them,'" said Lennox.

See LECTURE on page 2

Campus conference explores violence of conflict, trauma

BY RACHEL MORANDI
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

The University of Massachusetts hosted a two-day conference last week exploring violence of conflict and trauma, bringing together different communities on campus to explore violence across time.

Anthony Colombo, a senior psychology major at UMass, was in support of this conference and felt that it was important for the UMass community to be brought together on such an important issue.

"The dynamics of this campus make it hard to feel a sense of community," he said.

The two-day event, titled "Landscapes of Violence: Conflict and Trauma through Time" began on Thursday with a series of small presentations covering many different areas of study involving violence, warfare, conflict and human rights not only in New England, but also nationally and internationally as well. Over 19 disciplines were presented by graduate students and faculty from different universities over the course of the day.

On Friday, the conference was held in the Student Union Ballroom. Such topics were presented as violence in 16th century Mexico, sacrificial architecture and the biological effects of forced captivity.

Colombo felt the conference brought about ideas that are being suppressed and perhaps not being seen or heard here on campus.

"This conference helped to bring about the bigger picture of what is happening not only in the Middle East, but here on campus as well," he said.

The interdisciplinary conference was organized by Ventura Perez, faculty in the anthropology department and Linda Tripp of the psychology department.

Perez had just begun developing a violence and trauma studies certificate through the anthropology department, and Tripp has recently joined the psychology department to direct its psychology of peace and violence concentration.

With both of them exploring violence in their respective fields

See CONFERENCE on page 2

APD officers pose as clerks

The Amherst Police Department announced a stepped-up program to prevent the sale of liquor to minors and deter underage and excessive drinking yesterday.

Working with local and area liquor stores, police officers will begin posing as shop clerks to identify minors purchasing alcohol, and those attempting to buy alcohol for someone underage.

According to Chief of Police Charles Scherpa, the national "Cops 'N Shops" program that the Amherst Police Department participates in has been very successful in past years. Scherpa cites the program as the reason behind dozens of confiscations of false IDs and arrests for the purchase of alcohol for minors in the past.

The "Cops 'N Shops" program has received national recognition.

According to Scherpa, the police officers participating will assist local retailers to train their employees to spot fake IDs, signs of intoxication and the physical and behavioral characteristics of minors attempting to purchase alcohol.

The program will receive funding from the Executive Office of Public Safety and Security Community Policing grant.

—Derrick Perkins

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
CXVIII
Issue 116
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

Editor in Chief Nicholas Belanger
Managing Editor Katie Huston
Business Manager Dan Exter
Production Manager Chris Martin
Night Supervisor Meghan Murphy
Advertising Manager Alex Bender
Advertising Production Katherine Shea
Editorial Production Michael Sarkes
Arts & Living Editor Ryan McAskill
Comics Editor Adam Stagnin
Editorial Editor S.P. Sullivan
News Editor Derrick Perkins
Sports Editor Jeremy Rice
Features Editor Drew Humphreys
Photo Editor Michael Phillis
Web Editor James Hale
Asst. Business Manager Eric Szymczak
Assistant Advertising Marnea Whooten
Assistant Operations Linda Wallack
Asst. Arts & Living Stephanie McPherson
Asst. Arts & Living Skye McIntyre
Asst. Arts & Living Brian Wood
Asst. Editorial James Mathews
Asst. Editorial Melissa Garber
Assistant News Michael King
Assistant News Kate Olesin
Assistant News Holli Seaburn
Assistant Sports Mike Connors
Assistant Sports Joe Meloni
Assistant Sports Eli Rosenwaike
Assistant photo Brian Tedder
Arts Web Editor Michelle Abbasciano
Editorial Web Editor Leif Walcutt
News Web Editor Nick Bush
Sports Web Editor Steve Gaines

The Massachusetts Daily Collegian is published Monday through Friday during the University of Massachusetts academic semester. The Collegian is independently funded, operating on advertising revenue. Founded in 1890, the paper began as Aggie Life, became the Collegian News in 1901, the Weekly Collegian in 1914 and the Tri-Weekly Collegian in 1936. Published daily since 1967, the Collegian has been printed since January 1994. For advertising rates and information, call 413-545-3500 between 8:30 a.m. and 3:30 p.m.

Production Crew
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Meghan Murphy

COPY EDITOR
Kirsten Swenson

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Steve Gaines

Get your news on the go.
dailycollegian.com
dailycollegian.blogspot.com

Across the Nation Around the World

Wife of slain soldier uses extracted sperm

By Harry R. Weber
Associated Press

A soldier's widow has succeeded in having sperm taken from his body and frozen four days after he was slain in Iraq, though medical experts said it's highly unlikely she would be able to bear his child.

Sgt. Dayne Darren Dhanoolal, 26, died March 31 when an explosive detonated near his vehicle in Baghdad. He had talked often with his wife Kynesha about having children, according to court papers filed by her lawyer.

On Friday, a federal judge in Columbus, Ga., granted her request for a temporary restraining order preventing the military from embalming the body until samples of Dhanoolal's sperm were extracted. The samples were taken later that day and are in the custody of a medical representative for the widow, who is hoping to be inseminated even though fertility experts said the procedure almost certainly would not work with her late husband's sperm.

"It's not viable," Dr. Andrew McCullough, associate professor at the New York University School of Medicine, said Monday.

Sperm maintain nearly normal movement and some function for the first three hours after a man's death. After that, their movement and viability declines, according to the Web site for the department of urology at Cornell University's Joan and Sanford I. Weill Medical College.

Dr. John Park, a fertility expert and assistant professor at Emory University School of Medicine, said there have been reports of viable sperm being retrieved up to 36 hours after a man's death. But he said it is "highly unlikely" any viable sperm could be retrieved four days later.

Recovery of viable sperm appears relatively uncommon after 24 hours post-mortem unless the body has been cooled, the Cornell site says. It was not known what, if any, precautions were taken to keep Dhanoolal's body sufficiently cool before his sperm were extracted.

Death of Columbia graduate student blamed on teenagers

A 14-year-old boy was charged with manslaughter in the death of a Columbia University graduate student who was punched and chased into traffic, hit by a car and killed, police said Sunday.

The student, Minghui Yu, 24, was walking a few blocks north of the university's main campus at about 9 p.m. Friday when several teenagers approached him, police said.

Police were studying surveillance video near the area, including at least one excerpt that showed Yu struggling with one of the youths, police said.

Yu fled the assailant and ran into incoming traffic, police said. He was pronounced dead at a nearby hospital. The driver of the car was not charged.

The 14-year-old, whose name was not released because he is a minor, was arrested Saturday on the second-degree manslaughter charge, police said. He was accused of punching Yu.

Yu, a Ph.D. candidate in statistics and a teaching fellow in the Graduate School of Arts and Sciences, was a native of China.

"He's a really nice guy, and he's worried about others," said Chao Sun, 24, who said she had been dating Yu for several months. "I can't imagine he would do anything to harm other people."

Columbia University President Lee C. Bollinger informed students and the faculty of Yu's death.

"As a community we mourn the loss of one of our members, and especially of a young person with much to look forward to in a life of promise," Bollinger wrote.

—Associated Press

Online internship hub links students

INTERNSHIP from page 1

"There are other sites out there where you can apply for an internship, but not where you have the ability to get insider info from people at a certain company," he said. "Sometimes a company will say their internship is great, but an intern might disagree."

Youintern.com has also formed a partnership with Arnold Worldwide, which is a highly respected advertising agency that has agreed to interview three ambitious and motivated students from the site for a possible position at their firm.

"We really want to make this beneficial to all parties, to serve as a link between students and companies," said Chopra-McGowan.

Maurice Haynes, VP, Director of Worklife at Arnold Worldwide also feels that this site and partnership is a great idea.

"[Youintern.com] is really providing a forum for prospective employers, and for students to learn something about the internship process," he said. "It's creating a pipeline for the future of stronger interns. In the long run, it will give us [Arnold Worldwide] a stronger pool of applicants to choose from."

Like Chopra-McGowan, Haynes believes that the review aspect of the site will be one of the most beneficial tools Youintern.com has to offer.

"It's a win-win situation. We're providing information to students about what we want, and they're providing information for us," he said. "The service provides the opportunity to get fresh ideas. Any information is good information."

With everything Youintern.com has to offer, the Web site has high hopes for becoming an effective device for students seeking internships.

"Students will have a much more rewarding experience. Employers can see this and improve their program as well," said Chopra-McGowan. "The spread of information will lead to much more rewarding internships."

Jessica Sacco can be reached at jsacco@student.umass.edu.

Party school reputation draws criticism from student body

PARTY from page 1

the idea that it is a party school."

Tsapatsaris suspected there were some concrete motives in the ways that both UMass and the media addressed the issue.

"In an attempt to tone down this mythology, the administration has fervently campaigned to end something that was a natural part of the college experience," Tsapatsaris said. "In doing so, they really just made binge drinking worse because everyone is hiding their drinking more to not get in trouble. Also, by attempting to remove the upperclassmen from the freshmen, they got rid of a necessary source of experience for the younger students."

Some students have since argued that the UMass party reputation was fostered through the segregation of freshmen students into "First-Year Experience" housing, and that interaction with upperclassmen is necessary to help freshmen practice restraint while drinking.

Many students who find themselves capable and responsible in making their own decisions are infuriated by this notion. The idea that because a student decided to go to UMass gives him or her a social stigma is arousing dissent in much of the student body.

"They automatically think that I'm a slacker and a crazed alcoholic just because I'm a student here," said freshman theater and journalism major Liz Wahlman. "The reputation makes me feel like I have to state my GPA whenever someone asks me where I go to college."

Many argued that the UMass reputation is an exaggeration of what is the normal standard at any other college.

"Predisposition towards partying in our school is contributing to the social atmosphere, and it's fairly normal," said biology major Kelsey Stinemack.

"State schools in general tend to get that rap," he concluded.

A lot of negativity about the potential reputation of the UMass community is evident in some UMass students.

"Given the personality of students coming in, the ones that have no direction or academic ambition, the school's reputation will get a whole lot worse before rising again," said junior English major Myles Kaeding.

There is some optimism in the student body however. Many students and alumni agree that the way UMass is regarded will be reliant upon future generations of students.

"I see [UMass] becoming one of the premiere state schools [like] UNC Chapel Hill or the University of Chicago," said Tsapatsaris. "The degrees will be worth more in five years in academic capital than they were five years ago, which is undoubtedly a plus."

"It is up to the students of today to mold the reputation [UMass] will have tomorrow," said De La Cruz.

Devon Courtney can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

UMass community discusses themes of violence, conflict of study, they decided to co-organize this conference to provide the UMass community to opportunity to engage in discussion regarding issues of violence.

CONFERENCE from page 1

The conference ended on Friday with a talk led by George Armelagos, a professor at Emory University.

David Carrasco, a professor at the Harvard Divinity School, explored the ritual violence of the 16th century Mexican codex. Aside from his presentation, he was thankful that such a conference was brought to light and felt it important to share these issues with the community.

"In a world permeated with violence in the media and the world, it is important to bring to light this theme of violence and educate each other," he said.

Lecture contrasts EU with US

LECTURE from page 1

In the lecture, Lennox discussed how in the beginning of the 19th century, Europeans thought less about race through philosophy and more about race through science, especially with the introduction of Darwin's survival of the fittest. She claims that the genocide that took place in Herrero nation in Africa by the Germans in 1904 seemed righteous to Europeans because it was the "law of nature."

According to Lennox, the attitude of Diaspora in Europe reflects how each country views race.

"Europe to be multi-cultural – not a pretty sight. It might be racist to talk about race [in Europe]," Lennox said. "Different countries are compelled to talk about [race]."

According to Lennox, the United Kingdom has been the most successful in creating sensitivity towards different ethnic groups because "England is being progressive because they share the same culture, education, longest history of migration," Lennox said.

France, on the other hand, has a completely different way to think about race, explained Lennox.

"Identity cannot be hyphenated," Lennox said.

According to Lennox, the idea of the French Republic model is really enforced, where there is a debate about whether the Muslim population in France can wear headscarves.

"This shows that you are proclaiming you are different," Lennox said.

Lennox's concentration in race theory, cultural studies and German social thought theory allowed her to take a particular look at Germany's outlook on the African Diaspora. Lennox noted that Germany grants citizenship via blood, similarly to countries like Austria, Korea and Japan. This can be a real problem, Lennox explained, as people of Turkish decent in living in Germany for three and four generations are still considered foreigners.

"In Germany, immigrants are a problem; they have to assimilate completely," she said.

A student posed a question of how racism is displayed in Europe. Lennox said that is very similar to how it is in the United States, and that it can range from overt racism from right wing neo-Nazis in Germany to "subtle everyday racism" across Europe.

The difference between the racial climate in the United States and Europe lies in the presence of laws that punish discrimination.

"Race is not in category in France and Germany. [Black Europeans] cannot advocate for civil rights. Europe needs to set up anti-discrimination policies and regulations," said Lennox.

The research of black European studies has been a collaboration of Lennox and black German scholar Randolph Ochsmann, from the University of Mainz in Germany. Both professors collaborated and were able to receive a grant from the Volkswagen foundation in 2003, which allowed them to host conferences in 2005 and 2006 about black European studies.

Lennox hopes to bring black European studies to UMass. Deliberations have taken place of possibly hiring a faculty member to teach the course in the languages, literatures and cultures department at the University.

Gisel Saillant can be reached at gsaillan@student.umass.edu.

Correction

Yesterday's article, "Campus officials and residents meet in JQA, discuss incident," erroneously stated that resident assistant Sam Ameyaw had spoken with Liam O'Donnelly three hours before he passed away on Friday. Ameyaw, in fact, said that he saw O'Donnelly at 12:30 p.m. on Thursday afternoon, the day before O'Donnelly passed away.

Clark Kent wrote for the Daily Planet.

Peter Parker freelanced for the Daily Bugle.

When are you going to start?

news@dailycollegian.com

Join The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
UPSTAIRS

- AMHERST·BREWING·COMPANY -
FOR THE RELEASE OF
The Minute
Presented by Amherst Brewing Company
Featuring the Arts & Living of Amherst, Northampton, and UMass
Wednesday the ninth
Starts at 6PM
But you can show up whenever.

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO LIVE?
KAMINS
SPECIALIZING IN HOUSE AND APARTMENT RENTALS
PRESIDENTIAL APTS
COLONIAL VILLAGE APTS
PERRY APTS
177 N PLEASANT ST.
COLLEGE INN APTS
LANTERN COURT APTS
MILL HOLLOW
CRESTVIEW APTS.
55 S. PLEASANT ST. 253-2515 AMHERST
LARGEST SELECTION OF APARTMENTS IN TOWN

Important Announcement**
Registration for Spring 2008

The Writing Program Placement Test

will be offered on:

Thursday, March 6 at 7 p.m. in Bartlett 202

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing)

This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

Authorities take custody of children from polygamist sect

More than 400 taken from Texas compound

By Michelle Roberts
Associated Press

After a 16-year-old girl alerted state officials, authorities raided the sects' 1,700-acre compound.

More than 400 children, mostly girls in pioneer dresses, were swept into state custody from a polygamist sect in what authorities described Monday as the largest child welfare operation in Texas history.

The days-long raid on the sprawling compound, built by now-jailed polygamist leader Warren Jeffs, was sparked by a 16-year-old girl's call to authorities that she was being abused, and that girls as young as 14 and 15 were being forced into marriages with much older men.

Dressed in home-sewn, ankle-length dresses with their hair pinned up in braids, some 133 women left the Yearning for Zion Ranch of their own volition, along with the children.

State troopers were holding an unknown number of men in the compound until investigators finished executing a house-to-house search of the 1,700-acre property, which includes a medical facility, a cheese-making plant, a cement plant, a school, numerous large housing units and an 80-foot white limestone temple that rises discordantly out of the brown scrub.

"In my opinion, this is the largest endeavor we've ever been involved in in the state of Texas," said Children's Protective Services spokesman Marleigh Meisner, who said she was also involved in the 1993 siege of the Branch Davidian compound in Waco.

The members of the Fundamentalist Church of Jesus Christ of Latter-Day Saints spent their days raising numerous children, tilling small gardens and doing chores. But at least one former resident says life was not some idyllic replica of 19th-century life.

"Once you go into the compound, you don't ever leave it," said Carolyn Jessop, one of the wives of the alleged leader of the Eldorado complex. Jessop left with her eight children before the sect moved to Texas.

Jessop said the community emphasized self-sufficiency because they believed the apocalypse was near.

The women were not allowed to wear red – the color Jeffs said belonged to Jesus – and were not allowed to cut their hair. They were also kept isolated from the outside world.

They "were born into this," said Jessop, 40. "They have no concept of mainstream society, and their mothers were born into and have no concept of mainstream culture. Their grandmothers were born into it."

Meisner said each child will get an advocate and an attorney, but predicted that if they end up permanently separated from their families, the sheltered children would have a tough acclimation to modern life.

Tela Mange, a spokeswoman for the State Department of Public Safety, said the criminal investigation was still under way, and that charges would be filed if investigators determined children were abused.

Still uncertain is the location of the girl whose call initiated the raid. She allegedly had a child at 15, and authorities were looking for documents, family photos or even a family Bible with lists of marriages and children to demonstrate the girl was married to Dale Barlow, 50. Under Texas law, girls younger than 16 cannot marry, even with parental approval.

The church members were being held at Fort Concho, a 150-year-old fort built to protect frontier settlements, to be interviewed about the 16-year-old girl and whether, in fact, the teenager was among them.

State investigators on Sunday got a second, wider search warrant for records related to the birth of any child to a mother aged 17 and under. The initial warrant was only for the records related to the girl who called to report abuse last week.

Attorneys for the church and church leaders filed motions asking a judge to quash the search on constitutional grounds, saying state authorities didn't have enough evidence to search the grounds and the warrants were too broad. A hearing on their motion is scheduled Wednesday in San Angelo.

El Dorado attorneys Patrick Peranteau said Monday that "the chief concern for everyone at this point is the welfare of the women and children."

DPS troopers arrested one man on a charge of interfering with the duties of a public servant during the search warrant, but it was not Barlow, Mange said.

"For the most part, residents at the ranch have been cooperative. However, because of some of the diplomatic efforts in regards to the residents, the process of serving the search warrants is taking longer than usual," said DPS spokesman Tom Vinger, who declined to elaborate. "The annex is extremely large and the temple is massive."

Attorneys for the church and church leaders said Barlow was in Colorado City, Ariz., and had had contact with law enforcement officials there. Telephone messages left by The Associated Press for Colorado City authorities were not immediately returned Monday.

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!
Want to be a UMass Idol?
This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize
Sing at the Taste of UMass!
Thursday, April 24, 2008 · Time: 6–7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center
Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu
or call UMass Dining Services: 413-545-2472.
Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing.
All entries must be received by April 23, 2008
There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round. Limited to 20 contestants for the entire event.
Presented by: UMass Dining Services & 1A FM 99.9
Sponsored by:
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2008
umass.edu/diningservices
Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

Who Wants to Be the Next UMass IRON CHEF?
WIN PRIZES
• THREE TEAMS PER DC OF THREE STUDENTS EACH
• MYSTERY BASKET WILL BE PROVIDED
• ONE WINNING TEAM PER DC
• SUBMIT RECIPES BY FRIDAY, APRIL 11
Winning Team to compete at the Taste of UMass
For complete details: www.umass.edu/diningservices
FRANKLIN DC — WEDNESDAY APRIL 16 FROM 5-7 PM
WORCESTER DC — WEDNESDAY APRIL 16 FROM 8-10 PM
HAMPSHIRE DC — THURSDAY APRIL 17 FROM 5-7 PM
BERKSHIRE DC — THURSDAY APRIL 17 FROM 7—9 PM
DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst umass.edu/diningservices
Sponsored by Campbell's Soup

Please join us for our tenth annual
Freedom Seder
Based on the Exodus themes of the Jewish Passover Seder, the Freedom Seder uses stories, music, poetry and ritual to express our yearning for universal liberation and multicultural and interfaith unity.
Sunday, April 13 at 6:00pm
Campus Center 1009
UMass Amherst
FREE with UMass ID ($12 general admission) includes a delicious buffet dinner and cultural program
(Kosher meals available upon request)
For reservations call 545-9642
More information at www.umass.edu/jewish
UMASS AMHERST
Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Black Student Union, Muslim Students Association, and Delta Xi Phi Multicultural Sorority, and cosponsored by the Center for Student Development, Student Affairs & Campus Life, and UMass Hillel.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

A peaceful discussion

GLOBAL PERSPECTIVES

Greg Collins

[illegible] Israeli-Palestinian discussion [illegible] planned over a month ago [illegible] American University in Cairo stu[illegible] finally took place last week at the [illegible]'s dormitory.

[illegible]rst time the event was supposed [illegible] Amer, one of my Palestinian [illegible] informed me that he had received [illegible] security authorities that such a [illegible] would violate Egyptian emer[illegible] instituted more than 25 years [illegible].

[illegible] political discussion involving [illegible]ve people would constitute [illegible] security" problem, and there[illegible] pose a threat to the Egyptian [illegible].

[illegible] restrictions receiving was most [illegible] resentment of President Mubarak's [illegible] in quelling political opposi[illegible]. If ever, will you hear in [illegible] political discussion with [illegible] five people would be consid[illegible] to national security."

[illegible] was clear that people still [illegible] express their sentiments about [illegible] issue in an environment [illegible] many public rallies or [illegible] outings. AUC students and I [illegible] committed to organizing the [illegible].

So last Wednesday, 15 or so AUC students, consisting of Americans, Egyptians, Palestinians and people of all political and religious affiliations, sat down in the dormitory courtyard to discuss concrete steps that needed to be taken in order to create the conditions for a permanent peace within the region.

Even though we did not come to a uniform consensus about the answers to this issue, I, along with many other participants, felt the discussion symbolized a step forward in heightening the dialogue of an issue frequently marred by polemics and emotion.

Rarely did people raise their voices to an inappropriate level. Even though tensions ran high, we maintained a strong level of respect for each other and conveyed our viewpoints dispassionately.

We discussed a number of proposals to decrease the violence and sustain a stable peace: an immediate cease-fire, a multilateral agreement between Israel and Palestinian political factions for Israel to remove Jewish settlers from the West Bank, and the unification of the Palestinian people and government by strengthening the connection between Hamas, the terrorist organization democratically elected in the Gaza Strip, and the moderate Palestinian government Fatah.

Along with some other interlocutors, I expressed that the most important step to ensure a long-term peace is an unequivocal cease-fire, particularly in regards to the indiscriminate rocket attacks from Hamas terrorists on innocent Israeli civilians.

I explained that as a sovereign nation with the responsibility to protect its people, Israel is forced to respond to these attacks with a military response. Because of the potency of the Israeli military, these responses frequently and tragically result in the deaths of innocent Palestinians, a reflection of the difficulty in identifying terrorists not in uniform who hide among innocent civilian populations.

The lull in violence a few weeks ago between both sides, I tried to emphasize, was primarily due to the reduction of Hamas-fired rockets into Israel. If Hamas lays down its arms, Israel will be more willing to consider its demands and alleviate the socio-economic conditions of impoverished Gazans.

If Hamas lays down its arms, Israel will be more willing to consider its demands and alleviate the socio-economic conditions of impoverished Gazans.

I mentioned that Israel is more willing to engage in talks with the Palestinian Authority, the interim government in the West Bank, because it has, for the most part, renounced indiscriminate terrorist attacks.

In response, members of the Al-Quds Club, the AUC Palestinian advocacy student organization, insisted that Hamas-fired rockets should not stop until Israel assists Palestinians as a whole, both in Gaza and the West Bank, to crystallize as a unified people before any other action takes place.

Even though political differences remained at the culmination of the discussion, this opportunity confirmed that human beings are capable of talking about an incendiary issue in a non-incendiary way.

It is difficult to be emotionally detached from issues as controversial as this one. Yet it is necessary in order to create sound public policy which will directly impact Palestinians and Israelis in the current and following generations.

This discussion and my experiences interacting with so many students here in general, revealed AUC's remarkable diversity from the perspective of an American.

I don't know if I will ever get another chance to talk face to face with people directly affected by the Israeli-Palestinian issue, such as my friend Yasmeen, who still has family members living in Gaza.

In addition, I have met various AUC students, American and non-American, who have traveled to Afghanistan, worked in the West Bank, and whose families are from Iran, Ethiopia and Saudi Arabia.

Just among American students, I have met many people from the Midwest and the West Coast, thus undermining this scribe's assumption that the United States' border does not end at Pennsylvania. This geographical diversity, coupled with students' religious and academic diversity, has validated my decision to study in Egypt.

Of course, the success of the recent discussion was icing on the cake.

Greg Collins is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at gcollins@student.umass.edu.

Infantile satire

Chris Amorosi

South Park was once a good show. It lashed out at prudish broadcast standards for profanity and arguably helped encourage television characters to talk less like June Cleaver.

Yet, like many popular figures with a cultish following, Trey Parker and Matt Stone converted their show into a soap box from which to proclaim their ridiculous ideologies.

Their petulant solipsism prevents any reasonable exploration of issues and their decisions hinge upon finding a golden mean. Instead, incompetent satirists that they are, their characters reach an arbitrary middle ground between two issues they utterly misrepresent, and their adoring fans pat Parker and Stone on the back for being edgy.

The golden mean is one of the more repugnant of fallacies because it is so readily adopted by the mindless mouth breathers of the American political center. Like agnostics, they cower from the idea of making important decisions in favor of a bland mix of ideology, which in the end, serves only to perpetuate conflict for lack of a decisive solution.

Compromise for political expediency has been a cornerstone of American politics since before the Civil War, when our noblest statesmen contrived to keep blacks in the fields until Lincoln's election forced the issue and thus ripped the country in two.

Perhaps I tend to exaggerate by comparing South Park's childlike appreciation of current events to the subjugation of a servant race. However, South Park's enduring popularity serves as an indication that the same tendency towards idiotic compromise lives on in the public mind. Though the message may be nestled into four letter words, Parker and Stone remain as conventional as their detractors.

I used to watch South Park about four years ago, just in time for their commentary on the 2004 presidential election. You may remember that Stan was forced to decide between voting for a "giant douche" or a "turd sandwich" for school mascot in "Douche and Turd."

The stupidity is twofold, for not only did they liken Senator Kerry's policies to President Bush's miserable failures, but they reduced the importance of the president on all areas of government to a meaningless figurehead by comparing the office to a mascot.

Seeing as only 60 percent of the electorate turned out for what resembled a plebiscite on the United States' foreign policy decisions of the previous four years, Parker and Stone evidently sided with the 40 percent of Americans who found the issues too difficult to comprehend unless reduced to poop jokes.

Parker and Stone indeed make no earnest effort at the satire they so smugly believe themselves capable of.

South Park's take on religion is superficially irreverent, but really only criticizes groups miniscule in number compared to the overwhelming Christian majority. Christianity in South Park occupies a special position.

Heaven and Hell are real places and Jesus was consistently portrayed as a positive mentor figure with a talk show. While individual sects may be criticized, Christianity as a whole escapes unscathed and is even promoted by the typical moralizing epilogue that follows many episodes.

In comparison, atheism suffers from the occasional gross misrepresentation which only aggravates the misunderstanding that already exists regarding atheism.

In "Red Hot Catholic Love," the predominantly Catholic town declares themselves to be atheists in protest to the then current child abuse scandals.

The townspeople then literally crap out of their mouths as they talk about secularism and liberal ideas. The episode ends with a typical compromise by stating that people must find a compromise between corrupt hierarchy and atheism, which happens to be Christianity.

In the more recent "Go God Go" episodes, atheism is mocked as merely another form of religion that also encourages obnoxious proselytizing, much like those well-dressed Christians shoving New Testaments in my face on sunny spring days.

Cartman visits a future ruled by so-called atheists to find it torn apart by an endless war fought over meaningless differences. Evidently, Parker and Stone missed the irony that their beloved touchy-feely approach to Christianity is only the end result of a thousand years of exactly that sort of violence. But since they view atheism as an extreme stance, they and their audience cannot comprehend how any good could come of it.

Richard Dawkins, a subject of their puerile ridicule, criticized his portrayal in "Go God Go" by saying "I wouldn't have minded so much if only it had been in the service of some serious point, but if there was a serious point in there, I couldn't discern it."

Parker and Stone indeed make no earnest effort at the satire they so smugly believe themselves capable of. It takes no temerity on their part to mock ridiculous topics like Scientology or Mormonism, nor even misunderstood topics like atheism or environmentalism.

In South Park, credible authorities are relentlessly insulted while ignorant characters are granted the ability to reason upon issues beyond their limited understanding.

Chris Amorosi is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at camorosi@student.umass.edu.

Airlines choose profit over safety

Joshua H. Wilder

For most people, the ability to go on vacation is one of the greatest luxuries available. Having the chance to step what you are doing, pack up your belongings and take to the [illegible] welcomed relief [illegible] the daily [illegible] and time to [illegible] Head [illegible] Airport and you [illegible] like Orlando, [illegible] Angeles, but do [illegible]. Despite the [illegible] of the most tech[illegible] advanced culture and time, some argue that traveling by air is more dangerous than ever before.

In the opening days of this month, we have already seen major airlines dealing with some serious technical difficulties. On April 2, United Airlines had to ground 52 of its Boeing 777s for unexpected safety tests. American and Delta Airlines also scrambled to check some of their planes for similar problems.

The very next day, two Federal Aviation Administration inspectors raised some serious concerns when they admitted that they were threatened with dismissal after they reported fuselage cracks in Southwest Airlines planes. According to the inspectors, they were told to keep quiet about the situation and keep with the status quo of plunging into the ocean during a routine flight to Houston is the idea that Southwest Airlines would knowingly put their customers in danger.

If true, this is an especially jarring story to hear. Even if you don't personally plan on getting on an airplane any time soon, odds are that you have a friend or family member who is. But even more disturbing than the chances found a 99 percent compliance rate.

Despite what the airlines and their partners in crime claim about the safety of their own industry, others are skeptical.

Despite what the airlines and their partners in crime claim about the safety of their own industry, others are skeptical. The Business Travel Coalition has joined up with the International Brotherhood of Teamsters to emphasize what they consider to be serious dangers facing all airline passengers.

According to their research, the groups cite outsourcing as one of the major factors putting travelers in danger. In 1995, aircraft maintenance outsourcing made up 22 percent of maintenance expenditures for major airlines.

10 years later, that number has ballooned up to 46 percent, which surely cannot lead to increased safety. Outsourced operations often take place under far less scrutiny and supervision, the group claims, and such a fact is truly troubling for someone sitting on a plane during take off.

After reading about the airlines blatantly and obviously compromising their customer's safety, it may be hard for people to understand why they would do it. Just like in most controversies and scandals, the root of the problem can be traced back to the almighty dollar.

With the economy slowly hitting rock bottom and government officials talking about a recession, it is no surprise that economics is putting pressure on everyone. The airlines industry is no different – rising jet fuel costs and downturns in business are taking a major toll on the industry's stock, forcing them to cut corners to turn a profit.

Surely it is hard to blame any company for trying to keep themselves afloat during troubled times, but when they put their customer's lives in jeopardy to do so, it is not only tasteless but reprehensible.

There will always be a demand for airline travel, whether it is the casual vacationer or the businessman who racks up frequent flyer miles during the year. But when scandals like this make the news during an already shaky economic period, it is possible that the airlines may be in store for more hard times this year.

Any time an industry is reeling from economic woes or corruption, they are forced to make some cuts to keep out of the red. It would be expected that the airlines are going to do just that, but outsourcing the maintenance of vital parts overseas is the worst possible way to do so.

People purchase airplane tickets because they trust the plane will get them from one place to another in a timely and safe way. But if customers can no longer trust and expect the airlines to put their safety ahead of a profit margin, they won't take the chance.

If the airline industry can convince the public that they are serious about safety, and that the FAA is actually inspecting the planes instead of just turning a blind eye, then they will be able to bounce back. But until they do so, I'll take a train.

Josh Wilder is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jhwilder@student.umass.edu.

EDITORIAL/OPINION PAGE DAILY WISDOM:

A dog is not considered a good dog because he is a good barker. A man is not considered a good man because he is a good talker.

-Buddha

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Experimental style in NoHo

Pearl street hosted Ryan Montbleau

BY MATTHEW SOLOMON AND STEVE KESHISHIAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

On Friday night the Ryan Montbleau Band played the Pearl Street Night Club in Northampton. The highlight of the night was a surprise appearence by celebrated musician Martin Sexton.

Welcome to the "springtime middle school dance," a man on stage declared in reference to the atmosphere at the Pearl Street nightclub in Northampton on Friday night.

The overall feel wasn't quite as intimate as it was last year when the Ryan Montbleau Band played at the Iron Horse Theater, but it was powerful and heartfelt nonetheless. They're genuinely original, from their personalities to their haircuts.

In listening to the band's sound check, a dedicated fan would immediately notice they've developed a much more experimental quality in their music as of late. They're doing more group harmonizing and have become more comfortable on stage together.

Their songwriting has progressed quite a bit in the past year. According to them, their next step is to be able to write collectively. For the most part, Montbleau will write his parts first and then the rest of the band will write their own parts around his guitar and singing. Yet what they are seemingly striving for now is to create their music in one fell swoop – a spontaneous burst of creativity.

Montbleau was never serious about playing music until college, where he began to develop his passion for singing. Ever since then, he's been slowly climbing the ladder. He started playing guitar in third grade when his father gave him a black Fender Squier and an amp. Now he plays a wide variety of beautifully crafted acoustic and electric guitars, including a custom made Andrew Olson (made in Portland, Maine).

Montbleau's first two solo albums, "Begin" and Stages," reveal his emerging singer/songwriter potential, which has been amped up in his latest two albums, "One Fine Color" (including the ambiguous and cleverly written "Quicky") and "Patience On Friday."

Together, they've grown to incorporate several new sounds and instruments, creating a more personalized and eclectic blend powered by the strength and agility of the full band.

The bands mixture of guitar, bass, drums, percussion, keys, viola and vocals is interesting because it creates a unique sound. They blend Americana, folk, blues, ragtime, R&B, soul, even classical by taking the viola out of its comfort element and adding a spicy twist.

They've managed to incorporate a standup acoustic base and the viola, two traditionally classical instruments, into their more rocking sound. However, they create something unique in the process by electrifying them, adding effects and then making them sing in an unTraditional way.

Laurence Scudder does exactly that with his viola. He uses a wide array of effects attached to his electrified acoustic instrument, and the sound he creates is not only innovative but beautifully crafted. He's a major contributor to the band's chemistry.

The highlight of the evening was a special guest appearance by Martin Sexton, the widely acclaimed guitarist/singer-songwriter who spent his earlier days playing for passersby and selling CDs out of his guitar case on the streets of Harvard Square.

Sexton, a highly celebrated musician himself, had the whole club stomping. Together, Sexton and the band covered the Johnny Cash classic "Folsom Prison Blues" with remarkable intensity. At this pinnacle moment, they seemed to grasp whatever it was they were looking for in music, and everyone there knew it.

Matthew Solomon and Steve Keshishian can be reached at arts@dailycollegian.com

Panic sophomore album risky success

BY PETER RIZZO
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Warning – this new album, "Pretty. Odd.," might cause a slight panic amongst fans of Panic at the Disco's first effort, 2005's "A Fever You Can't Sweat Out." Gone are the techno breakdowns, pro tools-enhanced instrument playing, and the overly long and pretentious song titles. But as Brandon Urie sings in the new track, "That Green Gentleman," "Things have changed for me/ but that's okay/ I'm still the same."

When Panic at the Disco arrived two years ago on a wave of tween fury, they had little trouble capturing MTV audiences with their weird pop singles. Most notably, the lead single "I Write Sins not Tragedies," took hold of you with such a vicious catchiness that it was enough to label the band with the old "love them or hate them" description.

"Pretty. Odd." finds the band in the midst of a growth spurt. They are comparable to high school kids who have just entered college, and like most of us who are of that age, they found their tastes have changed quite a bit. The album is an ambitious move by a band that wants to be taken seriously, and has the pop skills to back it up.

The first major difference between albums is that you can hear the instruments. Unlike their elders Fall Out Boy, who still can't find the time in their busy schedule to learn to do what they are paid to do, Panic at the Disco have matured and come out with a solid second album that manages to avoid the dreaded sophomore slump that befell such recent acts as The Killers and Bloc Party.

The lead track is more of an introduction than a track. Entitled "We're so Starving," it explains that the band is "sorry they've been gone" but they've been "busy making songs for you."

From this, the album flows into its first single that is currently burning up on MTV, "Nine in the Afternoon." The track is a good choice for a single, as it is one of the peppier tracks on an album full of more down tempo instrumentation.

To give credit where credit is due, Panic at the Disco came to this album with a game plan. Following in the footsteps of older teen sensations like The Beatles and The Beach Boys, the album borrows heavily from both of those acts while managing to stay true to their original sound.

The band still has the ability to turn a catchy phrase, but this time, they are buried under string sections and harmonies. Lines like "I know it's sad that I never gave a damn about the weather/ and it never gave a damn about me" anchor some of the album's better cuts such as "Do You Know What I'm Saying," "Northern Downpour," "Behind the Sea" and the album's juiciest cut, the faux-Beatles rocker "That Green Gentlemen."

Sadly, what may be the biggest irony of this album is that as good as it is, it will be a lot harder for the band to shake off the candy-glazed image of its early days, no matter how hard they try. But, whatever you think of Panic at the Disco, you still must admire the chance the band took on this album.

Instead of being content with fame, the band put it all on the line creatively, and created an album that surpasses the later in every category but MTV singles. However, this time that might be exactly what the band wants, and if nothing else, they proved that they aren't just "Folkin' Around."

Peter Rizzo can be reached at prizzo@student.umass.edu.

"PRETTY. ODD."

PANIC AT THE DISCO

DECAYDANCE RECORDS

3/5

Thursday night comedy line-up finally returns to NBC

BY NEAL JUSTIN STAR TRIBUNE

The lunatics are back in charge of NBC's Thursday asylum, and we wouldn't want it any other way. "My Name Is Earl," "30 Rock," "The Office" and "Scrubs," all of which return with new episodes this month, make for the boldest, most satisfying lineup since "The Cosby Show" turned the night into something special in the 1980s. Now, if only audiences would treat them with "must-see" respect.

The four sitcoms may have 12 Emmys among them, including best comedy statues for "The Office" and "30 Rock," but none ranks in Nielsen's top 20, and all fall short ratings-wise compared with CBS' Monday-night run, anchored by "Two and a Half Men."

If they're not getting the traditional love from viewers, maybe it's because they refuse to take a traditional approach.

While CBS' hits all rely on four-camera setups, studio audiences and more gags than Carrot Top has in his prop trunk, each of NBC's Thursday comedies is shot with a single camera and without any background laughter. They also share a belief that shaping personalities is more important than shaping punch lines. The militant, power-hungry Dwight Schrute on "The Office" might be TV's funniest character because he has absolutely no sense of humor about anything at all. It's the kind of comedic risk you wouldn't see on, say, "How I Met Your Mother."

"Those shows with tried-and-true formulas became more about the formula than anything else," said Rainn Wilson, who plays Schrute. "They were about sitting around in a common area with setups and punch lines and kind of making fun of each other. That became tired and worn out. It was time for reinvention."

The more grounded approach means "The Office" actors are always making sure they don't go over the top. Wilson said he was filming a scene the other day when he had to rush into the office of Michael Scott, played by Steve Carell.

"After the scene, I turned to Steve and said, 'I just ran into your office like I was a cartoon character. Why am I doing that?'" he said. "Of course, that's probably the take that they'll use, but we're always checking in with each other and making sure we tone down the broadness."

"Office" executive producer Greg Daniels said it's not hard to find real-life counterparts to their make-believe characters. When cast member John Krasinski was doing research for the show, he met a salesman at a paper company who insisted on doing politically incorrect impressions horribly – that encounter no doubt inspired the classic episode in which Scott butchered a Chris Rock routine. Then there was the time an egocentric businessman won an opportunity to watch the show being taped, and decided he'd step in and give Carell notes on his performance.

"Stuff like that happens and you say, 'This is very, very real,'" Daniels said.

Tina Fey, the star and creator of "30 Rock," agrees that it's important to keep her characters believable. Alec Baldwin might play network president Jack Donaghy with unbridled testosterone, but is he really that different from any number of bosses you've dealt with at work?

"We have to keep our characters grounded and make sure that what's at stake is real," Fey said. "When we do flashbacks or look at things from a certain character's point of view, we can be a little more bent, but I think if the show was just silliness and cutaways, it would be hard for it to sustain itself."

While the single-camera format forces these shows to stay rooted in reality, it also allows for more whimsy. "Scrubs" can't seem to go five minutes without a dream sequence that could feature anything from a David Copperfield cameo to an all-out musical number.

"My Name Is Earl" will push some boundaries when it returns this week for the first of nine new episodes. The title character, played by Jason Lee, has slipped into a coma, sending his mind to a fantasyland also visited by Paris Hilton. Those kinds of escapes are exactly what drew Lee to the project.

"I've never had much of a traditional approach to things. That's why I didn't want to do television to begin with," he said. "I was concerned about how much we could do on a mainstream network like NBC, how this crazy idea would do amongst this corporate, well-oiled machine, but we're getting along just fine."

Lee said telling the story of a former bad boy trying to correct his past sins would never work in front of a studio audience.

"You've got limited body movement and limited sets when you do that," he said. "You've also got to wait for the audience to stop laughing before you say the next line. Now we're out on location, like we're shooting a little film every week. We can do special effects. We can do stunts. We're always asking, 'What crazy, bruise-causing thing can we do next week?'"

That kind of freedom is a big part of why NBC remains comedy king, if not in ratings, then at least in quality. One could argue that a more typical, more predictable sitcom might bring more eyeballs to the night, but the Thursday-night stars and creators don't seem willing to trade what they have: a consistent, creative evening of both humor and heart.

"You can't control ratings," Fey said. "Our feeling is that we're going to keep making these episodes until they won't let us make them anymore. This is the best night of comedy on TV, and I'm very proud to be on with all these shows."

Despite the fact that NBC comedies like "30 Rock" and "The Office" captured Best Comedy Emmy Awards, none of them are in the top 20 of the Nielsen ratings and fall short of CBS' Monday comedy line-up.

Steve Carell and Rainn Wilson have finally returned to the set of "The Office" for new episodes starting this month.

Most famous African novel of the century

Achebe's 'Things Fall Apart' celebrates 50th anniversary

BY CARLIN ROMANO
THE PHILADELPHIA INQUIRER

WASHINGTON — Over a simple dinner of chicken breast, potatoes and ginger ale in his Hotel Palomar room, the great Nigerian novelist Chinua Achebe explains that he's not sure when his appearance on "The News Hour With Jim Lehrer," from which he has just returned, will make it on the air.

"There's so much happening in the world at this time," said the 78-year-old writer, a longtime Bard College professor touring to celebrate the 50th annjversary of his classic novel, "Things Fall Apart." He smiles a modest smile seen often by those who know him best.

50 years from now, of course, those events will likely be forgotten while many will be celebrating the 100th anniversary of "Things Fall Apart," the most famous African novel of the 20th century; the book that launched African literature by nonwhites into world literature.

OK, be honest, Achebe is asked. Is it the best of your five novels?

"That's a question I refuse to answer," he says, his smile suddenly turning into a grin before he gets serious. "Each of my books is different. Deliberately ... I wanted to create my society, my people, in their fullness."

"For every one of the five novels I have written," he says, "somebody, or a small group of people, call it my masterpiece. ... So I feel really that I shouldn't do anything. Just sit back and let them sort things out."

Yet "Things Fall Apart," Achebe's first novel, has become a unique literary and academic phenomenon.

Since its 1958 publication in London by Heinemann, "Things Fall Apart" has sold more than 8 million copies in 50 languages. In the United States, it sells more than 100,000 copies a year, and lands on the required reading lists of high school classes, undergraduate courses in English, anthropology, folklore and other disciplines, and graduate seminars.

For many readers today, Achebe's story of Okonkwo, the "strong man" of an Ibo village in Nigeria whose life goes to pieces amid an influx of British colonialists who change his world forever, now stands with classic tales of Greek drama and English literature as a cornerstone of the literary universe.

While Achebe welcomes the prominence his novel has achieved, he says he tries to keep it in perspective, true to an Ibo aphorism of his father's that recognizes life's pros and cons – "Wherever something stands, something else stands beside it."

"It makes one humble," Achebe acknowledges. He never forgets, he says, "how simple we are," and "how big and complex the world is."

That's one reason he resists the accolade frequently bestowed on him, "Father of African Literature."

"It's not a kind of music to my ears," he says. "It's too big a title to take on. Or to award to anybody." Chuckling again, Achebe jokes, "Before very long, I might find myself signing things, 'Chinua Achebe, Father of African Lit.'"

He never thinks, he assures, "Oh, now I'm a big writer. I think, why have I been blessed to represent something which is important to us as a people, the people of Ibo land of Nigeria, the people of Nigeria itself, Africans, black people, white people."

If you hear a theme of inclusive humanity in those words, you understand what makes "Things Fall Apart" special.

As Achebe has made clear in interviews over the years, he very much wanted, as the son of a Christian from the village of Ogidi, to oppose in his work the condescension toward Africans and their culture that he found in tales such as Joseph Conrad's "Heart of Darkness."

Yet instead of compensating for that tone by emphasizing the best of his native culture, he offered, in "Things Fall Apart," protagonist Okonkwo, who beats his youngest wife, kills a child entrusted to his care, and ultimately violates core values of Ibo culture, playing into stereotypes of African violence.

"It's a challenge," Achebe replies, agreeing that this is exactly the core conflict of the book. "I want you to read the worst that Africa can offer. I dare you at the end to say Africans are therefore less human than myself."

"This is the one thing I remember thinking clearly," he recalls. "I'm going to go out of my way to find the worst things that you can say about this culture, and make sure that it is exactly there. Because I want this to be a true story about our people."

"Every problem Okonkwo has," he says, "has to do with the failure to understand the importance of compassion, the importance of gentleness as opposed to success and power."

Achebe worries that the prestige of "Things Fall Apart" frightens away readers, particularly Bard students familiar with Achebe's annual course on African literature. "I make every effort not to intimidate anybody," he says.

Indeed, he's adamant that "Things Fall Apart," despite its violence, can be read by children as young as 10.

"This is an area where my culture is different from American culture," Achebe explains. "Americans, it seems to me, tend to protect their children from the harshness of life, in their interest."

"That's not the way my people rear their children," he adds. "They let them experience the world as it is."

Achebe's 50th-anniversary tour is no easy project for a man paralyzed from the waist down since a 1990 auto accident. Arriving back from his PBS interview, Achebe sits patiently as his wheelchair is lowered from a van by one of his four children, Chidi Achebe, who is helping his father meet his obligations.

There are other imperfections in the rosy picture of a master basking in applause for a masterpiece.

Achebe complains politely of "underpayment" by the British publisher that inherited the rights to a work sold cheap, he says, by "a sort of bush boy from the village."

And he bemoans the status of his beloved Nigeria. "The relationship with my people, the Nigerian people, is very good," he says. "My relationship with the rulers has always been problematic."

The reason is Nigeria's post-colonial history: "One would expect this country by now to be at least in the middle rank of developing nations, and it has failed each time. ... It's really a disgrace what Nigeria has made of her opportunities. In relation to the poor, the millions and millions whose resources are squandered and stolen, it's still going on."

And yet Achebe is thinking of going back home for the first time since 1999, even though his medical condition makes it "very, very risky."

"I would not ever be fully satisfied over this thing going on with 'Things Fall Apart,'" he says in almost a whisper, "if I don't go home and say to my people, 'Thank you.'"

Nigerian novelest Chinua Achebe, a longtime Bard College professor, wrote "Things Fall Apart" in 1958. It has become a literary and academic phenomenon.

"Things Fall Apart" tells the story of Okonkwo, the "strong man" in Nigeria whose life goes to pieces amid an influx of British colonialists.

NOW HIRING
Summer Job OPPORTUNITIES

Are you a creative, energetic and nurturing person? Would you enjoy spending the summer in a beautiful, outdoor setting working with children ages 5-14? Hampshire Regional YMCA Camp Norwich, just 20 minutes from Northampton is now hiring Group Counselors, Lifeguards, and Program Instructors for nature study, arts and crafts, athletics, boating, ceramics, woodworking and low ropes course.

Hampshire Regional YMCA
We build strong kids, strong families, strong communities.

For a Norwich Brochure and application, stop in or contact Barbara at the Hampshire Regional YMCA (413) 584-7086 ext. 102. You may also download an application from our website at http://www.hrymca.org/norwich/daycamp.htm

Starting Date for this Position is June 14th, 2008

Come Join
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian
At Amherst Brewing Company
for the release of
THE MINUTE
Featuring the arts and living of Amherst, Northampton, and UMass
Wednesday the 9th
6-8 p.m.

Need Experience?
Located in the Campus Center Basement.
What: Business Manager
Where: The Daily Collegian
When: Next Year
All majors accepted!
If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.
Now Accepting Applications!

BOSTON UNIVERSITY
THE VERDICT IS UNANIMOUS
In a competitive job market, a BU credential sets you apart.
Earn your CERTIFICATE IN PARALEGAL STUDIES in only two weeks
Classes start June 2
• Enhance your credentials for law school
• Gain exposure to the legal work environment
INFORMATION SESSION
Thursday, May 1, 6 p.m.
635 Commonwealth Avenue, Room 300
Charles River Campus, Boston
Register Today:
www.bu.edu/professional/2228
1-866-633-9370 x402
Refer to Priority Code CPE2228
Boston University Center for Professional Education
BOSTON UNIVERSITY

GU rising in polls; Loyola perfect in ECAC

Cannon makes run towards Tewaaraton Trophy in '08

BY OLIVER GASIOR
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

Georgetown moved to No. 4 in this week's Nike/Inside Lacrosse Division I Media Poll. The Hoyas represent one of two ECAC teams included in the poll, along with No. 19 Loyola.

ECAC Lacrosse

Lead by 4th quarter goals from seniors Brendan Cannon and Andrew Baird, the Hoyas (7-2, 3-0 ECAC) avoided the possibility of being upset by Fairfield (3-6, 1-3 ECAC). The victory extended their win streak to six in a row, and brought their record to 3-0 in conference play.

In the final quarter of play, the Stags cut the Hoya lead to 7-6 with a goal from Todd Baxter. Georgetown responded with a goal to extend their lead to a two-goal advantage.

Baxter scored his second goal of the game with 7:47 remaining, assisted from a pass by Boudreau. This was followed by another goal from Fairfield to tie the game at eight. It was the Stags second goal within 18 seconds of play. However, the two goals weren't enough to top the Hoyas. Cannon bounced home a score past Fairfield's goalie Marra to pull the Hoyas in front, 9-8. Only 30 seconds later, sophomore Chris Shuville assisted Baird to compete the Georgetown victory.

Last week, Brendon Cannon was one of seven ECAC players named to the InsideLacrosse.com's NCAA Men's Lacrosse Player of the Year Watch List. Players were nominated to the list by NCAA coaches from all three divisions, and were selected based on their early season success, with the hopes of winning the Tewaaraton Trophy, an award that recognizes the nation's best player.

Cannon continued his success against the Stags by scoring four points, putting in two goals, and getting two assists.

Teammate Andrew Baird also contributed to the victory with three points of his own, two of which came in the form of goals.

Both Baird and Cannon are the two leading point scorers in the ECAC – Cannon with 35 and Baird with 28. Another notable category led by Cannon is his three game-winning goals. Both players are putting in great season performances with the exception of Cannon's 28 season turnovers.

As a team the Hoyas lead the league in points scored and goals with a total of 104.

LOYOLA STAYS UNDEFEATED

Loyola rolled past Rutgers to improve to a conference-best 4-0. It was the first time in school history that Loyola (5-4, 4-0 ECAC) won four conference games without a loss.

The game was won by a final score of 15-3. Senior Shane Koppens led with a strong performance, scoring two goals and three assists.

"We owed this game to Rutgers after last year," Koppens said, who was part of a nationally ranked No. 8 Greyhound team upset by the Scarlet Knights last season.

Loyola has now compiled a total of 87 goals over the course of the season.

Freshman Matt Langan scored two and Stephen Murray scored one to total the three Loyola goals for the first quarter. Rutgers' Stanwick stopped the momentum with a goal at 6:50 of the quarter.

Collin Finnerty found Langan for his third goal only eight seconds after the Rutgers goal. This began a 5-0 run for the Greyhounds.

"Our guys worked hard for this win and put themselves in good position with three conference games left," Loyola coach Charley Toomey said after the game.

Loyola is the leading defense in the ECAC, giving up an average of four goals per league game this season. Freshman goalie Jake Hagelin led the defensive effort with nine saves and two shutout quarters.

"We have a big game next Saturday," Koppens added after the game.

The was referring to the game between the Greyhounds and the Hoyas at Diane Geppi-Aikens Field, a game that will decide who has the best record in the conference.

Oliver Gasior can be reached at ogasior@student.umass.edu

Georgetown is currently ranked No. 4 in the Nike/Inside Lacrosse Division I Media Poll. The Hoyas are undefeated in conference play and also won a game over top-ranked Duke.

Nick Serino and the Minutemen host UConn today at Earl Lorden Field before taking on Harvard tomorrow.

49ers nationally ranked; Dukes split

BY SAM GROSSACK
COLLEGIAN STAFF

No. 18 Charlotte salvaged the second game of its doubleheader at Temple on Saturday, 9-5, after the Owls scored late runs in the seventh and eighth innings, but couldn't close the early deficit. The win keeps the 49ers' streak of 14 consecutive Atlantic 10 series victories intact.

A-10 Baseball

The Owls (14-13, 6-3 A-10) won Game One, scoring five unanswered runs after giving up two early runs in the first. Tom Dolan returned to the Owls from injury to start the game on the mound, pitching the first five innings while giving up four hits and striking out three. His only mistake came in the first when he gave up a two-run home run to senior Brad McElroy.

In Game Two, the 49ers (23-5, 8-1 A-10) were quickly able to score again, getting to starter Mike Mongiardini for three early runs before giving them right back in the bottom of the inning. Luke Stahl was forced to make a spot start for the 49ers, but settled down after the first and retired 15 of the next 18 batters.

The Owls scored in the seventh and eighth, but fell in the end, 9-5.

DUKES LOSE IN A-10

The Duquesne baseball team lost Game One of its doubleheader at Rhode Island on Saturday to end its perfect start in conference play.

In both games, the Dukes got out to early leads. In Game One, they went up 4-0 after Yaron Janusey connected on a three-run home run in the first. However, the team only scored one run the rest of the way, and fell to the Rams, 7-5.

In Game Two, Janusey put his team up in the first again after he belted a two-run homer to put the Dukes up 3-0. This time, they did not lose the lead, mainly due to a complete game victory by Paul Bugajski, who allowed only one unearned run and struck out seven. The Dukes scored one more run in the fifth inning off of Derick Mechling's solo home run.

On Sunday, the Dukes won the third game of the series, 7-6, to remain tied with the 49ers at the top of the conference standings at 8-1 and 37-12 overall. With the loss in the series, the Rams fell to 3-6 in the conference and 12-16 overall.

XAVIER STRONG AT HOME

In their first series of conference play at home, the Musketeers put up 35 hits and 28 runs in Saturday's doubleheader. However, they dropped the third game of the series to Richmond on Sunday to fall to 11-15 overall and 6-3 in conference play.

Junior Steve Brown and his nine hits led Xavier during its doubleheader in 10 attempts at the plate. In Game One, Brown had four hits and was a triple away from hitting for the cycle. In the second game, he continued his perfection at the plate, with three singles and two doubles.

After three losses, junior Charlie Leesman got his first win of the season by throwing 7-2/3 innings, striking out six and walking none. Senior Michael Lewis, who struck out a career-high nine batters over seven innings, got the win in the second game.

The Spiders came back on Sunday completely revitalized. Although falling behind early in the first, they put up four runs in the second and five in the third to take the lead for good, as there was no scoring in the game after the third inning. With the win, the Spiders moved to 13-17-1 on the season and to the middle of the pack in the A-10 with a 5-4 conference record.

Sam Grossack can be reached at sgrossack@student.umass.edu

Dicato to start for UMass in Beanpot recent pitching success. Jared Freni will take the mound for the Minutemen today.

BASEBALL from page 10

The sophomore right hander struggled in the beginning of the season, but was pitching well against Xavier on March 30.

Following a controversy involving a slide at second base by Xavier's Jordan Conley, Freni hit Conley with a pitch in the following inning, leading to his ejection.

Up to that point, Freni had allowed one run in 3 1/3 innings with three strikeouts, but was relieved by Mitchell Eilenberg.

Stone was pleased with the pitching performances from everyone this weekend, and also thought Freni was pitching well against Xavier before he was ejected.

The team's earned run average is slightly lower than last year (5.05 to 4.90), but its starting pitch is deeper and greatly improved from last year.

Freni and Chris Lloyd, the latter whom graduated last year, led the team with 11 starts but neither had an ERA under 4.74.

At Harvard (1-21, 0-6 Ivy League), UMass will be facing a team who has won just one game this year. The Crimson defeated Lafayette, 4-1, on March 16 and has since lost 16 consecutive games.

Harvard's struggled scoring runs this year, averaging just 2.45 runs per game. The team is hitting a collective .218 from the plate this season.

The pitching staff hasn't fared much better – the Crimson pitchers hold a 7.93 ERA and haven't been helped by their fielders, who have committed 47 errors in 22 games.

Tom Stack-Babich leads Harvard with a .375 batting average this season and Taylor Meehan is next at .275.

Mike Dicato will try to slow down the Crimson offense. The junior right hander has an 0-1 record with a 4.38 ERA in 12-1/3 innings pitched this season.

GAME NOTES

UMass is batting .268 as a team this season and have six regular starters batting over .300 ... UConn leads the all-time series against UMass, 76-71-3, while Harvard holds a 25-14 advantage over the Minutemen ... The Minutemen have won the Beanpot four times, but not since 2000 ... The winner of the UMass-Harvard game will take on the winner of Boston College and Northeastern at Fenway Park next Wednesday.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

CHECK OUT
THE NEW UMASS MEN'S BASKETBALL PODCAST
@
www.dailycollegian.com

$500 student bonus cash
EXCLUSIVE OFFER
Additional savings just for college and trade school students, recent grads and grad students
Ford DRIVES U
COLLEGE STUDENT PURCHASE PROGRAM
$500 student bonus cash
www.FordDrivesU.com/College
2008 Ford Focus SES
HOLLYWOOD
Ford Drives U to the REEL WORLD Sweepstakes
Go to www.FordDrivesU.com/College for your chance to win a "Reel" Hollywood experience and a New 2009 Ford Focus!
FORD LINCOLN MERCURY
See Web site for $500 Student Bonus Cash Official Program Rules - www.FordDrivesU.com/College
NO PURCHASE NECESSARY TO ENTER THE FORD DRIVES U TO THE "REEL" WORLD SWEEPSTAKES. Sweepstakes is open to legal residents of the 48 contiguous United States and District of Columbia, who are at least 18 years of age and currently enrolled as a part-time or full-time student at a nationally accredited U.S. college or university and possess a valid U.S. driver's license. Sweepstakes commences at 12:00:01 PM on March 15, 2008 and ends at 11:59:59 PM on December 31, 2008. Sweepstakes is subject to Official Rules. For complete prize descriptions and approximate retail values or to obtain Official Rules, log onto www.FordDrivesU.com/College. VOID IN ALASKA AND HAWAII AND WHERE PROHIBITED BY LAW.

Bonnies swept; Rams split with Dayton

St. Bonaventure leaves runners on base, Fordham's pitching struggles

By Jeff R. Larnard
Collegian Staff

After not playing in 15 days, St. Bonaventure's offense came out this weekend in a lull, as they were swept by Charlotte this past Sunday.

Due to a rainout of their series with George Washington last weekend, the Bonnies (8-12, 3-3 Atlantic 10) had not played since March 22 when they swept Temple. St. Bonaventure got off to a 3-1 start in the Atlantic 10 Conference in the series against Temple (8-11, 1-5 A-10), but any momentum gained in winning three of its first four was lost in the long lapse between games.

A-10 Softball

In Game One, St. Bonaventure's offense was held to just three hits, as they went on to lose, 3-2. Game Two saw a bit more offense for the Bonnies, but they struggled to bring runners home when they were on base. Charlotte (22-19, 5-3 A-10) went on to win, 6-4.

In every inning except the fourth, the Bonnies left at least one runner on base, and left more than two on in five different innings. At the end of the game, St. Bonaventure had left a total of 12 runners on base, half of which were in scoring position.

The Bonnies are very successful at advancing runners, doing it in just under half of the opportunities they have gotten on the season, but have struggled all season to bring those runners home. With runners in scoring position, the team only hits .224 and a dismal .077, or 1 of 13, with the bases loaded.

The lack of untimely offense has been the biggest weakness for St. Bonaventure all season long. With 12 of its 20 games being decided by two or fewer runs, seven of which were losses, a few more timely hits could have the Bonnies playing with a winning record.

St. Bonaventure's schedule picks up this week as they go on a six-game road trip. Today, the Bonnies face non-conference Cornell, followed by a series against La Salle on Friday and Saturday. Last for the Bonnies is a doubleheader on Sunday against Fordham.

St. Bonaventure dropped a pair of games to Charlotte after going 15 days without playing a game prior to the series.

Fordham splits with Dayton

Dayton ended Fordham's five-game A-10 winning streak in the second game of Saturday's doubleheader.

The Rams (15-19, 5-3 A-10) had been winning with a great balance of pitching and hitting prior to facing Dayton (17-18, 4-6 A-10), but the pitching struggled in both games of the doubleheader.

The offense won Game One for the Rams, scoring 10 runs, while the pitching gave up nine. The 10 runs marked the fifth conference game in a row that Fordham's offense provided more than six runs. In the five-game winning streak, the Rams had averaged 8.6 runs per game.

Game Two of the Dayton series saw both the offense and pitching struggle. Fordham gave up seven runs off of nine hits, as they lost, 7-3. The Rams out-hit the Flyers with 10 hits, but were unable to capitalize by leaving nine runners on base.

With a tough non-conference schedule in the early part of the season, the Rams got off to a slow start, but have been strong when facing A-10 competition. Along with tough opponents, the Rams have also given themselves a busy schedule.

Since the beginning of the season, Fordham has played at least five games per week, and will continue to do so for the remainder of the season. A few weeks for the Rams are filled with as many as eight games per week.

Fordham will play four doubleheaders, only one of which is a conference opponent. The eight games will all be at home, as they start off the week against Fairleigh Dickinson today. Next, Seton Hall comes to Bronx, N.Y., for a doubleheader on Thursday, followed by two games against Manhattan on Friday.

The Rams get a day of rest on Saturday before returning to conference play on Sunday against St. Bonaventure.

Saint Joseph's .500 in A-10

Saint Joseph's has started off 3-3 in the A-10 despite struggling to a 4-10 record in non-conference play.

The combination of the two gives the Hawks (7-s13, 3-3 A-10) the fourth lowest overall winning percentage in the conference. Despite this, the Hawks .500 winning percentage in the A-10 places them in the middle of the conference standings.

The offense has struggled to score runs for the Hawks, as they have split all three A-10 series they have played so far this season.

The pitching for St. Joe's has been dominant between the team's two aces. Dani Gonzales and Lauren Cognigni. Gonzales has won all three conference games for the Hawks, and has only given up one earned run in four appearances in the team's six conference games. Two of the victories were complete game shutouts over St. Bonaventure and Dayton.

Cognigni started all three of St. Joe's conference losses, despite pitching well. She gave up six runs in her three appearances, over 19-2/3 innings pitched. With very little run support, Cognigni was credited with two of the team's three conference losses, even though she pitched well enough to get the team wins.

The offense did play better in this weekend's split with Saint Louis, scoring 10 runs in the two games. The team needs more consistency on offense to support its pitching this week, as they head on the road for five games.

The Hawks will face off against non-conference opponent Drexel today before heading off to New England for conference play against Massachusetts and Rhode Island.

Jeff R. Larnard can be reached at jlarnard@student.umass.edu.

SOFTBALL STANDINGS

	Conference			Overall
Team	W	L	PCT.	W	L	T	PCT.
1 Massachusetts	8	0	1.000	21	10	0	.677
2 St. Bonaventure	3	1	.750	8	10	0	.444
3 Fordham	5	3	.625	15	19	0	.441
4 Saint Louis	5	4	.556	14	20	2	.417
5 Charlotte	3	3	.500	20	19	0	.513
Saint Joseph's	3	3	.500	7	13	0	.350
7 Dayton	4	5	.444	17	18	0	.486
8 George Washington	3	5	.375	7	16	0	.304
9 La Salle	3	6	.333	10	16	0	.385
10 Rhode Island	2	6	.250	10	22	0	.312
11 Temple	1	4	.200	4	12	0	.250

Hitting has improved in conference play batting 0.98 and only 14 batters have reached base (none have been for extra bases).

SOFTBALL from page 10

Hitting

UMass played one of the top schedules in the nation during non-conference play and went against some of the top pitchers in the nation. Over that difficult stretch, the team's batting average was .218. Going against the best competition seemed to get them ready for the A-10 competition, as UMass has been on fire with the bats.

"The schedule was more than challenging, we were facing pitchers where we're not going to have 10 hit games," Sortino said.

In 229 at bats in conference play, UMass batters have struck out 31 times. The Minutewomen usually manufacture runs by getting on base and bunting or stealing to advance runners. Sophomore catcher Jessica Serio seems to always be on the base path. She leads the team in hitting with a .565 batting average and an on-base percentage of .655. Six batters are hitting over .300, with senior outfielder Lauren Proctor hitting .490.

"What I look at more on how much we're really producing is how many people are we leaving on base, are we advancing runners when we can, and what type of at bats are we having, are we giving ourselves a chance to put the ball in play?"

The hitting has also put pressure on the opponent's defense. In the eight A-10 games, the Minutewomen's opponents have committed 15 errors. The opponents have an ERA of 6.33.

UMass tries to manufacture runs on the base path, but lately they have been hitting for power. Of its 78 hits in conference play, the Minutewomen have 33 extra base hits, including nine home runs. UMass hit three home runs in the second game of the doubleheader against GW. Junior outfielder Samantha Salato leads the team in the power department with three home runs and 13 RBIs. Sophomore shortstop Whitney Williams is one of the top overall hitters. In her 30 A-10 at bats, Williams is hitting .367 with two home runs and nine RBIs. She has also scored a team-high 10 runs and is tied with Salato with six extra base hits.

"If you look at our RBI totals and our home run totals, you don't see one superstar," Sortino said. "You see a lot of strong contributors and I think that as we go down this last 40 percent of the season, I think an even team that anybody can do it is better than a team where only a couple people can."

Other notes

Although Balschmiter did not give her fielders too many opportunities because she struck out most of the batters against GW (13 out of the 18), the fielding has still been solid. In conference play, the Minutewomen have only committed three errors. According to Sortino, Proctor made a play of the week against GW with Sanders pitching.

"Lauren Proctor went up against the fence and brought a double down from the fence and caught it. It was an extra-base hit and an absolutely unbelievable catch, it would be on ESPN play of the week," she said.

During the GW game, Sortino thought the outfielders did well getting to the fly balls. With the moving pitches that Sanders throws, Sortino says she will get "crazy pop ups," in and out of play.

Steve Games can be reached at sgames@dailycollegian.com.

Brandice Balschmiter pitched the first perfect game of her career against George Washington this past Friday. The junior holds a 0.76 earned run average this season.

2 X Tuesday
Domino's Pizza
Buy Any Large Pizza...
Get One FREE Delivered!
Domino's Pizza
413 - 256 - 8911

STUDENT DISCOUNT!
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org 413-256-4071
Best 9 Hole Course
In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
Walk on anytime!
No Tee Times Necessary!

Write For Sports!
sports@dailycollegian.com

UNIVERSITY BARTENDING
✓ Oct 26th-28th Amherst College Dining Hall
✓ Credit Cards Accepted!!!
✓ Professional Bartending Training with "Hands On" Pouring Sessions
✓ Over 10 Years in Business!!!
✓ Access to Job Placement Database!!!
✓ Great Part-time or Summer Job
LEARN TO BARTEND IN A WEEKEND!
CALL NOW! SPACE IS LIMITED!
Classes start April 11 -13
UMass Campus Center
Amherst, MA
1-800-U-CAN-MIX
www.universitybartending.com

CAPTION CONTEST!

Submit captions and see the picture in color at:
www.dailycollegian.com/caption
So sexy.

Bippity, boppity, boo!

		8	4	6			5
9				5			8
5					2	9
4					1		7
	1						4
	7		9					1
		2	1					3
	9			2				6
	6			9	3	8

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Taxis
5 Had a meal
6 Waiter's helper
14 Celeste of stage and film
15 Attempt
16 Complete
17 Field of study
18 Lower digit
19 Fills with delight
20 Begin to operate
22 Commandment word
23 Gin or vodka cocktail
24 Hearts slangily
27 Take delivery
29 Greek letter
30 Quite enough
34 Pub print
35 Lowly laborer
36 Zoomed
37 Painful points
39 Tolstoy's Karenina
40 Bullring cheers
41 Rebellion leader Turner
42 Command
43 '60s war zone
44 Annoys
47 English synth pop duo
49 Least sharp
54 Collapsible shelters
55 Set apart
56 Thelma's partner
58 Air-rifle ammo
59 Has a birthday
60 Breadwinner
61 Peyton's kid brother
62 Carnivore's meal
63 Salad basics
64 Afternoon affair
65 Large comodious boats

DOWN
1 Deep leisure
2 Main artery
3 Make dim
4 Feel a stinging pain
5 Bring into accord
6 Cancer or Capricorn
7 Storm center
8 Apiary homes
9 Loosen strings
10 Follow stealthily
11 Rock Club in NYC
12 Mime's yield
13 Affirmative
21 Make weary
22 Steps over a fence
25 French wine valley
26 Sub detector
28 Third rock
30 Make amends (for)
31 Grinder tooth
32 Ahead of time
33 Guitarist Paul
35 Birdie/bogey separator
37 Guffawing laughers
38 "Unholy Loves" author
42 Norwegian capital
44 Lab burner
45 Fit to be eaten
46 Mother country
48 Fans dander
50 Peruvian beast
51 Gung-ho
52 Delmonico or porterhouse
53 Lab work
56 Journey part
57 Sculi propeler
58 Wager

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Do you desire fame, fortune and a great sex life?
Comics Guy is graduating and needs a replacement for next year.
Find out about the position and pick up an application in The Collegian office located in the basement of the campus center or email inquiries to comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your comics!
comics@dailycollegian.com

Submit your classifieds!
(413) 545-3500

Quote of the Day

"There are two kinds of artists left: those who endorse Pepsi and those who simply won't."
— Annie Lennox

Welcome to Falling Rock National Park By Josh Shalek

Last Ditch Effort By John Kroes

Bliss By Harry Bliss

Horoscopes

aquarius Jan. 20-Feb. 18
You are a tart, and I do not mean the delicious kind with the yummy flaky crust.

pisces Feb. 19-Mar. 20
It is one thing to look like Tanya Harding; it is quite another to act like her.

aries Mar. 21-Apr. 19
You know you're frisky when you're spreading more pollen than a dandelion.

taurus Apr. 20-May 20
The future is so bright, and you are oh-so-pale; melanoma is imminent.

gemini May 21-Jun. 21
Carving the initials of yourself and your lover in a tree is no longer acceptable behavior. Love is bad for the environment.

cancer Jun. 22-Jul. 22
If you skateboard, you will break your leg. If you break your leg, you get a wheelchair. But it's the same general effect.

leo Jul. 23-Aug. 22
Right now, the people of some random country are overthrowing their government and accepting you as an enlightened despot.

virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Seven out of ten police officers carry inhalers next to their guns. You know, in case they actually have to move.

libra Sept. 23-Oct. 22
Taking the meaning of the phrase "eye contact" too literally can result in a scratched retina and conjunctivitis.

scorpio Oct. 23-Nov. 21
It's not Chanukah, but that doesn't mean you shouldn't light some candles to relax and share the gift of full body massage.

sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
It is dangerous to take the following words to heart: knife, metal pole, quill pen, crow bar, scissors and fossilized mammoth tusk.

capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
Start out going SOUTHWEST on CAMPUS CENTER WAY toward COMMONWEALTH AVE... End at Derry, N.H.!

We all know your job is lame and mine is amazing.
All I'm saying is, now you've got the chance to usurp my throne.
comics@dailycollegian.com

Massachusetts Daily Collegian Marketplace

Activities

Student Union Art Gallery presents "Line Scape and Sound Fields" by Francesca Caruso, Sophia Flood, Brendan Dean and Kyle Nilan 4/7-4/18. Reception Tu 4/8 5-7pm. Gallery hours: M-Th 10-5 and F 10-3. Free. 545-0792

Apt for Rent

Center of Town 1, 2, 3 bedrooms. NOW SHOWING for June and Sept. NO FEES. Schedule a showing 253-7879 view apts. at www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen, floor to be worked on. 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1600 a month.

Apts for Rent

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT
2 bedroom $1175
3 bedroom $1475
4 bedroom $2225
Accepting Applications. 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

Employment

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE,

Employment

STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV), for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcamp-jobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

Employment

University Bartending classes start soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu voicemail: 545-6837

Rake Leaves Near Campus. $10/hr. Rakes provided. 549-5854

For Sale

DRUM SET FOR SALE CHEAP! Pearl Export Select. Call Tim- 617-548-1954.

House for Rent

S.Hadley for SALE by owner: 3 yr new 4 bedroom 4.5 bath 3250 sqft home on large landscape lot. For details go to: www.the-abstract-life.com/house or call: 516-606-2139

Room for Rent

A BETTER LIFESTYLE Private Suite in charming 4 bedroom/3 bathroom house near conservation area in Amherst. Friendly, responsible male or female to share w/professional man + 6 yr old daughter + 1 cat $650/mo including utilities. Reduced rent for part-time nanny. Call Jonathan 413-253-2535 or 413-222-3006

Near Amherst Center $475 Inclusive Reduced Rent for Part Time Nanny 549-7789 Strong St.

For 9/1/08. Northampton 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1000+

Room for Rent

4 Bedrooms $1500+
6 Bedrooms $1500+
584-4920 or 253-7436

Services

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N. Pleasant St. Amherst. www.birthright.org

Concerned About Your Eating?
Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic. 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe 413-548-9992. 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS TUESDAY

TUESDAY, APRIL 8, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Minutewomen take pair over weekend

Pozar, Boney lead the way in wins over GW and Temple

BY RYAN FLEMING
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts tennis team swept its weekend matches, improving its record to a 9-9 and staying undefeated in its Atlantic 10 matches.

Led by senior captain Masha Pozar, the Minutewomen cruised past George Washington, 6-1.

Pozar and her familiar doubles partner, Candynce Boney, won their fourth doubles match in a row, defeating their opponents, 8-3. The victory was the pair's 20th of the season. Pozar continues to add to her school record, which is now at 70 career doubles wins.

The pairing also won each of their respective singles matches handily in straight sets. Pozar's victory brings her within four singles wins from the current UMass record of 67. The record is currently held by Michelle Speiss, who until recently held the doubles win record as well.

No. 2 doubles pair Maude Lecluyse and Laura Danai overwhelmed their GW opponent, beating them, 8-3.

Lecluyse and Danai continued to play hard as they both registered victories in their singles matches. Danai has a current singles win streak at seven.

In a hard-fought match, Tanisha Hodgson came up short, losing the Minutewomen's only match of the day, 6-2, 2-6, 6-3.

At the No. 3 doubles match, Caitlyn Carpenter and Stephanie Gimenez paired up to defeat their Temple foes, 8-2. Carpenter was also victorious in her singles match, winning it in straight sets, 6-1, 6-2.

On Saturday, the Maroon and White traveled to Pennsylvania to face off against Temple for its second match.

The Minutewomen squeaked by the Owls, 4-3, backed by a strong performance from freshman Candynce Boney's strong play.

UMass swept the doubles portion of the match by scores of 8-3, 8-2, 8-2. Pozar again added to her record of doubles wins with 71.

The doubles point that Massachusetts earned by winning at least two of the doubles matches proved to be the game winner.

In singles play, the Minutewomen struggled a bit.

Pozar was defeated by her No. 1 opponent, 7-5, 6-3.

Boney stayed undefeated on the weekend when she defeated her foe in straight sets 6-2, 6-3 at the No. 2 spot. the freshman went 4-0 on the weekend. Maude Lecluyse and Caitlyn Carpenter were also victorious for the Maroon and White.

Laura Danai's singles match winning streak was halted at seven games. Owl Josephine Bergman defeated her in three sets 4-6, 6-4, 10-8.

The Minutewomen host to Quinnipiac (3-8) on Wednesday at 3 p.m. at the Bay Road Athletic Club. Before Wednesday's match, the UMass seniors will be honored in the traditional Senior Day celebration.

Ryan Fleming can be reached at rfleming@umass.edu.

MARY MASSARIA/COLLEGIAN

Masha Pozar won both of her doubles matches over the weekend along with partner Candynce Boney. The senior holds the UMass record for doubles wins (71).

BRIAN THIBEAULT/COLLEGIAN

First baseman Andy Tuetken receives a throw in a pickoff attempt against Holy Cross last week. The Minutemen recorded the victory after initially trailing 8-2 after two innings.

Minutemen face off with UConn, HU

Freni to take the mound in second game vs. border rivals

BY MIKE CONNORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team will try to even up its season series with border rival Connecticut today at Earl Lorden Field, and will then travel to Lynn, Mass., on Wednesday to take on Harvard in the first round of the Beanpot.

After dropping the first game of the three-game set, the Minutemen (8-11, 3-6 Atlantic 10) are coming off a pair of victories against George Washington over the weekend.

"We did a great job in the last two games," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "I think we really battled and we learned a lot about competing throughout the entire game, being on every pitch and came through with some clutch plays."

In the team's previous game with UConn (15-15, 5-7 Big East) on March 24, UMass took a 2-0 lead on a Kyle Multner two-run home run in the third inning.

However, the Minutemen were held scoreless the remainder of the game.

Third baseman Jim Macdonald and shortstop Ryan Franczek made two costly errors in the bottom of the third inning that allowed the Huskies to score a pair of unearned runs against Mike Dicato, giving them a 3-2 lead.

The Huskies added one more in the fourth and came out with the 4-2 victory.

Looking to build upon their

See BASEBALL on page 7

UMass dominating A-10 play

Team has won 26 consecutive games against conference foes

BY STEVE GAMES
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The last time the Massachusetts softball team lost a game in Atlantic 10 play was back on May 5, 2006 at St. Bonaventure, 5-3. Since that loss, UMass has won 26 straight A-10 conference games.

"I could care less, that isn't going to do anything for us," UMass coach Elaine Sortino said of the streak. "I didn't even know, I had no clue."

UMass Softball

UMass has already played and defeated two of the better teams in the A-10, Fordham and Charlotte. The Minutewomen have 12 more A-10 games left, with eight of them at home. They will travel to St. Louis and St. Bonaventure for the last four games of the regular season.

PITCHING

The pitching duo of junior Brandice Balschmiter and sophomore Bailey Sanders has been frustrating for opposing batters in the A-10 this season. Balschmiter and Sanders have led the Minutewomen to an 8-0 record. They have five A-10 Pitcher of the Week Awards between them, with four going to Balschmiter.

Sanders, who doesn't throw fast and mainly relies on her moving pitches, has been nearly as dominant as Balschmiter. In 27 innings during conference play, Sanders is 4-0 with a 1.30 ERA and has only allowed five runs on 12 hits. Seven of those 12 hits have gone for extra bases, including three home runs. Opponents are only batting .135 against her, leaving many of her runners on base.

"Considering that she went through surgery and didn't have the time needed, I think she's doing fine," Sortino said prior to the George Washington game.

Before the George Washington game, Sortino thought there were some spots that Balschmiter could still improve on. She wanted her to stay ahead by getting strikes early in the count. By getting ahead in the count, it is hard for opposing batters to catch up to Balschmiter's fastball when she has the choice to throw a 74 mile per hour fastball or an off-speed pitch.

On Friday, Balschmiter showed what she is capable of when she has command of the strike zone. She threw the first perfect game of her career and her third no hitter.

"They've been pitching in freezing cold weather; I don't think that helps," Sortino said.

Despite the cold weather during conference play, Balschmiter is 4-0, with a 0.56 ERA. Over 27 innings, she has struck out 39 batters and has only given up three runs (two earned). Opponents are

See SOFTBALL on page 8

BRIAN THIBEAULT/COLLEGIAN

Junior outfielder Samantha Salato leads the Minutewomen with five home runs this season.

Sophomore pitcher Bailey Sanders has proved to be a solid starting pitcher along with teammate Brandice Balschmiter.

WE'RE JUST A 'MINUTE' LATE | SEE PAGE 3

THE MASSACHUSETTS

DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

MOSTLY SUNNY : HI: 66 LO: 42 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2008

Package drive hosted by Red Cross, VASMA

BY EDEN UNIVER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Two University of Massachusetts student groups are holding a fundraiser to send packages to service members abroad on active duty.

The Veterans and Service Members Association, in association with UMass Red Cross, are holding the package drive that began last week and will accept donations into the month of May to send packages to service members abroad, hopefully by Memorial Day.

VASMA is a non-partisan organization, according to VASMA secretary and UMass sophomore Jake Petrie.

"VASMA aims to transition service members into the university environment," said Petrie. "We try to help students overseas and raise awareness on campus that we do have people from this campus that are serving."

The fact that the organization is non-partisan is important to VASMA president and co-founder Jon Zagami, a UMass senior.

"We're not asking people to support the military or the war," said Zagami. "We're asking people to support the community and our neighbors."

Zagami joined the Army Reserve – Army Corps of Engineers in 2002 and completed two years of active duty, being deployed to Kuwait and Iraq. He is currently in the Army Reserves.

The idea for the drive was suggested at the group's first meeting of the semester, but the project did not really get off the ground until the group met with a similar organization at UMass Lowell that had recently completed a package drive. After that, Petrie got "really excited" about the idea of the drive and things took off from there.

See DRIVE on page 2

Five years later, veterans reflect

Campus members who served in Iraq increase

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Five years after the statue of Saddam Hussein fell in Baghdad, the University of Massachusetts is still adjusting to the influx of student soldiers and veterans on campus.

For Jon Zagami, who served with the United States Army Engineering Corps in Iraq, the University was largely unprepared to handle a population of veterans and servicemen and women when he arrived as a freshman at UMass four years ago.

"It's now okay and acceptable to be known as a veteran on campus," he said. "When I first showed up on the scene four years ago it felt like it wasn't very welcoming. It seemed like this place was open to every kind of idea and every sort of ideal that anyone had, but being in the military wasn't positive and there was this negative connotation associated with it."

A founding member of the Veterans and Service Members Association (VASMA), Zagami said the University has come a long way towards assisting and accommodating the men and women returning from Iraq and Afghanistan to receive an education.

"In terms of Massachusetts, UMass is the best place for [veterans] to go to use their benefits. You're going to get a great education for the least cost and the program we have here is astounding," he said. "That's why this is a great place."

Over the course of the past five years, the University has adopted health service programs tailored for student veterans, trained resident directors and assistants to recognized the needs of students who have served overseas, and extended waivers to veterans enrolling through the Internet on UMassOnline, according to Zagami.

The changes have come as the numbers of veterans on campus increase, Zagami said. His group has grown to 63 members with five officers, still only a fraction of the almost 244 veterans currently enrolled on campus.

Assistant Dean of Students Eileen Stewart oversees the Veterans Affairs office on campus, assisting students in receiving their G.I. Bill benefits and helping to facilitate military withdrawals if an enrolled student is deployed or called up. She described the services offered by both the state and the University for veterans as an ever-waxing and waning throughout the history of the campus, from the Second World War to the conflict in Iraq.

"Now that there's more emphasis on the military and that people are being called up and being taken out of school

See VETERANS on page 3

Though he claimed UMass "wasn't very welcoming" four years ago, war veteran and UMass senior Jon Zagami says the campus is now more accepting of servicemen and women.

Mass. Campus Crime Information Bill in progress

State bill asks private schools to disclose crime statistics

BY HOLLY SEABURY
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Editor's note: The following article is the third in a week-long series covering violence on campus.

Crime on campus is reported frequently at the University of Massachusetts, but only because it is a public university.

A Massachusetts law states that complete information on burglaries, stabbings and any other illegal acts that may occur on campuses at private institutions can be withheld by campus police. Though the police make their daily logs available to the public, the campus may elect to include the bare minimum of the report rather than the true, entire story.

A new bill informally known as the Mass. Campus Crime Info. Bill would allow all information that happens on campus publicly available.

House Bill 3249 was heard by the Massachusetts legislature Joint Committee on State Administration & Regulatory Oversight last June 19, but is still in the process of being passed. Officially, the bill would "stipulate that private colleges and universities employing special State Police officers make the officers' crime reports accessible upon request, just as all public colleges and universities do under current law," according to one of the groups working to pass the bill, the Safe Campus Initiative.

The bill also intends to give community members access to objective, factual information in police officers' incident reports, "so they can better prepare and take specific precautions."

SCI, a non-profit organization and active campus safety advocate group, was formed by students from Boston University, Harvard and MIT, three of the many private schools in Massachusetts. According to their Web site, the overall mission is "to make school campuses a safer place for college students."

Current initiatives that SCI has undertaken include the distribution of alcohol and date rape drug test strips, as well as the drafting and lobbying of the

See CRIME on page 3

Information on violence occuring at public institutions like U Mass is released to the public while campus police at private institutions are not required to give out complete, factual information.

Students register for texts

Yesterday morning, students, faculty and staff of the University of Massachusetts were invited via e-mail to subscribe to the new emergency text-messaging service on campus.

According to University spokesman Ed Blaguszewski, the text-messaging service will transmit time-sensitive messages to subscribers' cell phones about situations that pose an immediate risk to the safety of the community or could badly disrupt campus activities.

The campus will be conducting a preliminary test of the system sometime next week that will assess if the messages are being received by all subscribers and how quickly the messages are being sent.

"Text messaging will be a valuable addition to our emergency communications toolset," said director of the Emergency Operations Center Donald Robinson. "Especially for students, who spend time in many locations over the course of a day, notifying them by cell phone is the most immediate method available. We are very pleased to provide this service to the community."

According to Blaguszewski, the campus has more than 30,000 people on campus during a normal business day, and administrators can use various methods through its Campus Alerts system to notify people of an emergency.

"These measures feature technologies such as broadcast e-mail, Web site messages, fire alarms and an emergency-closing telephone hot line," said Blaguszewski. "In addition, messages can be sent to key personnel, who then personally spread the word to building occupants."

The cell phone numbers of subscribers will remain confidential and will be used only for emergency purposes. After people register for the service, they will receive a confirmation text message from the service provider, Connect-ED. If or when an emergency occurs on campus, subscribers will see a text message labeled "Campus Alert" on their phone, transmitted from "23177."

To subscribe to this service, visit www.umass.edu/campusalerts.

Holly Seabury

BSU hosts celebration of Martin Luther King, Jr.

BY JASMINE RENEE PINA
COLLEGIAN CORRESPONDENT

"Where do we go from here?" was the theme for the 40th anniversary event of Martin Luther King's death, hosted by the Black Student Union.

"Dr. M.L.K was somebody that fought for justice and to bring out the qualities in our country," said Afro-American studies Professor John H. Bracey, Jr., who knew M.L.K. personally. "Forty years after his death, it's important to talk about what he did."

Jason Hendrickson, a grad student who read poems for the celebration, felt this event was meaningful to the University of Massachusetts.

"For a campus that's located in a part of the country that's thought of as traditionally progressive, this event... should remind us that race still has an impact on us in our everyday lives," he said. "It should encourage us to delve deeper in our history."

Hendrickson also believed that the event won't be purposeful until the campus sees what moves people make during their college careers and during their lives.

Still, the event "was very well executed and it got people thinking," he said. "We need to go into these events with the attention of creating something concrete and mobilizing towards something."

Associate vice chancellor of student affairs and campus life Byron Bullock felt the purpose of the event was to continue the discussion of the life and legacy of M.L.K.

"We all celebrate around these speeches, but we don't strategize and talk about how to move from this point and energize ourselves to move forward," he said. "This event gave us the opportunity to discuss social change and justice and how it affects us on this campus."

He felt that the event met his and others' expectations, but that it was important to maintain momentum.

"We need a whole lot of people to start something and to keep this conversation going," he said. "We had the opportunity to leave with the knowledge base to go back to our communities where issues are still taking place and show what's really valuable."

Everyone attending the event sat down with a plate of chicken and salad. There were a few performances such as the gospel choir, poetry and speeches from different individuals.

The event also featured a discussion based around the question "If Martin Luther King was alive today, what would he say about America?"

Some students said that people today are apathetic and aren't living up to their potential. Others emphasized the need to forge new paths that relate to today's issues, rather than following the work of King.

Professor Bracey ended the discussion expressing the way he felt about their responses.

"Your generation is nothing compared to our generation," he said. You're asking yourselves where we go from here but stop thinking about what you aren't doing and think about what you are doing. You're taking success for granted and its part of my frustration because you're much better off than we were. Martin Luther King would be glad that black people made it to UMass."

The BSU entertained with songs, speeches and poetry, but also helped individuals understand the importance of Martin Luther King and what is needed to be done to move forward.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 117
113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COMICS EDITOR Adam Szagin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Bice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR James Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Strymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marsea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Matheos
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenswaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUE. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE NEWS IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE TRI-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1936. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN HAS BEEN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL 545-3500 BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 5:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Katie Huston

COPY EDITOR
Greg McCarthy

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Nick Bush

Across the Nation Around the World

Increasing number of young adults use laptops, results in decrease of TVs

BY CHARLOTTE STEINWAY
TUFTS DAILY (TUFTS U.)

(U-WIRE) MEDFORD, Mass.—TV executives behind shows like NBC's "The Office" and the ABC Family's "Greek" were ecstatic last January when Nielsen Media Corporation announced that it would begin mapping the television-viewing patterns of college students and factor college residence halls into its annual programming tally.

Television shows with younger viewer bases, they thought, would finally be able to recognize their full audiences, and thus could conceivably begin to generate more revenue from advertisements.

But Nielsen's decision to count its younger viewers may have come a little too late. An increasing number of today's college students are using laptops to watch their favorite shows, forgoing flat-screen TVs for computer monitors and switching from NBC to NBC.com.

Glenda Manzi, who teaches the ExCollege class "21st Century Television: Media in the Age of YouTube, Facebook, and MP3s," explained that television-viewing habits among young adults have undergone revolutionary changes in the past few years.

"When my daughter started college six years ago, every single dorm room had a television," Manzi said. "Two years later, my son started college, and barely anybody had TVs in their room – there were maybe three people on his floor who had them. Now, I can't even imagine what the case would be."

Manzi also noticed this transition among the students in her class, and has seen a difference in the two years since she began teaching it.

"I first taught [the class] in the spring semester of last year, and even in one year, the amount of video consumed by students on laptops has doubled," Manzi said. "When I first taught the class, maybe half the class would say they watch [TV online]. Now, virtually everyone raises their hand."

This recent, fast-growing trend has been attributed to a number of factors, ranging from the Internet's ease of accessibility to Web sites' increase in viewer interactivity.

Most students, however, claim to turn to TV online because of its sheer convenience.

Tufts University sophomore Matthew Salzberg, a member of Manzi's class, watches TV online because he finds it more suitable to his schedule.

"Online video formats are better for my lifestyle, where I don't have time at 9 p.m. to sit and watch a TV [show], and because there are few, sometimes zero, commercials [online], the show becomes shorter and less annoying without two minutes of ads every six minutes," Salzberg said.

But Salzberg said that, while he prefers to watch television online, he hasn't yet given up on his television set.

"I watch a lot of TV in my free time," Salzberg said. "Some of it – maybe 40 percent – is done on an actual television set, but most of the time, I tend to watch TV on Web sites such as Hulu.com, ABC.com, NBC.com, or I'll download shows from iTunes."

Manzi said students like Salzberg tend to prefer online TV formats over offline ones because of the Internet's extreme flexibility.

"The biggest benefit about online television is that you watch it when you want it, where you want it and in which format you want to watch it," Manzi said. "Choice is the difference between online television and actual television."

Freshman Jack Dilday, who said he watches television online about once a week, agreed with Manzi's statement.

"I watch NBC's 'The Office' online because it's easily accessible, whereas if you were to watch it on TV, you'd have to watch it at the specific time [that it airs]," he said.

In fact, according to a New York Times article published last month, one in five viewings of an episode of "The Office" occurred on a computer screen instead of a television. Although the episode attracted a broadcast audience of 9.7 million people, the same episode was also streamed online 2.7 million times through the network's Web site.

According to Manzi, most networks began making their shows available for audiences online around the fall of 2007, and are attracting both viewers who were once loyal to their television sets and those who previously used sites like YouTube.com and Alluc.org to obtain video clips.

"I think people are just now realizing that those sites are available, and they will continue to turn to them because they've established a brand," Manzi said. "Also, the difference in quality [between online video sites and network TV Web sites] is like night and day."

Salzberg agreed, claiming he prefers streaming shows rather than watching them in segments due to the superior image quality. "All of those [network] Web sites stream the entire episode, and some do so in actual HD," Salzberg said. "I've found that watching shows on Web sites such as Alluc.org and Peekvid.com just isn't a lot of fun."

Although online video sites may be losing viewers in the wake of high-quality TV network Web sites, sites from other fields have found ways to profit from college students' interest in video.

Earlier this year, for example, Anastos Interactive Media launched HotNewz.tv, a site tailored directly toward college students, which features televised news, advice and specific programming aimed to young adults.

Audrey Walker, the site's associate producer, explained how the concept of HotNewz came about.

"When you're a college student, you eat breakfast in 90 seconds while studying for an exam, checking your e-mail and updating your Facebook page. It's safe to say you don't have a lot of time to keep up with the news," she said. "Our program tries to bridge the gap between television and Internet for these college students."

Another TV-like Web site for the college-age set, CareerTV.com, targets seniors and recent college graduates on the search for their first job. The site hosts videos that have been uploaded by employers, along with general career-help videos, produced by the site itself. Although it may seem chronologically backwards, CareerTV recently spawned a broadcast TV show after the success of its online version. The show covers different topics each month and is shown on university TV stations at schools like Columbia University, New York University and the University of Chicago.

Helen Luttemo, the director of public relations for CareerTV, explained that the site was designed for today's Internet generation.

"The whole idea is that [our site] is a time-saving function," she said. "Young people today live online, and they're too lazy to go to a bunch of different corporate Web sites, so what we're trying to do is give them some first hand insight, so that they can essentially 'meet' future employers on the screen."

Manzi said sites like these have proliferated a whole new type of media – one that often provides the audience with the opportunity to participate in aspects of the show.

"The technology of the Internet will be able to create new forms of video that are much more interactive with the viewer," Manzi said.

Study tips for students

BY JOHN BAILEY
THE DAILY CAMPUS (U. CONNECTICUT)

(U-WIRE) STORRS, Conn.—When the professor hands out the syllabus at the start of the semester, there's all this info that you don't need to know: attendance expectations, readings, essay due dates, plagiarism rules. All you really care about are those percentages at the bottom of the page: how badly can you screw up the exams and still get that C-?

Of course, once you get two-thirds of the way through the semester, you take out that calculator and you work the numbers out. You start to feel nervous, maybe a little queasy. Because, see, with all the quizzes you skipped and homework you missed, you can't screw up the exams at all. In fact, to even get a B in the class, you need to get a hundred and forty nine on the final.

So what do you do, aside from curling up in the fetal position with a thick blanket and a keg of Keystone hooked up intravenously? That grade's got to come up if you don't want to stay in academic limbo forever.

Hit up the library, and unplug the Internet. Getting away from distractions is over half the studying battle.

"The library doesn't have distractions, like TV or [Smash Brothers] Brawl," says Eliza Caldwell, a second-semester elementary education major at the University of Connecticut. "And it's got really comfy green couches in the basement. It's great in theory; I don't study there as often as I should."

Someone once said that writing is 5 percent inspiration and 95 percent not getting distracted by the Internet. This holds true for studying, too; if you are hanging around your room, you've got all the tools for a fun study session: the Internet, video games, snacks, cheap beer in the fridge and lots of buddies. But what you probably don't have is the dedication and focus to ignore all these distractions and actually slog through those biology chapters. Four hours of studying only counts as two if you're reading Wikipedia articles about submarines half the time. There's nothing wrong with a few study breaks, but they should be short and beneficial. That's what makes the library so good: get up and grab a coffee at Bookworms, check your e-mail and maybe say hi to some folks – and then get right back to work.

The library isn't a total haven. People can still call you up and tempt you with evening or weekend plans.

"Sometimes putting your social life on hold is crucial," says Eric Schuler, an 8th-semester English and psychology major. "Especially at the end of the semester when papers are due, and exams and other deadlines have to be met. The best thing you can do is start studying early and manage your time wisely so that your friends don't think you've vanished off the face of the earth."

It's not nice and it never feels good to say "nope, sorry, I have to do work," but sometimes you need to put a moratorium on parties and pickup hoops. While you probably could stay up drinking with your crew till 4:00 a.m. on a Wednesday, you probably couldn't wake up in time for your exam the next morning. Lock your door and write something mean and dismissive on your whiteboard. Your friends won't hate you – not too much. And you'll get the last laugh when you're the one with the mortarboard and they're 8th-semester sophomores.

If you're this far down the ladder of options, a few points of extra credit aren't going to save your hide. And the professor probably doesn't care that much about you, especially if you're a real slacker. But if you genuinely don't understand the material, he or she can probably be a pretty useful tool – bring specific questions to office hours for some helpful explanation. Still, if it's just a case of not putting in the time, you probably won't find any love there. Good luck anyway.

Student organizations gather kits for troops in Iraq

DRIVE from page 1

Petrie was in the Second Marine Division and was deployed twice to an area of Iraq northwest of the Euphrates River. His unit was primarily guarding a hydroelectric dam in the vicinity.

The fundraiser aims to collect items that service members might not necessarily be able to obtain where they are stationed. Food items such as canned tuna, crackers, cookies, beef jerky, powdered drink mixes and gum are great things to donate, according to Petrie.

"Simple things that we take for granted here really help to break up the monotony of the ready-made meals," said Petrie.

Also, hygiene products such as Q-tips, baby powder, baby wipes and toothpaste are welcome donations.

"Stations in rural areas aren't necessarily going to have running water," said Petrie. "These products go a long way to make you feel more like a human being after you've been sitting in a sand storm for two days."

Magazines and newspapers are also suggested items to donate because, according to Petrie, they keep the service members updated on the news and remain a connection to the world service members left behind.

People are welcome to write letters of support, thanks or simply letters that remind service members that they are being thought of at UMass, to be included in packages.

Zagami also proposes that people donate UMass memorabilia such as T-shirts. The group is trying to get athletes to sign pictures to send in the packages as well.

A small care package can make a large impact for those stationed abroad.

"It's like Christmas morning every time you get mail," said Zagami. "It gives you a break from the combat stress and really makes you feel like you weren't forgotten."

Not receiving any mail while stationed abroad, on the other hand, can really bring down service members' morale, Zagami said.

"Plenty of guys don't ever get anything, and that's completely devastating and depressing," he said. "It really takes away from their combat capabilities."

Pete Wintersteen, a UMass sophomore, is a Corporal in the Marine Reserves and was in the bravo company first battalion 25th Marine regiment when he was stationed in Fallujah, a city in the Anbar province of Iraq. He said that receiving packages while abroad really does make a big difference.

"Getting a package, for me and the guys I was stationed with, was the highlight of the day," said Wintersteen. "When you're out on patrol and you come back and have a package waiting for you, it's really exciting."

An ideal package, according to Wintersteen, would have baby wipes and hand sanitizer because showers "were not guaranteed," as well as a new book, some powdered drink mixes because "water gets a little old after a while," and a new pack of socks.

Wintersteen and his peers at his station would often save certain items from their packages like extra bars of soap, tubes of toothpaste or little toys that got sent to them to make small packages of their own that they would bring to local people in certain areas they visited. Wintersteen said that people in these areas could not often get these items themselves, and he and the service members that he was stationed with were more than willing to share such items when they could.

According to Petrie, VASMA has had a lot of support from groups on and off campus, in addition to the help they are receiving from the UMass Red Cross, which has been a "tremendous help" to the fundraiser. The Student Nurse Association is one group aiding the fundraiser. The UMass Physical Plant and Whitmore Administration building are setting up collections for the drive.

The UMass Student Government Association has also approved funding for the project and will be covering the costs of boxes and postage for the packages, as well as a few other financial needs.

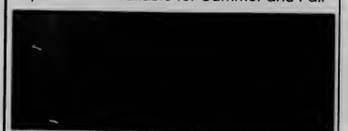
The money that is donated to the project "goes to buying items that might not be donated, like weapons cleaning gear," said Petrie.

Last week the group was tabling in the Campus Center to collect donations, and this week and next week they will be rotating at all of the Dining Commons from 6-8 p.m. This week, the group will be in Berkshire D.C. today, and Franklin D.C. tomorrow. Next week they will be at Berkshire D.C. on Monday, Worcester D.C. on Tuesday, Franklin D.C. on Wednesday and Hampshire D.C. on Thursday.

"Anyone can volunteer to help collect donations at a table or people can just donate whatever they can manage," said Zagami. "And people can always contact us if they want to donate items that need to be picked up."

Eden Univer can be reached at euniver@student.umass.edu.

Need Experience?



Located in the Campus Center Basement.

All majors accepted!

If you're interested in business and can commit to a year-long position, come on down to our office.

Now Accepting Applications!

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Private college students agree with info bill's aim

CRIME from page 1

Massachusetts Campus Crime Information Bill.

The other group that supports the bill is Security On Campus, Inc., a national group dedicated to issues of student and campus security. SOC is "responsible for the passage of the laws that ensure basic crime information and sound security policies for all students and staff in the country."

SOC began in New Bedford in 1987 after co-founders Connie and recently passed Howard Clery's daughter was raped and murdered at Lehigh University, a private school in Pennsylvania. The group came together when the Clerys found that their daughter's assailant, a fellow Lehigh student, had a history of criminal behavior that was kept quiet by the school to "protect its image."

According to SOC public affairs official John Doherty, the most recent Department of Justice report shows that crime is rising much higher at private schools than at public schools.

"Why shouldn't Massachusetts have one fair standard for the dissemination of campus police crime information?" he asked. "Why should a private college be allowed to do less than a public one? If you don't know what the problems are, how will you know about epidemics?"

Shannon Burchill, from Boston College in Chestnut Hill, said the bill would be a really good idea.

"There are a lot of horrible things that happen on a daily basis around the area because it is right in the city and a lot of students, especially those not from around here, don't realize how close to home these may affect them," she said. "I definitely think that it might cause a negative reaction for some people and deter some from attending, but on the other hand, many students who want to live in a city also know that a lot of crime goes on and it wouldn't affect their decision to apply."

Tiffany Lee, from Bentley College in Waltham, agreed.

"Right now we have a little section in our weekly student newspaper about little things that happen on campus, such as students getting caught with marijuana, etc. However, if there is a major event that is not publicized, I think it should be brought to the students' attention, because it is only fair to us," she said.

Michelle Eston, from Harvard University in Cambridge, did not feel that complete information on campus crime was necessary and said that college students should focus on their own safety.

"The Harvard Police Department sends us e-mail updates on incidents that happen in the area and I really appreciate those updates," she said. "I do think that my school does a good job of keeping violence down, but I think that it's a student's job to act responsibly and try to avoid risky situations."

According to Doherty, the bill must be passed this year. To view the official text of the bill, visit http://safecamp.org/crimebill.html.

Holly Seabury can be reached at hseabury@dailycollegian.com.

Servicemen and women continue to grow as part of campus population and then come back, I think that the perceived need for students is rising again," she said.

VETERANS from page 1

According to Stewart, both the University and the Commonwealth have taken steps to assist veterans seeking higher education in Massachusetts. The state legislature granted national guardsmen both free tuition and fees for state schools a little over a year and a half ago, and the Board of Trustees has waived tuition costs for graduate student veterans.

Stewart said the University had addressed veterans' concerns at an administrative level as well, holding meetings to bring together different departments to find the best-suited ways to aid students returning from either a military background or overseas deployment.

"We've had a number of meetings with offices to talk about some stresses and strains that folks who are coming back – particularly folks who are coming back from overseas – may be experiencing," she said. "It would be the Registrar's office, financial aid office, Bursar's office and staff talking about this and trying to work through some of the issues that might be coming up so they can catch them right away."

Stewart pointed to the recent creation of the Military Community Resource Center, located in Wilder Hall, as a way for the University to work with servicemen and women and provide support and services for veterans them and their families.

"Dean Eileen Stewart certifies all the G.I. Bill and education payments and she does a great job at it," Zagami said. "It's just that with the amount of veterans that have come in and the amount of work she's had, it hasn't been possible to answer the one on one questions. This new office is there as a resources for students to go to."

According to Stewart, VASMA was behind the push for a resource center for servicemen and women on campus.

Lieutenant Colonel David T. Vacchi, a member of the faculty and Battalion Commander of the UMass ROTC, calls himself the "informal advisor" of VASMA.

"With regard to the creation of the program, I wouldn't say that I was an initial advisor to it, but I was here as the group was being created and I worked with Jon Schnauber and Jon Zagami quite a bit," he said. "They did all the leg work and they deserve all the credit for creating that group."

Vacchi said the ROTC program at UMass crosses paths with campus veterans in community service, taking care of area veterans and observing holidays like Veterans Day in conjunction with groups like VASMA.

"Since they're all students they take a lot of the same classes. They see each other at the VFW for karaoke night on Saturday, typically," he said. "Last fall we had a speaker from VASMA, which was quite good."

A veteran of the Iraq War as well, Vacchi has incorporated his experiences serving abroad into the University, from teaching a course on the history and culture of Iraq to ROTC training.

"We used to have just standard blocking and tackling, to use a football analogy, and now [we have] much more audible-type training," he said. "Which basically means we'll tell the cadets, this is the mission we want you to go do. The evaluated portion is really halfway through the mission we'll say 'Oh, something has changed.' The fluidity of thought there, the rapidity of thought, the ability to improvise – those kinds of skills which you really can't put in a book, you can only exercise through practice, are being measured and evaluated with much more detail."

While Vacchi said he doesn't track the statistics, ROTC graduates from as recently as two years ago would be now probably preparing for their second tour of duty overseas, and those from 2005 and earlier would be wrapping up their commissions in the army with at least one deployment.

Still, he said, the fact that every ROTC cadet who enters the program understands the likelihood of overseas deployment does not deter prospective recruits. Recruitment is up, as well as the quality of recruits, he said.

"I take that as the bravery and the commitment to service of [the current] generation," Vacchi said. "What I tend to believe is that these [cadets] are saying 'I understand the risks, but you know what? There are other people over there sacrificing and I want to do my part.' And that's pretty commendable."

For veterans like Zagami, who looks forward to graduating later this spring, the goal now is to get an education.

"We're just like you. We're just like everyone else on campus. We're no different," Zagami said, wearing jeans and a UMass sweatshirt, and with an Under Armour backpack by his side. "We just decided to take a different route to get here."

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com.

WAIT A MINUTE...

Due to production constraints, The Minute, the Daily Collegian's new arts and living magazine, will be inserted in tomorrow's Collegian. However, the staff of The Minute would like to invite you – yes, you – to join us tonight for a launch party and a sneak peek at the magazine.

AMHERST BREWING COMPANY UPSTAIRS.
STARTS @ 6 P.M. 21+
BE THERE.

Please join us for our tenth annual

Freedom Seder

Based on the Exodus themes of the Jewish Passover Seder, the Freedom Seder uses stories, music, poetry and ritual to express our yearning for universal liberation and multicultural and interfaith unity.

Sunday, April 13 at 6:00pm
Campus Center 1009
UMass Amherst

FREE with UMass ID ($12 general admission) includes a delicious buffet dinner and cultural program

(Kosher meals available upon request)

For reservations call 545-9642
More information at www.umass.edu/jewish

UMASS AMHERST

Presented by the Office of Jewish Affairs, Black Student Union, Muslim Students Association, and Delta Xi Phi Multicultural Sorority, and cosponsored by the Center for Student Development, Student Affairs & Campus Life, and UMass Hillel.

UMass Idol

Mark your calendar!

Sign Up and Enter Today!

Want to be a UMass Idol?

This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize

Sing at the Taste of UMass!

Thursday, April 24, 2008 · Time: 6–7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center

Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu
or call UMass Dining Services: 413-545-2472.

Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing.

All entries must be received by April 23, 2008

There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round. Limited to 20 contestants for the entire event.

Presented by:
UMass Dining Services
& LAZER 99.9

Sponsored by:

DINING SERVICES UMass/Amherst

Taste of UMass 2008

umass.edu/diningservices

Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

EDITORIAL OPINION

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2008

"Free speech is the whole thing, the whole ball game. Free speech is life itself."
- Sir Salman Rushdie

EDITORIAL@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Progressive feminism

Dan Nicastro

While the primary season continues to drag on (a phrase I think I've now used in nine separate columns), more and more interesting issues keep popping up about the candidates.

A few weeks ago, Newsweek devoted an entire issue to Hillary Clinton. The magazine sought out female writers and columnists and asked what they thought of the Clinton campaign. Not surprisingly, many of the women said they felt torn, feeling as if a vote for Obama was traitorous to their gender.

Clinton herself has brought up the issue of identity politics, telling a Newsweek reporter that she thinks "there is a sense of identity and common experience" with women.

This raises a question at the heart of the debate about modern feminism: is the idea of shared identity and common experience good or bad for feminism? Shared identity is certainly good (and probably necessary) for politics, but it seems as if it is damaging for modern conceptions of feminism.

Feminism is a hard word to define. It has gone through several transformations and, like many "isms," its meaning is still unclear. Personally, I describe myself as a post-modern feminist.

My conception of feminism is broad-based and more abstractly philosophical, shaped by writers like Judith Butler. I believe that the goal of feminism is to seek to allow agency (which is doing what is possible within the realm of personhood) for women.

I realize that, as with all ideologies, there are problems with my ideas, but I also believe that "gender identity politics" do more harm than good when it comes to the nature of feminist thought.

In the issue of Newsweek, Clinton continued to talk about identity, saying "I know it's hard for young women to really feel the emotional connection because they didn't live what we lived through. When I was a young woman, there were colleges I couldn't go to, jobs that I couldn't have ever had, a set of expectations that were pretty much imposed."

It seems as if this sort of language universalizes women in a way that does damage to modern conceptions of feminism. This universality alienates those who aren't part of the movement simply because they lack the "experience" necessary to totally understand feminist thought. It creates the need for women to share in the common experience of sexism and oppression to truly be labeled a feminist.

The claim that a common identity even exists is irresponsible and antithetical to the goals of modern feminism.

This is not to discount what Senator Clinton, or others of the generation characterized as the "second wave of feminism," went through. Rampant sexism within a male-dominated establishment placed ridiculous restrictions and inequalities on women simply because of their gender.

Feminists in this time helped to radically reverse thousands of years of female inequality, both legally and socially. They were responsible for the feminist revolution, forcing open the doors of equal education and employment and shattering preconceived notions of the capabilities of women.

This does not mean, however, that we should be content to rest on the laurels of the previous generation, as Senator Clinton's remark suggests. My shunning of universalism is also not meant to suggest that feminism does not require widespread appeal, as "isms" require broad-based support to survive.

It's just that feminist thought should not be touted as universally applying to all women simply because people share a gender. The claim that a common identity even exists is irresponsible and antithetical to the goals of modern feminism.

Language such as "shared common experiences" cannot be considered innocent speech. The words and the context in which they are said require a shared, rigid definition of common experience in order for experience to be used as a tool.

The creation of a shared, rigid definition, however, boils personhood down to the idea that all women everywhere have the same shared goals, the same shared experiences and the same shared identity.

This is not only unreasonable (not to mention impossible), but it effectively shuts down any discussion of the advancement of feminism. The definition of a common experience does not allow for discussion or debate.

It must be pointed out that Senator Clinton's words, and the words of her supporters, come in the midst of a presidential campaign. Successful presidential political campaigns are characterized by the ability of a candidate to generalize.

Candidates modify their message and seek endorsements to try and help win over certain segments of the population by crafting broad, universally applicable messages that reach out to several segments of the population. What's good for politics, however, is damaging to feminism.

One of the hallmarks of feminist thought over the last two centuries has been the need to evolve. The reason I believe feminism is about allowing for agency is because it is a definition that allows for a great deal of open discussion about what feminism is, what gender is and what can be accomplished knowing these things.

Claims about shared common experience and gender identification are a step in the wrong direction. Movements are meant to push people forward and not hold them to admiring the past. It's time we evolve again and leave the idea of common identity in the 20th century.

Dan Nicastro is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dnicastr@student.umass.edu.

Steps to success

Scott Harris

By virtually every measure, we are losing the battle to promote democracy and democratic values around the world. In the last five to eight years, autocratic regimes have gained enormous political and economic capital, and there is no doubt that they plan to use every bit of it to harm the Western world.

The United States and her willing European allies are being forced to turn a blind eye to rising levels of oppression, rising levels of class and race subjugation and outright ethnic slaughter. It is imperative that the free world act now to blunt this trend, or the opportunity for liberty's triumph in the wake of the Cold War could be in serious jeopardy.

To be honest, many of the Western world's problems are of their own creation. We had the unfortunate circumstance to have the utterly incompetent and arrogant George W. Bush as our president, who soiled the good will the United States felt after the Sept. 11 attacks.

Assaults on freedom and reason here in our own country have not been ignored by the rest of the world; an annual report from Reporters Without Borders saw the U.S. drop to 53 from 44 in a ranking of press freedoms.

There is a debate in Congress centered on renewing the unilateral authority to wiretap American citizens without a warrant. Any attempt to criticize the Bush administration and its policies is met with a torrent of criticism questioning the detractor's intellectual and moral constitution.

The United States and Europe, weakened by the war in Iraq and distracted by a global economic slowdown, have also been very slow to react to crises around the globe. Africa, in particular, is sliding backward.

The genocide in Sudan continues. Free and fair elections in Zimbabwe, which resulted in an overwhelming victory for the opposition party, are being overruled in a blatantly obvious power grab by current President Robert Mugabe. The West has done virtually nothing to help broker peace and freedom on this continent.

By virtually every measure, we are losing the battle to promote democracy and democratic values around the world.

Why is this so? Very simply, we cannot lecture Iran on the democratic rule of law while our government uses the Department of Justice to launch politically-charged prosecutions. We cannot lecture China on human rights, while barring gay couples from marrying and adopting.

We cannot lecture Africa on honoring a free and fair vote while ignoring disturbing voting problems here in our own country. Moreover, tax cuts and dramatically increased discretionary and non-discretionary spending, coupled with loose regulation of the financial markets, have put the U.S. (and the world) economy in danger of recession.

What are the steps to a solution? First, the United States must elect a completely new slate of leaders. John McCain has proven that he is incompetent on the issues of national security and the economy.

Hillary Clinton's refusal to disavow her vote to authorize military action in Iraq and her vote to designate Iran's military as a terrorist organization show that she, too, does not have the judgment the U.S. needs. Barack Obama is much more likely to reinvent the world image of the United States, and prevent a responsible foreign policy.

Second, the United States must turn inward and repair its economy. The financial markets should be subject to more stringent regulatory guidelines and there must be a long-term commitment to pay down the national debt. The U.S. economy will turn into recession this year, but these steps should ensure that we emerge stronger than we entered.

Third, the United States must heavily invest in producing a standard alternative energy source for automobiles and home heating. In order to truly reduce the political and economic capital of rogue states in the Middle East, we must lose our addiction to oil.

Fourth, the United States must reduce its presence in Iraq. It is clear that we cannot pull out entirely, or we will be watching a grave crisis devolve into a humanitarian catastrophe that we will be forced to address in the future.

However, a sustained force of 140,000 American soldiers is neither sustainable nor desirable. The goal of the "surge," which was to increase security to provide for political reconciliation, has produced mixed results at best and a long-term U.S. presence is likely only to ferment resentment toward the West in Iraq.

Fifth, Europe must stand up and bear more of the responsibility for the worldwide effort to defeat terrorism and oppression. Nations like France and Germany, reluctant to support the Bush Administration, are hurting the effort with reactionary responses to any military or economic action.

Scott Harris is a UMass student. He can be reached at harris.sjr@gmail.com.

"DAILY COLLEGIAN pullquote podcast"

Collegian 'pod-columns' now online at dailycollegian.com!

At the candidates' leisure

Nicholas O'Malley

A couple of weeks ago, Barack Obama decided to take some "time off" at a Pennsylvania bowling alley and play a few frames with Senator Robert Casey and Roxanne, a 43-year-old from Altoona, Pa.

Although his idea of "bowling for votes" in local alleys may improve his image, his score, a 37 through seven frames, didn't help his ego. If Obama's bowling score was any indicator of his campaign success, we'd all be looking at Hillary vs. McCain right now.

The notion that a presidential candidate can show up to a local alley, play like my 8-year-old cousin, and come out as looking like a "man of the people," shows that the gap between us and our candidates is larger than ever.

In an election where race and character play such a large role, why isn't there an emphasis on what these people actually do?

Nowadays, political figures are simply given credit for showing up and trying. It's an amazing feat when politicians are able to successfully throw a first pitch at a baseball game, something that Cincinnati mayor Mark Mallory failed (miserably) to do a year ago on opening day.

In an election where race and character play such a large role, why isn't there an emphasis on what these people actually do? We'd all like to think that when they're not on the campaign trail, our candidates are spending time with their all-American families or, like Obama, convincing us that politicians are people too. Some of the candidates, however, are simply not exposing who they are.

Out of the three "veterans" that are still relevant in the race, John McCain, Ron Paul and Ralph Nader (71, 72 and 74 years old, respectively), McCain is the only one whose character is examined in the public eye.

His time served in the armed forces and his congressional service have been well publicized. But other than that, what does the man do? With his age and history taken into account, there's not much to envision other than the senator sitting on his deck telling old war stories and yelling at kids to get off his lawn.

Sixty-year-old Hillary Clinton, on the other hand, is slightly more spry than her Republican rival. It's easy to envision Hillary pursuing a hardcore off-time activity – like doubles tennis with Bill. With matching red, white and blue wrist and head bands acting as the finishing touch to her stars and stripes jumpsuit, it wouldn't be hard to envision Hillary barking at the former president for his weak serve.

The truth is, unfortunately, that Hillary enjoys walking in place of more rigorous activities. But if she wants to de-stress, Clinton has a tendency to go and clean out her closets.

Despite the apparent weaknesses in his bowling game, Barack Obama is actually quite active in terms of physical activities – his game of choice is basketball.

A member of his high school basketball team, Obama has always enjoyed the game and even routinely partook in pick-up games in Chicago until his campaign got in the way. Obama has been described as a "very left-handed left-hander" on the court, a style that fits all too well for the candidate preaching change.

Obama, however, is the exception to the otherwise bland pursuits of other candidates, which is a shame when you take a look at other recent candidates. Even now, Bill Clinton has a decent golf game, and heck, John Kerry windsurfs.

Why is John McCain scrutinized for an alleged affair, instead of for what he actually does with his life?

Even when they decide to go out into the community to interact with the people, like at Obama's Bowl-o-drome, candidates are not even able to do something in which they have legitimate interest.

Why stop at bowling? Shouldn't we be seeing Obama throwing down on the And 1 mix tape tour? How about Hillary walking with, you know, actual people? Why doesn't John McCain do something?

The candidates are always preaching that they're "for the people" and "ordinary Americans." It's about time they actually proved it by showing voters that they are people, not politicians.

Nicholas O'Malley is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at nomalley@student.umass.edu.

It is better to keep your mouth closed and let people think you are a fool than to open it and remove all doubt.

-Mark Twain

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2008

ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Hit controversial play comes to UMass

'Godspell' provides a unique view on story of Jesus Christ

By Kaitlin Morris
Collegian Staff

As many musical buffs may know, "Godspell" is one of the most popular Broadway shows in modern-day America. The musical takes parables from the Gospel according to Saint Matthew and creates a more contemporary way to interpret a part of the Bible. The UMass Theatre Guild will be performing this on and off-Broadway hit this Thursday through Saturday at Bowker Auditorium.

"Godspell" was written and directed by John-Michael Tebelak with music and lyrics by Stephen Schwartz. It began as Tebelak's master thesis project and was first performed off-Broadway in 1971 at New York's La MaMa Experimental Theatre Club.

"Godspell" was one of the longest running off-Broadway musicals and was adapted into a film in 1973, where it starred Victor Garber as Jesus. Tebelak also helped to co-write the screenplay. "Godspell" finally moved to Broadway in 1976.

The film is a decidedly different interpretation of the original play; Jesus' followers gained a more notably "flower child" reputation, while original songs such as "We Beseech Thee" had been removed. The film was directed by David Greene and produced by Edgar Lansbury and received a three -star rating (out of five) from critics when it was first released to theaters.

The play itself has no distinct setting; many renditions of "Godspell" have been performed using various periods in history as well as a diverse array of settings. The play is based on the life of Jesus and his followers and tries to portray the message of love and compassion in true Christianity.

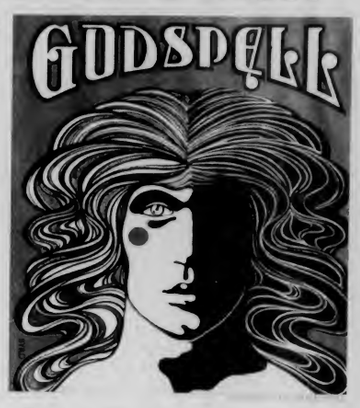
The play is currently being performed at many high schools, colleges and theatre companies nationwide.

One of "Godspell's" most popular songs is "Day by Day," which hit number 13 on the Billboard chart in 1972. Many may recognize the song from more recent films such as "Meet the Parents," starring Ben Stiller, and "Wet Hot American Summer."

The word godspell is the archaic version of the word gospel, which for those who are unfamiliar with theology, translates to "good news."

Many devout Christians find controversy within the play. "Godspell" removes the mystical versions of Christ and turns the character into a single person spreading the word of love. People take offense to the lack of the Resurrection within the play, as well as the "clown-like," hippie followers.

"Godspell" has been performed over 2,124 times off-Broadway and 527 on Broadway.



According to Women's Wear Daily, "'Godspell' is a love feast...dedicated to light and joy and love. The music and lyrics by Stephen Schwartz are remarkably eclectic, drawing on rock, folk, gospel and Broadway...it is delightful."

Another quote by the New York Post calls it "a hit, a big hit. "Godspell" believes in God – and people – and possibility."

The UMass Theatre Guild has also performed other popular plays such as "Macbeth," "Urinetown," "Seussical the Musical" and "A Midsummer Night's Dream." UMG technically began in 1936, according to the company's Web site, where students performed "Trial by Jury."

In 1973 a cinematic version of "Godspell" was released, which provided a considerably different interpretation to the popular stage performance.

The student-run UMass Theatre Guild will be presenting "Godspell" starting April 10 at the Bowker Auditorium.

The UMass Theatre Guild became officially student run and supported in 1975. The group still continues to be student run and is open to any students of the Five College area.

"Godspell" will be performed in Bowker Auditorium Thursday April 10 through Saturday April 12. Showing times are 8 p.m. both Thursday and Friday nights. There are two showings on Saturday, at 2 p.m. and 8 p.m. Tickets are six dollars for students and ten dollars for the public.

Kaitlin Morris can be reached at kamorris@student.umass.edu.

'Holy One' profiled

By Carlin Romano
The Philadelphia Inquirer

As the Chinese government cracked down on Tibetan protesters last week, the Dalai Lama surprised some journalists who don't usually cover him or Tibetan-Chinese issues.

Speaking to reporters in the Indian hill town of Dharamsala, for almost 50 years the home of the Tibetan government-in-exile, the 72-year-old spiritual and secular leader of his people expressed concern for Chinese injured by his followers in Tibet, even threatening to resign from his secular duties if violence against Chinese persisted.

This is coming from a Tibetan leader who fled the Chinese in 1959 as a "boy king" of 24, whose homeland, after Mao Tse-tung's Chinese forces attacked in 1949, suffered what the International Commission of Jurists judged to be genocide. (Pico Iyer writes: "One in every five Tibetans – more than a million in all – died of starvation or in direct encounters with the Chinese, according to Tibetan estimates.")

It's coming from a man the Chinese government calls "a wolf in monk's clothing."

It doesn't happen much around the world: "dissident" leaders expressing sympathy for their enemies and oppressors. Hamas honchos don't weep for slaughtered yeshiva boys. Members of Colombia's FARC don't bat an eye as their hostages wither and die. Supposedly devout Muslims in Iraq kill fellow Muslims without a second thought.

But the Dalai Lama, like the great men to whom he's most rightly compared — Mohandas Gandhi, Nelson Mandela, Vaclav Havel, the Rev. Dr. Martin Luther King Jr. — lives by his own rules of compassion and consistency. He is a Nobel Peace Prize recipient who embodies the spirit of that sometimes oddly-bestowed honor. Unique in his office as both the spiritual leader of Tibetan Buddhism and head of state of a land that China says it runs as an autonomous province, he remains a blend of Caesar and Christ, ruler and philosopher, canny scientist and devout monk.

"The Open Road," Pico Iyer's beautifully written, up-close meditation about him – a superb portrait of a celebrated figure whom the master journalist and his family have known personally for 30 years – arrives at a perfect time. As the International Campaign for Tibet tries to get news out about what's happening in Tibet despite severe Chinese censorship – some unofficial reports speak of Lhasa in flames, with far more killing than official Chinese media acknowledge — "The Open Road" provides context for the tragic events of this month and illuminates how a singular personality born to a highly ritualized leadership role has evolved over time.

Iyer's Indian father, an Oxford-educated political philosopher who met the Dalai Lama shortly after the latter's exile to India, used to tell his young son the story of the Lama's dangerous escape from his palace in Lhasa. Iyer as a boy received an inscribed photo from the Dalai Lama of himself on the Lion Throne of Lhasa, which Iyer long treasured until it was destroyed in a fire.

That initial contact led to Iyer's many meetings with the Dalai Lama over the years, as he became an accomplished journalist for Time and a much-praised author. From the first chapter of "The Open Road," when Iyer greets the Dalai Lama on a visit by the latter to Japan (where Iyer lives), the author's smooth conversational prose, a mix of sharp tactile detail and confident insight, convinces us that we're in the hands of a writer who completely understands his subject.

And what a subject: a supposed godlike figure who repeatedly tells one and all that he is not a "Living Buddha," but just a "simple Buddhist monk." A charming "hyperrealist" head of a religion who describes himself as an "experimenter" who rejects any religious belief, Tibetan or otherwise, that does not square with modern science. A turn-the-other-cheek ethicist who speaks of Tibetans' "Chinese brothers and sisters," even as they massacre his people. A dynamo, Iyer notes, always switching "from monk to head of state to philosopher-scientist to regular man."

"Over and over," Iyer writes,

See OPEN ROAD on page 6

In "The Open Road," a new book by Pico Iyer, the author provides a portrait of the much celebrated Dalai Lama.

Dawson rides 'Juno' acclaim

By Kevin Asborn
Newsweek

Kimya Dawson is talking, but you know her eyes are surveying the road ahead.

"We're on a mission to find a playground," the star of the chart-topping "Juno" soundtrack says last week as her husband and opening act, Angelo Spencer, steers the couple's minivan. The littlest one in the entourage, baby Panda Delilah, all of 20 months, is quiet in the background.

"I got a good one," the proud momma says of her girl as the family heads toward Fort Myers, Fla. It's because of another baby – albeit a fictional one – that Dawson's career has seen something of a rebirth, too.

Half of the Manhattan anti-folk duo the Moldy Peaches, she became almost as much of a household name as Oscar-winning "Juno" screenwriter Diablo Cody. "I didn't think it wouldn't happen," says the 35-year-old singer-songwriter with a knack for ragamuffin spoken-sung melodies. "I just didn't expect the movie to be as big as it was."

Dawson has the film's star, Ellen Page, to thank for turning "Juno" director Jason Reitman onto the Moldy Peaches, a duo specializing in off-key, childlike ditties, strummed on beginner's guitar and recorded lo-fi. The band, which is on hiatus, is Page's muse, apparently. Reitman especially liked "Anyone Else But You," which is featured a second time in the film with Page and Michael Cera's "BFF" characters singing to each other. "This song ... defined the sound of the film: a patchwork of homemade sounds made by teenagers whose ... honesty rang through the crappy tape recorder used to capture their chicken-scratch lyrics," the director writes in the soundtrack's liner notes.

Dawson, who now lives in Olympia, Wash., still employs those "chicken-scratch" stream-of-consciousness words, it's just that more people are hearing them now. The soundtrack, on Rhino, bounded up the charts to No. 1 on the Billboard Top 200 in January.

"The shows are a little bigger and we have more opportunities to play other countries ... we're going to Australia and New Zealand in June," she says. "Oh, and I've been able to afford health insurance for the first time in 15 years."

In August, she plans on releasing "Alphabutt" (K Records), a children's album that utilizes kids from toddler to teen singing and playing instruments with her. "It's a little more free and fun," Dawson says.

More fun? That's hard to believe, especially if you remember the eponymous Moldy Peaches album from 2001 (sample song, "Who's Got the Crack," sample lyric: "I like it when my hair is poofy. I like it when you slip me a roofie").

She reunited with the other Peach, Adam Green, for a performance on ABC's "The View" in January. But a full-scale reunion won't happen "anytime soon," Dawson says.

She says the same thing about having another baby. "Not anytime soon." Because she's got a good one right now.

Kimya Dawson was prominantly featured on the soundtrack for "Juno."

Michael Cera and Ellen Page helped popularize the Moldy Peaches' "Anyone Else But You," performing the song in the motion picture "Juno."

Vampire Weekend try to graduate to real-world success

Fresh out of the Ivy League, band aims to realize dreams

By Chris Riemenschneider
Star Tribune (Minneapolis)

This time last year, the fellas in Vampire Weekend had already started to feel the buzz. They were being touted by influential music Web sites and courted by record companies. Success was just one Louis Vuitton or Benetton lyrical reference away.

Only one thing stood in their way: Bassist Chris Baio still had to graduate from Columbia University, where the band had formed only a year earlier.

"We were meeting with labels while I was still a senior and still writing papers and all that," Baio recalled, calling from a tour van last week as the band traveled from San Francisco to Portland, Ore. "On some level, it was harder to concentrate, but I liked the things I was studying in college so it wasn't too hard."

"And who knows," he added, "maybe eventually when the band goes to Russia, I can use my degree in Russian regional studies."

Such has been the whirlwind for Vampire Weekend: Last March they were Ivy League college boys with a little band on the side; this March they appeared on "Saturday Night Live" and the cover of Spin magazine as "the best new band of the year – already?!"

The New York-based, Afropop-inspired indie rockers are still on the upside of a wave of hype that started with raves from music bloggers and Brooklyn hipsters.

Vampire Weekend's rapid ascent is a true sign of the times. Music's online revolution makes it possible for an instantaneous international buzz, even before there's a record out. VW's self-titled CD just came out a month ago on XL Recordings.

"We managed to make a lot of headway without a label," Baio marveled. "We did everything ourselves for a very long time. We didn't even have a manager until, like, December of last year."

Quick breakouts such as VW's, however, often lead to even hastier waves of skepticism and backlash. Bands such as Clap Your Hands Say Yeah and Minneapolis' Tapes 'N' Tapes earned similar, blogger-buoyed excitement only to produce ho-hum record sales in the end.

Predictably, the Vampire boys are trying to brush off any negative reaction to their fast rise.

"There gets to be this sort of meta-analysis where, as soon as a band gets popular, the idea of a backlash is the first thing that comes up," Baio said. "As far as an actual form of it, we haven't seen anything other than people writing nasty, anonymous things online, but they've been doing that since last April.

"In a way, you can even consider it a privilege to have people out there hating on you. It means your music's getting out there."

The music in this case actually is getting out beyond the blogosphere. Radio stations are spinning the infectiously bouncy single "A-Punk" as well as "Cape Cod Kwassa Kwassa," the song with the fashion-designer references and a line about copulating to Peter Gabriel. The album, meanwhile, has already sold more than 100,000 copies since its release (impressive nowadays), and it's consistently among the hot sellers on iTunes.

Both "A-Punk" and "Cape Cod Kwassa Kwassa" demonstrate the band's unique mix of typical dorm-room, book-wormy rock – the Smiths are an obvious influence – with something atypical: African music. The band half-jokingly describes its sound as "Upper West Side Soweto," referencing both their Manhattan roots and a South African musical hotbed.

Baio credited singer-guitarist Ezra Koening and keyboardist Rostam Batmanglij (both music majors at Columbia) for bringing the African sounds into the band – particularly soukous music, one of the styles made famous in the West via Paul Simon's "Graceland" album.

"When we formed the band, Ezra was listening to a compilation of Madagascar guitar pop music called 'Madagascar Guitar Vol. 2,' " he said. "At the same time, Rostam was listening to (South African singer) Brenda Fassie a lot. As far as our sound goes, it started with Ezra's guitar playing, and particularly the inspiration came from the guitar tone. We would feed off that."

Of course, referencing African music while wearing V-neck sweaters and singing about dorm-room parties and vacationing on Cape Cod has spawned its own bit of skepticism over the group. Baio laughed off that criticism, too.

"I'll be honest: Three-quarters of the band has never actually been to Cape Cod, just Ezra," he said. "We are who we are. If you look at a lot of rock bands that people enjoy, plenty of them are people with college degrees. I don't think there's any correlation between what kind of education you got and whether or not you're a good musician."

Baio was up front that the band still has plenty to learn, too. When he heard that his interviewer saw the band perform at Spin magazine's party during the South by Southwest Music Conference two weeks ago (hmmm, first they're on the cover, then they're booked at the party), he quickly conceded it was a lackluster performance.

"We did a sound check in the morning, and then right before we went on stage, every single setting got erased," from the soundboard, he explained.

Inexperience was also a reason Vampire Weekend decided to stick with smaller, quickly-sold-out venues on its current tour – but it wasn't the main reason.

"We'll definitely be back playing bigger venues before the next record's out," Baio promised, "but playing smaller venues makes sense now. It says something when you go into a town and play a smaller place first. It makes it seem like you earned it more when you take a step up."

Oh, so now the band decides to take it a little slow.

COURTESY XL RECORDINGS

Indie rockers Vampire Weekend have enjoyed a recent surge of critical success following the release of their self-titled album. The band formed during their years studying at Columbia University.

A unique approach to greater nasal health

New teapot-like vessel is designed to cleanse the senses

By Sylvia E. King-Cohen
Newsday

Water in your nose? On purpose?

Enter the neti pot, a teapot-like vessel that's designed to help you pour a saline solution in your nose. Intentionally. And chances are good you've seen it touted on television or stocked on the shelves of drug or health food stores.

Strange as it sounds, nasal irrigation – literally rinsing microscopic debris out of your nose – is something doctors actually recommend. In fact, Oprah Winfrey's favorite medicine man, Dr. Mehmet Oz, coordinated an on-air demonstration of the technique last fall, saying it's one of the best things you can do for your body.

"Think of it basically as a bath for your nose," says Dr. Karen Haunss, an ear, nose and throat specialist in Great Neck who's been advocating nasal irrigation for years to allergy sufferers and patients with post-nasal drip or on the mend from surgery. "You're washing out all the allergens. It helps fight chronic sinusitis as you wash out bacteria, viruses."

"The sinus area is one of the most difficult to wash out," Oz explains further. "Nasal irrigation takes away some of the burden of pollen, allergens and other things that make you uncomfortable, so your body can focus."

But it's not for the squeamish.

Tilting forward over a sink, a neti pot user pours the liquid into one nostril and it circulates through the nasal passages and – ick – comes out the other nostril.

"I really spent a lot of time before the show deciding whether to do the segment," says Oz, regarding how people might react to the idea of pouring water in their nose. "I knew what the response to the show would be. But, after I spoke to some [ear, nose and throat doctors], I decided to go ahead and do it. After the show, it was the single most e-mailed question of the season."

Truth be told, says Haunss, you don't necessarily need a neti pot to irrigate your nose. Similar cleansing can be achieved using regular nasal syringes and squeeze bottles filled with saline. Several models – ceramic, plastic, metal – are available, retailing for $15-$20, with a box of 100 saline packets $6-$8.

But is it safe?

"There is no downside," says Haunss. "It is sort of like going into the ocean and getting some water up your nose."

COURTESY AMAZING BREATH

While the idea of pouring saline solution intentionally up the nasal cavity sounds peculiar, this new hygiene product claims to provide health benefits.

Dalai Lama's story

OPEN ROAD from page 5

"he counsels a practical realism and a refusal to get caught up in the lures and distraction of mindless optimism, least of all the kind that comes from indiscriminate faith."

Whether it's the Dalai Lama's "warmth and charisma," his child-like laugh, his love of animals, his news-junkie intake of journalism, his awakening at 3:30 a.m. every day for four hours of meditation or his burly body language (former New York Times editor Abe Rosenthal once compared him to "a middle linebacker"), Iyer concretely conveys his truths, making it seem as if he, the reader and the Dalai Lama are all sitting in the same room.

Iyer also explains much that may puzzle readers. For example, the Dalai Lama's own school of Tibetan Buddhism cherishes philosophical debate, making his skeptical air strange only to those who ignorantly identify any kind of Buddhism with mysticism. Iyer wonderfully describes the strange place that Dharamsala, or "Little Lhasa," has become – a kind of global village full of "Swedish girls arm in arm with ponytailed boys from Eastern Tibet." From it, the Dalai Lama and his circle hold together about 50 Tibetan-exile communities, torn between the tolerance their leader urges and fury at China's increasing erasure of Tibetan culture in its homeland.

Iyer's book might have ended on a depressed, elegiac note. After all, he writes, Tibet's fate in the face of Chinese expansionism represents, for the Dalai Lama, "the most agonizing and mounting of all the conundrums he travels with ... the country that he was born to rule is slipping ever closer to extinction ... one of the great centers of Buddhism, five times as large as Britain, has been all but wiped off the map."

Still, Iyer closes by explaining how he's learned from the Dalai Lama the importance of trying to do one small, worthy thing at a time, of emulating the "constant effort, tireless effort" of the Buddha, even if one is not a Buddhist.

The word "Lama," Iyer's famous friend once told him – exasperated at the way he's referred to in headlines as "Tibet's Living Buddha," or a "God in Exile," rather than an ordinary man with a very distinctive 400-year-old job – simply means, in Tibetan, "someone worthy of respect."

No one who reads "The Open Road" will question that.

Important Announcement
Registration for Spring 2008

The Writing Program Placement Test

will be offered on:

Wednesday, April 9th at 7 p.m. in Bartlett

You must take this exam to qualify for enrollment in EnglWrit112 (College Writing)

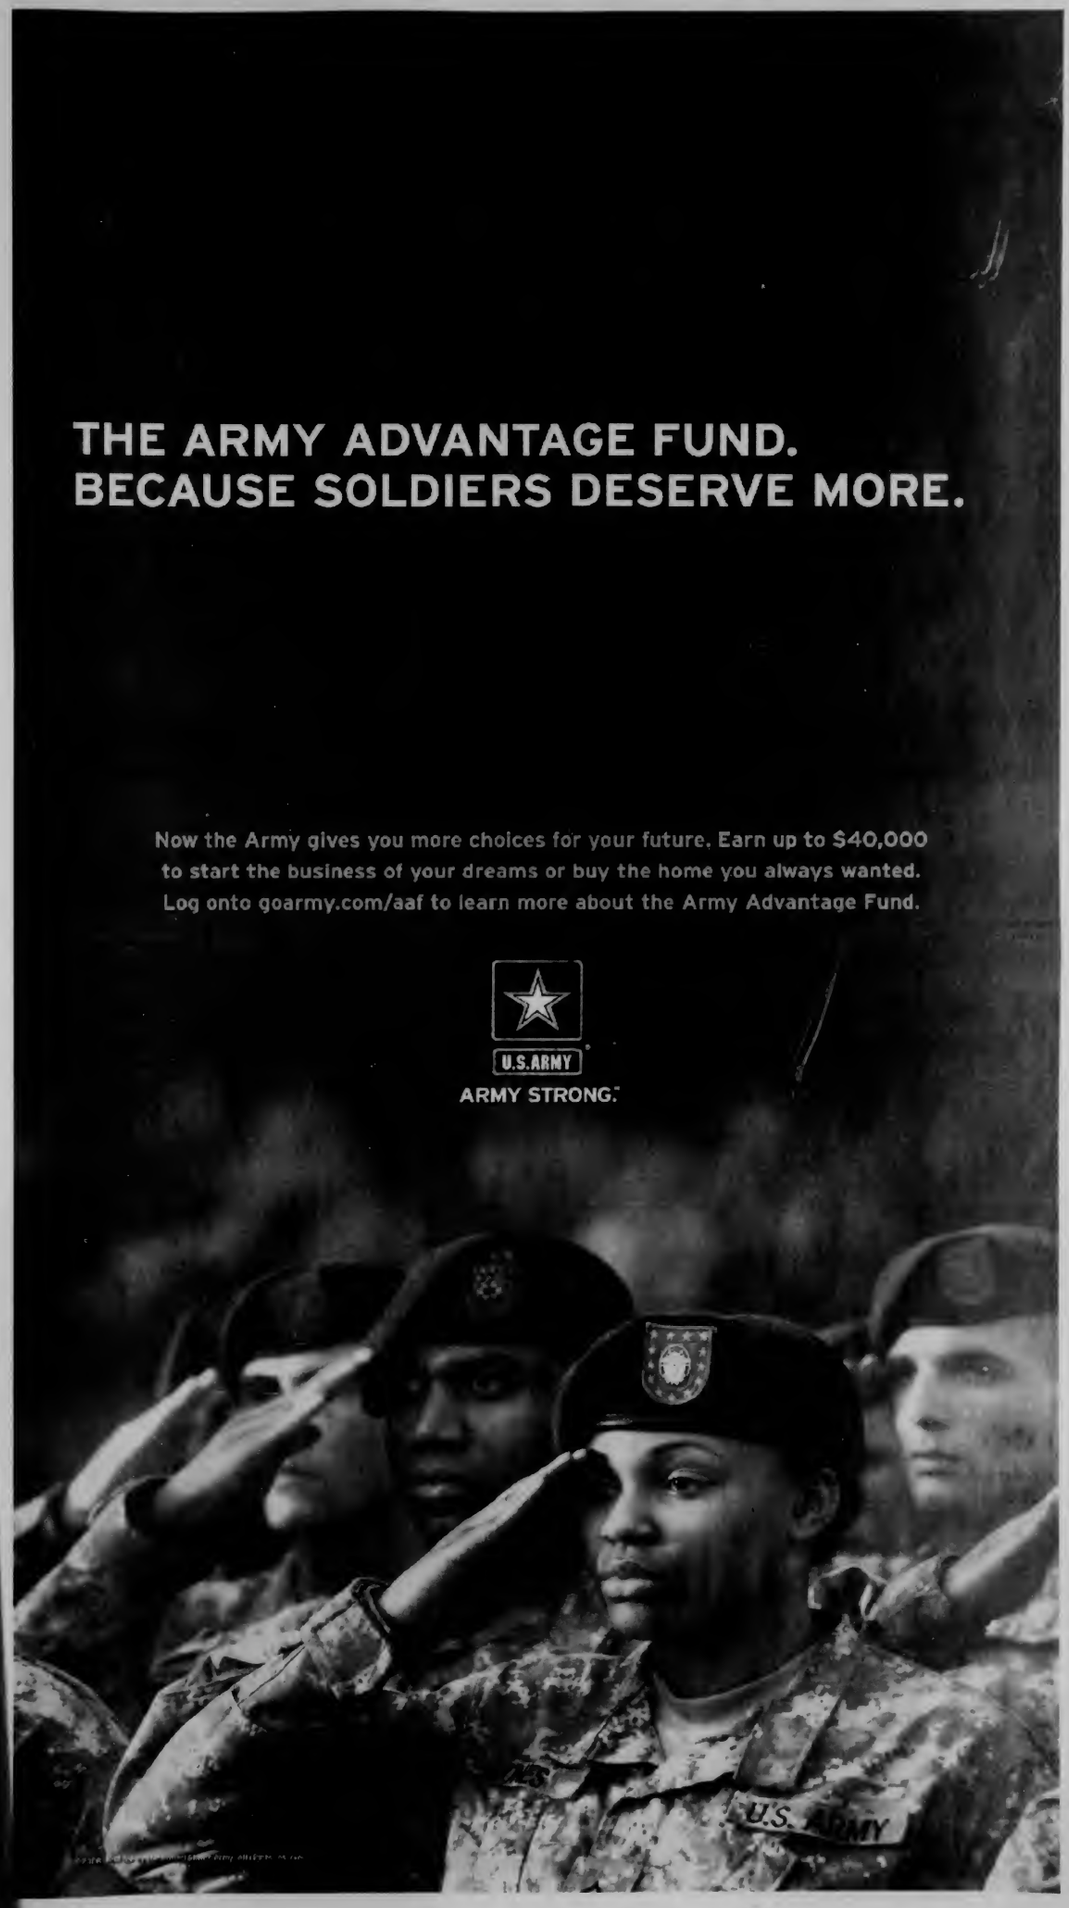
This test may be taken only once.

Students do not need to register for the test.

STUDENT DISCOUNT!

CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE
Town of Amherst
A Course for Everyone
cherryhillgolf.org 413-256-4071
Best 9 Hole Course In Western Mass
Just Minutes from UMASS on Rt. 63
CHERRY HILL GOLF COURSE Town of Amherst
Walk on anytime!
No Tee Times Necessary!

Take Out a classifieds ad
THE DAILY COLLEGIAN
now offers free online classifieds for students at
WWW.UMASSLIST.COM
- More complete, local and relevant category listings than any and all competitor web sites combined
- Users can setup daily e-mail updates for relevant listings. No more searching for apartments, now they come to you.
- Post unlimited online listings
- Little to no spam



By listing on this site you are supporting your local college newspaper, The Massachusetts Daily Collegian

Check Out
The Massachusetts Daily Collegian Website
You can find blogs, podcasts & multimedia features
www.dailycollegian.com

THE ARMY ADVANTAGE FUND.
BECAUSE SOLDIERS DESERVE MORE.

Now the Army gives you more choices for your future. Earn up to $40,000 to start the business of your dreams or buy the home you always wanted. Log onto goarmy.com/aaf to learn more about the Army Advantage Fund.

U.S.ARMY
ARMY STRONG.

UMass falls to UConn again

BASEBALL from page 10

Accomando to end the threat.

"We started to bare down a little bit and make some adjustments at the plate," Stone said. "We finished with eight hits, and I guess that's all right considering how we started.

"But you can't give up 19 hits and expect to win. It's just not going to happen."

Charlie Benson, Garrett Butt and Zach Telgheder struggled out of the bullpen for UMass, allowing nine hits and two walks in 4 2/3 innings. Stone was disappointed with their results, but he expects his bullpen to improve as the season progresses.

"They have to come in and be sharp; I know it's tough to do," he said. "Those are three young guys who came in – all freshmen – but I think eventually they're going to be good pitchers for us."

UMass fell behind quickly in the afternoon game with UConn, as Freni allowed consecutive doubles to start the game. He got out of the inning without further damage, but the Huskies scored three times in the second inning to extend the lead to 4-0. They added three runs in the fifth and two more an inning later.

UMass takes the field again today against Harvard in Lynn, for the first round of the Beanpot Tournament.

GAME NOTES

UMass balked in two runs in the game. Benson committed the first one in the sixth inning and Butt had one in the eighth. ... Both teams made two errors. UMass catcher Bryan Garrity made a throwing error in the second inning on a double-steal attempt, allowing UConn to score a run. The other error was made by right fielder Mike Donato in the fifth, who had a line drive hit off his glove.

Eli Rosenswaike can be reached at erosensw@dailycollegian.com.

Freni crucial to young staff

FRENI from page 10

it hurt, but I mean, I just didn't pitch well today," Freni said after yesterday's game. "I'm not going to make excuses for it."

UMass coach Mike Stone also believes that the premature exit against Xavier may have had an effect on Freni's most recent start.

"He pitched in the Xavier series, got knocked, well, he got thrown out of the game and had to sit for four games and he wasn't sharp," Stone said. "That was obvious today that he was affected by the layoff, I think. He's a better pitcher than that."

Although he didn't pitch well, Freni wasn't helped by his teammates playing defense behind him either.

In addition to Donato's error, Bryan Garrity misfired on an attempt to throw a runner out at second base that led to two unearned runs in the second inning.

Being the only returning starter with double-digit starts from last season, Stone hoped that Freni would come in and help lead a young staff with a lot of inexperience, but thus far the rest of the staff has fared better.

"[My expectations are to] help the ball club," Freni said. "Whatever I can do to just make a big impact, and right now I'm not doing that. I feel like I should be pitching better than I am but I just got to do something – I've got to fix something."

One area in which Freni's struggled this season is with his command. He's walked 13 batters in 17 innings.

Freni also struggled in that area last year (27 walks in 51 innings), but not to the same degree as this year.

Walks are always problematic in baseball, but Freni has also had problems with allowing runners to reach base, even when walks are not part of the equation.

Opponents have 28 hits against the Malden, Mass., native this season, including 10 for extra bases.

While the Minutemen certainly have more depth in the starting rotation than last season, Freni will be a key part of the rotation, especially in three-game series against conference opponents where many pitchers need to be available.

What Freni does between now and the end of the year may help determine whether UMass is fighting for a spot in the conference tournament or sitting at the bottom of the Atlantic 10 standings.

Mike Connors can be reached at mjconnor@student.umass.edu.

UMass pitcher Jared Freni pitched 4 1/3 innings and allowed seven runs in the Minutemen's 13-7 seven loss to UConn yesterday.

Pozar and Co. return home vs. Bobcats

BY SCOTT FELDMAN
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts tennis team returns home to Amherst for its final home match of the season, taking on Quinnipiac this afternoon.

The Minutewomen (9-9, 3-0 Atlantic 10) are coming off an extremely impressive weekend, going 2-0 against A-10 foes. The team defeated George Washington, 6-1, and Temple, 4-3, assuring that the team will earn a high seeding in the upcoming A-10 Tournament.

UMass coach Judy Dixon was especially thrilled with the victory over Temple, which was rated as one of the top teams in the conference.

"We thought that they would be the No. 1 seed in the tournament, but not anymore," Dixon said.

It was a hard fought match that came down to the wire. Holding a slim 3-2 lead heading into the fifth singles match, No. 5 player Maude Lecluyse clinched the UMass victory with a 6-3, 7-5 win over Temple's Felicia Frazier.

"Maude had the match resting on her shoulders and she came through for us. I was really proud of her performance and the entire team's performance," Dixon said.

With the A-10 Tournament less than two weeks away and a huge conference matchup against Rhode Island this Saturday, UMass must make sure that they do not get caught looking past Quinnipiac (4-7). However, Dixon does not believe she has anything to worry about.

"I'm not really worried about the team overlooking Quinnipiac, the team has shown great maturity recently, and is experienced enough to know that they have to respect the opposition," Dixon said.

The Bobcats are coming off two back-to-back shutout losses to Brown and Binghamton, but the Minutewomen should not look at that as a sign that Quinnipiac will be a pushover.

The Minutewomen lost 6-1 to Brown when they faced them on March 17, so that loss tells little about the team's relative strength.

As for the shutout to Binghamton, the Bobcats' top two players, Jackie Herb and Mary Wilson, were sidelined with an illness during that meet. Their status for today is uncertain, but if those two are able to play at full strength, the Minutewomen will have a much tougher task ahead of them.

Today is Senior Day for the Maroon and White and the team will be looking to make sure seniors Masha Pozar and Kristin DiPiero can celebrate their final home meet with a win.

Still, the Minutewomen are a team built on youth, and the two players with the best singles records, Laura Danai and Candynce Boney, are both freshmen. It will be up to them to secure a victory for UMass.

Freshman No. 2 player Candynce Boney had some shaky starts earlier this season, but she got back on track last week, going 4-0 in her doubles and singles matches. The performance earned Boney A-10 Player of the Week for the second time this season.

No. 6 Danai had her seven-game singles winning streak snapped against Temple. However, Dixon doubts the loss will weigh on her mind very much, claiming Danai does not even bother to keep track of her record and was unaware she even had a streak.

If Pozar takes care of the top spot and the team's talented freshmen continue to play well, the Maroon and White should be able to walk off their home court with a win.

Scott Feldman can be reached at sfeldman@student.umass.edu.

Brown announces captains for 2008

The Massachusetts football team yesterday announced its four captains for the 2008 season.

Senior quarterback Liam Coen, senior offensive lineman Sean Calicchio, senior defensive back Sean Smalls and junior defensive tackle Brandon Collier were named the team's captains.

Coen, the team's offensive leader for the past three seasons, was no surprise. It will be his first year as a captain, and UMass coach Don Brown has repeatedly expressed his trust in the school's all-time leading passer.

In 2007, Coen became UMass's all-time leader in passing yards (8,282), passing efficiency (152.43), completion percentage (64.5) and touchdowns (66), while throwing for 3,091 yards and 30 touchdowns and leading his team to the NCAA Quarterfinals.

He was a 2007 Walter Payton Award candidate and was named to the Colonial Athletic Association's All-Conference second team.

Calicchio was also an All-Conference second-team selection as an offensive lineman as part of a group that helped running back Matt Lawrence to 1,680 yards rushing and averaged 4.2 yards rushing as a team.

Smalls was the Minutemen's top cornerback in 2007, though he intercepted just one pass, which resulted in a 90-yard touchdown that sealed the win over Towson. He led the team with 12 passes defended.

Smalls forced a lot of quarterbacks to look to the other side of the field, leading to eight picks by the three other starting defensive backs, Courtney Robinson, Michael Meggett and Jeromy Miles. He was also a CAA First-Team cornerback and a New England Football Writers All-Star.

Collier was a force inside for the Minutemen last season as a third-team All-Conference selection. His 62 total tackles ranked second only to David Burris for defensive linemen, and his 4.5 sacks were impressive from an inside position. Collier is the only junior of the four new captains.

—Jeremy Rice

Bench shaping up for UM

LACROSSE from page 10

four draws and adding an assist to her credit.

As Typadis' goal-scoring ability has been more prevalent in games, so, too, has her ability to do other things in the field. Since her season-high four-goal effort at Boston College, (3-7, 2-1 ACC) Typadis has picked up a groundball in every game.

FINDING THE RIGHT FIT

Junior midfielder Meghan Reddy, freshman midfielder Haley Smith and sophomore attack Stephanie Hopkins are Venechanos' key players off the bench right now. All three players are currently seeing significant time since Venechanos established a suitable rotation six games ago.

"I think each of them brings something to our team at certain points of the game," Venechanos said. "It just depends on how the game goes and what we think our team needs. All of them are ready to go and when given the opportunity they help us out."

Reddy handles the draw controls and is a prominent substitute for many of the attacks.

Smith is a good body in the midfield to cause turnovers and disrupt the offensive flow of opposing teams. In the Minutewomen's game against the Colonials, Smith caused two turnovers and picked up a ground ball. Her 14 fouls show that she is not afraid to be physical on the offensive or defensive side of the ball, something that Venechanos values in her system.

Smith's best game came against BC, when she scored a goal and assisted on another. Her goal came off a free-position shot – something that she excels in – going 2-for-5 on the season on free shots.

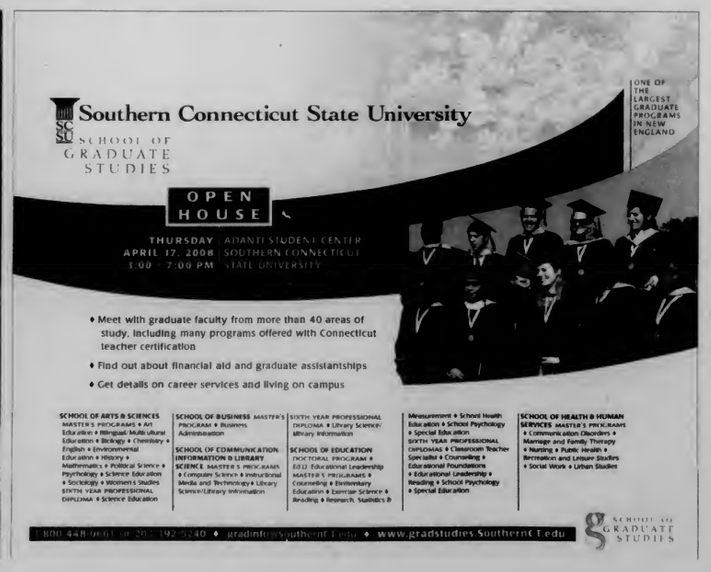
Hopkins is another major scoring threat for UMass. Her seven goals rank fourth on the team this season. In the last six games, she has amassed four goals and four ground balls.

Hopkins is another player who isn't afraid to sacrifice the body in an effort to score. All of her 12 fouls – including two yellow cards – came in the last six games.

REDDY TO PLAY

Reddy is on a three-game scoring streak. She is coming off of her best game of the season, against the Owls, (8-3, 5-0 A-10) in which she scored a goal on a free-position shot midway through the second quarter. Reddy also fed Typadis for a goal that gave the Minutewomen the lead going into halftime.

Her ability to spell players and be a consistent force in the draw circle is a valuable trait as the season comes to an end and games become crucial for a berth in the conference tournament.



Reddy's hard work in practices motivated Venechanos to give her more playing time.

"She has great hands," Venechanos said of Reddy's effectiveness in gaining possession in draws. "We have complete confidence in her and so do her teammates; so we're very happy with her stepping up these past few games, it definitely helps our team out."

Reddy fits in well with Venechanos' style of using hybrid midfielders for certain game situations. Venechanos' coaching style revolves around role players and effective passing. Many players are given the chance to score, when in the right situation. With Reddy covering the draw circle, Venechanos has more freedom to use her pure scorers to play on attack.

Mike Gillmeister can be reached at mgillmei@student.umass.edu.

Seven O's

EVERY WEDNESDAY
KARAOKE
* * * * * *
LIVE BANDS

FRIDAY, 4/11/08
THE GLISTENT EFFECT
SATURDAY, 4/12/08
REPROBATE

LOOKING FOR A PLACE TO HAVE A PRIVATE EVENT/PARTY?
CALL 413-530-6996

ROUTE 116, 330 AMHERST RD
SUNDERLAND, MA 01375
(413) 665-6788

3 PM TO 1 AM M-F
1 PM TO 1 AM SAT&SUN
NO AGE TO CURTAIN ARTS

Sudok-Unit

	7		2			3
9				8
	6	3		9		7
	1	6				5
	2		5		9		1
		4				6	7
		5		7		2	4
				5				7
	9				8		5

Find all of today's puzzle solutions online!

ACROSS
1 Composer of "The Planets"
6 Stopwatch
11 Brace amount
14 Keenly perceptive
15 Archaeo Jones
16 Biddy
17 Female fashion feature
19 Soft-finned fish
20 British title
21 Actor Sandler
22 Catch sight of
23 Exhibits scorn
25 Put the __ on (squelch)
28 Sister's daughter
30 Horrify
33 Actor Brynner
36 5 players
37 Hot-fudge creation
38 Bolted down
39 Peculiar
40 OPEC output
41 Individual
42 Dance of 1961
44 Auto racer Petty
45 Military conflict
46 Changes gears
47 Ken and Lena
49 Work-shoe protector
51 Steps
55 Old sailors
57 Fringe benefit
59 Notion
60 Mr. Baba
61 1981 Heisman Trophy winner
64 Sen. Kennedy
65 "Return of the Jedi" critters
66 Ducks' kin
67 Logger's tool
68 Nervous
69 Calculator

DOWN
1 Netherworld
2 "Caribbean Queen" singer
3 Ill-gotten profit
4 Like hot stuff
5 __ Awu-Jaffa
6 Neck and neck
7 Openings into a container
8 "__ Vice"
9 Hen product
10 Snad delicacy
11 Old-radio character
12 Shed tears
13 Nothing but
18 Digital recording
22 Armchair athlete's channel
24 Counterstroke
26 Snake of legend
27 Lush
29 Grand Banks fish
31 Turner of films
32 Lustful look
33 Swerves off course
34 Bryce Canyon state
35 Parlay one's bet
40 Popeye's Olive
43 Saucers without cups?
44 Russian cash
48 Put out to sea
50 Chef's cover
52 Took it easy
53 "Touched by an Angel" star
54 More sensible
55 Bye-bye!
56 Trebek of "Jeopardy"
58 Deception
61 Encountered
62 Wonderment
63 Ankara honorific

WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

QUOTE OF THE DAY

"Someone was talking about vegan sex toys, and, like, really cool stuff that would be a lot of fun."

— Girl in the library

WELCOME TO FALLING ROCK NATIONAL PARK By Kid Shay

BREWSTER ROCKIT: SPACE GUY! By Tim Rickard

LABRAT By Richard Martelly

STUDENT VALLEY PRODUCTIONS' 12th Annual

COMEDY JAM

Two nights of comedy featuring troupes from LA, Boston, Chicago, and Umass' own Sketch 22, IWA, and Mission Improvable!

FRIDAY AND SATURDAY
APRIL 11TH & 12TH
8PM, BARTLETT 65
FREE FREE FREE FREE

Graciously Sponsored by the UMass Arts Council, the UMass Alumni Association, the Student Affairs and Cultural Enrichment Fund, and the Student Government Association

Continuing & Professional Education
UMassAmherst/Outreach

Summer Session 2008

KICK off your Summer right!!!

Catch up- get ahead or explore your curiosity

Session I June 2 July 10
Session II July 14 Aug 20

REGISTER NOW!
UMassULearn.net

HOROSCOPES

aquarius JAN. 20-FEB. 18
Pushing against the weight of the world is a hard battle to win. Instead, mount the great sphere and ride its rotation to victory.

pisces FEB. 19-MAR. 20
Willa Cather may be a respected author, but reading her books is more painful than yanking out a Willa Catheter.

aries MAR. 21-APR. 19
When you walk, your penguin-like gait makes you look a lot like Danny Devito.

taurus APR. 20-MAY 20
Your most recent social encounter will act like floss pulling repressed feelings from the gumline of your psyche.

gemini MAY 21-JUN. 21
Poor as your eyesight may be, when you squint you look like a deranged mongoose. So just take it easy.

cancer JUN. 22-JUL. 22
The Goose is a dangerous bird with a taste for tender human organs. Be wary of its beak.

leo JUL. 23-AUG. 22
You excel in your studies but friendships are your forte. You are the Dean of Undergraduate Buddies.

virgo AUG. 23-SEPT. 22
Perhaps the Spice Girls were right and we truly are living in a Spice World?

libra SEPT. 23-OCT. 22
You are destined for political greatness but concurrently sentenced to follow a feeble moral code.

scorpio OCT. 23-NOV. 21
You will never date the "hot Christian single" with the big bust on the sidebar of your Facebook profile.

sagittarius NOV. 22-DEC. 21
Part the sea of academia and lead your classmates out from under the oppressive rule of your professor. Let the pupils go!

capricorn DEC. 22-JAN. 19
Dancing your cares away will ultimately fail you. That is why the Fraggles all went extinct.

Still accepting applications and sexual favors for my job.

comics@dailycollegian.com

MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN MARKETPLACE

ACTIVITIES

Student Union Art Gallery presents "Line Scape and Sound Fields" by Francesca Caruso, Sophia Flood, Brendan Dean and Kyle Nilan 4/7-4/18. Reception Tu 4/8 5-7pm. Gallery hours: M-Th 10-5 and F 10-3. Free. 545-0792

APT FOR RENT

Hobart Condos 3 Bedroom, hardwood floors, study area in basement. Cable, phone (internet access), in all bedrooms and study. NOW SHOWING for June and September. NO FEES. 253-7879 www.amherstlincolnrealty.com

Townhouse #32 for rent. Lease starting June 1st. Right near bus stop. Partially furnished. New appliances installed. New kitchen, floor to be worked on. 3 bedroom. 1.5 bathroom. $1600 a month.

APTS FOR RENT

contact dexter@student.umass.edu

Brandywine Apts. Now Leasing 1&2 bedroom apts. Leases begin June Aug or Sep. First come, first serve. Get them while they last. www.brandywineapts.com stop by or call 549-0600

Mill Valley Estates APARTMENT FOR RENT 2 bedroom $1175 3 bedroom $1475 4 bedroom $2225 Accepting Applications. 253-7377 millvalleyestates@winnco.com

EMPLOYMENT

Full time summer employment at the Housing Assignment Office, $10/hr. The job description and application are available on the Housing Assignment Website and is due April 14th.

EMPLOYMENT

ACCOUNTANT REPRESENTATIVE, SALES REPRESENTATIVE, STORE KEEPER, CLERK AND SECRETARY NEEDED: Requirement (Computer Literate along with CV) for more info write us at: Gina Shoes Limited email: gina.limited@gmail.com

GREAT SUMMER JOB & EXPERIENCE OF A LIFETIME! Trails End Camp and Chestnut Lake Camp in PA are looking for male and female specialist counselors-baseball, lacrosse, gymnastics, golf, cheerleading, tennis, hockey, outdoor adventure, mountain biking, dance, waterfront and web design. Male bunk counselors also available; June 17th-Aug 17th. APPLY ONLINE AT www.trailsendcampjobs.com. AND BE CONSIDERED FOR A

EMPLOYMENT

POSITION AT EITHER OF OUR 2 PREMIER SUMMER CAMPS!! Call Ryan Peters with questions 1-800-408-1404

University Bartending classes start soon 1-800-U-CAN-MIX www.universitybartending.com Sign up now!!

Bartending $300/Day potential. NO experience necs. Training provided. 1-800-965-6520

Rent us your ears! Listening Experiments $10/hr English must be your first language. Email: phonetics_lab@linguist.umass.edu volcemail: 545-6837

FOR SALE

DRUM SET FOR SALE CHEAP! Pearl Export Select. Call Tim- 617-548-1954.

ROOM FOR RENT

A BETTER LIFESTYLE Private Suite in charming 4 bedroom/3 bathroom house near conservation area in Amherst Friendly, responsible male or female to share w/professional man + 6 yr old daughter + 1 cat. $650/mo including utilities. Reduced rent for part-time nanny. Call Jonathan 413-253-2535 or 413-222-3006

Near Amherst Center $475 Inclusive Reduced Rent for Part Time Nanny. 549-7789 Strong St.

For 9/1/08. Northampton. 2 Bedrooms $825+ 3 Bedrooms $1000+ 4 Bedrooms $1500+ 6 Bedrooms $1500+ 584-4920 or 253-7436

SERVICES

Call someone who really cares. Birthright of Amherst Area 549-1906. 1-800-550-4900. 24 - hour hotline. Free Pregnancy test 233 N Pleasant St Amherst. www.birthright.org.

Concerned About Your Eating?

Do you eat too little? Have food issues? Help is available! Call University Health Services' Eating Disorders Clinic, 577-5101

TAPESTRY HEALTH providing birth control, EC, pregnancy testing, HIV counseling &rapid testing, STD screening & treatment, GYN & breast exams. Always Confidential, Affordable, Safe. 413-548-9992 27 Pray St. Amherst www.tapestryhealth.org

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

SPORTS WEDNESDAY

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 9, 2008 SPORTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

Pitching staff falters in big loss to UConn

Offense provides late charge, but not enough vs. Huskies

BY ELI ROSENSWAIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

This time, Connecticut closer Matt Karl had a bit less pressure.

UConn pounded out 19 hits yesterday at Earl Lorden Field, defeating the Massachusetts baseball team, 13-6, and giving its closer a much easier lead to protect this time around.

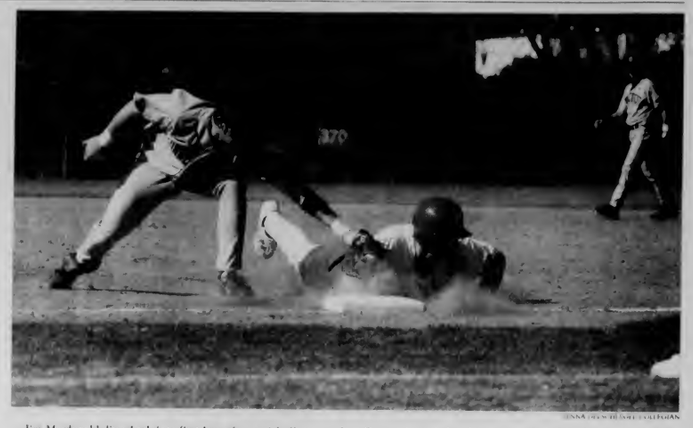
UMass (8-12, 3-6 Atlantic 10) fell behind 9-0 by the sixth inning, as starting pitcher Jared Freni and the offense both struggled. The Minutemen had one hit through five innings against UConn starter Matt McDonald and Freni allowed seven runs (four earned) in 4 1/3 innings of work.

UConn	13
UMass	6

The Minutemen had multiple threats late in the game, but couldn't get the big hit they needed. UConn (16-15, 6-7 Big East) tacked on four runs in the final two innings to once again pull away.

"I was disappointed that we came out and played like we did today; I didn't think we were as focused as we needed to be," UMass coach Mike Stone said. "We weren't sharp. It was just sloppy.

"It's unfortunate because I think if we played a good ballgame we would beat most [teams]."



Karl once again looked sharp against UMass, as the left-hander pitched a perfect ninth inning for the Huskies. Karl saved a 4-2 victory against the Minutemen earlier this season, and also recorded one against them last year in dramatic fashion. He entered that game in the ninth inning as a pinch hitter, launching a three-run home run to take an 8-5 lead. He then came on to pitch and struck out the side for the save.

With a 19-hit attack by the UConn offense, Karl entered the ninth inning yesterday with a seven-run lead and little pressure.

Huskies freshman shortstop Mike Olt led the way, driving in four runs on two hits, including a monstrous three-run home run to left-center field off of Freni in the fifth inning. The home run gave UConn a 7-0 lead, and knocked Freni out of the game.

The UMass offense picked up after Freni left, scoring multiple runs in innings 6-8. But with the bases loaded in the seventh and UMass down by five runs, Jim Macdonald struck out against reliever Dennis

See BASEBALL on page 8

JENNA NEWCOMB/COLLEGIAN

Jim Macdonald dives back into first base after a pickoff attempt by a Connecticut pitcher during yesterday's 13-6 loss to the Huskies. The Minutemen struggled early and, despite a late rally, couldn't overcome the deficit.

Freni could be key to season

Sophomore starter displaying potential, results not following

BY MIKE COSSORS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts baseball team's starting pitching staff has fared well this season. Newcomers Nick Serino and Mitchell Clegg both have earned-run averages of less than 3.00, while Bryan Leigh has struggled at times but has also shown flashes of potential.

Jared Freni has displayed those same flashes, but has lacked similar success.

The sophomore right-hander allowed seven runs (four earned) in yesterday's start against Connecticut, a 13-6 Huskies victory that increased Freni's ERA to 5.82 for the season.

The UConn hitters jumped on Freni's pitches early, leading the game off with consecutive doubles to give the visitors a quick one-run lead.

The top of the second inning began eerily similar to the first, as Mike Nemeth doubled and was driven in two batters later on a sacrifice fly.

Freni rebounded in the third and fourth innings but trouble arose once again in the fifth.

After a single, a strikeout and an error by right fielder Mike Donato, UConn's Mike Olt hit a three-run home run, and in effect, ended Freni's night after 4 1/3 innings.

In his start prior to UConn, against Xavier, Freni was pitching well – he had allowed one run through 3 1/3 innings – but was ejected from the game after hitting Xavier's Jordan Conley, something the umpire viewed as intentional, following a minor incident on the basepaths the previous inning.

"Not pitching in over a week,

See FRENI on page 8

Senior second baseman Stacy Cullington and the Minutewomen take on Boston College this afternoon at the UMass Softball Complex.

Minutewomen host Eagles

BC in Amherst for the first of two this season with Eagles

BY JEREMY RICE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The Massachusetts softball team takes a brief break from Atlantic 10 action today when it takes on Boston College in the first game of a home-and-home series. Game time is set for 4 p.m. at the UMass Softball Complex.

UMass will be in Chestnut Hill on April 30 for the conclusion of the two-game season series.

The Minutewomen (20-11) are currently on a 10-game win streak and have captured 14 of their last 16, though most of that success has come against A-10 opponents.

The Eagles (20-20) do not pose the greatest threat UMass has seen this season (a schedule that includes a 4-2 loss to No. 1 UCLA), but BC plays in the tough Atlantic Coast Conference, which houses No. 17 North Carolina and No. 20 Virginia Tech, and was swept this past weekend in three games by UNC.

Last season, UMass swept the series with BC, winning 7-1 in Chestnut Hill on April 11, then winning a tight 1-0 decision at home on May 1.

Second baseman Renee Ramos is easily the Eagles' best player, currently batting .360 (no one else has a batting average above .250). She also leads the team with 25 RBIs and five home runs. Though her slugging percentage is also tops at .523, she has hit no triples and three doubles, so most of that figure comes from the homers.

In the circle, BC's two pitchers – Taylor Peyton and Allison Gage – have similar ERAs (Peyton's 2.68 and Gage's 2.75), but that's about where the similarities end. Gage has more starts (20 to Peyton's 16), but a worse win-loss record (9-12 compared to Peyton's 11-7). Peyton also has more than double the strikeouts this season (75-34).

For the Minutewomen, having a second pitcher available has become a luxury, as Brandice Balschmiter (13-6) continues to get better each week. Her perfect game against George Washington improved her ERA to 0.76, the best of her career. She is averaging seven strikeouts per appearance, which includes five relief stints.

Sophomore Bailey Sanders has struggled at times but is finding her rhythm, evident in the one-run, two-hit performance with which she followed up Balschmiter's perfect game. She has pulled her ERA under 2.00, at 1.98, and opponents are batting .183 against her.

Offensively, the batting averages have already begun their annual climb upward now that A-10 play has commenced.

Catcher Jessica Serio is still the only player above .300, batting .357 with 10 RBIs, but 2006 A-10 Player and Rookie of the Year Whitney Mollica appears to be finding her freshman form at the plate. Her average has climbed to .295, second only to Serio, and her 14 RBIs rank her third for UMass.

One surprise so far has been the play of freshman Lindsay Maroney. A vastly different player from last season's designated hitter, Amanda Acampora, Maroney has filled the same role well thus far this season. She is currently third on the team with a .293 batting average hitting mostly from the eighth spot in the lineup.

This weekend the Minutewomen dive right back into conference action with four games in three days. On Friday and Saturday, they host Saint Joseph's for a two-game set. Then Temple follows right behind as they play a doubleheader at the Complex on Sunday.

Jeremy Rice can be reached at jeremyr@student.umass.edu.

Typadis hot after slow start

Senior star providing scoring, leadership in 2008 campaign

BY MIKE GILLMEISTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Senior attack Kathleen Typadis of the Massachusetts women's lacrosse team is an invaluable leader on the team. Her scoring ability is lethal and her intangibles are unparalleled. On Sunday against Temple, she achieved two draw controls, giving her 104 for her career, which is an all-time UMass record.

The four-year starter has at least one draw control in each of her last six games, giving her 17 on the season.

Typadis is one of the most decorated players in school history. Not only does she have the draws record for the Minutewomen (3-9, 1-2 A-10), but she also has the school records for career free-position goals (39), career shots on goal (253) and shots attempted (337).

Even with such gaudy statistics, UMass coach Alexis Venechanos sees that Typadis is a team-player.

"Kathleen is a very unselfish player," Venechanos said. "[Getting draws is] a huge priority for us and having her give that extra dimension makes her that much more valuable to our team."

Typadis has been on a tear of late, scoring three goals in each of her last three games. She had a season-high four draw controls March 30 at George Washington (3-9, 1-3 A-10) and hasn't received any penalty cards all season.

It's hard to believe that one goal in each of her first four games was a slow start for Typadis, but she has scored 14 goals in her last five games, four of which have been multi-goal efforts. Her .667 shots-on-goal percentage demonstrates her ability to go 1-on-1 with opposing goalkeepers.

Even when opposing teams held Typadis scoreless over a three-game period, Typadis contributed in other ways, controlling

See LACROSSE on page 8

After a slow start to the season, senior attack Kathleen Typadis has scored 14 goals in her last five games.

Ford: I'm not going to LSU

Massachusetts men's basketball coach Travis Ford announced yesterday evening that he does not wish to be considered for the head coaching position at Louisiana State University.

"There has been a lot [of] misinformation circulating about me and the job at LSU," Ford said in a prepared statement Tuesday night. "I feel that it is necessary to state that I do not want to be considered for the job."

The prepared statement effectively ends speculation that Ford will not be the coach of the Minutemen next season, as no other school of LSU's caliber is aggressively pursuing Ford.

Before the Minutemen completed their season, there was rampant speculation that LSU would hire Ford to replace John Brady, who was fired in February. Multiple sources, including ESPN's Pat Forde, estimated the possibility of LSU hiring Ford to be around 90 percent.

LSU completed the first step in its coaching search when it hired an athletic director last week. Former chancellor John Lombardi became president of the LSU system last summer. Many believed that his presence would be a substantial influence in drawing Ford to the Bayou.

UMass completed its season last Thursday with a loss to Ohio State in the finals of the National Invitation Tournament at Madison Square Garden. The Minutemen finished with a 25-11 record and will lose three senior starters to graduation. The 2008-09 season will mark Ford's fourth year at the University, after spending five seasons at Eastern Kentucky.

-Michael King

INSIDE TODAY: JUST IN TIME, THE MINUTE

THE MASSACHUSETTS
DAILY COLLEGIAN

NEW ENGLAND'S LARGEST COLLEGE DAILY EST. 1890

PARTLY CLOUDY : HI: 69 LO: 38 WWW.DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2008

Chinese students rally against Tibet violence

BRIAN TSUCHIDA/COLLEGIAN

Yu Xi Chen holds a poster with images of the violence in Tibet during yesterday's rally.

BY DERRICK PERKINS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Members of the campus Chinese community rallied against the recent violence in Tibet and in support of Beijing on the steps of the Student Union yesterday.

"We're in support of peaceful coexistence and against the violence and media distortion in Tibet," said Gorge Liu, a graduate student at the University of Massachusetts. "It is reported as if the Chinese police are creating the violence, when in fact it is the civilians."

Waving the Chinese flag and chanting, "One China," and "Go Beijing," the participants handed out leaflets with what they described as educational material on Tibet to passing students.

"We wanted to let you hear our voice," said Shuang Wu, a graduate student in the biology department. "You choose to listen to only one side."

"I am enthralled by this. I've never seen anything like it," said Joshua Murray, a senior in the political science department. "It's neat to have another side."

Murray said students needed to have an open mind when it came to issues like the recent Tibetan unrest.

"This is interesting and I'm a little surprised. I thought

See CHINA on page 3

Roughly 100 students rallied on the steps of the Student Union in support of Beijing and against the recent violence and unrest in Tibet.

Night-life still alive and well at UMass

Campus struggles with drunk driving problems, alternatives

BY KATIE HUSTON
COLLEGIAN STAFF

UMass students who head off campus to drink may face a dilemma when it's time to get home.

Their options are limited. UMass Transit Services buses make later runs on weekend nights, but many students say they don't run late enough. Amherst has two taxi companies, but they only have four vehicles between them, sometimes causing long waits for students trying to get home. The Designated Drivers Club of Amherst – a new student organization – hopes to fill the gap but is struggling to get off the ground.

More choices, students say, would help reduce the number of students who get behind the wheel after drinking.

"I think that if the bus schedule was extended or there were convenient chauffeur programs, [drunk driving] would be reduced. I don't think it'd be completely solved, but it would help," said senior David Satin.

The number of students arrested for operating under the influence (OUI) is currently on the rise. The UMass Police Department arrested 68 people for OUI in 2007, up from 21 in 2004, 43 in 2005 and 52 in 2006. This year, 23 arrests had been made through mid-March.

Senior Matt Alvey and alumnus Marquis Hunt started the Designated Drivers Club of Amherst last fall in hopes of reducing what they see as a problem.

"We've both been around the party scene in Amherst, and we noticed people driving that shouldn't have," said Alvey, who is president of the group. "Especially with the dorm crackdown, more and more people are flocking outside of campus."

The service is run through a Facebook group, which sends out messages to update members when transportation will be available and recruit drivers.

"Our main goal is to make it available every weekend," Alvey said.

Although many people have expressed interest, Alvey acknowledges that the DDC is not yet ready to meet the needs of a campus community numbering in the tens of thousands.

To operate for a night, the club needs at least five volunteers – one dispatcher, and two people per car. Alvey and Hunt do not own cars, and they rely on volunteers who have their own wheels. The club is still trying to solidify a meeting space and phone number, and is

See DUI on page 2

For those students who choose to drink on the weekends there are few options for a safe ride home from a house party down the street or the uptown bar.

House parties undeterred by recent violence

BY BEN WILLIAMS
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Each Thursday, Friday and Saturday, hundreds of UMass students walk, carpool, or bus-it-a-mus to the characteristic college social gathering: a house party.

Evidence enough is North Pleasant Street on Friday night, a corridor of off-campus partying, lined from 10 p.m. to 3 a.m. with party-goers and the flashing lights of police cars.

When most high school students think of a college party, they imagine something of Animal House proportions, hundreds of people crammed into a house, dancing, drinking, out of control, and they're [illegible] not too far off from the truth.

Walking into a fantastic house party can be somewhat of a sensory overload. There is never less than two or six things going on at the same time. Walking in the door at a party where you're well known may elicit a "Heeeey!" from the denizens of the party, or you may get an unmistakable "Who's this?" But the first thing you'll experience is the most sensorial: the heat produced by 50 people in a small room, the smell of those people piled in a [illegible] or around a Beirut table or six, where there is space and the [illegible] of conversation or track [illegible] drinking games.

See PARTY on page 2

Students work with environmentalists

BY ADAM COULTER
COLLEGIAN STAFF

Undergraduates from the University of Massachusetts are working with a local community group to try and solve the environmental problems that can threaten the habitats of state-listed endangered species.

The UMass environmental honors class is partnered with the grassroots organization Nuestras Raices [Our Roots], which promotes sustainable development projects in Holyoke, to restore an ecologically sensitive area of the Connecticut River shoreline in Holyoke.

Professor Guy Lanza teaches the environmental honors class and believes that the 17 students involved are passionate about community problem solving.

"Students want to see the results of their work, and problem solving in the community engages them, and allows the students to actually bring solutions to the problem," said Professor Lanza.

The students are working with Nuestras Raices Director Daniel Ross, who along with Professor Lanza has been trying to find funding for environmental projects that would involve the collaboration of both UMass students and the local community.

Referring to Nuestras Raices, Professor Lanza said, "I've been working for more than 10 years looking for ways to connect with them on community projects."

"Until now there has been no success for getting funding," he added.

The specific river bank project underway is part of a larger sustainable development project that Nuestras Raices has been involved with. The area of the river bank the team is restoring includes about 30 acres that have been deemed a

See CONNECTICUT on page 3

Athletes raise funds for children's group

Kostka organizes bowl-a-thon for Big Brothers Big Sisters

BY AMARA ANOSIKE
COLLEGIAN STAFF

The University of Massachusetts Amherst's swim, hockey and track and field teams raised over $2,000 for Big Brothers Big Sisters of Hampshire County during a two day charity bowl-a-thon in Northampton.

Hockey Captain Mike Kostka orchestrated the charity event in cooperation with Big Brothers Big Sisters of Hampshire County alongside other enthusiastic athletes from the three participating UMass teams.

"I was thrilled with the turnout of the bowl-a-thon and the amount of money we raised," said Kostka. "Once I gathered enough information and pitched the idea to the teams, I received a lot of support."

The lucrative two day charity bowl-a-thon consisted of over three bowling teams in which all members were required to raise at least $75 in order to participate. There were eleven actual UMass athlete bowlers among the teams.

However, even more team members took advantage of spring break by using the vacation time to collect donations from family members and also from their own communities.

"The community looks up to our athletes and we want to foster a great relationship," said Assistant Athletic Director Jason Yellin. "Not only do we want them to be good athletes but we also want to facilitate good students and good people."

"I've always wanted to give back to this community as I've done before back home," said Josh Boone, a track athlete and

See CHARITY on page 3

Captain of the UMass hockey team, Mike Kostka led his fellow student athletes in raising money for a local charity.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN
CXVIII
ISSUE 118

113 Campus Center University of Massachusetts Amherst, MA 01003
• 413-545-3500 •
• Fax 413-545-3699 •
www.dailycollegian.com

EDITOR IN CHIEF Nicholas Belanger
MANAGING EDITOR Katie Huston
BUSINESS MANAGER Dan Exter
PRODUCTION MANAGER Chris Martin
NIGHT SUPERVISOR Meghan Murphy
ADVERTISING MANAGER Alex Bender
ADVERTISING PRODUCTION Katherine Shea
EDITORIAL PRODUCTION Michael Sarkes
ARTS & LIVING EDITOR Ryan McAskill
COPIES EDITOR Adam Stasiin
EDITORIAL EDITOR S.P. Sullivan
NEWS EDITOR Derrick Perkins
SPORTS EDITOR Jeremy Rice
FEATURES EDITOR Dave Humphreys
PHOTO EDITOR Michael Phillis
WEB EDITOR Jamee Hale
ASST. BUSINESS MANAGER Eric Szymczak
ASSISTANT ADVERTISING Marnea Whooten
ASSISTANT OPERATIONS Linda Wallack
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Stephanie McPherson
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Skye McIntyre
ASST. ARTS & LIVING Brian Wood
ASST. EDITORIAL James Mathews
ASST. EDITORIAL Melissa Garber
ASSISTANT NEWS Michael King
ASSISTANT NEWS Kate Olesin
ASSISTANT NEWS Holly Seabury
ASSISTANT SPORTS Mike Connors
ASSISTANT SPORTS Joe Meloni
ASSISTANT SPORTS Eli Rosenwaike
ASSISTANT PHOTO Brian Tedder
ARTS WEB EDITOR Michelle Abbasciano
EDITORIAL WEB EDITOR Leif Walcutt
NEWS WEB EDITOR Nick Bush
SPORTS WEB EDITOR Steve Games

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN IS PUBLISHED MONDAY THROUGH FRIDAY DURING THE UNIVERSITY OF MASSACHUSETTS CALENDAR SEMESTER. THE COLLEGIAN IS INDEPENDENTLY FUNDED, OPERATING ON ADVERTISING REVENUES. FOUNDED IN 1890, THE PAPER BEGAN AS AGGIE LIFE, BECAME THE COLLEGE SIGNAL IN 1901, THE WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1914 AND THE DO-WEEKLY COLLEGIAN IN 1956. PUBLISHED DAILY SINCE 1967, THE COLLEGIAN WAS BORN BROADSHEET SINCE JANUARY 1994. FOR ADVERTISING RATES AND INFORMATION, CALL WEEKDAYS BETWEEN 8:30 A.M. AND 3:30 P.M.

PRODUCTION CREW
On staff today

NIGHT EDITOR
Nicholas Belanger

COPY EDITOR
Amber Vaillancourt

PRODUCTION SUPERVISOR
Michael Sarkes

WEB EDITOR
Michelle Abbasciano

GENERAL BURNSIDES WANTS
YOU TO WRITE FOR NEWS
www.dailycollegian.com

Bar patrons struggle to find access to safe transportation looking for people interested in taking over next year after Alvey graduates.

DUI from page 1

"We haven't offered it that much this semester," Alvey said. "We did it a lot last semester, but it was more a close circle of friends that were doing it. We're trying to get more involved with other people."

In the meantime, the public, free bus system operated by UMass Transit Services is another common option for students who want to drink.

However, most buses stop running before 2 a.m., and routes headed away from the University to Belchertown and South Amherst make their last in-town pickup before the bars close at 1 a.m., even on Saturdays. House parties can last even later into the night, often leaving students without safe transportation options.

Al Byam, director of UMass Transit Services, said that although the organization extended hours to after last call at the bars in the mid-'80s in response to student government requests, the price tag prevents them from offering even later runs.

"We get more requests every year, but it's a matter of economics," he said. A bus costs about $50 per hour to operate, but late night service costs more on the weekends, when UMass Transit Services also places police officers on the vehicles.

It's also hard to find students who are willing to work late-night weekend shifts.

"Quite frankly, all of our bus drivers are students, and they're trying to get through school too, they have classes. And the rowdyism on the weekend isn't a lot of fun for the drivers," Byam said. "It's not a popular shift to drive."

Archbald agrees that extended bus services would also help reduce the number of students driving under the influence of alcohol.

"Any extra minute the bus drivers can work has got to be a plus," he said. However, he recognized that budget constraints currently prevent later offerings.

For students who miss the last bus, there are currently two licensed taxi services in Amherst.

Gottago Taxi, which received its license in December of last year, charges $7.25 from the UMass campus to town, according to owner Gangi Bakarani. The company owns two minivans, and shuttles 50-150 students on weekend nights.

Celebrity Cab Company runs two luxury vans, and charges $1.75 for pickup and $0.35 for every eighth of a mile. A ride from campus to town usually costs about $5. Owner John Sanetenello says he gets an average of 80 calls every Thursday, Friday and Saturday night, and he is looking into leasing more vans.

However, many students say they are unaware of local taxi companies, or that there are not enough taxis to serve the campus population.

"Sometimes I've heard of people calling them and they can't get a hold of them," said senior David Satin.

When freshman Anna Jenness tried to call a cab, she waited an hour for it to arrive.

OLIVER SCOTT SMITH/COLLEGIAN

The UMPD made 68 arrests for driving under the influence in 2007. 23 people have been arrested so far this year.

"It was pretty much impossible to get them to come," she said. "I think they were overwhelmed by all the students who were stranded [after the buses stopped]."

Other universities offer a variety of options. At the University of Connecticut, the Undergraduate Student Government sponsors a program called GUARD Dogs, for Giving UConn A Responsible Driver.

The "free, non-judgmental, student-run safe program" aims at preventing drunk driving and operates from 10 p.m. to 2 a.m. Friday and Saturday nights, on campus and "within a reasonable radius off campus," according to the program Web site.

Cheap and widely available private taxi services aimed at students may be another way to increase transport offerings. At Michigan State University, which is about twice the size of UMass, two local taxi companies cater to students for a nominal fee of about $3 per person into town, and service both the sprawling campus and the surrounding area.

The UMPD used to run a free on-campus escort service, but it was shut down in spring 2002 due to budgetary constraints and redundancy with UMass Transit Services routes, said Chief of Police Barbara O'Connor.

Archbald said that a shuttle with a nominal fee, perhaps a dollar or two, may prevent abuse of an escort service, a problem encountered in the past.

"There were issues with people using the service for what it wasn't intended for," he said. "It was intended to make people feel safe on campus... it wasn't because it was cold out. You may have done 30 escorts, and 25 of them felt like it was just a taxi service."

Student Government Association president elect Malcolm Chu called for reinstatement of the shuttle escort service in his platform, but said that off-campus service is vital to curb drunk driving.

"It's very important to extend those services to off campus," he said. "A lot of the driving happens between going to a party off campus and driving back to campus."

Deputy Chief of Police Pat Archbald agreed that most driving while intoxicated occurs when students are leaving after "preloading" or returning to campus after a night out.

Transportation that extends to off-campus locations, such as an off-campus escort service or low-cost shuttle, would help reduce driving under the influence "exponentially," he said.

"Something like that would have a substantial impact on DWI. I think people would take advantage of something like that to a much greater degree," he said.

Jenness also believed an escort service would help keep intoxicated students from getting behind the wheel.

"I think that we manage now without it, but an escort service would be good for emergency situations. It would be nice to have something to fall back on when the buses don't work," she said.

No matter what transportation options are available, students and officials said that the responsibility to get home safely ultimately falls upon students who are planning to drink.

Junior Kelley Bailey said she would love later buses or an escort service, but ultimately, it's up to students to make smart decisions.

"If you know your friend is not in the shape to drive, you've got to be more assertive and not let them drive," she said.

April McNally, a health educator at University Health Services, said that it's important to offer transportation options, but ultimately, students are responsible for getting home safely.

Katie Huston can be reached at khuston@student.umass.edu.

Amherst Police link drinking to violence at parties

PARTY from page 1

Just recently dropping off the top ten list of biggest party schools, UMass is still no stranger to a house party.

"Partying and large parties on and off campus are things that happen across the country," said UMass spokesman Ed Blaguszewski. "They're not unique to UMass or Amherst, and unfortunately the overindulgence in alcohol and related violence is not uncommon either."

Without a doubt drinking is one of, if not the central focus of a big house party, as proved by the wide variety of drinking games probably taking place the moment you walk into a party. There will almost certainly be a game of Beirut being played where teams try to throw ping-pong balls into alcohol-filled cups to make opponents drink, and card games are ever popular.

Certainly, with the recent acts of violence on campus, the question of alcohol and partying has been a point of discussion, but fighting isn't always one of the ingredients at a house party, some frequent party goers insist they've never seen a fight at a party.

"There's been a lot of violence recently, but all that really happens on campus – I know that stuff that happened in Southwest, the kids didn't even go to this school – there's nothing really UMass can do about that," said UMass sophomore Alex King. "You can't eliminate the stupid people in this world. I'm sure they were a little drunk at least, but that's who they are, you're not going to get drunk and change who you are."

Capt. Scott Livingstone, of the Amherst Police Department, said he has to deal with violence all the time at house parties.

"When there's alcohol involved and someone pisses someone else off at a party [it can lead to fighting.] We often get called in to break up fights and most of the time we tell people it might be a good idea to break [the party] up even if they haven't had an official complaint yet because they probably will."

Fear of a party being broken up by the cops is always in the back of the minds of partiers and especially the owners of the house. While usually impossible to quiet down a rambling crowd of 50 or more people, a simple utterance, "shhhh...cops" quickly echoes through the party, and can usually bring quiet long enough to figure out what's going, as the owner speaks with the officers or the party collectively holds it's breath until the cops have moved on.

"We respond to noise complaints and calls about parties every day of the week and more on the weekend, and more with warmer weather outdoors," said Livingstone. "Usually we're out on routine patrol but we don't stop people unless we see illegal activity going on. We don't respond unless there's been an official complaint."

Parties are also more than anything a social gathering, a chance for friends who may not have seen each other all week to catch up and also to meet new people. Parties are a reflection of the current state of affairs, where hardly five minutes goes by without a quote from a recently circulated YouTube video or popular movie.

During midterms party goers are exhausted and somber, while the warmer weather brings out peoples brighter sides. Every party is a unique mixture of the moods of dozens of people, and no two are the same.

Of course not every party at UMass is of epic proportions. Parties range from five or 10 people hanging out and having a good time, alcohol or not, to the "Can't Hardly Wait" movie scene. Some students will go their entire four years without attending such a party; others will go every weekend without missing one.

There is another fundamental difference between the oft-portrayed movie college party and real-life. While there are giant frat parties, and other equally immense and random gatherings, chances are you're partying every weekend with the group of friends you hang out with anyways.

UMass sophomore Crystal Cabral makes that distinction between big frat parties and house parties, "House parties are better than frats because I feel safe, I know my friends, and my friends will take care of me. Parties make UMass smaller because I know more people and it's easier to connect with them"

Regardless, UMass has been trying to clean up the image of a being party school, and while some students are all for the change, others see partying as an important part of the UMass identity.

"Half the students live off campus, 12,000 live on campus, which is one of the largest populations in the country, and certainly the students who live on campus will go to parties off campus, so it has to be an issue that's addressed on and off," said Blaguszewski

"I know they're trying to clean up their image, but every college has partiers, you're not going to get rid of that," said King. "There's an image of a party school, and you kind of got to, not necessarily embrace it...I'm all for having a better school, but doesn't mean we're going to party less."

King adds, "I guarantee I'd be a better student, but I would not have as much fun here. I don't know if I would enjoy it as much. You gotta work you're ass off and then let lose, relax and have a good time, that can be as important as working."

Ben Williams can be reached at bwilliam@student.umass.edu.

JASMINE WHALEN/COLLEGIAN

Amherst police receive more noise complaints and parties on the weekend and the number increases as the weather improves.

Apartments Available for Summer and Fall

Excellent location...1/2 mile from UMass
Spacious Apartments--1, 2 and 3 Bedroom Townhouses
All rents include heat, hot water, and cooking gas
On site laundry, off street parking.
Basketball and Tennis Courts.

PUFFTON VILLAGE

Office Hours: 8am to 4pm Monday - Friday
(413) 549-0145
www.pufftonvillage.com

Southern Connecticut State University
SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES

ONE OF THE LARGEST GRADUATE PROGRAMS IN NEW ENGLAND

OPEN HOUSE
THURSDAY
APRIL 17 2008
3:00 - 7:00 PM

• Meet with graduate faculty from more than 40 areas of study, including many programs offered with Connecticut teacher certification
• Find out about financial aid and graduate assistantships
• Get details on career services and living on campus

SCHOOL OF ARTS & SCIENCES MASTER'S PROGRAMS • Art Education • Bilingual-Multicultural Education • Biology • Chemistry • English • Environmental Education • History • Mathematics • Political Science • Psychology • Science Education • Sociology • Women's Studies SIXTH YEAR PROFESSIONAL DIPLOMA • Science Education
SCHOOL OF BUSINESS MASTER'S PROGRAM • Business Administration
SCHOOL OF COMMUNICATION, INFORMATION & LIBRARY SCIENCE MASTER'S PROGRAMS • Computer Science • Instructional Media and Technology • Library Science/Library Information
SIXTH YEAR PROFESSIONAL DIPLOMA • Library Science/Library Information
SCHOOL OF EDUCATION DOCTORAL PROGRAM • Ed.D. Educational Leadership MASTER'S PROGRAMS • Counseling • Elementary Education • Exercise Science • Reading • Research, Statistics & Measurement • School Health Education • School Psychology • Special Education SIXTH YEAR PROFESSIONAL DIPLOMAS • Classroom Teacher Specialist • Counseling • Educational Foundations • Educational Leadership • Reading • School Psychology • Special Education
SCHOOL OF HEALTH & HUMAN SERVICES MASTER'S PROGRAMS • Communication Disorders • Marriage and Family Therapy • Nursing • Public Health • Recreation and Leisure Studies • Social Work • Urban Studies

Toll-free 866-SCSU-GSP • (203) 392-5260 • Facebook: Southern Conn. • www.gradstudies.SouthernCT.edu

SCHOOL OF GRADUATE STUDIES

Students restore Connecticut river, remove invasive plants

CONNECTICUT from page 1

Riparian Area, Core Habitat and Priority Habitat of Rare Species by the Living Waters Project of the Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program.

There are certain criteria that the program looks for when designating an area in need of protection.

"The Natural Heritage and Endangered Species Program follows the guidelines and regulations of the state, and also utilizes expert input," said Lanza.

The Federal Endangered Species Act also serves as the larger guide to the state, and provides for conservation of ecosystems upon which threatened and endangered species of fish, wildlife and plants depend. The primary idea of the riverbank restoration is to remove invasive species of plants in the riparian forest that threaten the rare and endangered, and replace them with more advantageous species.

The cleared area will then be planted with native plants, trees and shrubs and maintained by management practices.

"The honors class' basic approach is being a community service learning class," said Lanza.

The students are being taught and utilizing a mix of traditional agricultural techniques and information about how invasive species can provide knowledge of basic ecological processes. Proper sustainability approaches, Professor Lanza feels, are only successful when taking the environment into consideration, and this may be the best lesson learned by the students.

"If you're going to have a farm for example, you must have sustainability approaches that consider the environment, other wise it'll be a quick fix and there won't be long term survival," said Lanza.

Wendy Ratner, a first-year environmental science major proved Lanza's beliefs about the student's passion for involvement.

"What excites me the most about this class is that I have a sincere personal interest in the outcome of my work," she said.

Adam Coulter can be reached at apcoulte@student.umass.edu.

Money raised by athletes to fund social workers in Noho representative of the team. "By bowling for a couple of hours and collecting donations we've been able to help kids who may not have the best family life or the friends that they could turn to."

CHARITY from page 1

The Big brothers Big Sisters of Hampshire County program works to match children from the community who could use another adult in their life once a week to spend one on one quality time with the volunteers.

"Our program works closely with children and families to make great matches that offer guidance and encouragement to the kids," said Renee Moss, director of Big Brothers Big sisters of Hampshire County. "The money we have raised is going to be used to support our staff of social workers and professionals who train the volunteers to be great matches for the kids."

Big Brothers Big Sisters of Hampshire County is always looking for more volunteers. They require a one year minimum commitment and provide training and follow up assistance throughout the venture. Though almost deceivingly, according to Moss, their motto happens to be, "While we ask for a one year commitment our secret agenda is a life long friendship."

Amara Anosike can be reached at anosik@student.umass.edu.

Veterans discuss experiences serving in Iraq, Afghanistan

The University of Massachusetts hosted a discussion of veteran's experiences in both Iraq and Afghanistan, organized by Iraq Veterans Against the War (IVAW) last night.

On March 13-16, IVAW went to Washington D.C. for the event "Winter Soldier: Iraq & Afghanistan," where over 50 veterans talked about their experiences in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Mike Van Valkenburg, Treasurer of the Amherst Chapter, opened the panel for the UMass adaption of the eyewitness accounts of the occupations by quoting his friend John Turner, whom he served with overseas.

"Until people hear about what's going on in this war, it will continue," Turner said.

The event started with taped testimonies from "Winter Soldier" followed by four live testimonies. After the panelists' statements, the panel was open to the audience for discussion.

IVAW was founded in July of 2004 in Boston. Their purpose is to give veterans as well as active servicemen and women a chance to speak out against the war and be heard.

The Amherst Chapter was incorporated on Jan. 28. Mike Van Valkenburg, treasurer of the Amherst Chapter, announced at the event that IVAW now has over 1,000 members.

-Lucas Correia

Chinese community reaches out in support of 'one China'

Holding placards, handing out leaflets and waving the Chinese national flag, students gathered together to support the 2008 Olympics in Beijing and condemn the violence in Tibet.

CHINA from page 1

it was going to be a pro-Tibet rally," said Brian Connor, a graduate student in the sociology department. "I think its good that their tempering the pro-Tibet stuff and showing both sides."

Participants – with small Chinese flags emblazoned on their cheeks and foreheads – voiced criticism of the Free Tibet movement and the Dalai Lama, connecting the exiled Tibetan leader with the Nazi party.

"The Dalai Lama winning the Nobel Peace Prize is ridiculous. He is a very shrewd politician," said student Yidan Guo, describing the event as a rally for justice. "It is the republic of China that liberated Tibet from feudalism."

Liu criticized western activists for using the run-up to the 2008 Beijing Olympics as a way to protest the Chinese government.

"Connecting the Beijing Olympics with human rights hurts the Chinese people," he said. "It's frustrating to have the Olympics connected to something not necessarily related."

Members of the Students for a Free Tibet group circulated in the crowd, handing out bags of candy with informational leaflets attached to stopping students.

"We're talking about current issues in Tibet, where people are getting killed for speaking the truth," said Lhakyi Lokyitsang, vice president of the student organization. "Tibetans in Tibet are not only protesting, but they're risking their lives to do it."

Holding a placard, student Xing Yi called those responsible for the unrest in Tibet terrorists, using violence as a political tool.

"We want a peaceful stop to these problems," he said. "It's a small percentage of people using violent action against the other people."

Liu numbered the Chinese community on campus at around 350 students, approximately 70 of which turned out for the rally. More long-term plans to hold a symposium to spark a campus-wide discussion about China and Tibet were being talked about within the community, according to both Liu and Wu.

"We hope that people can hear the voice from the other side," Liu said.

Derrick Perkins can be reached at dperkins@dailycollegian.com

UMASS DINING WELCOMES PARENTS & GUESTS TO THE FAMILY WEEKEND 2008

Taste Of Home

Recipes submitted from home are now being served at all Dining Commons for lunch, Saturday, April 12

• Chicken Piccata (Phelan Family)
• Fettuccine Alfredo with Broccoli & Tomatoes (Lowrie Family)
• Nonny Whiting's Mac-N-Cheese (Cavicchi Family)
• Sweet and Sour Tofu (Holley Family)
• Mississippi Mud Truffle (Korniotes Family)
• Chocolate Chip Cookie Brownies (Windt Family)

Thank you for submissions! Enjoy a free UMass Taste of Home Cookbook, compliments of Dining Services.

DINING SERVICES
UMassAmherst
2007 Grand Prize Winner
RESTAURANTS & INSTITUTIONS Ivy Award '08
umass.edu/diningservices

UMass Idol
Mark your calendar!
Sign Up and Enter Today!

Want to be a UMass Idol?

This is your moment to win $500 cash/grand prize
Sing at the Taste of UMass!

Thursday, April 24, 2008 · Time: 6-7:30 pm
Place: Mullins Center

Email mmonaghan@mail.aux.umass.edu
or call UMass Dining Services: 413-545-2472.

Provide your: name, e-mail address, major, year, and the title of the song you will sing.

All entries must be received by April 23, 2008

There will be two rounds with Cash prizes for each round.
Limited to 20 contestants for the entire event.

Presented by:
UMass Dining Services
&
Sponsored by:

DINING SERVICES UMassAmherst
Taste of UMass 2008
umass.edu/diningservices

Must be a UMass student to enter. Judges decisions are final.

Reporting with tact

The University of Massachusetts has suffered a number of unfortunate student deaths this academic year. Death is a difficult thing for any news outlet to cover, and it's particularly unsettling for a student news organization; almost any death in our coverage area is bound to be untimely.

Our coverage of the death of Katherine Sherman, who passed away while studying abroad this March, was met with frustration from readers who found it inappropriate that the writer included quotes from Sherman's facebook.com profile. Although the quote was innocuous enough, many who knew or were familiar with Sherman were upset with what they saw as an invasion of privacy or a show of disrespect.

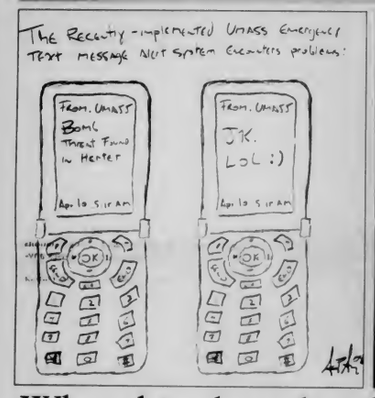
Former Collegian editor and MassLive.com blogger Eric Athas also drew criticism for reporting quotes taken from Sherman's Facebook profile, and was personally asked to leave Sherman's memorial at the Student Union Craft Center because her friends and colleagues did not feel comfortable with him there.

Comments on the online version of our story about the death of UMass student Liam O'Donnelly, who jumped from the 17th floor the JQA tower in Southwest Friday morning, are a mix of brief memorial statements, analyses on the circumstances and levied accusations.

The ubiquity and heightened interactivity of the internet raise questions about the role of these new media in reporting death. Neither The Collegian nor Athas were looking to sensationalize or offend in their coverage; they dealt with the information available to provide comprehensive coverage to a community in mourning.

O'Donnelly's death has opened a larger discussion about the University's role in treating depression and how we treat each other as a community on the comment board of our Web site.

But how do we handle these new forms of media? It's a question that has proven difficult for college journalists across the globe recently, and only becomes more complicated when the focus of coverage is untimely death.



While the use of materials from Facebook is entirely legal – as any information posted on Facebook is for public consumption – journalistic integrity behooves us to not simply use information because we can. The answer to this question, at the moment, is "we don't know." This is an ethical dilemma being tackled primarily by student journalists, and not professionals in the field. We're setting the precedent as we report.

Contrary to popular opinion, these aren't the stories we want to cover, either. Reporting on death, asking difficult questions of bereaved family members and friends and separating fact from fiction in what usually proves to be complicated situations require a huge amount of tact, discipline and sensitivity. No media outlet, The Collegian included, wants to upset friends and family of the departed with their coverage of tragic events. We just want to keep the community informed as accurately and tactfully as possible.

That's why we want your thoughts on the issue. Facebook is public domain, but how public is public? How accurate is information obtained from a Facebook wall? What should be done with quotes posted on public sites? Finally, when a student death raises larger questions in a community, where is the appropriate forum to pose these questions?

Please post your perspectives on the comments section of the online version of this editorial. Be respectful, thoughtful and critical. Death is difficult for everyone, and it's not the media's job to make it any harder. Let us know what you think.

Unsigned editorials reflect the majority opinion of The Massachusetts Daily Collegian editorial board.

ED/OP

We're hiring. Skate on down and apply today.

editorial@dailycollegian.com

When bias hits the classroom

Aviva Slomich

The first few months in the journalism class, Press and the 3rd World, were intriguing and enjoyable. The course was intended to show how the Western media distorted and down-played news in turbulent areas of the Third World. The assigned books were meant to enlighten the class about critical issues, ranging from the AIDS dilemma in Haiti to the hidden secrets of the Belgian Congo. Much of the class time was devoted to discussion, and our two-and-a-half-hour sessions usually ended an hour early. Yet, once the Israeli-Arab conflict was introduced, my feelings about the class changed drastically.

Clearly there was time to present a film describing the Israeli viewpoint.

The assigned reading was "How to End the War of 1948," by linguist Tanya Reinhardt. After doing a little research on the author, I found several links describing the Jewish Tel Aviv University Professor as an extreme leftist who likened Israel to an apartheid state. "Compared to her I was a distinguished Zionist. She rejected the existence of the State of Israel," Uri Avneri, a widely known Israeli far leftist, said in her obituary in Israel News.

Skimming the book, it was clear to me that Reinhardt was an advocate of the Palestinian cause, as she misled her audience on certain controversial events, like the supposed massacre in the town of Jenin. The Palestinians fabricated a story that the Israeli Defense Forces (IDF) murdered hundreds of civilians when they invaded a refugee camp, a hotbed of terrorists and suicide bombers, in the West Bank town of Jenin.

In reality, 56 Palestinians, both fighters and civilians, were killed – as well as 23 Israeli soldiers. Mistruth about the incident disseminated throughout the Arab world and was quickly acknowledged as truth by the European media.

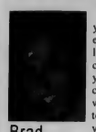
I couldn't wait to go to the next class to question the choice of this book and voice my objections to my professor, who had made no mention of the political ideologies of the author, only saying she was Israeli. I was eager to point out that Reinhardt didn't represent the opinions of the majority of Israelis. However, before I could pose any questions, my professor began to lecture on the long-standing conflict between Israel and Palestine even before Israel was declared a state.

She claimed that the Palestinians weren't involved in the Holocaust, and that it was only a European war. Yet, when I challenged her by explaining that the Grand Mufti of Jerusalem, Haaj Amin el Husseini, corroborated with Hitler, she ignored me. She claimed that early Zionists were the first suicide bombers – but when I questioned her for examples, she told me to look it up online. I now realized that this class had turned from an open exchange of ideas to a pro-Palestinian bias represented by the professor.

At the next class, the professor showed the film, "Peace, Propaganda, and the Promised Land," by UMass Amherst professor Sut Jhally and UMass Amherst alumnus Bathshiba Katzman. She chose it to educate the students on what was really occurring in Israel and what effects it had on the media. This film, which our professor claimed was not propaganda, provided false information about Israel along with focusing on "the media censorship" by the Israeli government without addressing any of the same criticism towards the Palestinian Authority.

While watching this misleading film, I overheard many students whispering about how they didn't know about these facts and wondering why the American media did not show them the Palestinian side. This was what worried me most about this film. I was concerned that the majority of students would leave the class with a very one-sided view of the Israeli-Arab conflict, particularly since they were unfamiliar with the subject matter.

Throughout the film, I felt so uncomfortable and angered that I couldn't sit through it and left early. I felt betrayed by my professor and questioned whether I could trust what I had learned from her prior to this class session. I decided to e-mail her my concerns.



She said I should express my objections in my assigned oral critique of the film. I argued that the best way to provide was to show a film depicting the Israeli point of view. She replied, "I don't think that time permits a showing of another video." Students had been kept for the entire class only twice that semester, once for Sut Jhally's film. At that point, four sessions of the class still remained.

Clearly there was time to present a film describing the Israeli viewpoint. Apparently she had no intention of offering her students a balanced view of the Middle East conflict.

The supposed objective of Press and the 3rd World was to broaden the minds of college students about the poor conditions in many undeveloped countries not always represented in western media. In my past journalism classes, I was taught to report facts objectively so that my audience would be allowed to come to its own conclusions. Ironically, the professor presented an unbalanced, one-sided view of the Israeli-Arab conflict. This is not how a journalism class should be taught.

Aviva Slomich is a UMass student.

The end of the road

Brad Leibowitz

How would you want it to end? When your life comes to a close, or when you chose it to come to a close, what do you want to become of you?

In the majority of cases, people die because their bodies break down due to the never-ending process of life. You fully begin your decline to death when you're seven. In the interest of this article, I will not address simply dying a natural death due to its sublime nature. I will however discuss the choice to ends ones life.

We young people look at the world as if we are invincible.

Last Thursday, according to The Daily Collegian, a student decided to end his life somewhere around 3:30 a.m. on the morning of Friday, April 4. According to The Collegian, that student decided to end his life by jumping from the 17th floor of John Quincy Adams tower. Undoubtedly this is a tragedy.

Again, this student's death is a tragedy. However, in the general worldview of things, what this student did is highly interesting. Most people go quietly into the night; he did not. The choice to commit suicide is, even though talking about it is held as a taboo, highly interesting. Aside from sex, suicide is arguably the single most interesting thing a person can do with his or her life. When someone partakes in his or her final journey by choice, that person has not only decided that the unknown is better then the known, but they have also left a trail of open ended questions in their wake.

In this line of thought, the suicide note is the single most puzzling and personal arrangement of letters a writer could pen. Did you happen to know that George Eastman, the founder of the Eastman Kodak Company and the inventor of the roll of the film, left a suicide note which read, "To my friends, my work is done. Why wait?" The suicide note is the last public thought of a person at the end. Someone who was written life off and has sealed his fate in blood.

Just a few days ago I was informed that a father of someone I knew in high school committed suicide by playing an individual game of Russian Roulette. I wonder what his suicide note read and where it is he thought he was going to go when the bullet lodged itself in the back of his cranium. Above all the aspects of death, for me the most interesting part of the equation is the unknown part, i.e. the afterlife.

Ninety – 95 percent of the world believes in some major religion. Of the major religions in the world, some hold when you die you will either go to Heaven or Hell; others hold you will by way of your actions while living, be recycled back into the world of the living as either a higher or lesser creature then you were in your previous life.

Only a small percent of the world believes that your death results in the end of conscious thought, i.e. dying means that your life – both mentally and physically – are over. Although I subscribe to the last idea, I have always wondered if all these thoughts were wrong.

What if we are currently living in the afterlife? This is to assume two things: One, there is an afterlife and two, when we die our minds shut off for a small amount of time which allows the mind and the body to completely forget about our previously lived worldly life. Assuming that there is an afterlife, it is completely possible that the mind, before it makes its transition from this life to the next, shuts down and erases all memory of our previous life. Regardless of what every preacher has ever told you, we could enter the afterlife by being birthed as an infant withholding no information of the life we have just previously departed.

We young people look at the world as if we are invincible. As you get older and your body continues the process of breaking down, the mind begins to see the world on a time scale; one which you nor I can escape. Someone once told me that life is more beautiful because we are doomed. I think this is a smart thought.

So I ask you this question: If you knew you were going to live forever, either by way of being immortal or by way of continuing life in some form of an Afterlife, would you really hold the life you have now, the one thing you know to be true, in the highest regard? If you knew you were going to live for all time, would life be as lovely?

The answer to this must be no.

I do want to die one day – not now – maybe when I turn 95. When I turn said age, just to make it interesting, I am going to jump off the Empire State Building and try to land on someone. When they find my note it will read: "To Publishers Clearing House Sweepstakes: Whomever I land on, their family should get the money."

Cherish what you have or depart. It's your choice.

Brad Leibowitz writes on Thursdays. He can be reached at bleibowi@student.umass.edu.

Gov't should pass on the pork

John Glaser

Monday's New York Times ran an article on Congress' pork barrel spending and the eagerness on the part of some to earmark large sums of taxpayer's money towards their own pet projects. Deeply embedded within the abstruse language of any given spending bill lays the allocation of millions or billions of dollars worth of wasteful pork proposing to be squandered.

We all know how it works: Politicians owe favors to people or groups that helped them get elected and subsequently try to appropriate federal spending in their favor, cloaked in the garb of necessary and healthy national expenditures. Recent highlights include Thad Cochrane (R-Miss.) seeing a legitimate federal responsibility to pay for "research on genetic marker-identification and mapping of sweet potatoes."

Then there's Don Young (R-Alaska) recognizing the need to allocate $320 million towards the construction of what has been dubbed "The Bridge to Nowhere" in rural Alaska. It is apparently essential that this bridge be higher than the Brooklyn Bridge and almost as long as the Golden Gate. Trying to curry favor with constituents, I reckon?

The Founders did not design our government to be operating as a leaser of taxpayer money, playing favorites and reciprocating favors.

But The Times reported that, in an attempt to put an end to wasteful federal spending for programs to save hawks in Haiti and give $50 million to an Iowa Senator for an indoor rainforest in his state, Congress last year passed strict ethics rules requiring representatives to disclose where they steered taxpayer money.

According to the article, though, it has not been difficult for representatives to morph traditionally "hard earmarks" into "soft earmarks" which are undetectable under the new ethics rules.

"How to spot a soft earmark? Easy. The language is that of a respectful suggestion: A committee 'endorses' or notes it 'is aware' of deserving programs and 'urges' or 'recommends' that agencies finance them," said the Times. It shouldn't be too big a surprise to anyone that pays attention that any rule Congress ascribes for itself is a rule they can easily get around.

Hillary Clinton (of whom I desperately hope can vanish from my columns pertaining to the '08 race as soon as possible) is the most shameful of the three remaining candidates on the issue of earmarks and pork barrel spending. She placed 10th in the Taxpayers for Common Sense ranking of porkers with $342 million in earmarks (almost four times what Obama pulled in).

She has thought it a worthy governmental responsibility for "local artist space" in Buffalo, firefighting equipment in Oswego, "clean fuel buses" in Syracuse, the Historic Seneca Knitting Mill in Rochester, and the Eleanor Roosevelt Center in Val-Kill, according to an article in Reason Magazine. Again, to anyone paying any attention, it is no news that Clinton sees a government role in practically every part of life in America.

Barack Obama has admittedly very little, in comparable terms, to show for excessive earmarks and pork, although he has only been in the Senate a few years and many earmark dibbs are based on seniority, so don't be too quick to praise him for it.

Still, his silly excuses for legitimate government expenditures last year include pork for theatres, museums, and hospitals in Chicago. In any case, earmarks will likely be among the last pieces of government waste and excessiveness on people's minds when Obama puts the entire healthcare industry under the bureaucratic domain of government profligacy. That is pork you can't imagine.

John McCain, if I can give the man any credit at all in the political realm, has made it a priority to consistently return to his soapbox to trash on earmarks and wasteful spending. Technically his record on earmarks, hard or soft, is relatively impressive.

However, all that praise seems greatly diminished when his general voting record is taken into account. Voting against the Bush tax cuts and remaining vehemently against the roll back of the estate tax has, among many other things, effectively painted him as a Big Government, High Tax Republican (and rightly so). Not to mention the war he so adamantly supports and plans to perpetuate would cost, by some estimates, up to $3 trillion. Given that war is the health of the state (along with high taxes), McCain's appeal as a no-earmark, no-pork crusader is impressively impotent and purely political.

The Founders did not design our government to be operating as a leaser of taxpayer money, playing favorites and reciprocating favors. As purposeful and genius as their design was, they did not account for a government that redistributes money and power through extravagant and bungling officialdom.

Perhaps if those in government did less of what they weren't intended to be doing in the first place, they'd be doing a better job of accomplishing what they're actually there for. Whether you're voting Republican or Democrat this season, don't count on a drop in government waste.

John Glaser is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at jwglaser@student.umass.edu.

POINT-COUNTER-POINT

"Freedom rings where opinions clash." - Adlai E. Stevenson

Olympics '08 – More than a game?

A time-honored tradition

Devon Courtney

The Olympics are an ancient tradition that was at one time celebrated in honor of the Greek god Zeus. They were celebrated for over a millennium, spanning from 776 B.C. until 393 A.D., and were revived again in 1894 in an attempt to unify the countries of the world. Few people since that time still believe in Zeus and his good old homeboys atop Mount Olympus, but the reasons for reestablishing the Olympic Games now represent a much more universal cause, and must be respected for it.

According to the database on Factmonster.com, French educator Baron Pierre de Coubertin proposed that the Olympic Games be revived for the unification of nations throughout the world. Regardless of this noble reasoning, countries and peoples have historically used the Olympics as a backdrop for protesting both human rights and hidden agendas.

The point of the Olympic Games is not that we are celebrating the perfection of the Earth.

Despite the fact that the Olympic Games are an opportunity to put differences aside and celebrate through healthy athletic competition, people in many places (including yesterday in a demonstration at the Student Union) feel that the world shouldn't be hosting the Olympics unless it is absolutely perfect.

That's never going to happen. It's also never happened in the past.

In Berlin in 1936, there were massive protests of the Olympics by both sides of the Nazi Reich, with Jewish athletes and Aryan participants alike choosing to abstain from competition. Adolf Hitler himself even began a personal media whirlwind by snubbing black athlete Cornelius Johnson (and not Jesse Owens, as many mistakenly believe), according to the History News Network.

During the Cold War, massive amounts of protesting from the Soviet Union left the 1952 Olympics full of gaping absence. Soviet athletes stayed on their side of the border, only participating in the Helsinki-based Olympics that year.

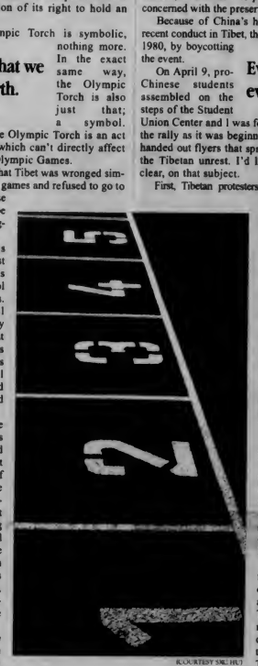
In 1968, Mexican students were protesting the Olympics for human rights reasons and were fired upon by the Mexican army. Over 200 students were killed.

In 1972, eleven Israeli athletes were killed after the Palestinian Black September group entered their compound. Many of us are familiar with the rendition of these events in the Spielberg-directed movie "Munich."

The Olympics have always been a back drop for protests and violent demonstration, and the examples are too numerous to read all the way through. The fact that people are still protesting the Olympics is not new or revolutionary, because there will always be injustice in the world. The point of the Olympic Games is not that we are celebrating the perfection of the Earth. Rather, countries of the world, regardless of what is happening politically, militarily, or economically can endeavor to put their differences aside to compete in a civilized, unified way.

In France this past week, protesters swarmed the torch carriers, forcing its extinguishing at least three times. The last leg of the torch's journey was periled and difficult, but nobody involved either on the Olympic Committee nor the brigade of torch carriers stopped doing their jobs because of the actions of protesters.

Protests are nothing new, and the unwarranted incidents of violence in Tibet have culminated into a pressing situation which desperately needs a resolution. The Olympics, however, will not be cancelled. There will always be an outside agenda, and many more violent incidents and protests have failed to deprive a nation of its right to hold an Olympic gathering.



Attacking the Olympic Torch is symbolic, nothing more. In the exact same way, the Olympic Torch is also just that; a symbol. Messing around with the Olympic Torch is an act of violence in of itself which can't directly affect the progression of the Olympic Games.

If everyone who felt that Tibet was wronged simply didn't show up to the games and refused to go to China and support Chinese businesses, that would be the most effective and logical way to protest.

Instead, roustabouts decided that the best strategy on the fly was to bum-rush the symbol of the Olympic Games, China's organizations' committee probably doesn't care about that one bit, and as long as people go to the games and give the Olympics all the attention it is planned to receive, not a damned thing will happen.

The forum to resolve international incident is through diplomacy and direct action, and not through the attacking of the symbol of a game. The Olympics and the unfortunate situation in Tibet have absolutely nothing to do with each other, and although we can only hope for a resolution through the noticeable actions of our demonstrations, attacking a hallowed tradition simply isn't the way to do it.

Devon Courtney is a Collegian columnist. He can be reached at dcourtne@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY SKI.HU

It's not just fun and games anymore.

A political platform

Scott Harris

The Olympics is, inherently, a political event. Throughout its history, the event and where it is held has been subject to criticism and opposition. The 1956 Summer Olympics in Melbourne, Australia were boycotted for various reasons by various nations, and 65 nations refused to participate in the 1980 Summer Olympics in Moscow, Russia because of atrocities committed in the Soviet invasion of Afghanistan.

China refuses to allow Taiwanese athletes to participate. Even the Olympic Charter defines the event as a political one: "The goal of Olympism is to place sport at the service of the harmonious development of man, with a view to promoting a peaceful society concerned with the preservation of human dignity."

Because of China's human rights record and its recent conduct in Tibet, the world must act, as it did in 1980, by boycotting the event.

Even the Olympic Charter defines the event as a political one.

On April 9, pro-Chinese students assembled on the steps of the Student Union Center and I was fortunate enough to walk by the rally as it was beginning. They held posters and handed out flyers that spread vicious untruths about the Tibetan unrest. I'd like to make a few things clear, on that subject.

First, Tibetan protesters have remained remarkably peaceful throughout the demonstrations. Of course, there have been instances where unruly youths have punched, knocked down or otherwise assaulted innocent bystanders, but any attempt to equate their regrettable actions with the entire movement is ridiculous.

Furthermore, it has been various news outlets and intelligence services have published evidence suggesting that Chinese military officers have been staging most of the violence that has taken place by dressing up as Tibetans attacking civilians.

Second, the pro-Chinese students claimed that Tibetans are forced into slavery, and that they live in an "autocratic, theocratic serfdom." The central government appoints a governor to oversee Tibet, so the only autocracy in the region is perpetrated by China.

Tibet is a culture with its foundation in the teachings of Buddhism, but it is not an official state religion (as Tibet has no state); Islamic mosques and Catholic churches are widespread in the region. Finally, most of Tibet's economy relies on subsistence agriculture, and adheres to a lot of classic principles of laissez faire.

The most important point, though, is this: There is no widespread prosecution of those that think or act differently and there is no slavery in Tibet.

The death toll of the Tibetan riots is very unclear right now, because the Chinese government has banned all foreign media from reporting on the incidents (a sure sign that nothing untoward is happening). Most say that somewhere between 50-100 Tibetan monks have been killed, and an unknown number have been arrested. The only reporting from credible outlets has been from The Economist's James Miles, who was given a one-month pass to cover the events, which just happened to coincide with a dramatic increase in rioting – buttressing the claims that the Chinese government is staging violence in Tibet.

I participated in a counter-rally, and began to follow the pro-Chinese group around campus, making sure that their propaganda flyers were not unanswered. Slowly, as I made my way around campus, dozen people joined me – and, thankfully, lent their voices with them. It seems that loud voices are the only way to get the truth out about China.

China is the primary reason why the Student cannot get involved in ending the genocide in Sudan. China's support for the Sudanese government, because of their close oil ties, prevents the United Nations from passing a Security Council resolution.

In Rwanda, as well, China prevented the world from acting by vetoing a Security Council resolution. There is no freedom of speech or assembly or religion in China. China has also been criticized by Amnesty International and the Human Rights Watch, hardly part of the "far-right corporate media" that the pro-Chinese group was decrying, as having an orchestrated imprisonment and torture campaign against political dissidents.

To connect China's unabashedly oppressive government to an event that claims to "promote a peaceful society concerned with the preservation of human dignity" is a travesty that the world cannot ignore. The outrage of holding the Olympics in China is only fermented considering the countries that the International Olympic Committee is honoring by holding a torch relay.

Before the torch arrived in the United States on April 9, it had passed through countries like Turkey, Russia and Kazakhstan. After the torch leaves the United States on April 10, it goes to countries like Oman, Pakistan, North Korea and Vietnam. Of the 24 stops in the torch relay, only 10 are free nations.

What can individual citizens do? It's simple: Don't watch the Olympics, don't buy Olympic merchandise and write to your local newspapers and news stations and tell them you won't tolerate China's abuses anymore.

The International Olympic Committee, the United States and the rest of the free world must put some teeth behind the declaration that the Olympics is a place for the free man to exhibit his human dignity. China's abhorrent human rights record, their deceitful and violent misinformation campaign in Tibet and their continual crackdown on domestic political freedoms makes the nation unfit to be graced by an Olympic tournament. The world should boycott the 2008 Summer Olympics.

Scott Harris is a UMass student.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Editorial@DailyCollegian.com

AN UNFORTUNATE LESSON

Dear editor:

Re: "Student Falls to Death," Will McGuinness, News, April 4, 2008.

Liam O'Donnelly's death should underline the one year anniversary of the Virginia Tech massacre.

Seung-Hui Cho was also suicidal when he took the lives of 32 people on April 16, and yet he found no counseling that may have prevented the tragedy. A person would think that after such a terrible event, universities around the country would begin to examine their Mental Health facilities with rigor.

And to the University's credit, we do not know the number of suicides prevented from this examination. But the fact that a student should decide to jump from a seventeenth floor window is not only a failure of the University's Mental Health Services, it is also a failure of the whole university to recognize such depression and address it.

Perhaps if the Mental Health Services made suicide warning signs, or its phone number, more widely known; or maybe if the UMass Mental Health Services were more competent and wouldn't just write a prescription for antidepressants to mask-up the underlying problems, students would be more apt to attend the services.

These are all just possibilities for reform, but Liam O'Donnelly certainly won't care about them now.

Kenneth Haskell
UMass student

FREE YOUR MIND, FIRST

Dear editor:

Re: "Tibetan violence draws local reaction in Northampton," Pamela Lawn, News, March 31, 2008.

Whenever people start to talk about "Free Tibet" in the United States, I am always stunned by the ignorance that they are so eager to show about the subject of their monologue. Your Monday news article by Pamela Lawn on Tibet is just another piece in that line.

Apparently, some people just love to kid themselves by acting as if Tibet had been a "free" and "peaceful" place before 1950. No one seems to care that Dalai Lama had been the leader of a slave system before he left Tibet, under whose "leadership" five percent of the Tibetan population had absolute control over 100 percent of the resources, while the rest 95 percent lived in poverty and serfdom, and there had been no freedom of religion (come on, there was only one religion, what do you want me to say?), no separation between the religious and political power (or shall I say between the Church and the State?), and no access to education for the people.

Now, poor Tibetans, they cannot represent themselves, they must be represented. But, while taking the moral high ground by trying to represent the Tibetans in the self-claimed righteous cause of "Free Tibet," you might want to ask yourself whether you know what life has been like for Tibetans in the past and at present, whether you know anything about the changes that has happened to people's life in general in China? Do you really know, or do you simply not care?

Some probably would think that I have been brainwashed by the Communist government in China. Well, the apparently brain-washed one seems to have access to more diverse and accurate information about Tibet then citizens of "the free world."

In the case of this protest on March 14 (by the way, show some professionalism by getting the dates correct), what I have seen here in the U.S. is simply horrible journalism. When mainstream media like CNN and New York Times talk about the violence of Chinese police against "peaceful" Tibetan protesters, they couldn't even show the right pictures and the right videos – either pictures were cropped to skip details that might favor the Chinese government, or the pictures and videos shown were not even taken in China but in Nepal or India.

Obviously, most people are simply assuming that the violence and deaths were caused by the Chinese police. I mean, give me a break, this is a digital age, the lack of access to Tibet by foreign reporters does not mean the lack of evidence sent out from within Tibet, by Chinese, Tibetans, or foreign tourists. And – I can't believe I'm saying this – the rejection of foreign journalists by the Chinese government does not mean that you should sacrifice journalist conscience and simply make up stories.

I understand that this is a free country where people have the right to express themselves, and I have no intention to shut anyone up. All I'm saying is that you are having a college education, please take it seriously – do some research on Tibet, learn its history, use your brain, and stop kidding yourself, or your readers like me.

Zixu (George) Liu
UMass student

Dear editor:

Let me start off by saying I do not like the Chinese government or any communist government for that matter. They have committed their fair share of human rights violations throughout their blood-stained history.

The Chinese are a government based on total control and give their people as little freedom as possible – if they get any freedom at all. I try my hardest not to buy Chinese products (well, not that hard seeing as how everything is made in China) and would never support anything to do with the Chinese.

Their atrocities committed against the people of Tibet are unforgivable and although it doesn't really affect me at all, I would be more supportive of a free Tibet rather than a Chinese controlled Tibet.

This being said, in light of the recent large scale protests in London and Paris, and the protest's planned for San Francisco, I am opposed to these acts that disrupt ceremonial Olympic events. I understand and support the idea of why these people are protesting the Chinese but I am against them on the sheer fact that it goes against the very foundation of what the Olympics represent.

The Olympics are supposed to be an event in which countries put aside political differences and compete against each other in athletics. I think these recent protest are putting a strain on an event that some people spend their whole life preparing for and might even base the rest of their life off of.

The Olympics are a time in which politics should not matter. This is a sacred event and should not be disrupted like this. I am as much against protesting the ceremonial torch relay as I am against the people calling for a U.S. boycott on the opening events.

If I were alive in 1980, I would be profoundly against the idea of the U.S. boycotting the Moscow Olympics and the Soviets boycotting the 1984 Los Angeles Olympics. So basically what I am trying to say is that, as much as I do not like the Chinese government, I think that it is wrong to disrupt the facilities with the Olympics based on the idea that it is an event that puts aside political differences for the sake of athletic competition.

Joe Ronan
UMass student

We want to hear from you!

The Daily Collegian encourages reader responses. Letters to the editor should be no more than 550 words and can be sent to editorial@dailycollegian.com. We regret that not all letters can be printed; additional letters can be found online at dailycollegian.com in our Letters section. Guest columns are welcome from students, faculty and community members. They should be between 750 - 850 words and the editorial staff reserves the right to edit submissions for meet grammar, mechanics and space constraint standards.

THE MASSACHUSETTS DAILY COLLEGIAN

ARTS & LIVING

THURSDAY, APRIL 10, 2008 ARTS@DAILYCOLLEGIAN.COM

New beats brought to Noho

Saul Williams to promote newest album at Iron Horse

By Ian Nelson
Collegian Staff

The recent trend of artists choosing to bypass the record industry in order to get their music out to fans has began to include some big names, including: Jack White's Raconteurs, Gnarls Barkley, Nine Inch Nails, and Radiohead, who first received major press for their involvement of industry-defying tactics to get their record to their fans back in October.

An underground warrior of this phenomenon is Saul Williams, who will make a stop in Northampton on his

"Tar Spangled Banner" tour this Thursday with Dragons of Zynth. The tour, which began in mid-February supports Williams' most recent record "The Inevitable Rise and Liberation of Niggy Tardust," which was released in late 2007.

Williams is a renaissance man of sorts, finding success in a number of art forms. After receiving his B.A. in philosophy from Morehouse College in Atlanta and his Master's in acting from NYU, Williams was named the Nuyorican Poets Café "Grand Slam Champion," evidence of his proficiency in spoken word and beat poetry. In 1998 he starred in "Slam," which won the Grand Jury Prize at that year's Sundance film festival and got Williams' name out to the masses.

In 2001, with the help of producer Rick Rubin, Williams released his first full-length record, "Amethyst Rock Star" (also pronounced "Am I This Rock Star"), delving into hip-hop sensibilities. Rubin's apocalyptic sound underscores Williams' aggressive delivery in the manner of a street preacher seized by the ills brought onto society by brand-name consumerism and greed. The track "Robeson" reads as a retelling of a surreal, symbolic dream, while "Om Nia Merican" finds Williams sticking to a delivery with actual song structure over a Rage Against the Machine sample.

Williams released his self titled full-length in 2004, another startling social commentary keying in on such constructs as the MTV music video culture, racial roles, and fame. Musically, a more violent approach was taken to mirror Williams' militant diction, employing heavy guitar riffs that preceded the industrial overtones of his most recent record. A certain Rage Against the Machine lust from Williams' first album appears again, as Zack de la Rocha's unmistakable vocal penetrates the track "Act III Scene 2 (Shakespeare)," which de la Rocha co-wrote.

After this apparent breakthrough, Williams got the attention of Trent Reznor and his band Nine Inch Nails, with whom he toured in 2005. Williams also appeared on Nine Inch Nails' 2007 record "Year Zero" after touring with them again in 2006. This relationship paved the way for Reznor's interest in producing "The Inevitable Rise and Liberation of Niggy Tardust."

Reznor's production becomes quite apparent to anyone at all familiar with his previous work, capturing Williams' unique style within the confines of an almost completely industrial-sounding record. The hip-hop notions still persist, though buried deep within Reznor's signature style of building substantial layers on top of each other.

The album's first single happens to be a cover of the U2 classic "Sunday Bloody Sunday," staying true to the original song while displaying signature Williams quirks. The album's suggestive third track "Tr(n)igger" uses an easily identifiable Public Enemy sample as its outline under Williams' vocal. Most of the album's lyrics are drawn from his 2006 collection of poetry "The Dead Emcee Scrolls: The Lost Teachings of Hip-Hop."

The new record was released, with the help of Reznor and media distribution company Musicane, as a free digital download on Nov. 1, 2007, with the option of paying $5.00 to support the artist. This choice came a mere month after the perennially acclaimed Radiohead chose to alert the public that the band would be making their new record "In Rainbows" available initially as a digital download on Oct. 10, 2007, allowing one to name their own price for the MP3s, including a free option.

Radiohead announced this marketing decision ten days before the highly anticipated release was actually available, essentially leaking their own album. Reznor later also explored this venture with his own band, releasing the all instrumental "Ghosts I-IV" on March 2 with no previous information on the record available to the public.

While Radiohead didn't necessarily have to worry about making money from this record (the legions of their fans instantly ate "In Rainbows" up), this route being taken by Williams came as a bit of a surprise, though, according to digg.com, of the over 150,000 digital downloads of the album as of January 2nd, nearly 29,000 included the $5.00 artist support option. This number dwarfs sales of Williams' previous record, which has only sold about 30,000 copies. A physical release of the record is pending, apparently with 7 extra tracks.

Williams and Reznor are key players in this new era of bypassing physical record releases, no longer relying on the record industry to act as a medium through which music must pass from artist to audience. Though the option currently seems feasible only to big name artists and those they support, this rift in the industry will potentially alter record companies as a whole, obliterating what the record industry is used to and creating a new digitally-fueled, direct artist-to-audience paradigm.

Saul Williams with Dragons of Zynth will perform at the Iron Horse Music Hall Saturday April 12. The Iron Horse is located at 20 Center Street in Northampton. The show is scheduled to start at 10 p.m., with general admission tickets $15 in advance and $18 at the door.

Ian Nelson can be reached at inelson@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY MYSPACE.COM

Saul Williams, who released his newest album online, will be entertaining crowds at the Iron Horse on Saturday night.

Script lacking in 'Stop-Loss,' gives new side to Iraq story

By Shayna Murphy
Collegian Staff

Last month, the Daily Collegian took part in a conference call with Joseph Gordon-Levitt and Ryan Phillippe, the stars of the new MTV Films release, "Stop-Loss". In between plugs, they got real. Levitt talked politics and acting, while Phillippe gushed about turning native for the Texan shoot.

Both actors were a hoot to chat up. But now it's time to get down to business – was "Stop-Loss" really worth the build up?

Director Kim Peirce ("Boys Don't Cry") would say yes. Inspired by her brother's experience serving in Iraq, Peirce stitched together the idea for "Stop-Loss" out of his tales, and from video footage shot of soldiers serving abroad.

"Stop-Loss" opens in the desert of Tikrit, where a small coalition including Sgt. Brandon King (Phillippe) and pals Tommy (Levitt) and Steve (Channing Tatum) man a security checkpoint. A brief skirmish against local insurgents result in casualties on either side, yet before we know it, the Tikrit sands have been replaced by the small town of Brazos, TX, and all the boys are well.

Or so it seems. Their first night back, spurred on by a double dose of night terrors and tequila, Steve digs a trench in his front yard and refuses to budge, much to the horror of his fiancé (Abbie Cornish). And later on, frazzled by the pressures of being a newlywed, Tommy puts his wedding presents in front of the firing squad, before wrapping his car around a tree.

For Brandon, the most adjusted one of the bunch, everything is going fine until he discovers he's been stop-lossed.

Thanks to the film, Phillippe has never been better. A stoic actor of middling quality in past films like "Breach" and "Flags of Our Fathers," his abilities always seem to glide over well in roles with a yes, ma'am, no, sirree vibe.

Levitt continues to elude the clutches of teen-star obscurity, adding this performance to a shelf of recent stand-outs in "Brick" and "The Look-Out." He affects the Texan drawl with less believability than Phillippe, who gets it down so well you'd swear the Delaware native had a string of Stetsons lying around at home. But Levitt succeeds in capturing the jolt of a soldier teetering on the edge.

Both Phillippe and Levitt have claimed that "Stop-Loss" has no political bias, but saying a war movie doesn't have politics is about as easy as buying Bush's last State of the Union address. What they should have said is that the film isn't heavy-handed about its stances. But even there they'd be bluffing. "Stop-Loss" is a commentary; just not a commentary of what you would expect.

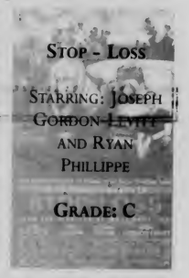
"Stop-Loss" refers to the controversial policy which forces soldiers to return for multiple tours of duty, even after their terms of service have been fulfilled. The policy, which has affected more than 80,000 soldiers, has been nicknamed the backdoor draft for a reason. Soldiers volunteering for one tour are unwittingly duped into serving more, with minimal legal recourse.

Although the topic is ripe for polemics, the film doesn't take shots at the administration or the war. Like the soldiers involved, the film accepts these things as they are. But "Stop-Loss" does make bounds towards remarking on the lives of men caught up in this crazy war. The struggles they face reintegrating into society, into their relationships, families, and in effect, into their own lives, are gone over extensively.

The film leaves the door open for viewers to speculate on what supporting the troops actually means. Is it just slapping the requisite sticker on your bumper, or does it demand greater responsibilities? When the troops are the victims of injustice, what is the proper recourse?

For Brandon, it's to challenge the order flat out. When he fails to get through to his commanding officer, he decides the only thing left to do is go AWOL. Hoping to reach out to a Texan senator, he embarks on a road trip for Washington. Along the way, he bumps elbows with other war vets on the lamb due to the same policy, and comes face to face with its broader implications.

"Stop-Loss" is interesting stuff, but thematically, the film is contrived. The script's dependence on post-war clichés prevent it from joining in the ranks of esteemed war films of decades past, such as "Deer Hunter" or "Platoon".



Pierce would like to have the film resonate, but the script goes off on a crying jag and never recovers. The fall from decorated bad-ass to teary-eyed basket case for the soldiers is a little too quick and a little too self-knowing to consistently ring true to the audience. What her script offers in the way of depth reads like a grocery store list of veteran's disorders, and it checks through each with perfunctory diligence.

That being said, the best thing about "Stop-Loss" is still its heart. The film carries through on a strict diet of emotional bravado, which is okay even if it is cheesy, because its intentions seem sincere.

It's worth noting that Kim Peirce's passion and taste for discourse make her a person to watch for in the coming years. She hasn't quite got the storytelling aspect up to par with the rest, but if she's as talented as her previous work has suggested, her head will catch up with her heart eventually.

"Stop-Loss" could have been stronger if it had been done as a documentary, similar to the video footage which Peirce examined in pre-production. Within that forum, the earnestness which she strove to capture here would not have seemed as staged. But for bringing politics to the MTV crowd – for suckering in teen girls with the pairing of Tatum and Phillippe and giving them substance instead; and above all, for trying to tell a soldiers side of a familiar story, "Stop-Loss" is a worthwhile effort.

Shayna Murphy can be reached at skmurphy@student.umass.edu.

COURTESY PARAMOUNT PICTURES

Directed by Kim Peirce, "Stop-Loss" is about the difficulty Iraq war veterans have had re-adjusting to normal life. It also deals with the issue of stop-lossing, which sends soldiers back to Iraq after they think they have finished. The movie portrays sensitive issues in a respectful manner, but the script leaves something to be desired.

Home store environmentally friendly

Crate and Barrel set bar for competition by 'going green'

By Sandra Jones
Chicago Tribune

CHICAGO — Nature is finding its way into Crate & Barrel's corporate headquarters, and that's just fine with Barbara Turf, the woman slated to take over the home goods and furniture retailer as chief executive in May.

On a cloudy winter day, a snowy white light pervades the company's Northbrook, Ill., office building, a white brick-and-glass structure with expansive windows, pine walls and a staircase suspended in an open atrium. Walk through the reception area and you will discover Crate's interpretation of what is happening in American culture today: a bamboo nightstand, cotton organic towels, eco-friendly upholstered chairs.

"The whole environmentally friendly movement is just beginning," said Turf, sitting in a glass-walled conference room that juts out of the building toward a grove of trees. "I'm amazed at the amount of people becoming environmentally friendly and socially conscious. There's just such a huge movement, and it's going to get bigger and bigger."

Expanding Crate's green initiatives is at the top of Turf's to-do list as CEO. She also wants to see Crate expand overseas and open more CB2 and Land of Nod stores.

But her most weighty task, one that she expects to take the next three to five years, is to put in place the next generation.

When Gordon Segal, the founder of Crate & Barrel, hands over the CEO post to Turf, Crate's longtime president, it will mark the first time the 46-year-old home-furnishing chain will operate without the meticulous merchant's daily presence. Segal will remain chairman and take on the role of consultant and adviser.

Segal's decision to slowly remove himself from the business is textbook, but in reality hard to pull off, said Lloyd Shefsky, clinical professor of entrepreneurship and family business at Northwestern University's Kellogg School of Management.

"It's not that remarkable to start and build a business," said Lloyd, who interviewed Segal for a book he wrote on entrepreneurs. "It's the transition from an entrepreneurial business to a managed business that is so difficult, not functionally but psychologically. It's even more difficult with the business that succeeds to get people to let go."

Segal is stepping back during one of the worst housing downturns in recent memory, a fact that will test Turf's mettle.

The housing market slump has taken its toll on many home goods and furniture retailers, putting companies such as Wickes Furniture and Bombay Co. out of business and dragging down sales at big department stores such as Macy's and J.C. Penney.

But Crate has managed to keep chugging along. Sales rose about 8.5 percent for the fiscal year ended Jan. 31, and sales at stores open at least a year, a common barometer of financial health known as same-store sales, increased 5.5 percent, driven by furniture sales, Segal said in a January interview.

Crate is estimated to have generated about $1.3 billion in sales in 2007. Crate's parent, German catalog operator Otto Group, is scheduled to release its year-end figures in coming weeks.

